vored endeavor to perform those duties with an eye single to the public welfare, believing that he could best serve his party by best serving the State.

After this introduction he launched out into a long dissertation on the years of Republican rule in the State, and followed that with a discussion of the national campaign.

His closing words were: "This campaign now begins. Whatever strength and capacity I may possess shall be devoted to its service. I will carry the standard in the face of the enemy, proclaiming our doctrines and policies throughout the State. I shall need your assistance. Let us work as a united band. We are confident of the justice of our cause. Let us go forward unfaltering until on the night of November eighth we sleep in the tents of victory."

State Senator Joseph Cross, of Elizabeth, as chairman of the Union County delegation, took an active part in the proceedings of the convention.

Senator Dryden, State Chairman Briggs and David Baird were named as the committee on vacancies, and then at 4 o'clock the convention adjourned.

As the delegates were dispersing Candidate Stokes held an informal reception on the stage, and many shook his hand and congratulated him on his nomination.

The hall was decorated with flags and bunting. Several American flags were suspended over the stage, backed with portraits of McKinley and Hobart, while pictures of Roosevelt and Fairbanks were placed at the top of the proscenium. The fronts of the boxes were draped with flags and streamers of bunting extended around the gallery railings.

Governor Murphy and Senators Dryden and Kean occupied boxes. Their appearance was the signal for applause, but the enthusiasm was not at all warm and the hand given the Governor was especially lacking in volume and fervor.

The stage was filled with the officers, a few State leaders, a large body of reporters, and numerous curiosity seekers who had secured tickets, or could get in without them. The top gallery, reserved for spectators, was not half filled.

STORM DOES MUCH DAMAGE

Most Destructive Rainfall in Years Visited Plainfield Sept. 14.

CITY IN DARKNESS

Electric Light, Telegraph and Telephone Systems Injured—Trolleys Tied Up and Streets Flooded — Other Damage.

Not since July 28, 1897, has such a storm visited this vicinity as that which started at 1 o'clock Wednesday, Sept. 14, and waged until 4 the next morning. It raged the worst from 2 until 4 o'clock and the loss will foot up to hundreds of dollars. In fifteen hours the rainfall was 6.70 inches, while the total rainfal during the storm seven years ago was but 5.03 inches in twenty-four hours.

Richmond street, from East Front street to East Seventh street, was a veritable canal until late in the morning. Here, as in other places near the brook, the water spread over the entire roadway and stood some six or eight inches in depth. Under the railroad bridge on Richmond street, there was standing water all the afternoon, hampering the trolley cars. In the early morning down-pour the water swept further and extended several hundred feet along East Fifth street.

East Seventh street at Richmond street was heavily flooded. The brook swept over the bridge there and poured over the roadway, extending up and down the street. The course of the Cedar Brook Tennis Club were flooded and washed out. Above Richmond street, East Seventh street was especially treacherous. Sewer contractors here had left the roadway soft, and beneath the standing water was thick mire. A wagon of the Watchung dairy, sunk to the body in this mud near Richmond street, and was deserted.

At Putnam avenue and Richmond street there was also half a foot of water, extending completely through to Watchung avenue. A heavy tree, completely uprooted, fell across the trolley wires at the lower Putnam avenue switch, tearing wires from the poles and breaking the feed wire, wrenching off guys for some distance along the track. The brook, level with the banks of its channel between Putnam and Watchung avenues, spread over backyards and lawns, and considerable water entered the cellars. Beyond Watchung avenue, the brook spread over the low meadow and considerable part of Cedar Brook Farm was submerged.

Weather Prophet John Nagle reported a record-breaker in the rainfall between the hours of 1 o'clock Wednesday afternoon and 4 o'clock Thursday morning. The fall was 6.70 inches, which has not been reached before in thirteen years, the length of time official records have been kept.

Grant and West End avenues were, as usual in heavy storms, a river of water, helping to swell Green brook to abnormal size. On the northside of West End avenue the water washed out the roadbed for a distance of twenty-five feet and the lowlands back of H. C. Compton's residence was completely covered with water. The highest point was reached at about 5 o'clock. After that the water receded steadily until during the morning hours then there was an almost normal condition of the stream which separates the city from the borough.

Letter-carrier E. T. Dunn, who lives at the corner of Grove street and Linden avenue, started out at his usual early hour to collect mail from the letter-boxes. Although the street lights were out and the storm was raging hard he did not think it necessary to carry a lantern, believing that he could get along without it. At the corner of Dunr street and Lincoln place he actually got lost. He decided to return for a lantern, and it took him almost an hour to reach his home, during which time he had a most unpleasant experience.

As a precautionary measure, the employes at the electric light plant of the Public Service Corporation, in this city, the electric current was shut off between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning, except in the business section of the city where the wires are underground. This action was taken because of the falling trees and many broken wires throughout the city and borough.

Manager Charles W. Runyon reports that 300 telephones were put out of business.

Though heavily weighed down and subjected to severe strain by wind and falling trees, fire alarm wires stood the strain generally through the entire city and the system was open during the entire night. The tape from time to time Thursday were caused by electric and 'phone linemen disentangling wires.

The local trolley company was severely crippled by broken wires and deep standing water. Not a wheel moved in the entire system during the early morning downpour, but the through line commenced operations in the morning. The first cars began to run on schedule time at 10 o'clock and at that time the through line was entirely open, though accurate service could not be secured until afternoon.

In the borough the damage was wide-spread and in many cases seriously interfered with the operation of the electric light, trolley, telephone and fire alarm systems. Numerous instances were seen of large trees uprooted by the fury of the wind, huge branches flung across the streets amid a tangle of broken wires, to say nothing of damage to the macadam pavement of the streets themselves.

The only break in the borough fire alarm system was that on Manning avenue caused by the fall of a tree not far from Watchung avenue.

Two electric light poles were carried down by falling trees in the Prideville section, one on Greenbrook road, west of Harrison street, and the other in the grounds of Col. John F. Wilson.

In upper Duer street, the evil effects of cutting roots of trees in grading were shown by the fall of several large trees which put that section of the electric lines out of commission. Vine street, Grandview avenue, Washington avenue and Grove street were also heavy sufferers in the general wreck.

According to John H. Tier, the level of the lake above his dam was higher than ever before, the greatest stage coming to within two inches of the lakehouse floor. At that time the water flowed two feet deep over the entire dam.

The flood made itself felt at the Somerset street mill also, threatening at one time to wash away the old sheds in the rear of it.

SCHOOLS CROWDED.

Special Arrangements Necessitated by Unusual Enrollment in In the City Schools.

With the abatement of the confusion attendant upon the opening of the city schools, it now becomes evident that the new enrollments exceed any of previous years. At the High School, conditions have become so crowded as to necessitate two sessions for some of the pupils, while at the Irving School fifty new pupils are entered.

The Bryant and Washington schools are also crowded, but arrangements have been made for the accommodation of all pupils.

Delay Tax Rate Announcement.

The Board of Assessors will not announce Plainfield's tax rate for the coming year until after a conference with the finance committee of the Common Council, it being the wish of these officials that it be made in that way. There is strong possibilities that the rate will be a trifle lower than last year.

ALFRED SPEER,

THE ORIGINAL

Port Grape Wine Producer in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, and was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had

The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while those grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. The New Jersey apples, for instance, make a cider that was always popular the world over. * If you want a wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards. * Sold by Druggists.

THE POPULAR PIE.

"FOUNDRIES" OF BIG CITIES KNOW PUBLIC PALATE.

In Chicago and Boston It Is Apple, New Orleans Chocolate, San Francisco Custard, and So On.

Cherry pie season is about over in the big pie foundries of the pie trust. They're buckling down to work hammering out huckleberry pies, which are the favorite variety just now, says the Chicago Inter Ocean of middle July.

But huckleberry pies don't lead the output, even at this season of the year not by any means. Year in and year out, apple is the favorite in Chicago.

It must be a great satisfaction for Boston people to realize that they have crammed into the pie set article of diet down the throat of seedling Chicago. For the apple pie is Boston's own.

Upon this viand grew the mind of Emerson. Hawthorne brushed its crumbs from his lips as he sat down to write "The Scarlet Letter."

The New England poise and sterling quality of mind comes from beans, but New England transcendentalism and literary frills are bred from apple pie. No true Boston man has any doubt of this.

The pie plants of Chicago keep close tab on the business throughout the country. It appears from the statistics of the big factories that the middle west is rich in the peach pie belt. This includes Chicago.

The favorite variety in New Orleans, year in year out, is chocolate pie. The whole Pacific coast, San Francisco in particular, plays custard pie as a steady favorite.

The pie blemen account for the taste of New Orleans by its French population. French people like chocolate in all its forms.

It is also easy to see why the Pacific coast likes custard pie. Fruit is very cheap in common there, and the housewife finds it more economical to bake her own fruit pies and stick the pieman for the kind which calls for eggs and cream at staple prices.

But why does Chicago also love the peach pie? The pieman of Boston say there must be something subtly coarse and unrefined about peaches.

These Boston pie founders, by the way, have a Hawthorne theory, which they submit very respectfully at this, the time of his centenary. Omits they say, as Nathaniel sat down to write, he stimulated imagination and refreshed his soul by a breakfast of apple pie.

As he balanced the first segment on the point of his knife, which was a custom in the literary cult of those days, his eye fell on the great "A" carved upon its breast after the fashion of housewives since the gods revealed pie to man —"A" for "apple." And in one sudden flash there leaped into the mind of N. Hawthorne his masterpiece, "The Scarlet Letter"—the story of a capital "A."

Thus it is not only a novel, but an allegory of pie and progress.

"That's the way Boston talk about pie," said a boss pie founder the other day. "That's the way Dutchmen can't make 'em.

"Almost every other kind of baking is in the hands of Germans, and I don't deny that they make good rolls and pretzels and rye bread and sinkers. But they are no good on pies.

"And why? Because to make a thing right you've got to like it, and you never yet saw the Dutchman who would appreciate a good American pie. They don't like 'em, and can't make 'em right.

"It takes an American, who can understand the fine points of a good pie. Our bakers just live on pie—eat it all the time—and they're the healthiest gang of men you ever met.

"Why, out west they've got a pie baker that's a pugilist, and a mighty good one, and he trains on pie. That's right. If he doesn't get proud and shake the pie works, I expect to see him a champion.

"Pretty nearly every town in this country with more than 100,000 inhabitants has its pie factory with a monopoly of the local business. We've figured it out, and found that a town smaller than that won't support a factory. But of course the business goes best in New England, where they appreciate pie.

"And here's something funny. All you newspaper people seem to think there's something funny about pie. The alleged comic tramp always steals pies from the young housewife. If anyone gets soaked with anything it's always a pie.

"What's funnier about a pie than about a doughnut or a hunk of rye bread or a pretzel? But you fellows seem to think that pie will draw the laugh every time. Why? Honest, now, why?

"In Boston, where they've learned what pie, eaten in moderation, can do for the human body and brain, they don't josh it. No, sir. It's pie for breakfast right along with the champagne on the tables of all the best families in New England."

Didn't Know Yet.

Lady of the House (to cook, having discovered a policeman in the kitchen)—You told me you had been home here that you had no sweetheart.

Cook—Yes, I told you so, and it's the truth, too.

"Who, then, is the policeman in the kitchen, if he is not your sweetheart?"

"It isn't any sweetheart, indeed he isn't. He's only trying to be, and I don't know whether he will succeed or not."—Stray Stories.

Another Advantage.

Merchant—I think I shall take a partner in this new business venture of mine. "Two heads are better than one."

Knox—Yes, and then when you fail you can have somebody to blame it on.—Philadelphia Press.

BOOK NEWS.

It is planned to issue on Thursday of each week items of literary news. This will frequently take the form of book lists, such as lists of books recently added, lists on special subjects and like topics. Frequently the lists will be annotated, the aim being to make these annotations of real service to the reader, by giving him the opinion of a trustworthy critic as to the value of the books or a few words as to their scope. Reasonable should keep these lists. The Plainfield Public Library will furnish to anyone making application a list of its books on a given subject.

OUR SAMOAN ARMY

THE NATIVES TAKE KINDLY TO DRILL AND DISCIPLINE.

Their Uniforms Are Cheap, But Gorgeous Affairs of Many Colors—How Soldiers Are Selected by the Villages.

Pango-Pango, island of Tutilla.—It is often said, in a spirit of mild criticism, that the uniform of the American soldier is too plain, too quiet.

It certainly lacks the gold lace and showy colors worn by most of the European armies. But we have succeeded in enrolling under our banner one style of regimentals that will surely never arouse reproach until the Judgment Day. Uncle Sam has fitted out his tropic forces like the lilies of their own fields.

When the Samoan islands ceded two of their number to the United States. we found a peaceable, loveable people ready to make friends with the white brother. The commander of a gunboat is governor of the islands, and his ship is in the harbor. The natives were wonderfully attracted to the sailor boys, and stories of war and martial songs made them eager for a regiment of their own.

The troops were formed from the representative men of the villages. Fine, intelligent, muscular fellows like copper statues. The choosing of a uniform was quite an undertaking, but finally a costume was fashioned resembling the national emblem. The troops in motion look like an animated Fourth of July decoration.

A mat tied about the middle and a wreath of flowers in the hair made up the military dress. The uniform consisted of a dark blue festoon like a short skirt, a glowing crimson sash confining it. A white gauze shirt, the sleeves showing signs of rank, such as one or two bars or stripes, etc., all in bright red. To these is usually a red blossom stuck through the meshes of the gauze or a necklace of red seeds.

Upon the head is worn many yards of red calico bound and twisted inot an elaborate turban, and with a black cartridge belt and an up-to-date rifle, the most respendent military man in the world is enrolled on Uncle Sam's books.

The government has spent nearly a thousand dollars in fitting out a military band, and it bids fair to be a credit to the service. Like all the natives of the Pacific Isles, the Samoans are very muscular, and the delight of these simple souls over the band that played on the flag ship was almost pathetic. It was this that induced the commandant to organize the native corps.

It is not the most interesting and almost laughable to see about 20 stalwart ebon statues handling the most modern of musical instruments, and from them sending a very fair attempt at "Marching Through Georgia" or "The Holy City." The latter is a great favorite, and if you are passing the barracks nearly any hour of the day you may hear its familiar tone shrieked forth on a piccolo or droned from the big trombone.

A most pleasing custom is the great deference to the Stars and Stripes. The flag is raised every morning just in front of the customs house. The bugle plays the call and every soldier, be he where he may, stands at attention, facing the flag. It looks strange and most pleasing to see these gorgeous creatures at morning and evening or whenever there is a salute dotting the walls and hills, motionless, presenting front face to the emblem.

Tofele is the name of one of the superior officers. He was reigning chief of the island of Manua, which is the smaller island of the two. When the regiment was formed the officers were chosen for their intelligence and also with regard to power position. Tofele is taller than the average Samoan and presents a most commanding appearance at the head of his column. As is usual with great strength and superior intelligence, they are gentle and kindly to all. A white woman visiting the barracks is shown the utmost attention, they even going so far as to have special drill for her benefit.

Intelligent, honest and religious; strong and supple as creatures of the wild; quick to learn; imitative to a wonderful degree; fierce in avenging wrong or insult, yet gentle to a woman or a weak brother, our proud army may well congratulate itself over its splendid reenforcements in the South seas.

ANNA H. CLARK.

Looking Ahead.

Husband—You are not economical.

Wife—Well, if you don't call a woman economical who saves by wearing three dresses for a possible second marriage, I'd like to know what you think your duty is.—Glasgow Times.

NEW JERSEY LEADS AT ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION

ITS EDUCATIONAL EXHIBIT AS AT THE PAST FAIRS THE FINEST.

Silas B. Morse, curator of the State museum at the State House, Trenton, and superintendent of the New Jersey educational exhibit at the St. Louis Exposition, has left for the fair to superintend the judging of exhibits and the awarding of the prizes. The judges began the examination of the exhibits a few days ago.

Curator Morse was in charge of the exhibit during the early part of the summer, but was compelled to return home owing to illness. During his absence the exhibit has been in charge of J. E. Cresse, of Princeton University, brother of State Senator Lewis M. Cresse, of Cape May county.

Mr. Morse states that the New Jersey educational exhibit is unquestionably the best of the kind at the exposition, and he expects that, following the securing by this State of gold medals for the most superior exhibit at the Chicago, Charleston and Buffalo expositions, another medal will I be added to the number for the finest showing among all the states at St. Louis.

The exhibit of live salt water fish from this State, which is shown in tanks forty feet across, is the only one worth mentioning at the fair, and will undoubtedly receive the first prize. The water in the tanks is kept constantly running by means of force pumps, and is also filtered every day.

In connection with this exhibit there is also shown a characteristic Jersey oyster bed, under running salt water, with the oysters living and growing, showing the bivalves in the various stage of their development the whole presenting the life of the oyster exactly as it is under natural condition. This is the first time in the history of the world, so far as known, that such an exhibit has been made. This exhibit is one of the star features of the exposition.

New Jersey's insect exhibit at the fair, which includes the collection of mosquitoes and a graphic exposition of the work being done in this State for their exirpation, is attracting the attention of scientists from all parts of the world, who are at St. Louis, and the part of this exhibit relating to the mosquitoes is being studied by foreign savants, with a view of exporting the Jersey methods in ridding other parts of the world of the troublesome insect.

ASSEMBLY CHAMBER HANDSOMELY DECORATED

STATE HOUSE COMMISSION AWARDS CONTRACTS FOR THE WORK.

The New Jersey State House Commission has awarded the contract for the painting and decorating of the Assembly chamber and Assembly committee rooms to J. D. Margerum, of Trenton. The contract price for the work is about $3,700. The painting and decorating is to be commenced immediately.

The walls and ceilings of the Assembly chamber and committee rooms are to be painted in rich leather tones with gold ornamentation, making a very pretty effect.

The corridors leading to the Assembly chamber are to be painted to match those recently painted in the other parts of the State House.

The State House Commission approved of the changes being made in the State library. In addition to these changes there will be new glass put in the ceiling lights, in order to give more light to the place. Cathedral glass of light tones will be used.

The dome of the Capitol is to be gilded. The contract will be given out later.

CO. K ANXIOUS.

Local Soldier Boys Want Result of the Sea Girt Shoot.

As no figures showing the exact standing of the leading competitors for the regimental championship trophy now held by Company K, have been given out, the local riflemen are feeling somewhat impatient for the result which was expected to be announced some days ago at the latest.

The change in conditions when it was decided to allow men to count in the trophy contest who failed to qualify on the regular company, but later succeeded in coming up to the mark, has, it is felt work a disadvantage to the Plainfield boys who have not the means to make repeated trips and buy extra ammunition as have some of the rival companies.

William Swaim, of the clerical force at Pond's, is spending two weeks in Asbury Park.

Charles Cumberson, time-keeper at the Pond plant, is spending two weeks with relatives in Red Bank.

STREET COMMITTEE BUSY

Consider Vitrified Paving and a Storm Sewer in East End.

MUST PREVENT FLOODS

Councilmen to Meet Representatives of P. S. C. Regarding Some Improvements.

There is every reason to believe that if the Public Service Corporation is permitted to lay double tracks from the corner of Front and Somerset streets to the corner of Watchung avenue and Fourth street, it will at least pave the same with vitrified brick for this privilege. What else may be required is not known at present.

There was a meeting of the street committee last night when matters pertaining to the improvement of Watchung avenue were considered. There was a general discussion pro and con and the members made up their minds as to what would be required of the company. It was also decided to communicate with the company and ask them to be represented at a meeting to be held soon to definitely decide the matter.

Another matter discussed last night was the Richmond street storm sewer. It was agreed that this improvement would cost the city several thousand dollars and that possibly the expense would be too great at present. The proposed improvement includes the widening of the brook, as well as the installation of the sewer. Even if this improvement is not made as planned, something will be done to relieve that section of the city from future floods in heavy rain storms. It was admitted that the most complete storm sewer system known would not carry off the great rain fall of Wednesday night.

GRANT CLUB BANNER RAISING SEPTEMBER 29

BOROUGH REPUBLICANS LISTEN TO SPEECHES ON PARTY PRINCIPLES.

Routine business occupied the attention of the U. S. Grant Republican Club, of North Plainfield, at last Thursday's meeting. Thirty-five new members were received and the prospects for successful work appear correspondingly brighter to the officers.

It was decided by the banner committee that an American flag would best answer their purpose and one will be raised in front of the club rooms on Somerset street on Thursday, September 29. The names of the Republican nominees will be put on a separate piece of canvas and hoisted on the banner ropes.

A. V. D. Honeyman, of Grove street, who made a short speech, will arrange for a speaker to address the next meeting. Last night's gathering was addressed by Reuben Knox, Esq., who formerly resided on Sherman avenue. Mr. Knox spoke on "Jeffersonian Simplicity," and pleased his hearers greatly by his direct and forceful style and unaffected phraseology.

The piano furnished by E. D. Hotchinson, of Westervelt avenue, was in place.

F. S. Armstrong and Henry E. Needham were added to the finance committee.

The committee on meetings was formed with A. V. D. Honeyman in the chair and E. D. Hotchinson and Charles J. McNabb associated with him. This committee will have in charge the furnishing of suitable speakers for each meeting and for that purpose will visit political gatherings in this vicinity and arrange with the National Committee regarding speakers to be sent here by that body during the campaign.

Other committees still to be organized are the press, executive, election and music. A sergeant-at-arms will probably be appointed to care for the club room within a short time.

Miss Cuming's Wedding Date.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Cuming, of 1012 Putnam avenue, announce the date for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Henrietta Woodward Cuming, to James Franklin LaRue, of this city. The marriage will take place Thursday evening, September 29, at 7 o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents

Miss Bird to Wed.

Mrs. Jacob Bird, of 25 Somerset place, has issued invitations to the marriage of her daughter, Madalene Bird, to C. Stillman Mumford, son of Benjamin A. Mumford, of Arlington avenue. The event will be celebrated Wednesday evening, October 5, at 8 o'clock, at the home of the bride's mother.

Y. M. C. A. GYMNASIUM CLASSES BEGIN OCTOBER 1

MUCH INTEREST BEING TAKEN ALREADY BY YOUNG ATHLETES.

With the return of cool weather, there seems to have sprung up a renewed interest at the gymnasium of the local Y. M. C. A. The floor has been crowded for the last three days and every indication points to a large membership and a successful season.

At a recent meeting of the physical department committee, plans for the work of the coming year were discussed and Physical Director Hencke presented his plans for the organization of the various classes. There will be the same classes which there were last year, though a number of improvements in the time scheduled were introduced. The schedule of classes for the next year will be announced in a few days. The business men's class will be decidedly larger than ever before, as several applications for membership have been filed. Mr. Hencke said this morning that all the classes will be much larger than formerly, and that the capacity of the gymnasium will be crowded to the limit.

The class work will begin October 1, and the committee has planned for some sort of a formal opening at that time. It is not known at present whether an exhibition will be given or not

M'CREADY SYKES' LATEST FUNNY VERSES

HIS LINES IN "LIFE" ON "THE SUPPORT OF THE SUN."

McCready Sykes, of Scotch Plains, is the author of some clever verses which appeared in the last number of "Life" and which have attracted much favorable notice. Mr. Sykes' reputation as a writer of humorous stanzas is well known to Plainfielders who read that weekly comic magazine. In this instance he pokes fun at The Sun, which recently announced editorially that it would support Mr. Roosevelt in the present campaign. These are the lines composed by the Scotch Plains man:

The President sat in his easy chair,
And read the papers from far and near,
While the faithful Loeb, to make glad his heart,
Said, "All the reports bring much good cheer.
The Oshkosh World has come around;
The Red Gulch Times says the fight is won;
Then, Sire—Oh horrors! Ye Gods! What's this?
You have the support of the New York Sun!"

The President started; his face grew pale;
"Support, if you love me, say not so!
Shade of Addicks and Jacob Riis!
What have I done to deserve this blow?
Is it for this I set Cuba free?
For this, were the fight in half begun,
When all looks fair, I should thus be cursed
With the fatal support of the New York Sun?

"Filibuied thus before mankind,
Me, with Tweed, and Ben Butler, too?
Oh Dick Connolly, David Hill?
Penrosey, and all of the motley crew?
Never a God-forsaken knave—
Never a rogue of the baser sort—
Never an evil public career—
That the New York Sun would not support.

"Poor old Sun! Why, the sorry sheet!
Free Silver, Greenback, this or that;
Every rag-tag and bobtail cause,
This week Tammany, next week Platt.
Up Salt River the Sun can steer
Look back on the losing race they've run,
And sign, 'Well, we might have had a show
But for the support of the New York Sun.'"

The strenuous teeth no longer shine;
Pallid and ghastly is the martial brow:
Chill are the winds of Oyster Bay;
Forgotten and idle the Big Stick now.
Still stammers the tongue that brings its cheer;
The Curse has fallen; the evil's done;
All joy is fled since that fatal day
That announced the support of the New York Sun.
—M'Cready Sykes.

MATINEE RACES.

Attractive Events Scheduled at Plainfield Driving Park for Next Saturday.

As an ending to a most successful racing season at the Plainfield Driving Park, there will be matinee meets open to the public on Saturday, September 24. The races will begin at 1 o'clock, and no entrance fee will be charged. Every one will be at liberty to enter horses, and both trotting and pacing classes will be represented.

Tom Brantingham is in charge of the affair and has arranged three races. The first two are for trotting and pacing, 2:24 and 2:30 classes. The third class is for trotters, 2:40. The race will be the best three out of five heats. The prizes will be a black-thorn for the winner; a collar for the second, and a whip for third prize.

Kindly take notice that Ely's Liquid Cream Balm is of great benefit to those sufferers from nasal catarrh who cannot inhale freely through the nose, and must treat themselves by spraying. Liquid Cream Balm differs in form, but not medicinally from the Cream Balm that has stood for years at the head of remedies for catarrh. It may be used in any nasal atomizer. The price, including a spraying tube, is 75 cts. Sold by druggists and mailed by Ely' Brothers, 56 Warren street, New York.

LITERARY.

"The Last of Custer" is the stirring chapter with which Cyrus Townsend Brady continues his "Indian Fights and Fighters" series in the September Pearson's. In itself the article is a complete history of the most gallant stand and most frightful massacre in the annals of our regular army. Dr. Brady says: "There, two days after the fight, the gallant band was found annihilated. The man had been stripped and most of them mutilated. Custer's body was shot in two places, in the side and in the temple. It was not scalped or mutilated."—Pearson's.

Adeline Knapp, whose work is most diverse, including history, travel, household art and fiction, is the author of a story announced for the October Red Book under the name of "The Bullet." It is a peculiar creation with a touch of the occult and a peculiar psychological experience as the motif. The scene is laid in the California marshes and the illustrations by William Schmedtgen depict the region as only that artist can do.—Red Book.

The September Atlantic opens brilliantly, with the first chapters of Isidro, a romantic serial novel by Mrs. Mary Austin, the scene of which is laid in Southern California, and which is full of unusual and stirring love-for spiritual liberty. Then do not come with purpose to make a land of Christian freedom. They can by no means be called the vanguard of religious enlightenment.

But they may come to stay and make this their homeland even though it be not fatherland. They are to help form the future society and determine the destiny of the nation. Because of what they have come from they are able to appreciate the privileges of this free land a few of the native born can do. They become faithful defenders of the republic. One of the most pressing problems of the present time is this of reaching the unevangelized people of the cities and neglected countryside. This work can not be done efficiently single handed. The church is awakening to the necessity for comprehensive plans and devoted prosecution of such plans.

Without God.

Without God heaven would be no heaven. With Him heaven is not first a locality, but wherever one is in His presence there is heaven. Without God heaven in its fullness, but the first elements of the heavenly life. In entering, then, into His presence here and now amid our daily common interests we have entered into a spiritual kingdom by which far as we live in sympathy with it, there is perfect spiritual harmony; where there is no law of compulsion, but the perfect service is the perfect freedom; where the will of the one great loving Spirit is evidently the reasonable, no just and true that any one who is in sympathy with the heavenly life acts in harmony with it as if it were his own will.—Bishop Lawrence.

Obtaining Human Sympathy.

It is not necessary to explain away the divinity of Christ to obtain from Him the human sympathy we need. We but rob ourselves of the infinite help there is for us in the all wisdom and all power of His divine nature. Sympathy is of little use that is helpless in the presence of human weakness and grief. Jesus wept, but He also brought the dead to life. Such a result was infinitely better than mere tears.—Philadelphia Methodist.

As Far as You Can.

There is welcome and rest in the home above,
Waiting you
Who live in the world the gospel of love,
The limbs may be weary, the soul grown faint
And the skies of life all gray,
But reach up as far as you can to God;
He'll reach down the rest of the way.

Oh, you in the terror, the night of sin
Turn, turn back to heaven! Cry still "Let me in!"
Kneel in prayer!
For you in the gleam of the morning star,
For you the bright dawn of day!
If you reach up as far as you can to God,
He'll reach down the rest of the way.

There is mercy for you and mercy for me,
If we will;
If Christ alone be our hope and plea,
Mercy still.
Oh, wondrous compassion, though creatures of dust,
Why fear we to trust and pray?
When we reach up as far as we can to God,
He'll reach down the rest of the way.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Sept. 25: "City Evangelization and Home Missions."—Acts viii, 4-8.

Words We Can Not Spare.

When a soul finds salvation through faith in Christ he at once gets interested in bringing some one else to the Master for salvation.

This is a gracious direction of the natural desire for companionship. It is of the same nature as the love which brought the blessed Christ to earth to seek and save us lost ones. The source of this impulse is the Holy Spirit. This is the inspiration of all missionary effort. It makes the feet of a Paul tireless as he tramps the wilds in perils of robbers or city streets in perils of false brethren. It puts courage now in the heart of the worker for Christ wherever his lot may be cast.

Philip preached in the city of Samaria. The news that the grace of God had conquered in him the almost inveterate prejudice with which a Jew regarded the whole race of Samaritans. It also showed the power of the gospel to overcome the superstition and abominable practices of the cultured and fashionable heathen as well as the ignorant and outcast.

We are face to face today with similar conditions. Mission work is needed in heathen lands all over the earth. It is no less needed in all the cities of our own land. Colonies of immigrants from many countries are settling in our cities. They do not come, as did the early settlers of the country, with high moral purpose and quenchless love for spiritual liberty. They do not come with purpose to make a land of Christian freedom. They can by no means be called the vanguard of religious enlightenment.

But they may come to stay and make this their homeland even though it be not fatherland. They are to help form the future society and determine the destiny of the nation. Because of what they have come from they are able to appreciate the privileges of this free land a few of the native born can do. They become faithful defenders of the republic. THE RATTLESNAKE'S BITE.

A Matter in Which Backwoods Tradition Triumphs Over Scientific Research.

Now and then science confirms some of the old-wife medical superstitions of the backwoods, says the New York Sun. For instance, the "yarb" doctors and old women of rattlesnake regions say that when a man gets over a rattlesnake's bite he has trouble in the wound every year afterward.

Pathologists and toxicologists who have studied snake poison agree that this is true, only the trouble doesn't necessarily occur every year. It happens whenever the system gets out of order.

The explanation is simple. Snake poison has the effect of destroying tissue. Of course, it has the strongest effect in and about the wound where the poison, in its course through the veins, has not yet been diluted by the blood.

Ever afterward that is a weak point in the system. Any little disturbance in the blood tends to break out at the point of the wound.

When this happens the old wives say that it is the poison working. It is not, of course. It is only the excess poison of the body working in the weak spot.

There was a case of this kind with a rather unusual history in a Colorado hospital a few years ago. The patient was a scout who had helped the army make way for civilization in the Rockies.

The Utes, Arapahoes and other Indians of that region were mostly unsupplied with guns in those days, but they had a most effective kind of poisoned arrow. They would catch a bunch of rattlesnakes, and hang a fresh buffalo liver would make the serpents strike in it until their poison glands were exhausted and the meat fairly reeked with venom.

After that they would leave the liver in the sun until it became putrid. Into this they would dip their war arrows. It made a nasty poison.

With such an arrow the scout was struck in the leg. It carried, of course, not only snake venom, but all kinds of possibilities of blood poisoning. By good luck a first-rate army surgeon was at hand. He saved the scout's life.

This happened in the spring. Every spring after that the man's leg would break out with sores and boils and sundry other afflictions. He thought that the case were proved for the witch doctors.

The physicians went into the life history of the patient, and found that, long before he stopped that poisoned arrow he had been afflicted with a breaking out every spring. He was one of those people who load up on animal diet all winter and need a cleaning out when the season breaks. It had merely settled in his leg. The following year he attended to his liver early and had no further trouble.

In the treatment of rattlesnake bites the rough and ready physicians of the backwoods are making gains on the modern scientist. In spite of analysis and laborious experiments and government prizes, the treatment discovered by the pioneers when New York was a wilderness is still standard.

Cut the wound, suck it out, burn or cauterize the spot and keep the patient drunk on whisky until the danger is past.

BIG CITY'S WATER SUPPLY.

Aqueducts of New York Surpass Those of the Ancient City of Rome.

The aqueducts of old Rome were nine in number, extended 249 miles and furnished the city at a period when its population was largest with 330,000 gallons of water a day, equivalent to 160 gallons of each inhabitant. What was the standard of water service under conditions not easy to duplicate in any large modern city and never rivalled during many centuries in any European city. New York today, remote from high mountains and obliged to go far as we live in search of sources of water supply, has a system not unequalled anywhere, says the Sun.

The average daily consumption of water in New York is 400,000,000 gallons, which is greater than any city of ancient or modern times has ever attained, and which is thus divided: Manhattan and The Bronx, 275,000,000 gallons; Brooklyn, 100,000,000; Queens, 20,000,000, and Richmond, 5,000,000.

There are 950 miles of water mains in Manhattan and The Bronx, and the maximum daily supply of water for Manhattan and The Bronx is 280,000,000 gallons—nearly enough to supply the whole five boroughs. The Brooklyn water mains are 700 miles in length and there are over 7,000 water hydrants in Brooklyn, the number in Manhattan and The Bronx being 13,000 —20,000 in all.

The maximum daily supply of the Brooklyn water system is 360,000,000 gallons. There are 140 miles of water mains in Queens and 140 miles of mains in Richmond, the water supply of these two boroughs being furnished in part by wells.

Over $150,000,000 has already been expended for the construction and development of New York's water supply, and the constant increase of the demand for water makes it probable that other expenditures in large amounts will be necessary each year for many years to come.

Swiftest Liner.

The Kaiser Wilhem II. just now enjoys the reputation of being the swiftest of all ocean liners. A few days ago she made a run from New York to Plymouth at the average rate of 23.58 knots an hour. The best previous record, that of the Deutschland, was 23.51 knots.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Sept. 20.

Topic.—Cheering facts about missions from Japan and Korea.—Zech. xiv, 3-9, 20.

The prophecy of Zechariah, used as the topical reference, predicts the worldwide spread of the kingdom of God: "And it shall be in that day that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem, half of them toward the former [eastern] sea and half of them toward the hinder [western] sea, * * * and the Lord shall be King over all the earth. In that day shall there be one Lord and His name one." This prophecy is rapidly being fulfilled. Christ's kingdom has extended to the west until all of what may be called the western part of the world has heard of Him and has largely acknowledged His kingship. The west having been won for Christ, the cross is now being carried to the east. The oriental countries—India, China, Japan, Korea, Burma and Siam—are being told of the world's Saviour, and many are responding to His claims upon them.

Nothing in the mission gospel advancing more satisfactorily than in Japan and Korea. The news from these fields has always been cheering, but never more so than today. In Japan there are a number of signs of the increasing power and influence of Christianity and Christian civilization. (1) The success of Japan in the war with China is an evidence of the advance in Japan as a result of its contact with occidental civilization; (2) the present appearance of a year ago is significant, since it is the first alliance between an oriental and non-Christian nation with a European and Christian nation; (3) the influences of the great revival of two years ago are still being felt; it has extended to Formosa, which now belongs to Japan, and hundreds there have been led to Christ.

In Korea the effect of the war between Japan and Russia is not, of course, very favorable to the advance of Christ's kingdom, and yet there is no movement backward. Koreans have always been kindly disposed toward the gospel, and their interest is by no means on the wane, even in these days of battles and rumors of battles. Additions to the church on confession of faith, while not so large as in recent years, are yet considerable. The number of catechumens, however, has been largely increased, which is most favorable sign. New schools are being established all over the country, and large numbers of people are receiving instruction in special Bible classes. New chapels are constantly being built by native Christians, and thus Korea is being won for Christ.

Michigan's President.

Fred W. Chamberlin, for the past two years president of the Michigan state union, began his Christian Endeavor life in that state in 1888. He has been the president of local societies in Detroit, Yonkers, N. Y., and Montclair, N. J. He also served the Montclair Young People's federation as its president and made an enviable record as president of the Detroit Christian Endeavor union for two years. He has splendid executive ability and a great faculty of "making things go."

F. W. CHAMBERLIN.

The Value of Conventions.

There can be no doubt as to the value of the Endeavor conventions. They bring together picked workers from the churches, the brightest and best and most devoted souls. The simple fact of such a coming into touch with hundreds of consecrated lives must mean untold blessing.

We labor in our little corner of the field. Our view is necessarily narrow. We are busy with our difficulties and problems. We often grow dull and discouraged. To rub against other workers who have met these same obstacles and conquered them, who have seen glorious results in the work of the gospel, and to see the glow and feel the throb of their enthusiasm, always puts us back with new grit and fresh power.

The matter of methods is an important one. Perhaps we have worn out the old ways of doing things. In some other field they have learned to do the same old work in new ways. To know these will make our service for Christ far more effective.—Rev. Edwin Forrest Hallenbeck, D. D.

Enthusiasm In Mission Lands.

Into whatever mission land I go I find the same spirit of keen enthusiasm and the same overmastering motive of love to Christ as are found in English speaking lands. Not a single country has been found or a single evangelical denomination where if the genuine spirit of Christian Endeavor have been faithfully applied they do not bring forth the same fruits of acknowledgment of Christ, service for Christ, fellowship with Christ's people and loyalty to Christ's church. In the mission lands I have visited I found Endeavor societies doing all kinds of mission work, some sending contributions to the land that gave the society its birth.—F. E. Clark.

ENTHUSIASTIC AND HARMONIOUS CONVENTION NOMINATES CHARLES G. BLACK FOR GOVERNOR

Tumultous Cheers When the Name of Grover Cleveland, "Jersey's First Citizen", is Mentioned.

FOR EQUAL TAXATION—AGAINST EXTRAVAGANCE

Samuel S. Childs to Represent Somerset County and Peter Egenoff, Union County, on State Committee—The List of Presidential Electors Chooses—Swackhamer Not Mentioned.

Charles G. Black, of Hudson County, was nominated for Governor on the first ballot at the Democratic State convention at Trenton Thursday. S. S. Swackhamer's name was not mentioned, although he made a plea for himself at the Somerset county delegation's caucus.

The Gloucester delegation insisted on putting in nomination the name of former Senator Thomas M. Ferrell, of that county. His name after a time was withdrawn in favor of Black.

Black was placed in nomination by Jacob Hendrickson, of Burlington. Senator Hudspeth, of Hudson, took the platform and said that Hudson desired to second the nomination of Mr. Black and he thought that with him as a candidate victory might perch on the Democratic banners. Former Prosecutor Bayard Stockton, of the Mercer County delegation, placed in nomination the name of Mayor Frank S. Katzenbach, of Trenton.

J. E. Martine, the farmer orator of this city, desired to second the nomination of former Senator William C. Gebhardt, who had been named by Hunterdon. Chairman Hardin recognized Mr. Martine as "the gentleman from Hudson," and this brought forth a smiling protest from that county. Mr. Martine then arose and said: "I would to God that the Democratic representation from Union was as glorious as that from Hudson, but I regret to say that it is not and because the blessing of a Democratic atmosphere is denied me I hope you will pardon me."

Senator Ferrell, who had been placed in nomination by George W. Herbert, chairman of the Gloucester County delegation, was withdrawn.

The first ballot taken, which determined the nomination for Black, was as follows: Atlantic County, thirty-one votes for Black; Bergen County, sixty-seven votes for Black; Burlington, forty-three votes for Black; Camden, fifty votes for Black; Cape May, sixteen votes for Black; Cumberland, twenty-one votes for Black; Essex, 161 votes for Black; Gloucester, twenty-one votes for Ferrell; Hudson, 198 votes for Black; Hunterdon, twenty-seven votes for Black; Mercer, fifty votes for Katzenbach; Middlesex, forty-six votes for Black; Monmouth, sixty-three votes for Black; Morris, thirty-four votes for Black; Ocean, twenty votes for Black and six for Ferrell; Passaic, seventy votes for Black; Salem, eighteen votes for Black; Sussex, twenty-four votes for Black; Union, sixty votes for Black; Warren, twenty-eight votes for Black. Total, Black, 979, Ferrell 43, Katzenbach 50. Hunterdon withdrew the name of Gebhards and voted for Black.

On motion of James C. Connolly, of Elizabeth, the nomination was made unanimous and Mr. Black was named by acclamation.

In Somerset County, ex-Senator Keys made a hard fight for State committee, but because of his being a New Yorker the delegates declined to stand longer for him, but S. S. Childs was named.

The Somerset delegation organized as follows: Vice president, Calvin Carle; secretary, Calvin D. McMurray; resolutions committee, Runyon Field; rules, Cornelius Cronkee; credentials, Peter Estphen. The Union County members of convention committees were: Resolutions, James C. Connolly, of Elizabeth; rules, John Lane, of Summit; credentials, Edward Nugent, of Elizabeth; organization, John Crowell, of Rahway.

When Chairman Hardin referred to Grover Cleveland as "easily the first citizen of New Jersey and of the United States of America," there was vociferous cheering that lasted for some time.

Charles G. Black did not go to Trenton yesterday. At Jersey City he said he would accept the nomination and publish soon his letter of acceptance.

Somerset county refused S. S. Swackhamer's personal plea to give him a vote.

State Committee Chairman Gourley said after the convention that he had been asked to retain the State chairmanship and he would probably do so, but he was reluctant to remain in the position because it interfered with his practice.

The platform adopted denounces the Republican party for alleged extravagance of public money, condemns the party in power for "legislative corruption" and pledges the Democratic party to enforce the State constitution in regard to equal taxation of property. The action of the St. Louis convention is indorsed.

The following presidential electors were selected by the convention:

Electors-at-large—Richard V. Lindabury, of Somerset; Judge Howard Carrow, of Camden.

Electors—First district, John W. Westcott, Ocean.

Second district, B. Frank Hires, Cumberland.

Third district, Isaac W. Carmichael, Camden.

Fourth district, Robert L. Stevens, Somerset.

Fifth district, William J. Curtis, Union.

Sixth district, Jacob L. Burnell, Sussex.

Seventh district, Augustus H. Vanderpool, Newark.

Eighth district, Elvin W. Crane, Newark.

Ninth district, John J. Voorhees, Jersey City.

Tenth district, Edwin A. Stevens, Hudson.

The new Democratic State committee agreed upon by the various counties was as follows:

Atlantic—William A. Wance.
Bergen—Luther A. Campbell.
Burlington—B. P. Wills.
Camden—William H. Davis.
Cape May—Matthew Jefferson.
Cumberland—Samuel Iredell.
Essex—James E. Nugent.

MARCONNIER RECEPTION.

In Honor of Mrs. J. W. Schenck, the New Superintendent.

About forty people, including members and friends of Marcounier chapel and Trinity Reformed church, attended a reception given Thursday in honor of Mrs. J. W. Schenck, the new superintendent of Marcounier chapel, at the home of Mrs. George W. Reighton, 1270 Park avenue. The affair was arranged by Mrs. Reighton, an earnest worker at Marcounier chapel, it affording an opportunity for the members and friends to become better acquainted with Mrs. Schenck.

The evening was spent in a social way, during which refreshments were served. Since Mrs. Schenck took charge at this work a few weeks ago, there has been a revival of interest and a successful winter's work is predicted.

Two Failures at Elizabeth.

Nathaniel D. Williams, dry goods and carpet merchant of 136 Broad street, Elizabeth, made an assignment to Charles H. K. Halsey, secretary and treasurer of the Union County Trust Co., of that city. Application has been made in the Court of Chancery, Newark, before Vice Chancellor Stevens for the appointment of a receiver for the Millin Printing Company, of Elizabeth.

Adam Danits, of Brooklyn, is the guest of John Aister, of the Standard Surgical Instrument Company's plant.

MISS FREDERICKSON NOW MRS. ASHENFELTER

DAUGHTER OF SERGEANT CHRISTIAN FREDERICKSON A BRIDE.

Notwithstanding the gusty rainstorm of Sept. 14, the Netherwood home of Christian Frederickson was bright with a profusion of flowers and shaded lights amidst which the brilliant costumes of the guests who were gathered to attend the wedding of Miss Christina Fredericka Frederickson and Walter Ashenfelter. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, pastor of the First M. E. church. Miss Emma Lovald, of Netherwood, was bridesmaid.

After a wedding tour through Canada, in the course of which a visit will be made at the home of the groom's sister in Toronto, Mr. and Mrs. Ashenfelter will make their home at Dunellen.

Mr. Ashenfelter is a train baggagemaster on the Jersey Central and has been residing at Dunellen for some time.

Trolley System Change.

Commencing yesterday the crews operating the Dunellen-Newark trolleys changed at Roselle, instead of Elizabeth, as heretofore. The men are somewhat disappointed in the new order as they expected that they would run through from Newark to Dunellen without change.

William Porter, of Scott's Press Works, is detained at home by illness.

An order for 100 pioners has been received at the Pond Machine Tool Company's works.

James Kerr, Wallace Morton and Joseph Robinson went to New York, Saturday, to box up a large lathe for one shipment at the Niles-Bement-Pond Company's main office.

BASKETBALL SEASON'S PROSPECTS AT THE P.H.S.

PLENTY OF MATERIAL FOR ANOTHER WINNING TEAM THIS YEAR.

As soon as the satisfactory arrangements can be made with the Y. M. C. A. officials for the use of the gymnasium, the Plainfield High School basket ball team will begin practice. It is doubtful if any arrangement can be made before October 1, as the classes at the Association do not begin till then. Though the P. H. S. A. A. has not yet organized, it is pretty well known who will represent the school on the various teams. With a few exceptions the basket ball team will be the same as the team of last year, which won the city basket ball championship. Harry G. Thompson will captain the team, and the old force of players is strengthened by William Deane, the captain of Leal's team last year. Collier, who was the crack forward, is still in the game. Of the new candidates, Sam Bogart, Malcolm Davis, Phillip Smith and George Bentley are all possible men.

In addition to their preparations for a basket ball and football team, probably the first action of the new Board of Directors will be to get the annual fall tennis tournament started. This is one of the regular events in the fall season, while there are reports that a few back horses are scattered among the students who will give both Briggs and Craig a hard fight. Jack and William Douglass are also expected to put up a good showing, and Paul Collier is by no means new at the game.

It is not definitely known when the matches will begin, but they will probably be commenced on Briggs' court as soon as the Board is elected.

WM. MUIR BURIED.

Funeral Services Over Young Man Accidently Killed Held Thursday.

Funeral services of William Muir, fifteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Muir, of Essex street, whose death occured suddenly Monday morning as a result of an accident on Saturday, were held from Bope chapel Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, Rev. L. R. Howard, the pastor, officiating. There was a very large attendance of friends, including many playmates of the dead boy.

There were many floral tributes, including set pieces from boy chums at the "circus" where young Muir met with an accident; his Sunday-school class the Thistle Club, Essex street playmates, the Gable Club, of which Thomas Muir is a member, and several others. During the services "Nearer the Cross" was sung by E. E. Runyon and William N. Runyon.

The interment was in Hillside cemetery and the pall-bearers were Frank Simmer, Wallace Pearce, Hugh Gray, Edward Harding, Alfred Becker and John Donnelly.

Many Robins Killed.

A remarkable incident in connection with the severe storm of last Wednesday night, was the finding the morning after on the lawn at the home of Former Mayor John F. Wilson in North Plainfield, of seventy-two dead robins. Mr. Wilson's lawn was strewn with broken limbs and debris of all kinds and cleaning it up Thursday morning the robins were found. Mr. Wilson personally counted the dead birds and afterward had them buried. That there should be so many robins in that section was a great surprise to him. For a long time past Mr. Wilson has been interested in a pet robin who would come to his front door whenever he would give a peculiar whistle. Since the storm this bird has failed to put in an appearance.

MISS SNYDER WEDS.

Plainfield Girl Becomes Wife of Jersey City Man Saturday Afternoon.

Miss Daisy Snyder, of West Front street, and Harry Hallteld, of Jersey City, were married Saturday afternoon at Greenville, in the presence of a few relatives and intimate friends. Miss Margaret Kennedy, of the borough, attended the bride as maid-of-honor, and George Salekid, a brother of the groom, was the best man. After the ceremony the bridal party went to New York, where they had dinner at the St. Denis. Later they left for St. Louis to attend the Exposition. Upon their return they will live in Jersey City, where the groom is employed in the offices of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company.

The bride was for several years employed by I. H. Boehm at his dry goods store. Her home was formerly at Easton, Pa.

PLAINFIELD'S "FINEST" DEFEAT NEWARK'S COPS

"JACK" FLYNN AND "CARRIE" HIGGINS WIN PLAUDETS.

After a discouraging series of defeats the Plainfield policemen got together at Wiedemeyer's Eastern League Park, Newark, Thursday, and trounced the Fourth Precinct baseball team of that city to the tune of 12 to 1. The Newark aggregation found the curves of McKeon more puzzling than accessible while the Newark pitcher was freely hit by the majority of the local players.

Three of the runs were made by Roundsman "Jack" Flynn, who scored twice after getting his base on balls. The feature of the whole game was the great one-handed catch made by Morris Higgins at centre. A pair of shoes was offered to the first man to put the ball over the fence and all hope of whining them faded from view when in response to a yell of "Carrie" from one of the rooters, Higgins leaped into the air and grabbed the Newark man's high drive with one hand.

The line-up: McKeon, p; Meister, c; Dailey, 1b; McCarthy, 2b; McGinley, 3b; Winn, ss; Charlie Flynn, lf; Higgins, cf; John Flynn, rf. Umpires—Schroeder and Voehl.

After the game a fine banquet was served to the players and in the calmer gustatory joys of the feast, all feeling of disappointment on the part of the vanquished team were wiped out in their admiration of the capacity for gastronomic ballast which most of the Plainfielders displayed.

Await Oracle's Appearance.

With the resuming of studies and the subsequent reorganization of athletics and school enterprises at the Plainfield high school, the board of editors of The Oracle are busy in preparation for the opening number of the magazine. The following pupils will constitute the board for the coming year: Editor-in-chief, Percy M. Brown; school editor, Antionette Aalholm; literary editor, Lillian Snodgrass; corresponding editor, Benjamin Herman; exchange editor, Weston Gavett. The business manager is Howard Lapsley, and the assistant business managers are Miss Anna Hungys and George Bentley. The reporters who will serve till December are the following: Class of 1905, Miss Amy Conant and Chester Briggs; 1906, Miss Gertrude B. Hunter and Dudley Strong; 1907, Miss Gertrude Abbott and Gilbert Griggs. Two more reporters will be appointed to serve from the freshman class. They will probably be elected after the first edition of the paper is out.

POSTOFFICE BUILDING NOT LIKELY FOR A TIME

ONE OFFICIAL BELIEVES YEARS WILL ELAPSE BEFORE IT IS ERECTED.

The prospects of Plainfield having a Government building in which to put her postoffice at an early date, is considered very slight according to one official who ventured the opinion today that it would not be built inside of ten years. He mentioned the fact that Hitzsbech has been trying for several years to get such a building and he thought that the county seat with its large population and the home of Congressman Fowler and United States Senator Kean should have the first call.

The Plainfield postoffice is now in the first-class and has fulfilled all requirements necessary to secure a Government building, but when it is considered that there are but a very few such buildings in the State, it is not to be considered at that this city is an exception. New Brunswck was many years securing such a structure, and a Plainfielder remarked today that he would rather see the local office where it is than in the kind of a building erected for the purpose in New Brunswick. He said that the building will be too small in a few years.

In the bill introduced by Senator Kean for Plainfield's proposed building, $100,000 was named as the figure. To this some persons took exception, forgetting that if the Government starts a building, it will complete it even though the cost be greater than the amount first named. All things considered, Plainfield is believed to be very comfortably fixed so far as its postoffice home is concerned.

The present quarters for the postoffice costs the Government $4,500 a year in rental and to this must be added the $600 necessary to have the mail carried between the office and the railroad station. The Government is obliged to stand the expense of having the mail taken back and forth because the postoffice is located just outside the district cared for by the railroad company. If the office was the width of Front street near the railroad station, the New Jersey Central would have to provide ways and means for having the mail taken back and forth to the station.

The question has at times been a perplexing one, as it is difficult to get a reliable person who is willing to carry the mail for the limited salary. Many persons have taken the job only to give it up soon afterward. A great many trips between the office and the railroad station have to be made daily and the mail is often very heavy, especially at holiday times.

DEMOCRATS AT SEA

Reconvene at Saratoga With Nomination Unsettled.

GROUT AND SHEPARD IN THE LEAD

Four Other Candidates Close Behind Them—Professor Duncan Campbell Lee Presides as Permanent Chairman.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Sept. 21.—The Democratic state convention met for its second session at 11 o'clock and effected permanent organization by electing Professor Duncan Campbell Lee of Ithaca chairman.

The second session of the convention opened with the nomination of a candidate for governor still in the air, Edward M. Grout and Edward M. Shepard, both of Brooklyn, being regarded as leading the field.

The candidacy of Comptroller Grout has the backing of Senator Patrick H. McCarren and the Kings county delegation and is accorded a great deal of importance among the rank and file of the delegates. Even the people most interested in the other candidacies admit that Senator McCarren made a strong impression.

As to the candidacy of Mr. Shepard, his name came into every discussion, and he appeared to be the only candidate of those as all of the others were, so to speak, afraid.

Other names discussed are those of Assemblyman George M. Palmer of Schoharie county, Supreme Court Justice D. Cady Herrick of Albany, William B. Hornblower of New York, Mayor George B. McClellan of New York and former Secretary of War Daniel S. Lamont of Elmira.

John B. Stanchfield of Elmira has apparently been eliminated.

It is learned that Mr. Palmer is likely to be offered the nomination for lieutenant governor in case of the nomination of either Mr. Grout or Mr. Shepard. This suggestion is received with little enthusiasm by Mr. Palmer's friends, who imply that he should either be nominated for governor or left off the ticket.

The name of Justice Herrick was coupled by rumor with that of Representative Francis Burton Harrison of New York as the lieutenant governorship. Justice Herrick was spoken of most frequently as a compromise between Shepard and Grout in case the nomination of either should turn out to be impossible. His candidacy created a great deal of talk among some of the Albany leaders who flocked to Senator Hill's quarters, it was supposed, to protest against such a move as the justice has long been regarded as opposed to the Democratic faction in Albany county. The talk of Mayor McClellan has not been very serious. The opposition of Leader Murphy of Tammany Hall was generally regarded as placing a final quietus upon any possibility of McClellan's nomination.

The name of Mr. Hornblower as a possible candidate made its first appearance immediately after the convention had taken recess, and it had a brisk circulation through the crowd of corridors. It was also learned during a visit by Representative Cockran and Senator Dowling of Tammany Hall to former Senator Hill.

Parker in Touch With Leaders.

ESOPUS, Sept. 21.—Judge Parker has been in close touch with political advisers who are in attendance upon the state convention at Saratoga. Every few minutes messengers were climbing the hill from the telegraph office to Judge Parker's house. The operator who handles Judge Parker's personal messages was busy most of the day, but in spite of many messages the candidate found time to issue orders to his men concerning the harvesting of the crops. There were no political callers at Rosemount, and the judge took a long horseback ride.

Cortelyou and Odell in Conference.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—Chairman Cortelyou at Republican national headquarters and Chairman Odell at Republican state headquarters were occupied in a series of conferences relating to the national and state campaigns. After calling at national headquarters Chairman Odell said that he had cleared up a number of important matters with Mr. Cortelyou, all relating to the state election. Chairman Cortelyou had extended conferences with Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island, Senator Platt of Connecticut and ex-Governor Black, but no information was given out as to the results in either case.

Fairbanks Speaks in Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 21. — Senator Charles W. Fairbanks was the chief speaker at a Republican mass meeting held in this city, the event being the formal opening of the Republican campaign in Maryland. In his speech Senator Fairbanks declared that the losses of Baltimore in the conflagration of this year will be more than those sustained by the city during the last Democratic administration, as a result of the temporary overthrow of Republican principles.

Taggart Back From the West.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—Chairman Taggart of the national Democratic committee has arrived in New York from the west.

Ice In North Dakota.

GRAND FORKS, N. D., Sept. 21.—The first killing frost of the season has visited this locality. The temperature touched freezing point, and thick ice formed on all exposed water. Uncut corn is killed and a large quantity of flax. There is still some green wheat, but this will be good for nothing but feed.

PORT ARTHUR'S PERIL

Russia Anxiously Awaiting News of Jap Assault.

KUROKI REPORTED ACROSS THE HUN

St. Petersburg Discredits Alleged Advance, Saying That He Could Not Have Evaded Rennekampf's Cossack Scouts.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 21.—Interest is again concentrated upon Port Arthur, owing to the receipt from foreign sources of news that a general storming of the fortifications there has begun. A few belated telegrams from General Stoessel, the commander at Port Arthur, are published, recording the repulse of the Japanese and continued attacks. This strengthens confidence in the ability of the defenders to hold out despite the furious onslaughts of the Japanese. The last attack mentioned by General Stoessel took place the night of Sept. 14 and was directed against redoubt No. 8, which protects the water supply of the city. The redoubt is about two miles beyond the line of permanent forts, and the attack upon this shows that the Japanese were not then within striking distance of the main fortress. Reports from Shanghai that some of the defenses had fallen into the hands of the Japanese as a result of a general assault on Sept. 20 are not confirmed from Russian sources.

The latest telegrams brought to Chefu by Prince Radziwill have not yet reached the war office. It is understood that these dispatches contain details of the landing of strong Japanese reinforcements at Dalny, which would tend to confirm the belief that it is the intention of the Japanese to storm the fortress and that the warships will probably take part in the attack. In this event Rear Admiral Wiren's division will doubtless go out and engage the Japanese fleet.

All Russia is anxiously awaiting news from the beleaguered garrison. Public feeling has been aroused to a high tension by the dreadful picture given by Prince Radziwill of the sufferings of the Russian army there.

The sensational announcement that General Kuroki has crossed the Hun river unopposed and that the whole Japanese army is advancing upon Mukden is overshadowed by anxiety for Port Arthur. Moreover, the announce*ment* does not receive complete credence here as being in direct contradiction of official news issued by the general staff. General Kuropatkin announced only two days ago that there was not a single Japanese east of Bentsiaputze. How, it is asked, could General Kuroki, with 150,000 men, slip by General Rennemkampff's Cossacks and cross the Hun river near the Fushan coal mines, thirty miles east of Mukden? Fushan is situated on the road from Bentsiaputze, where General Kuropatkin's center rests. This road is carefully watched by General Kuropatkin's outposts between Mukden and Sintsintin. A strong guard has been placed at the Fushan mines, which General Kuropatkin will not abandon without a struggle, as the loss of the mines would involve the cutting off of the coal supply for the whole of the Manchurian railway. Nevertheless, it is considered more than doubtful if General Kuropatkin will make a decisive stand south of Tie pass.

Argentine Warships at Libau.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 21.—It is reported here that four warships purchased from Argentine have arrived at Libau.

Free Postal Information.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21.—The postoffice department has issued a pamphlet of general postal information, intended for free distribution throughout the United States. The distribution was begun today and under an order of Third Assistant Postmaster General Madden copies will not be supplied direct to the public from the department, but through postmasters, to whom application must be made. As nearly as practicable one copy will be supplied from the stamp windows of postoffices to each family and each business establishment.

Cuba's Import Trade.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21.—The state department has received from Minister Squiers at Havana a table showing Cuba's import trade for the first quarter of 1904 and for the same quarter of 1903. These figures are of special interest in that they cover the first quarter after Dec. 26, 1903, when the reciprocity treaty took effect. There was an increase of $2,038,200 in the imports of Cuba for the first quarter of 1904 over those for the same period of 1903.

Church Wall Collapses.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Sept. 21.—With a crash that could be heard throughout the entire northern section of this city, the inner wall of the north side of the new St. Anthony's church collapsed, killing Gilbert Tremblay, sixty years old, a mason, and seriously injuring six others who were working on the structure. The building, which was under construction, occupied almost an entire block on Acushnet avenue, between Ballard and Nye streets.

Strike Situation In Rome Improving.

ROME, Sept. 21.—The situation here is *gradually improving, and it is ex*pected that there will be a general resumption of work from today on. A dispatch from Naples to a news agency here says that a meeting of strikers there ended in a conflict with the police and that the latter, by firing in the air, frightened and dispersed the mob.

MARRIAGE DECLARED VOID

Court Finds That H. C. Brose Secured Consent by Threats.

QUICKLY ANNULLED

Vice Chancellor Bergen Hands Down Decree—Sensational Episode.

The case of Nellie Williams, a fifteen-year-old girl, residing on West Fifth street, against Henry Brose, of Vine street, to set aside a marriage ceremony as void for duress, which, as stated in The Daily Press of Tuesday, was then on trial before Vice Chancellor Bergen, has been decided in favor of Miss Williams. Brose in February last, took Miss Williams to Justice Clark in Scotch Plains, and had the ceremony of marriage performed. The testimony taken proved to the court's satisfaction that Brose had intimidated Miss Williams, and compelled her to go with him and submit to the ceremony, while she was in a State of terror, fearing that he would execute his threats. The Justice knew nothing of the threats.

The testimony showed that Brose and Miss Williams went directly from the Justice's office to the home of Miss Williams in this city, where Miss Williams, in the presence of Brose, at once told her sister that Brose had frightened her into marrying him. Brose left the house in a few minutes, leaving Miss Williams with her father and mother and sister. The parties have never been alone together since the ceremony was performed. The parents were heart-broken, and Miss Williams, who became so seriously ill that it was feared she might die. Upon the parents laying the facts before counsel, they were advised that if the girl's story could be corroborated in its essential features, the Court of Chancery would declare the ceremony to be a nullity.

Suit was begun, in which the Chancellor was asked to declare that Miss Williams was under duress at the time of the marriage ceremony, and that such ceremony was null and void. In granting the relief prayed for, and setting aside the marriage and declaring that each of the parties is still unmarried, the Vice Chancellor referred to the well-settled principle that it is only upon the most satisfactory and conclusive evidence, that the court will adjudge a ceremonial contract of marriage void, and will never accept the uncorroborated evidence of the parties. The court held nevertheless, that marriage was a civil contract, and in order to its validity the voluntary consent of both parties is indispensable, unless the ceremonial marriage is afterwards ratified by their conduct. In this case, the court said that the evidence was conclusive that Miss Williams was under duress at the time of the ceremony, and therefore could not in legal contemplation, consent to the marriage; that there had been no ratification of the marriage by word or act, and that it was the plain duty of the court to declare the marriage absolutely void, and the parties to the ceremony to be unmarried.

The counsel for Miss Williams were William M. Stillman and Craig A. Marsh, Esqs. No similar case had ever been decided in New Jersey, but counsel advised that on principle, there could be no doubt of the power and duty of the court to free Miss Williams from the so-called marriage, if the material features of her testimony could be corroborated by credible witnesses.

The Vice Chancellor decided the case immediately upon the conclusion of the argument, declaring that if there ever was a case in which duress was clearly proved, it was the case then on trial.

EDWIN H. GRIGGS TO TALK ON SHAKESPEARE

SERIES OF SIX LECTURES TO BE GIVEN IN THIS CITY.

Prof. Edward Howard Griggs has been engaged to give a series of six Shakespearian lectures in the First M. E. church, commencing on Wednesday afternoon, October 12, at 3:45. All lectures will be at the same place and the same hour.

The course is as follows: October 12, "The Humanity of Shakespeare;" October 19, "The Ethical Awakening: The Merchant of Venice;" October 26, "Facing the Mystery: Hamlet;" November 2, "The Tragedy of Ambition: Macbeth;" November 9, "World Force and the Individual: Antony and Cleopatra;" November 16, "The Final Attitude: The Tempest." Prof. Griggs, who is recognized as a Shakespearian scholar, is well known here as a lecturer, his course on "The Divine Comedy" two years ago attracting widespread attention.

LOCAL DEATH RATE LOW

Interesting Statistics From the Twelfth Census.

POPULATION IS DENSE

Causes of Death and the Record for Longevity Are Given.

According to the abstract of the twelfth census which has just appeared, New Jersey ranks sixteenth in population among the States and has a density of population of 338.5 per square mile. New Jersey has nearly one hundred people per square mile more than New York State, the Empire State having 152.6 per square mile. There are only two States with a greater density of population than New Jersey, namely, Rhode Island, 407, and Massachusetts, 348.9 inhabitants per square mile. The District of Columbia, however, exceeds any of the commonwealths in this respect, having 4,645.5 inhabitants per square mile.

New Jersey has added to her population more rapidly, in proportion to population, *during the last three cen*sus periods than any State east of the Mississippi River. This means that New Jersey shows a greater percentage in increase of population during the thirty years up to 1900, than even Illinois, with the wonderful growth of Chicago, which has more than quadrupled during the last three cen*suses*periods. Between 1890 and 1900 New Jersey added 438,795 to her population, an increase of 30.4 per cent.; between 1880 and 1890 there was an increase of 312,817 to the population of the State, the percentage of increase being 27.7; between 1870 and 1880 the increase was 225,020, or 24.8 per cent.

The death rate per 1,000 population in the principal cities of New Jersey is as follows: Atlantic City, 16.7 persons died to every 1,000 inhabitants in 1900; Bayonne, 16.7 persons; Bridgeton, 14.4 persons; Camden, 16.3 persons; Elizabeth, 17.5 persons; Harrison, 22.1 persons; Hoboken, 21.1 persons; Jersey City, 20.7 persons; Millville, 16.6 persons; Montclair, 13.3 persons; Morristown, 17 persons; Newark, 19.8 persons; New Brunswick, 21.2 persons; Orange, 20.8 persons; Passaic, 20.1 persons; Trenton, 19 persons; Perth Amboy, 14.1 persons; Phillipsburg, 16 persons; Plainfield, 15.7 persons; Union, 12.6 persons; Trenton, 16 persons. East Orange and a number of other important New Jersey cities and towns are not reported under vital statistics.

During the year 3,368 deaths were caused in New Jersey by pneumonia, 3,292 by consumption, 2,567 bowl trouble, 919 diphtheria and croup, 396 typhoid fever, 443 influenza, 119 malarial fever, 320 whooping cough, 233 scarlet fever and 206 measles.

New Jersey has 79,617 inhabitants who are sixty-five years of age and upward 109,474 fifty-five to sixty-four years.

The age period showing the greatest population in the State over any other age period is between the ages of thirty-five and forty-four years. The next greatest number in any age period are children under five years of age.

MISS LAURA HOLDER WEDS A MICHIGAN MAN

FORMER PLAINFIELD GIRL BECOMES WIFE OF W. A. GRAHAM.

Miss Laura Apgar Holder, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Holder, formerly of Westervelt avenue, and William Alexander Graham, son of William Douglas Graham, of Tawas City, Michigan, were married Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents in Roseville, Essex county, by Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church.

The bride as gowned in a dark blue travelling dress, with hat to match. She and her husband will make an extended trip to Michigan, stopping at Niagara Flals and Albany on their return. They received a great many handsome presents, including cut glass, Rowland china, table linen and other useful and ornamental gifts.

Among the guests present at the wedding were: Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Cornelius Schenck, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Holder, Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Holder, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Taylor, of this city; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Gerbert, of Somerville; Mr. and Mrs. William Graham, of Albany; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Grant, of Newark, and Miss R. C. Peay, of New York city.

On Notification Committee.

Major Nelson Y. Dungan, of Somerville, and John L. Crowell, of Rahway, have been appointed members of the committee which will notify Charles S. Black of his nomination for Governor on the Democratic ticket.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

MOODY FOR CONGRESS

Not Unlikely That He Will be Named by Democrats.

CONVENTION TOMORROW

Martine Does Not Seek the Honor and Will Only Accept If Asked Unanimously.

The Democratic Congressional convention of the Fifth District will be held at Elizabeth today to name the opponent of Charles N. Fowler, who was renominated by the Republicans at Morristown yesterday. The convention will be held in the Lyceum Theatre building and will be called to order at noon.

John Moody.

Within the last few days, County Chairman John Moody, of Cranford, the prention law in New York, has turned up as a formidable candidate and it is not improbable that he will be named. Mr. Moody's friends in Morris County have urged him to allow his name to go before the convention and it is understood that on the advice of Union County friends he will do so. James E. Martine, of this city, and William Wilson, of Elizabeth, are also being considered.

Mr. Martine said today that he is in no sense a candidate and has never been one despite the urgings of his friends. He added: "I'll accept the offer if it is made unanimously, but I want it distinctly understood that I am not seeking the place. If Mr. Moody is the choice of the convention, he will have my hearty support for I believe the nomination would be a good one. I do not see how Mr. Wilson can win and I am inclined to think that it would be inadvisable to pick him."

Mr. Martine's name will be presented to the convention by the Plainfield delegation.

WESTFIELD LAYS CLAIM TO COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP

DENMAN DECLARES THAT IT IS ENTITLED TO THE HONOR.

Manager Charles Denman, of the Westfield ball team, takes exception to the disputed claim he makes for the Union County championship. He says that the fact that he has won thirteen out of twenty games played with Union County teams give him the championship. He also says that the Acelians disbanded five weeks ago and in so doing put themselves out of the race. To use Manager Denman's words he says: "Westfield claims, and will be satisfied with nothing less than the championship of the county."

The seven defeats acknowledged by the Westfield manager include three games lost to the Acelians and four lost to the Plainfield A. C. Of course, the Westfield team has not played the Elizabeth Stars and Manager Burke says that his aggregation will have to be reckoned with before the county championship is given out.

Jersey Central's Nine.

A picture of the New Jersey Central baseball team appears in the September number of The Railway Employes. Among the members of the team is Arthur Smith, of Grandview avenue. This team has made an excellent record this year and friends of it have been endeavoring to arrange a game with the Plainfield A. C., believing that it could defeat the locals.

SOMERSET DEMOCRATS MEET SATURDAY, OCT. 8

CHAIRMAN SHURTS ISSUES CALL FOR COUNTY CONVENTION.

Chairman Jacob Shurts, of the Democratic County executive committee, of Somerset County, issued a call yesterday for the county convention, which will be held in the Court House at Somerville on Saturday, Oct. 8.

The convention will be called to order at 11 o'clock. Candidates for the offices of sheriff and member of Assembly will be named.

Among those prominently mentioned for shrievalty honors are Jacob Shurts and David J. Carney.

Thus far three men have been mentioned for nomination with the nomination for Assemblyman. They are Daniel H. Beckman, of Branchburg township, a lawyer, practising in Somerville; Major Nelson Y. Dungan, commander of the First Battalion of the Second Regiment, N. G. N. J., also a lawyer, and Assemblyman Swackhamer, of North Plainfield, who is likewise a lawyer.

Mr. Swackhamer has said that he will not accept the nomination. Major Dungan also refuses to accept the nomination. In conversation with a reporter Major Dungan said for business reasons he positively could not allow himself to be a candidate. Asked as to who would be the candidate, Major Dungan replied emphatically: "Samuel Swackhamer." "But," he was told, "Mr. Swackhamer declines to run." "Yes, I know he does," was the reply, "but I think he would accept if nominated."

HARVEST FESTIVAL.

The Salvation Army Will Observe the Annual Event From Saturday Until Tuesday.

The annual harvest festival of the Salvation Army will be held from Saturday night, October 1, to Tuesday, October 4, at the Army Hall on East Front street. Major Sheppard and Ensign Trask, of Newark, N. J., will conduct the services. Throughout the country these four days have been set apart for the festival, and Plainfield Salvationists are not likely to be backward in doing their part.

Although a service of this kind appeals more particularly to the agricultural class, it is possible for nearly everyone to help by giving freely of whatever they have that would be likely to meet with a purchaser. Poultry, fruit, vegetables, flowers, etc., will all come in useful, and however small the gift it will help to make the festival a success. The Salvation Army devotes the funds it raises in this manner to charitable purposes, and it should therefore appeal to all those who are anxious to see the poor and needy relieved.

Timbo Social Club Active.

At a meeting of the Timbo Social Club, last evening, funds were voted for the purchase of a piano to be installed in the rooms. The club now has forty members and during the winter months it will entertain members and friends with various unique functions.

Flag Raising at Bedminster.

A Democratic rally and banner raising will take place at Bedminster, Somerset County, tomorrow night. Thomas Moore is chairman of the committee of arrangements, so all who attend will be royally welcomed.

P. S. C. Will Try for Right of Way in East Second Street.

J. P. HOMAN'S OFFER

Trolley Company Seeks to Relieve the Congested Condition in Watchung Avenue.

That the Public Service Corporation believes it will find a way to relieve the congested condition at the Watchung avenue terminus without a great outlay of money, is apparent to the minds of many persons. The decision of the company as conveyed to the street commissioner by Oct. 10th that it would not agree to pave Watchung avenue and East Front street for the privilege of laying a double track, gave the city officials the idea that it was looking for another way out of the present difficulty, and this is confirmed through a recent move it made.

J. P. Homan, who has just purchased the property at the corner of Watchung avenue and East Second street, which is occupied by the Public Service corporation as a waiting room, has since sought to lease the company a portion of a fine building which he proposes to erect on that corner. He offered to make provision in the building for the company which would give it a waiting room and offices if they were desired, and give a ten year lease. The offer was rejected and at the same time Mr. Homan was given to understand that the company does not want to make Watchung avenue at that point a center of trolley traffic any longer than it can possibly help.

The company knows the conditions upon which it can lay double tracks through Watchung avenue, and is not willing to comply with them. In view of this, it is learned on the best of authority that the company has never given up its pet idea of laying tracks through East Second street, thereby giving the company a belt line in one section of the city. That there would be strong opposition to this plan goes without saying and it is doubtful if the Common Council would permit the company to lay tracks through such a narrow street.

If the corporation could only get a right of way through East Second street to its present road at Second and Richmond streets, it would give another route for the through cars now operated between Newark and Dunellen and Jersey City and Trenton and it would help to do away with the blocking of Watchung avenue, which is the case at present.

It has been known for a long time that the company has had its eye on East Second street and at one time when an effort was made to push the matter, the property-owners entered vigorous protest against their street being occupied with trolley tracks. A citizen in speaking about the matter today, said that the company is always anxious to get all that it can for as little as possible, but he did not believe that the city was asking too much of the company when the privilege of laying double tracks was offered for the paving of the street. This the citizen thought was little enough to demand of the company when it would be greatly benefitted thereby.

"When it is considered what other communities have received from the trolley company for privileges, it does not seem as though Plainfield has received very much," said another citizen. "They are given the best streets in the city and accorded every consideration and yet when the city wants anything from the company the request is denied. I only hope that the Common Council will be just as exacting of the company as it is of the city."

Y. M. C. A.'s New Prospectus.

The annual prospectus of the Young Men's Christian Association has decided departure from the publications of former years, being somewhat more explicit in detail. It contains no cuts, though all the departments of the work are outlined at considerable length. There are a number of changes in the physical department, which have been mentioned previously in this paper, and in addition the prospectus announces that there will be bowling, hand ball and basket ball tournaments, together with the annual athletic and gymnastic championship contests.

Irving School Crowded.

Two more classes at the Irving School will shortly be placed on half day sessions owing to the crowded conditions of the rooms. Steps are being taken by the authorities to provide full accommodations and matters will soon be righted.

FOWLER CONVENTION AN ENTHUSIASTIC ONE

FORMER MAYOR FISK TOOK A PROMINENT PART IN THE PROCEEDINGS.

Chairman John I. Blair Reilly, at the First district Congressional convention at Morristown yesterday, appointed former Mayor Charles J. Fisk, of this city, as one of a committee of three to fill a vacancy on the ticket should it occur too late for the convention to be reconvened before election day. The Congressional committee was instructed to reconvene the convention, giving eight days' notice, if such a vacancy should happen in ample time to make a new nomination, but otherwise the special committee is empowered to select a candidate.

Charles J. Fisk.

After Congressman Fowler had delivered his speech, accepting a renomination as stated in yesterday's issue, Lee Fairchild, of California, entertained the delegates with a particularly witty address which caused continued applause. Congressman William P. Hepburn followed with a stirring speech which was equally well received. Next to the ovation given to Congressman Fowler was the reception tendered Governor Foster M. Voorhees, who placed Mr. Fowler's name before the convention.

When former Mayor Charles J. Fisk called the convention to order he got the first applause. Mr. Fisk informed the delegates that they had assembled to nominate the next Congressman from the Fifth district, which produced a hearty cheer. The former Mayor took a leading part in the convention. He called the Union County caucus to order and had the additional honor of calling the convention to order as well as being renamed as a member of the Congressional committee and vacancy committee.

DUNELLEN'S ELEVEN.

Captain Maltbie's Team Getting Into Form for the Season.

The Dunellen football team will meet for practice this evening on the regular field. All the candidates are expected to be present. The team th's year will be the strongest which has represented the town on the gridiron for many years. There are several good players on the squad at present, many of whom have received training on local teams, and are experienced in the game.

The captain of the team is Robert Maltbie, and under his direction the team is developing into good form. Charles Lake is managing the team and has already secured a good list of games. Among the candidates for positions on the team are the following: Dick Rudd, John Coyle, Charles Titsworth, Frank Fletcher, Ernest Peters, Samuel Apgar, Charles Comberson and B. H. Brandon.

First Round Completed.

The first round in the High School tennis tournament was completed yesterday afternoon on the Albert street court. The play was decidedly uninteresting, for the most part the sets being easily won. The second round will be more interesting, the contestants being more evenly matched. The following were the scores in yesterday's play: Thompson defeated Reid, 6-1, 6-0; Fountain defeated Davis, 6-1, 6-0; Rubenstein defeated Updyke, 6-4, 6-2; Craig defeated Freeman, 6-1, 6-3, and Best defeated Rockwell, 6-2, 6-2.

Piano Recital at Casino.

Miss Acelia McRae, a very accomplished artist, will give a piano recital at the Casino, Thursday evening, October 13, assisted by Miss Emerson, a talented violinist. Miss McRae, as her name indicates, is of Scotch descent, and of titled lineage. The New York "Musical Courier" accords the highest praises for her performances.

SIXTY SMALL CAUSES

Large List for Consideration at Somerset County Courts.

NO JURY CHARGE

Testimony in Spencer Suit Against Borough to be Taken in This City.

Although the list of causes at the opening of the Somerset County court at Somerville, yesterday, numbered sixty, none of them were of enough importance to call for a special charge to the jury. Justice Garretson presided and Judge Sobenck was also on the bench. Robert T. Brampton, of Bound Brook, is the foreman of the jury.

The case of the State against James Codington, formerly of this city, on a charge of bigamy, was called and his counsel Alvah A. Clark, made a motion for a nolle pros, on the ground that the defendant had a western divorce. His motion was granted.

The following licenses were renewed, Frank Links, Smallerstown; Alfred E. Bess, Gallis; Jeremiah P. Burns, North Plainfield. The application of Adolph Bohmer, of North Plainfield, for a hotel license, was laid over until October 17.

The following causes on the list are of interest locally:

George Lees against Albert Wickman, tort, Geo. W. V. Moy, Louis H. Aff. To be tried tomorrow.

Mary A. Haseltine against Calvin D. McMartry, replevin, Geo. W. V. Moy, William Newcorn. To be tried tomorrow.

Albert B. Bruen against Amos B. Rohe, Jr., contract, Geo. W. V. Moy, Dungan & Reger. Settled.

Millie White against Peter J. Zoglio, tort, W. S. Anglesman, Craig A. Marsh, Off.

In the circuit are: Adolph Schmidt against John Mason, contract, H. K. Gaston, Codington & Swackhamer. Referred to Judge Schenck.

Justice Appeals: Frank A. Ballentine ads. David H. Mundy. Justice Cooper, James J. Meehan, Horace Codington. To be tried Oct. 17.

CONSOLIDATED TEAM TO PLAY AT WESTFIELD

OLD PLAINFIELD AGGREGATION TO DO BATTLE SATURDAY.

The statement so often heard at the present time to the effect that "Plainfield was better off when she had an amateur baseball team" will have an opportunity to be proven next Saturday, when the old consolidated team which played in 1903 will cross bats with the Westfield team. The game will take place at Recreation Park, starting at 3 o'clock.

It was in the Plainfield-Westfield series of 1903 that "Red" Waller first came into prominence, and "Jimmy" Montross added much to his fame as a pitcher. The series in 1903 was closely contested and interesting throughout. The first game was won by Westfield 1 to 0. The second went to Plainfield at the same score. The third game lasted for eleven innings, and neither side could score, the game being called on account of darkness. Westfield took the last two games by the scores, 8 to 0, and 11 to 2.

In some respects the year which marked this series of games was the greatest in the annals of Plainfield baseball.

The management of the local team will be in charge of George Firstbrook and Archibald Hacquer. Mr. Firstbrook stated last night that the consolidated would probably be composed of the following players: Montross, pitcher; Allen, catcher; George Dupee, first base; Eric Martin, second base; Cooney, third base; Enright, short stop; Lederer, Flannery and Taylor will play in the field.

Governor's Day at Fair.

Tomorrow will be Governor's day at the Trenton fair and the attendance from this city promises to be large. The Grocers' Association will go in a body on the annual outing and many politically inclined will join in the handshaking.

F. O. E. TO HAVE BIG TIME ON OCTOBER 11

LOCAL AERIE TO BE INSTITUTED AT GATHERING OF THE ORDER.

The arrangements of the new aerie of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, which has been formed in this city, are progressing favorably and all indications point to a successful institution on Tuesday, October 11. Representatives have been invited from the aeries of Elizabeth, Newark, Jersey City, Bayonne, Passaic, Paterson, Hoboken and Trenton, and fully a thousand Eagles are expected to be present. The new lodge will be instituted by Elizabethans. Following are the officers who have been selected: Past worthy president, H. P. Kampf; worthy president, Daniel G. Force; worthy vice president, Samuel Terry; worthy conductor, E. C. Searing; worthy chaplain, Arthur G. Adams; worthy inside guard, Frank March; worthy outside guard, John Butler; trustees, Lewis McIntosh, chairman, Laurence Powers and Edward G. Pope.

A preliminary meeting was held yesterday evening, at which President pro tem Daniel Force presided and about sixty Eagles were present. The reports of the committees were presented and a social session was then held. Speeches were made by Hugo Maul, of Watchung, and Mr. Massey, from Norwalk, Conn., and an informal musical programme rendered.

PRINCIPAL TRAVELL ARRANGES FOR DRILLS

J. D. MACNAB WILL INSTRUCT PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL BOYS.

Principal I. W. Travell, of the city High School, made an address to the pupils yesterday morning in which he stated the value of good work at the beginning of the year, and urged upon the pupils that they make the best advantage of their time at the present.

In addition Mr. Travell outlined the course of study briefly for the benefit of the new pupils in the school. He announced that drill will be commenced in the near future, and explained the counts in the course which those who drill will receive. The affair will be conducted on a somewhat more extensive basis than formerly, and will count one-fifth of a point a year. This will permit a student for five years to drop a subject, it being equivalent to one point out of the sixteen required for graduation. It is the plan of the Board of Education to consider regular work in athletics in the same light, and allow a percentage on gymnasium work, and domestic science.

Mr. Travell announced that the drill work will be further explained next week, after a meeting of the officers has been held, and plans for the work outlined and accepted by the commandant, James D. Macnab, who has charge of the drill for the last three years, will continue to serve in the capacity of commandant for the coming year. It is thought that the special credit inducement which the course in drill allows will cause many new cadets to join the ranks.

The officers for next year have not yet been appointed, though in all probability they will be chosen as formerly by competitive examination. Harry G. Thompson, who was captain of Company B last year, is now in line for Major, and will fill that position this year.

"Lakewood" Rammed Float Boat.

As a result of the New Jersey Central ferryboat Lakewood ramming with tremendous force float 11, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, tied up at the freight depot of the Pennsylvania pier, Jersey City, yesterday afternoon, an empty freight car on the lower side of the float was lifted from its trucks and landed bodily on the lower deck of the Lakewood forward. No passengers were injured, but the port guard of the ferryboat was wrecked and half the iron guard rail carried away.

Received Word of Brother's Death.

Mrs. B. V. Kinney, of Somerset street, received word today of the death of her brother, Rev. W. H. Prugh, in Minnesota. He visited in the city and borough a short time ago.

—A feature at Neuman Brothers' tomorrow: 150 baskets choice peaches at 50, 75 and 85 cents and $1 and $1.25 each. The quality is excellent and they are suitable for either table or canning.

CALLS SPECIAL ELECTION

Gov. Murphy Issues Proclamation to Fill the Vacancy.

IN FOURTH CONG. DIST.

Ira W. Wood is the Republican Nominee, and Robert L. Stevens the Democratic Candidate.

Governor Murphy yesterday issued a formal proclamation for a special election to fill the vacancy in Congress from the Fourth District, caused by the resignation of William M. Lanning to accept the United States District Court judgeship. The date fixed for the election is November 8, the regular election day, and each party in the district has already nominated its candidate to fill both the unexpired term and the full term which begins March 4.

Ira W. Wood.

Judge Lanning resigned last June and the Governor says that he did not issue the proclamation before because he desired to save the district the expense of a special election when there was no immediate necessity for the filling of the vacancy.

The Fourth District includes Somerset, Mercer and Hunterdon counties. Ira W. Wood, of Trenton, has been nominated by the Republicans for the place. He is a particularly able and influential man and the party leaders believe he will win. Robert L. Stevens, of Bernardsville, is the Democratic nominee. He also is a strong candidate and the fight will be a hard one.

SENTENCE DAY.

Judge Vail Imposes Heavy Fine on An Elizabeth Hotel Keeper.

Judge Vail, sitting in the Union County Court, at Elizabeth, this morning, passed sentence in several important cases. In the case of David Clifford and Joseph Duffy, guilty of horse stealing at Summit, sentence was suspended and the young men were turned over to the probation officer. The prisoners are each between twenty and thirty years of age.

Policeman Patrick Hickey, aged 71 years, who two years ago, was found guilty of assaulting an insane man at Rahway, and who was sentenced to one year in State Prison, appealed the case. The upper court confirmed the action of the lower court and today Hickey begins to serve time.

Cortland B. Gardner, of the United States Hotel, Elizabeth, convicted of keeping a disorderly house, also appealed the case. In reconsidering the case this morning, Judge Vail imposed a fine of $1,000 and three months in the county jail.

'Plains Bowlers Won.

The Scotch Plains bowling team won their first match game last night on The West Side Hoffe alleys, against the No Name team, of Plainfield, Scotch Plains taking two out of the three games, winning the first by a score of 667-650, losing the second, 635-605, and winning the deciding game by the score of 674-650. The Scotch Plains team has only recently organized but is fast developing and the club is arranging to meet some of the best teams through this section during the coming winter.

James E. Martine has accepted an invitation to address a big Democratic rally at South Amboy, Saturday evening.

Alton B. Parker's Letter of Acceptance

Sept. 26, 1904.

To the Hon. Champ Clark and Others, Committee, Etc.:

Gentlemen—In my response to your committee at the formal notification proceedings I referred to some matters not mentioned in this letter. I desire that these be considered as incorporated herein, and regret that lack of space prevents specific reference to them all. I wish here, however, again to refer to my views there expressed as to the gold standard, to declare again my unqualified belief in said standard and to express my appreciation of the action of the convention in reply to my communication upon that subject.

Grave public questions are pressing for decision. The Democratic party appeals to the people with confidence that its position on these questions will be accepted and indorsed at the polls. While the issues involved are numerous, some stand forth pre-eminent in the public mind. Among these are tariff reform, imperialism, economical administration and honesty in the public service. I shall briefly consider these and some others within the necessarily prescribed limits of this letter.

Imperialism.

While I presented my views at the notification proceedings concerning this vital issue, I deem the subject of such importance of this question impels me to refer to it again. The issue is oftentimes referred to as constitutionalism versus imperialism.

If we would retain our liberties and constitutional rights unimpaired we cannot permit or tolerate at any time or for any purpose the arrogation of unconstitutional powers by the executive branch of our government. We should be ever mindful of the words of Webster, "Liberty is only to be preserved by maintaining constitutional restraints and a just division of political powers."

Already the national government has become centralized beyond any point contemplated or intended by the founders of the constitution. How tremendously all this has added to the power of the president! It has developed from year to year until it almost equals that of many monarchs. While the growth of our country and the magnitude of interstate interests may seem to furnish a plausible reason for this centralization of power, yet these same facts afford the most potent reason why the executive should not be permitted to usurp or exercise the other departments of the government and assume legislative or other powers not expressly conferred by the constitution.

The magnitude of the country and its diversity of interests and population would enable a determined, ambitious and able executive, unmindful of constitutional limitations and fired with the lust of power, to go far in the usurpation of authority and the aggrandizement of himself, before the situation could be fully appreciated or the people be aroused.

The issue of imperialism which has been thrust upon the country involves a decision whether the law of the land or the rule of individual caprice shall govern. The principle of imperialism may give rise to brilliant, startling, dashing results, but the principle of democracy holds in check the brilliant executive and subjects him to the sober, conservative control of the people.

The people of the United States stand at the parting of the ways. Shall we follow the footsteps of our fathers along the paths of peace, prosperity and contentment, guided by the ever living spirit of the constitution which they framed for us, or shall we go along other and untried paths hitherto shunned by all, following blindly here today, led astray by the appealing with brilliancy to the imagination, and ambition, may prove a will-o'-the-wisp, leading us into difficulties from which it may be impossible to extricate ourselves without lasting injury to our national character and institutions?

The Tariff and Trusts.

Tariff reform is one of the cardinal principles of the Democratic faith, and the necessity for it was never greater than at the present time. It should be undertaken at once in the interest of all our people.

The Dingley tariff is excessive in many of its rates and, as to them at least, unjustly and oppressively burdens the people. It secures to domestic manufacturers, singly or in combination, the privilege of exacting excessive prices at home and prices far above the level of sales made regularly by them abroad with profit, thus giving a bounty to foreigners at the expense of our own people. It levies oppressive and unjust taxes upon many articles forming in whole or part the so called raw material of many of our manufactured products, not only burdening the consumer, but also closing to the manufacturer the markets he needs and seeks abroad. Its unjust rates and inequalities tax people generally, forcing them to pay excessive prices for food, fuel, clothing and other necessaries of life. It levies duties on many articles not normally imported in any considerable amount which are wholly prohibitive, and for which the most extreme protectionist would hardly justify protective taxes, and which in large amounts are exported. Such duties have been and will continue to be a direct incentive to the formation of [illegible] combinations, which, [illegible] foreign competition, are [illegible] domestic competition and [illegible] to monopolize the home market.

It contains many duties [illegible] by a reward, of furnishing a basis for reduction by means of reciprocal trade treaties, which the Republican administration, impliedly at least, promised to negotiate. Having on this promise secured the increased duties, the Republican party leaders, spurred on by protected interests, defeated by the treaties negotiated by the executive, and now these same interests cling to the benefit of these duties which the people never intended they should have and to which they have no moral right.

Even more pernicious than the frequently urged in behalf of the Dingley tariff and against tariff reform generally is the necessity of caring for our infant industries. Many of these industries after a hundred years of lusty growth are looming up as industrial giants. In their case at least the Dingley tariff invites combination and monopoly and gives justification to the expression that the tariff is the mother of trusts.

For the above mentioned reasons, among many others, the people demand reform of these abuses, and such reform demands and should receive immediate attention.

The two leading parties have always differed as to the principle of customs taxation. One party has always advanced the theory that the object is the raising of revenue for support of the government whatever other results may incidentally flow therefrom. The Republican party, on the other hand, contends that customs duties should be levied primarily for protection, so called, with revenue as the subordinate purpose, thus using the power of taxation to build up the business and property of the few at the expense of the many.

This difference of principle still subsists, but our party appreciates that the long continued policy of the country, as manifested in its statutes, makes it impossible for it to attempt at this

FASHIONS IN FURS.

Chinchilla Very Chic—The Old Time Redingote in Style Once More.

It may seem early in the season to talk about furs, but the fact is that furriers are the busiest people in the sartorial line at present, and they can hardly fill their winter orders fast enough.

Mink skin is to be a favorite and bids fair to be quite as popular as it was last winter for trimming and entire coats.

Chinchilla is a pelt which, it is predicted, will be used more than ever this season for purely ornamental purposes rather than for entire garments. The employing of chinchilla as a trimming alone is easily explained for the simple reason that it is very expensive and not at all durable.

A fur which makes its initial bow to fashion this season is a white fox delicately dashed with brown hairs.

The old time redingote is to be the exclusive long wrap of the winter. That the redingote will not be in every one's hands adds to its attractiveness. The woman who has cravings after that which is unattainable to the populace may safely order a redingote of gray chiffon velvet enhanced in beauty by a collar and revers of chinchilla.

A fall novelty designed to wear with the black taffeta gown is the jupon of black batiste. Its construction is exactly similar to the other lingerie petticoats, and the flounces are trimmed with frills of black, white or cream colored Calais lace, the petticoat being made very full and free from.

The separate waist in the new models is as dainty as ever, and the pretty blouse illustrated is most attractive. It is carried out in this instance in pale blue louisine silk. The full gathered waist has an empiecement of broderie anglaise cut in points. From the two points in the center of the yoke run lines of little black velvet bows made with two loops. A line of the same bows ornaments the sleeves, which are in one large puff fitted above a deep cuff of the embroidery. The girdle is of broderie anglaise.

when she may go forth and display its smartness. But the unwise virgins are only waking up to a realizing sense of the necessity of this dress. For such delinquents there is a wide choice both in styles and materials.

Loosely woven dress fabrics will be seen again in the new impartations. There is a pretty new shade of brown called "burnt bread" which will be popular during the coming winter and is made up with touches of orange.

Green, mulberry and red are favorite colors in the coming fashions. Many fabrics in these tones have an under weave of black that is exceedingly attractive.

Delightfully smart is the walking gown shown in the cut. It is of soft blue serges cloth. The simple skirt has a plaited panel effect at one side. The habit basque takes on a bolero shape in front and is trimmed with bell-like revers. A stunning waistcoat of ivory brocade fastens with a row of self covered buttons. Cravat of lace and collar of white batiste completes the costume.

COAT AND SKIRT COSTUME.

The Directoire Influence—A Radical Change in Sleeves.

For the moment the coat and skirt costume seems to be ubiquitous. This style of dress meets so many situations and is so comfortable that it is no wonder that femininity clings to it with affection.

There is a radical change in the new sleeves. Deep cuffs and fullness above the elbow are the order of the day. The fullness falls of its own weight, and the gathers are arranged at the elbow.

The mousequetaire or rolled back cuff, also a directoire touch, is superseding the uncuffed model of 1830.

Useful and smart is the tailor costume illustrated. It has a touch of the directoire in its makeup. The material is of gray cloth. The skirt is mounted on a flat empiecement, from which it flows in full plaits at the bottom. The corsage blouse has revers of white cloth, and a high turnover collar finishes the neck. A series of jockey plaits forms the sleeves, which end in revers cuffs.

THE THEATER HAT.

Feather Boas Wide on the Shoulders Are In Vogue.

Since the request for the removal of large hats has been the order in all the theaters it would seem natural for femininity to have lost interest in theater headgear. But such has not been the case, and as much thought and expense are expended on this dainty bit of adornment as ever.

Next winter the tulle hat in a small shape is to be the evening head covering most approved by Dame Fashion, and there is a rumor that this confection is to be worn with strings.

With the theater hat will be worn ostrich and marabou feather boas. These new boas are of the pelerine shape and exceedingly wide on the shoulders. In white and pastel shades they are a most fascinating and becoming adjunct of a toilet.

Walking hats are the most sought after piece of millinery at the present moment and are perhaps the most difficult hats to buy if becomingness is taken into consideration. A stiff shape is apt to make the face look hard, as it boasts none of the saving graces of a soft, undulating brim.

The new colors known as jonquil, which is in one instance a cross between coral and cherry or in another between amber and orange, the name being used for either, are appearing on the latest trimmings for autumn wear. As a general rule the trimmings this year will be designed to harmonize rather than contrast with the gowns, pompadour effects being still in evidence.

An attractive hat to wear with the short tailor costume gown is here illustrated. This particular hat is of a pinkish red felt, faced with ribbon of a darker shade gathered slightly on the inner side of the brim. Three frills of shaded red ribbon stand upright around the tall crown. A group of wings, tending almost into pink, is placed in a jaunty fashion at one side.

FREAKS OF FASHION.

Dresden Buttons and Mother of Pearl Still a Favorite Trimming.

Dresden buttons will be used on costumes of the Louis periods and are being imported both in large and small sizes.

passementerie are worn this fall as supplementary wraps. They accompany any style of toilet, being especially favored in the case of white dresses.

Gold and mother of pearl trimmings, in spite of the fact that they have had a long day in the matter of popular favor, will be in evidence this winter for trimming on evening gowns.

Cut steel, black and beaded effects are mentioned among the new fashion items for costumes.

The illustration shows a blouse of ecru pongee made with an indented yoke and straps embroidered in festoons with pale blue silk and tiny flowers done in the same shade. The sleeves are plaited at the top and puffed into an embroidered cuff. The cointure is of blue ribbon.

SHIRT WAIST COSTUMES.

The Nattiest of These Are Made In Four Pieces.

The new shirt waist suits will be made in one toned material or of some of the many varieties of cheviot mixtures which come in grays, with threads of blue, red and orange running through the weave.

Brown in colorings with nub effects in a contrasting color make delightful suits of the shirt waist style.

This season these suits come in four pieces, the skirt, blouse, jacket, girdle and chemisette.

The blouse, which opens in front, may display a wash shirt waist or the little chemisette with its choker and small cape attachment.

Watteau has set his stamp on the ribbons of today, and many narrow ribbons with pretty flower designs upon them outline bodices and are introduced between insertions and gatherings on waists. They give a most desirable touch of color on a gown. The wider the ribbon the more fashionable and in most cases the softer the better. Louisines and serge woven ribbons are in favor.

The smart gown illustrated emanates from a Parisian atelier and is fashioned from mauve canvas. There is nothing unusual about the plaited skirt, but there is decided originality in the little jacket. This costee is one of the latest conceits for autumn wear and depends for success upon its perfect cut. It is seamless save for the underarm curves. The back, which reaches a trifle below the waist, outlines the figure gracefully and is cut up a few inches at the side seams and finished with large gold buttons. Stitched bands of the material trim the coat. The very small turnover collar and revers are of white corded silk. The blouse is of mauve chiffon and is worn with a turnover lined collar and mauve ribbon tie. The hat of violet felt is trimmed with a series of stiffened rows of mauve ribbon, cowned by a bunch of mauve orchids.

Women Gossips

The "Ripper Brigade" and Its Baleful Work

"THE Lord deliver me from women who gossip," sighed the bachelor wearily. "There goes the 'ripper brigade,' he added as the local embroidery circle settled itself on a nearby piazza.

"What do you know about gossips?" asked the spinster.

"Umph! What do I know? Why, my dear young woman, wasn't I the only elegible and good looking bachelor (though I say it that shouldn't) at a summer resort hotel last season, and don't I know to my cost that no presidential candidate ever was subjected to more relentless espionage or more caustic criticism? There were half a dozen young women in the place, and, by Jove, if I spoke to one more than to the other it was the main subject of conversation all that day. They had me married and unmarried a dozen times that season, and finally the whole place nearly cut me dead because I chose to depart without having proposed to any of the matrimonial candidates they had forced upon me. To do the girls justice they didn't have anything to do with that part of it. It was a hatched up plot on the part of the idle old women who sat forever ripping and putting in embroidery stitches on the piazza."

"Well," put in the spinster, "as to gossip itself there are many reasons why it is indulged in. First and foremost, it is the chief conversation of those whose minds are so empty or of those who are so stupid or poorly educated that they can't talk of anything except personalities. It stands to reason that when a woman is neither interested in politics, current events or literature she must talk about something, and then the doings of her neighbors assume an importance they wouldn't have otherwise. And then there's the cruel gossip of envy by people who are left out of an entertainment or a good time, and who proceed to get even by saying nasty things. It isn't always a case of voluntarily 'getting even', sometimes it is unconsciously done. They simply talk because, unbeknown to themselves, they are suffering from a nice little attack of the green eyed monster. The Lord save me from another species of the genus gossip—the fond and doting mother who contrasts every other girl with her beloved offspring."

"What I want to know is this," said the bachelor. "Are women wantonly cruel or don't they realize the pain they cause and the tremendous after effects of even the slightest bit of gossip? For instance, at a dance I attended a very pretty girl, a stranger, made the hit of the evening and threw in the shade even the daughters of the hostess. The women watched her with glowering looks as she danced on all unconscious of their enmity, but they couldn't do anything. Suddenly their opportunity arrived. In the last dance the girl held up the folds of her heavy train too high, and about two inches of pretty stocking were to be seen. Immediately the most fearful gossip began. She had done it purposely! It was by bold maneuvers such as this that she attracted the attention of men. The next morning she sat alone on the piazza and tried to read a book, but she felt most uncomfortably that she was being watched and talked about. By noon every one in the place heard about it; by evening largnettes were being leveled at her. She herself never guessed a word of the truth until that time when a blunt and well meaning person told her of the whole thing. She was so shocked that she spent the entire night crying her eyes out, and she packed her things and left the following morning. So much for women's charity to woman."

"And more gossip. No!" remarked the spinster sottly.

"Of course not. They wouldn't be bothered—oh, by Jove! Say, Miss Singleone, do look! There goes old Jack Fourflush! He's the funniest chap—belongs to our poker club, and the fellows say that he"—

But the spinster was listening with a rather sarcastic smile on her lips.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Sept. 18.

Topic.—How the world is growing better. (Isa. xxxvi, 1-11; Eccl. vii, 10.

Is the world growing better? It is a sad fact that some men would answer this question in the negative. They are not capable of taking a broad view of life or have not sufficient knowledge to compare their age with past ages, and hence unwisely conclude that the former days are better than these. Every age has its evil as well as its good, and yet when we compare the ages and take a broad and comprehensive view of life we cannot but conclude that the world is growing better. Much of the glamour of antiquity is acknowledged to be false. "The days of good Queen Bess" were anything but halcyon; the merrie England of old time was full of disorder, distress and discomfort. In yearning again for the fleshpots of Egypt the Israelites forgot the bondage and misery which were the accompaniments of those sensual pleasures.

But if the world is growing better how is it growing better?

1. The world is growing better by the overthrow of evil. To those who want to see improvement in the world evil doers and their deeds have always been a source of perplexity. But God declares that we should not "fret ourselves because of evil doers, * * * for they shall soon be cut down like the grass and wither as the green herb." This is true of evil as well as of evil doers. Compare the ages as to evil and we will see that it is being overcome. Intemperance today is not what *it was fifty years ago. Up to a hun*dred years ago dueling was widely practiced in our land. Fifty years ago there were over 3,000,000 human slaves in America. More and more wickedness is being ostracized and pushed to the wall. Wickedness and crime still exist, for the millennium has not yet arrived, but while evil exists it does not have the power and place that it had in the ages of the past.

2. The world is growing better by the advance of the good. Evil is being overthrown while the good is conquering. Christ's kingdom is constantly advancing, and as it advances all that goes to make the world better and happier is vastly increased. Christian character was never so high as today; philanthropy was never so widespread; the successful world never before took such care of the unfortunate and unsuccessful. "God is marching on," and as He marches evil decreases and good increases, thereby making the world better every day than the day before.

BIBLE READINGS.

Gen. iii, 15; xxii, 9-18; Ps. lxxii, 8-17; cxxxv, 1-21; Isa. xxxv, 1-10; xli, 1-16; lii, 1-10; Matt. xiii, 31-33; Rev. xxi, 1-4.

The Bible and Christian Endeavor.

Some people affect to believe that the day for the old substantial things that have grown so precious to multitudes of true hearted Endeavorers is passing, if not gone. Certain wise ones (?) tell us, in an assumed superior scholarly fashion, that our old Bible is being supplanted by a modern Bible put together by modern, up to date scholarship. How inconsistent some of these would be considered learned ones are! Dr. Burrell says that they are busy not trying to revise the dictionary rather than the Bible. They admit that the work of some scientists and philosophers of a former day is standard, but naively hint that all knowledge of Biblical matters has stopped over past periods and suddenly alighted on all fours on the educated men of this generation. It's enough to make some of the fathers sit up in their graves and smile.

I wonder what some of our modern intellectual posers would think if they could hear the comments of the average Endeavorer. I have found by mixing with multitudes of Endeavorers in these last days that the old Bible has not lost its hold on the common people, and the gospel is still the power of God onto salvation to all that believe. A few weeks of real soul winning effort effectually answer about ten-tenths of high sounding theory as to the validity and authority of the Bible.—Rev. Dr. John H. Elliott in Endeavorer.

The Christian Endeavor Animal.

The little stuffed kangaroo which had decorated the Australian table was placed upon the speaker's desk on the platform in the evening, and he seemed to cock his ears, listening to all that was said. I mentioned in my address that some animals could run and others walk and birds could fly, but the kangaroo was the only animal so far as I knew that went forward by "leaps and bounds." But Christian Endeavor was going forward by "leaps and bounds" in Australia, and it fitly typified their movements. Thereupon they presented me with the kangaroo, which has already been sent to Boston, and we adopted it on the spot with great applause as the Christian Endeavor animal.—"The Building of a Commonwealth," by Francis E. Clark, D. D.

In Japan.

The native Japanese Endeavorers are making a practice of spending a moment or two in prayer for the soldiers each morning before rising.

*The plan originated with the moth*ers' meetings in Okayama.

There are 126 living Christian Endeavor societies in Japan today.

India's New Paper.

India has a new Endeavor paper, Masihi Karigal, which is the nearest equivalent for "Christian Endeavor." It will be published in Urdu and Hindi and devoted to the interests of Christian Endeavor in the united provinces.—London Christian.

WOMAN'S PLACE.

She Is the Inventor of All Primitive Human Industries.

To arrive at the real story of human development and differentiations it is necessary to go back to the beginning of things. We can, however, only judge what the original man was by studying him among the remnants of primitive races wherever they are to be found on the globe. What the original man was he, as nearly as may be, is today. A flood of light was thrown on the original conditions of the race by that remark of an Australian savage to a British scientist.

"Men," said the native, "spear fish and hunt; women do all the rest."

Among the primitive tribes all man's time was taken up with fighting either his own kind or the scarcely more wild animals. Woman did the rest—that is to say, it is woman and nobody else who invented every one of the industries necessary to the feeding, clothing and sheltering of the race. Relics of implements from the most ancient times and stone carvings picked up here and there show this.

Professor Otis T. Mason of the United States department of ethnology has written a paper giving the evidence that proves woman to be the founder of all the industries of peace and progress.

The race found out as the birds find out that grains are good for food. While her men were away engaged in their normal occupation of fighting, woman went into the woods or upon the grassy plains and gathered those nuts and grains that trial had proved to be palatable and nourishing. Trial had proved these nuts and grains to be coated with a husk or shell that did not taste well. Woman thereupon cracked them with stones or rubbed them together to remove the husk. By and by woman found these grains could be raised from seeds in ever increasing quantities, and could be kept ready to hand and save her time and trouble. Very good. Thereafter annually woman planted these seeds and tended them and produced a crop. Thus was the occupation of the farmer established.

To this day country women in many places go through the fields gathering "greens" for their families, quite unconscious that they are only following perhaps in the literal footsteps of their primitive female ancestors of mayhap a million years ago.

By and by, after the use of fire was discovered, it was found that grains tasted better to the masculine palate if they were roasted. Even then it did not matter to woman. So they were cooked, and woman was the original baker. One step more. Again, as always, trial proved these grains tasted still better if they were ground fine and mixed into a pulp before baking. Accordingly woman pulverized the grains upon stone till they formed a meal that could be made into dough. Thus woman was the original miller, the inventor of grain grinding.

Man, whose business was fighting and hunting, brought a wild beast to the cave where his womankind were and laid it down. The women had already found that skins kept their children warm. They rubbed stone together till they produced in one an edge sufficiently sharp to divide the skin of the slain beast from its flesh. They so divided it; they discovered ways to tan and make it soft and pleasant to the feel. Thus was woman the first leather maker.

Woman found that the outside covering of certain animals was of a kind that when twisted together made a long string—in other words, it was wool. She twisted threads and pushed them in and out, over and under one another into a fabric that could be made into clothing for her family. Thus she invented the art of spinning and weaving. How the primitive woman spun and wove may be seen today among some of the remnants of Indian tribes. By and by woman found, too, that certain grasses and the products of some other plants could be in like manner spun and woven. And it should not be forgotten that it was woman—a Chinese empress, away back in Old Testament times—who invented and perfected the silk industry.

If woman found she could punch holes in the clothing skins and push a long thin thong through these holes in and out and fasten the ends of it. Hence the art of sewing and the invention of needles.

One need not go further. It is a scientifically established fact that woman is the founder of human industries and of the arts of peace. When man fought himself all out, grown bold, fierce and aggressive through ages of conflict, he simply turned against woman herself, by nature a creature of peace, and took from her her own work that she had invented, drove her out and declared it was "men's work."

OUR LAKE COUNTRY

IT IS BECOMING A GREAT SUMMER PLEASURE RESORT.

Wealth and Fashion May Now Be Found Spending Their Vacation Time Away from the Sea Coast.

When mention is made of the English lake country, the idea presented is sufficiently definite, but to speak of the lake country of "these United States" sets one to wondering whether reference is made to the Maine woods, Floridian waters, or to the region of the great lakes.

In this brief article we shall speak only of the latter locality, certainly a territory of sufficient extent to merit exclusive consideration. And to-day the beautiful country is receiving the consideration its due. To-day, wealthy residents of the middle west do not, as formerly, seek their summer relaxation in distant eastern seaboard, in the White mountains, or the Catskills. No, to-day the western lake country is appreciated, and on the shores of its lakes, the big, widely known ones and the smaller but no less beautiful, there are being builded great country places of permanence of aspect and beauty of appearance.

From Chicago to Isle Royale, from the Thousand Islands to Duluth, stretches a magnificent playground; waterways of loveliness and of extent to deserve the name inland seas; shores of picturesqueness equal to farfamed ones across the water. And that Americans are beginning to show fondness for their own lake country is evidenced by the number of city folk that now spend almost half the year in the region of the inland waters. On the shores of our Lake Geneva, the one in Wisconsin, there is a summer colony of millionaires, people whose incomes allow of travel far and wide, and yet summer after summer finds the families quietly sojourning here, here obtaining good yachting on the broad waters, and as fine opportunities for golf, riding and kindred sports in the country round as could be desired. And, last but by no means least, opportunity for spirited country life. The rich American of a generation back was a globe-trotter primarily; to-day he is taking to farming, to long days at his out-of-town place.

In the southern extension of the resort-land under discussion, the seeker after change has offered him beautiful farming country, excellent roads, and lake and stream in which to find sport and refreshment; to the north are wide wildernesses of pine woods, big game and small, myriads of lakes where abound fish that it is sport to angle for. In northern Illinois, Wisconsin, the upper peninsula of Michigan, and Minnesota, alone, there are over 1,600 lakes and 1,500 streams. The wonder is, therefore, not that the number of holiday makers exploring this region is yearly increasing, but that they did not earlier discover its charms.

To be sure, there continues quite a summer exodus of Chicago and other *inland city families to the eastern re*sorts and to Europe, but many are well content to take their outings within a hundred miles of the home city. As not a few of the English aristocracy have country homes within easy distance of London, so go into town in a few hours, dinner guests can easily come out, likewise about Chicago there is established society enjoying out-of-town pleasures and yet in close touch with the city. Especially is this true of the lake society folk taken hold. Lake Forest, Oconomowoc and Lake Geneva suggest large leisure, beautiful homes, fox-hunting, touring-cars, all the modern accompaniments of "simple country life."

Not only is there beauty of landscape, pure air, and opportunities a plenty for outdoor exercise to attract, but the great lakes country is full of historic spots of interest; here wandered, and not so very long ago, the trapper, the Indian trader, and here, in the north, still dwells the red man himself.

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES

For President,
ALTON BROOKS PARKER, OF NEW YORK.

ALTON B. PARKER.

For Vice President,
HENRY G. DAVIS, OF WEST VIRGINIA.

HENRY G. DAVIS.

Mr. Parker's letter of acceptance, published in another column, is a masterly presentation of the Democratic claims for ousting the present administration and furnishes further proof of the lofty character of the standard bearer of the minority party. It is entirely free from "mud-slinging" and is a refreshing political document in that respect at least. His answer to Mr. Roosevelt's challenge in regard to the latter's arbitrary position digest, shows very clearly that Mr. Parker is of the type of statesmen who "would rather be right than be President" if it came to a question of sacrificing his chances for success for the sake of principle and honor. The majority of the New York papers sound Mr. Parker's praises for having issued such a direct, vigorous and wholesome contribution to campaign literature.

Plainfield did not win the championship series but nevertheless the local fans saw some great games. Manager Denman is to be congratulated on having the strongest aggregation and Manager Johnson on doing the best he could under the circumstances.

AMUSEMENTS.

So much that was admirable, and in Clyde Fitch's very best manner, was revealed last night at the Garrick in "The Cornet of the Duchess," that one was put to it to at times explain why the play as a whole failed to take a firmer grip on the interest and the emotions. Marriage contracts in which kind hearts are bartered for coronets and simple girlish faith for Norman blood, (with all the absorbing details of social position and legal entanglements,) have baffled large of late in the public mind, and Mr. Fitch has chosen his dramatic point of view with much theatric skill. As far as the scenario goes, the play is one of the most consistent and logically developed that its author has yet produced, and the general scheme of the characters, with its broad and keen contrasts of representative and acutely observed individualities, is most promising. The cast was of Mr. Fitch's best, which is the very best. But what should have been the great moments somehow left one quite cold. The defect was in the writing. It was as if for the moment the author had gone stale.

At the Bijou Theatre, a distinguished visitor is making first bow to New York audiences, "Mr. Wix of Wickham," one of the funniest and cleverest of modern comedy characters are introduced by that versatile impresario, Edward S. Rice. Mr. Wix is a department store manager, who, by a whimsical turn of fortune's wheel, is for a time placed in the proud position of heir to an English dukedom. Throughout the two acts of this ultra-modern musical comedy in which his adventures are presented, he is surrounded with a number of well contrasted principal characters played by capable artists, and all are set in the midst of a rosebud garden of feminine beauty. The book is by Herbert Darnley, who has also composed some of the music, most of which has been specially written for the American production by Jerome D. Kern. The libretto was re-adapted and many new lyrics added by J. H. Wagner. It is a well constructed comedy of character and situation.

Following Blanche Walsh in "Resurrection," she attraction at the Grand Opera House, New York, is W. E. Mantzville's company in a revival of Klaw & Erlanger's immense success of two seasons ago, "The Sleeping Beauty and the Beast." Although theatrical seasons for some time past have resulted in many new productions of a more or less novel character, yet the absolute novelty presented in "The Sleeping Beauty and the Beast," which is a revelation of the possibilities in scenic display that astonishes even those who fancied they had seen the best that could be done in that direction. By means of this brilliant production of an extravaganza, based upon a fairy story, playgoers gain an accurate idea of what the Christmas pantomimes, so popular in London, really are. While it is very alluring as a spectacle of kaleidoscopic coloring, yet interest in it does not depend wholly upon remountable scenic display. The fairy story which is used as a peg upon which to hang the pictorial fabric is humorously told. The musical embroidery is ingenious, original and in perfect harmony with the musical character of the production. The ballets are gorgeous, illustrations of terpsichorean skill, and the specialties introduced are novel and amusing. The company employed in it, numbers several hundred persons.

COLORED MAN'S HORSE WON 2.24-CLASS EVENT

THREE RACES AT THE PLAINFIELD DRIVING PARK SATURDAY.

The first race, class 2:20, at the Driving Park on Saturday afternoon, was won by Dr. Gildes' Midget, who had an "walk over," in all heats. In class 2:40, Keenan's Pilatina Sphinx also gained an easy victory. Class 2:24, however, proved more exciting. The first heat was won by Brower's Lizzie Direct, but in the second he gave place to Moore's Lady West, a powerful but somewhat clumsy looking animal.

The third was won by Branningham's The Lawyer, and as it was getting late when the time for the fourth heat to be ran arrived, it was decided that it result should be final. It was the general opinion that The Lawyer would be victorious in the final heat, but at the last Lady West, who had been lagging behind, made a gallant spurt and came in first. Ex. V. Moore, her owner, is a colored man. The judges were J. W. Johnson and J. H. Green, of this city, and Nathan Robbins, of Metuchen, N. J., and the starter Edward Allen, of Flemington, N. J.

The following are the events and their results: Class 2:30—Dr. Gildes' Midget, 1st., 1st., 1st.; Carpenter's Miss Wheeler, 2d, 2d, 2d; Yeomans's Seliger, 3d, 3d, 3d; J. Klotz's May Cox, scratched. Time, 2 min. 20¾ sec., 2 min. 20¼ sec., 2 min. 25½ sec.

Class 2:40 — Keenan's Pilatina Sphinx, 1st., 1st., 1st.; N. Smalley's Aloysia, 2d, 2d, 2d; Wood, Jr.'s Sadie Smith, 3d, 3d, 3d; Evans' Ruby Stranger, 4th, 4th, drawn. Time, 2 min. 34 sec., 2 min. 3 6 sec., 2 min. 3 3 sec.

Class 2:24—Moore's Lady West, 2d, 1st, 3d, 1st; Branningham's The Lawyer, 3d, 2d, 1st, 2d; Brower's Albert L, 1st, 3d, 2d, 3d; D. Smalley's Ned Davis, 4th, drawn. Time, 2 min. 26¾ sec., 2 min. 27¾ sec., 2 min. 26¾ sec., 2 min. 28 sec.

McKinley Club Dinner.

The McKinley Club, of Elizabeth, of which several Plainfielders are members, will give a dinner on Oct. 15, which will be the third anniversary of the organization of the club. The event will propably be held in Quien's Hall, where the dinner given by the club in 1902 took place. It is proposed to have prominent and good speakers and a good dinner. The hour will be 6:30 p. m. and October 15 will fall on Saturday.

Mr. Harsell's New Position.

William R. Harsell, a prominent member of Co. K, will leave Friday for Kenosha, Wisconsin, where he will take charge of one of the departments in the T. B. Jafferey Automobile Company factory. He will be accompanied by his wife and they will make their home in Kenosha.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL RALLIES

Annual Custom Followed Yesterday in Several Churches.

SPECIAL FEATURES

Services at the Park Avenue Baptist, Crescent Avenue, First M. E. and Congregational Schools.

Miss Florence G. Hawkins, superintendent, and George E. Hall, assistant superintendent, presided at the annual rally of the Sunday-school of the Park Avenue Baptist church Sunday afternoon. The rally day cards, which were tastily arranged in a frame at the upper end of the room, were distributed and the roll read by Mr. Hall, assisted by J. M. Hawkins and Harry Comings. The primary class in particular showed a creditable record.

Rev. A. E. Flun delivered an address in which he advocated that each teacher should start a system of calling a roll of the names of the streets in which their pupils live. The latter would be expected to respond by giving the names of any new families who may have come to live in their neighborhood, who could then be visited and asked to send their children to Sunday-school.

Music was supplied by Whitney Frasse, who rendered a cornet solo; Miss Vera Canfield, of Jersey City, Mrs. W. S. Lowry and Mrs. Charles Steiner, Miss Cora Brokaw, Charles VanWinkle and George F. Watts, who brought the proceedings to a pleasant close with quartette selections.

The rally day of the congregational Sunday-school Sunday afternoon, partook somewhat of the nature of a welcoming reception to the superintendent, Alexander Millar, who has recently returned from Germany.

In the first part of the service, a group of the younger children surrounded him on the platform and sang a welcoming song. To this Mr. Millar responded with a few words, expressing his pleasure at being home again, and referring briefly to his trip in Germany.

The service was in charge of the pastor, Rev. Charles L. Goodrich, who addressed the pupils. A quartette consisting of the following, rendered several selections: Miss Etta Raybert, soprano; Mrs. Ralph Miner, contralto; M. C. VanArsdale, tenor, and Stacy Reynolds, bass.

The Sunday-school of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church held its annual rally Sunday afternoon. In the absence of the secretary, no report was presented. The infant class rendered several songs and Rev. Dr. J. E. Kelly, the pastor, and George A. Strong, the superintendent, spoke. A special feature was a solo, "The Lord is Mindful of His People," which was rendered by Miss Hubbell.

Rally day exercises of a simple character were held under the auspices of the Sunday-school of the First M. E. church in Vincent chapel, Sunday afternoon, marking the change in the time of holding the sessions from morning to afternoon. The programme consisted of vocal solo by Mrs. Wentworth, contralto, and cornet solos by Miss Hilda Gaul. Then there was the roll call, 235 persons responding. Superintendent James H. Joy was in charge and he conducted an interesting review lesson. During the afternoon there were promotions in all of the departments of the school.

SALAMAGUNDI PARTY HELD IN VINCENT CHAPEL

ENJOYABLE TIME SPENT BY MEMBERS OF EPWORTH LEAGUE.

A novel entertainment called a college salamagundi party was given by the cabinet of the Epworth League, of the First M. E. church, Friday night, in Vincent chapel, to mark the opening of the fall and winter work. The affair served to bring together the members and various committees and the attendance was very large, following in session of inactivity. E. A. Edgar, president of the league, was in charge, assisted by other members.

As the members arrived at the chapel they received college pins, representing Columbia, Princeton, Yale, Dartmouth, Rutgers, Cornell, Harvard and Lafayette. They were also given a slip of paper representing some college which they were to retain throughout the evening. The idea was to place the college pins on a long streamer and the college having the largest number of pins representing it on the streamer was declared winner. In connection with this twelve different games were played in progressive fashion and the winners of the games would receive pins as prizes, after which they would be placed on the streamer. At the conclusion of the games it was learned that Yale was the winner.

After the entertainment a committee served refreshments and a social time followed.

HOT CLIMAX AT A TRIAL

When Marro is Found Guilty, Scene is Exciting.

ATTACK ON RANDOLPH

Former Mayor is Called "Biggest Liar on Earth" by W. L. Hetfield, Sr.

Personal feeling which had been manifest all along during the "spite house" proceedings against Antonio Marro in city court, between the opposing sides, came to a startling climax Saturday. Following Judge Runyon's decision in the matter and after the case had been closed, Counsellor Walter L. Hetfield, Sr., who appeared for the defendant, hotly accused Former Mayor L. V. F. Randolph of being "the biggest liar on earth." The remark was resented and as both men were visibly excited the situation was becoming critical when Chief Kiely succeeded in calming them.

Marro was found guilty on all four charges preferred against him jointly by Randolph and Health Inspector Thurlow and he was fined $125. The amount was divided as follows: For allowing his privy vault to overflow, $50; for building the vault without a permit, for allowing his dogs to disturb the sleep of neighbors at night and for throwing vegetable refuse on his garden, $25 in each instance.

Marro pleaded non vult to the charge of having no permit for the vault but the others he denied. In passing sentence the court declared that when three complaints of a like character were brought and proved it showed an unusual state of affairs and one that called for drastic action. Had they come separately, it was said, it might not have been so important but being altogether it meant a disregard for proprieties under the law.

Marro's counsel immediately gave notice that certiorari proceedings would be brought.

The trial originally took place last Monday and as it progressed bits between Counsellor Hetfield and Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, appearing for the city, occurred frequently. This morning the opposing lawyers were given time for a brief resume of the facts before sentence was passed and the personalities were resumed. In his remarks, Counsellor Hetfield declared that Mr. Randolph was Mr. Marsh's personal client and this was immediately denied by the corporation counsel. Continuing Mr. Hetfield declared that he had never seen the corporation counsel display so much heat in a city case and the energy he displayed in seeking a conviction had never been equalled. He also intimitated that Mr. Randolph had been sending accounts of the trouble to the local newspapers and mentioned his name in other ways.

When the proceedings were declared over, Mr. Randolph asked permission to say a few words in regard to Mr. Hetfield's charges and indignantly denied sending any letters to the papers, saying the statement was a "direct, unqualified, literal falsehood." The statement aroused Mr. Hetfield's wrath and he shouted, "There is no bigger liar on earth than you." Other hot words followed and as court was not in session, it was impossible for Judge Runyon to end the dispute. Chief Kiely placed himself between the men and order was finally restored.

In a statement this morning Counsellor Hetfield declared that he had been accused broadcast of having an interest in the Marro property which has caused so much trouble, but this he denied in court and said that he had nothing to do with the matter beyond appearing for the defense.

DEFECTIVE CHIMNEY CAUSES A $1,500 BLAZE

RESIDENCE ON THE BRUNSON FARM BURNED TO THE GROUND SATURDAY.

Evidently originating from a defective chimney, fire broke out in a residence on the former Vandeventer farm at Clinton avenue and Greenbrook road, Saturday evening, burning it to the ground. The place is owned by Augustus J. Brunson, of Crescent Avenue, and the house was occupied by Samuel McMahon, who is in his employ. The flames were discovered by McMahon as he was returning from E. P. Gavin's place nearby, but they had already made great headway.

The borough department was summoned and the firemen responded only with the hose cart. Word was telephoned back and the engine was sent out, but it arrived too late to save the structure. The former Brunson residence and several barns nearby were in danger several times but were prevented from catching. The loss on the building is placed at $1,500 and in addition McMahon's furniture and 500 bushels of potatoes which he had stored in the cellar, were destroyed.

VETERANS TO ASSEMBLE AT FLEMINGTON OCT. 12

MANY PLAINFIELDERS WILL PARTICIPATE IN REUNION OF 30TH REGT.

The fourteenth annual reunion of the Thirtieth Regiment of New Jersey Volunteers will be held at Flemington on October 12. This yearly reunion of the veterans is an affair of considerable interest in this city, many members of the regiment being local residents. There will be delegates from various cities in this State, including Newark, Perth Amboy, Dunellen, Elizabeth, Bound Brook, Somerville, Raritan and Flemington.

The usual annual business meeting will be held at which the officers for the coming year will be elected and committees appointed to serve till the next reunion. The meeting will be in charge of J. Frank Hubbard, of this city, the president of the association. There will be speeches by several local members, and a patriotic programme has been arranged. The following local members of the organization will attend: J. Frank Hubbard, Nelson Runyon, the vice president of the association, Charles Randolph, Theodore Runyon, Randolph Thorn, J. Lance Mundy, Peter V. Weaver, David R. Weaver, Theodore Rutan, Samuel Moore, John B. Stryker, John Giddis, Jacob Manning and Ben Rogers.

The Thirtieth Regiment was one of the New Jersey regiments which enlisted for nine months. Their period of service, however, extended over fifteen months, in the years 1862 and '63. The principal battles in which the thirtieth was represented were the battle of Peterburg, Chancellorsville and Fredericksburg. In these engagements, the regiment suffered severe losses, as did all of the New Jersey troops at that time.

VACATION DAYS ARE FIXED BY SCHOOL BOARD

MANY MATTERS CONSIDERED BY THE BOROUGH BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Included in a lot of routine business transacted by the Borough Board of Education at its regular meeting, last evening, was the approval of the first payment to Contractor W. C. Smith for work on the new school building. The remainder is to be turned over in various portions as the work is completed. On Superintendent Wightman's suggestion, the Board adopted the card system for cataloguing the books in the school library, which is now one of the largest of its kind in the State, numbering in all over 14,000 volumes. More are constantly being added and when the new building is occupied a surplus in the library extension fund will be spent in books.

Richard MacDonald and William Lunger were re-appointed truant officers and the following vacation dates were fixed: Election day, November 8; Institute and Thanksgiving Day, November 20 and 26; winter vacation, December 20 to January 5; Lincoln's birthday, February 12; Washington's birthday, February 22; Easter vacation, April 30 to 29; Declaration Day, May 30. Two sewing machines were ordered for the manual training department and certain recommendations in regard to disinfecting parts of the school buildings, made by Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, will be followed out.

AT WILLIAMS COLLEGE.

Plainfield Young Men Who Are Included In the Large Number of Students.

As several young men from this city are students at Williams College, Plainfielders will naturally be interested shomewhat in that seat of learning. Williams Hall, formerly West College, the oldest building on the campus, is now open as a dormitory. It is handsomely and modernly equipped and accommodates about one hundred students. Fall is far advanced in comparison to Plainfield and the college opening plant was started several days ago.

The freshman class numbers 184, while the sophs, who entered 155, are now but 129. The first inter-class rush was on Thursday night and the sophs, though outnumbered, won the required two out of three. The young men from this city at Williams include Harold Nomer and Erwin Briant Leland, '06; Alden E. Moore and Kerro Knox, '07, and Harold C. Fenne, '08.

Golf Tournament Begun.

The Central Jersey Golf League held its first tournament Tuesday on the course of the Cranford Golf Club, the longest nine hole course in the East.

Republican Clubs to Rally.

There will be a mass meeting of the Republican clubs of Union County at Jacobs Theatre, Elizabeth, on October 6.

WESTFIELD WINS SERIES

Plainfield Loses Final Contest By a Score of 3 to 1.

GREAT ENTHUSIASM

Many Brilliant Plays a Feature of the Game—The Score in Detail.

The Westfield Baseball Association by taking Saturday's contest with the Plainfield A. C., wins the championship between these teams. The aggregation from down the line has a record of six victories to Plainfield's four. The result cannot give Westfield the county championship as there are other teams in the county that have not been defeated by Manager Denman's nine and the three out of four games played. Plainfield was defeated Saturday by a score of 3 to 1. The home team scored one run in the second and two runs in the third and that is all they got, but enough to win. Plainfield got its only one in the fourth. Jones got a free pass and scored on errors of Harbusch and Foster.

As was expected Westfield was padded. Eddie Daly, of the old Crescents, played second base; "Pop" Foster, of the Bridgeports, was in center and Harbusch was at the receiving end. Plainfield's only change was at third, Rogers, of Long Island, covering the initial bag. Garvin was on the slab and pitched a masterly game, as did also Waller. In the third inning Plainfield had a fine chance to tally several runs, after a series of bunts which filled the bases, but Waller worked steadily and prevented any scoring.

The Plainfield team with one or two exceptions played fast ball, a feature being a brilliant throw of Oregan from left to home plate, cutting off a runner. Jones at second also distinguished himself. Smithson and Seward for Westfield made brilliant plays in catching difficult balls. This game closes the series for the year. The detailed score:

Seward flied to Rogers, Daly struck out, Foster out, Ostick to Rogers. NO RUNS.

Ninth inning—Ostick singled, advanced to second on passed ball; Rogers struck out, Jones grounded to Bradley, Waller covered first, taking the throw, Bradley to Waller; Garvin flied to McManus. NO RUNS.

MISS SCHUYLER WINS HILLSIDE CHAMPIONSHIP

EASILY DEFEATS MISS M. A. REINHART IN THE TENNIS FINALS.

Miss Sarah E. Schuyler won the title of champion of the women's tennis tournament at the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club Saturday, by defeating Miss Mary A. Reinhart. The score of the two sets was 6-1, 6-2, the contest taking place on the club courts. A large crowd ceased playing on the other courts, and gathered from the golf links to watch the deciding sets. It was expected that the two contestants were more evenly matched, but Miss Schuyler took the two sets with comparatively little effort. Nevertheless the play was interesting and both won much applause by their plays.

Miss Schuyler and Miss Reinhart won their places in the finals two weeks ago Saturday from an entry list of fourteen members. The finals were postponed from last Saturday on account of the men's tournament. Both participaters in the finals are prominent in Hillside sports, and have won tennis trophies. Miss Schuyler will receive the Hillside Tennis cup which is offered annually by the club.

Owing to the fact that a number of the contestants in the men's play were unable to be on hand, the semi-finals in that tournament were not played as scheduled, but will take place Saturday of this week. The preliminaries and second and third rounds were played off a week ago, leaving the following to contest for the semi-finals, and the cup: T. M. Day, Jr., J. S. Meyers, W. T. Glenney, F. W. Goddard, H. D. Bulkley and A. D. Beers. The first and last named are the only two who are known to have qualified for the last two rounds, the others having unfinished matches to play off.

FRED MARTIN WINS WHITTIER SCHOOL CONTEST

YOUTHS CONCLUDE THEIR ANNUAL TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

Before a crowd of over fifty interested spectators the tennis tournament of the Whittier School was brought to a close at the courts of the Bronx Tennis Club Friday afternoon. The winner of the finals and the man of the hour was Fred Martin, who the day before yesterday defeated William Briggs, last year's champion, in one of the best sets ever played on the club's court.

The tournament this season was by far the most successful which has been condcuced by the school for several years. The management of the affair was in the hands of William Briggs and Fred Martin, and the work was skillfully carried on. There were sixteen entries and the tournament was completed in three days. A handsome silver cup was the prize for the winner which will be the permanent property of Mr. Martin.

The play yesterday afternoon resulted as follows: Rogers defeated Randolph, 6-3, 6-2, and Martin won from Rogers, 6-1, 7-5. There is some probability that a tournament will be held among the girls of the school, though such a contest will not be held for a week, as the courts will be used by the High School players next week.

WALLACE MET HIS MATCH

Plainfield Desperado Fails in Attempt to Escape Jail.

BATTLED WITH DEPUTY

But Anderson Had College Training and "Larry" Lost the Fight.

In a daring attempt to escape from the Somerset County Jail at Somerville, Sunday night, Larry Wallace, a desperate character from this city, matched his physical prowess against the Princeton-trained muscles and endurance of Deputy Sheriff John W. Anderson, and lost.

Incidentally, what might have proved a general jail delivery did not occur, simply because that dual combat held the other prisoners spellbound and made them overlook a chance to easily gain their liberty.

Anderson, who is an alumnus of Old Nassau, who helped to make her athletic history, was in the corridor of the jail, preparing to look in the prisoners for the night. He was standing near the main entrance, when Wallace, who had concealed himself, sprang toward him and, goat fashion, butted him in the side. The attack knocked the deputy sprawling, but his almost instantly regained his feet and started in pursuit of the fleeing man.

Wallace was passing through the door of the outer corridor and was making for the street, when Anderson overtook him and a desperate hand-to-hand struggle between the two men began.

It is a good many years ago since the doughty deputy, as an undergrad who could wrestle all around his college mates, brought fame to the Orange and Black, but the Plainfielder probably hadn't heard of his foreman's record. At any rate, the ex-Princetonian hadn't forgotten some of the tricks and holds he'd mastered in varsity days, and he applied them with good effect upon his husky antagonist.

He is a much smaller man than Wallace, but this disadvantage was not serious enough to matter much. What did matter was the deadly grip the larger struggler kept on the windpipe of the other. That nearly meant defeat—perhaps death—for the plucky jailer, for it made him quite powerless to exert much strength against his heavier adversary.

Just as everything was becoming green and blue and black, Anderson mustered his fast failing breath in one loud cry for help. It reached the ears of little Miss Anderson, the young daughter of the deputy, who promptly summoned the police. For some minutes more the men kept up the struggle, but as the blue-coats' approach became audible, Wallace gave up.

"I'm beat all right," he said, and meekly let Anderson, puffing hard, lead him back to his cell.

During the fight a number of prisoners in the corridor became so excited that they failed to take advantage of the open door to escape.

Wallace was serving a sentence of eighty days for assault, imposed upon him by Recorder Dond in the borough court. He has served time repeatedly in the Union County Jail. He is known by the authorities of this city and throughout the county as a dangerous character. It is believed that he had confederates outside of the jail to aid him to escape.

Assistant Chief of Police Koch had been watching four suspicious characters from Plainfield who were hanging around on the outside of the jail shortly before Wallace made his futile attempt to escape, and he looked for them afterward but they had disappeared.

Society's New Game.

"Trail" has taken society by storm. It is something new, something different. "Trail" as the name implies, is founded on a popular hunting sport, is played with fifty-three fine cards in four colors, representing a fox to be chased and caught, and four packs of pounds of thirteen each. "Trail" has a constantly recurring interest for players as they perfect their playing from evening to evening, in marked contrast to certain recent boisterous games that bore the players at the end of an hour. With the one pack an other splendid, new, copyright games can be played. Two admirable games, and two games of fun, making it suitable for all members of a family. "Trail" can be had of dealers or sent postpaid, 75c. gilt edge, plain 50c. Rules for the seven games free. Combination Card Game Co., Atlanta, Ga.

The engagement of Charles H. Small, of New York, and Miss Susie R. Swan, of this city, has been announced. The wedding will take place next spring.

ITALIAN CLAMBAKE ENDS IN A GENERAL MELEE

SANDOLCINO CAME LOOKING FOR TROUBLE AND SUCCEEDED.

"Battin 'in" to a clambake in full swing on Milton place under the auspices of seventeen of his countrymen, Sunday afternoon, Antino Sandolcino looked for trouble and was accommodated beyond all expectation. As four of the five kegs of beer provided for the occasion had been disposed of without any waste, half of the merrymakers fell upon the belligerent Antino and in short notice a small-sized Port Arthur assault was in progress. He fled to East Front street with blood streaming down his face and with five Italians in his rear when Patrolman Higgins hove in sight and landed all six.

In the city court Monday, with the aid of two interpreters, Judge Runyon learned that the seventeen had gone to Milton place for a quiet time "like da white man do" and Sandolcino came around and refused to go away when ordered to by Salvo Velardo, chairman of the committee of arrangements. He slapped Michael Constantino in the face and was in turn struck with a club by Joseph Constantino, Mike's fourteen-year-old son. This led to the general melee and Sandolcino's face showed that it had been a target for good many fists. As the clambake had been peaceful until his arrival and he was the cause of all the trouble, the five were let go. The court also considered that the beating Antino had received was sufficient punishment for him and sentence was suspended. The other prisoners taken were Patricio Janino, Antino Carrato and Louis Velarde.

MISS CURRIE TELLS OF THE FRESH-AIR WORK

INTERESTS A LARGE CONGREGATION AT TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.

Miss Sarah Currie, the superintendent of the Netherwood Fresh Air Home, and about twenty of the children under her charge, were present at Trinity church Sunday night, and took a prominent part in the service. Miss Currie came from New York with the children Sunday particularly for this service, and the youngsters' songs and recitations delighted a large and appreciative audience. The service was in charge of Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck.

There was no regular sermon, but with the exception of brief addresses by Rev. Dr. George H. Whitney and Rev. Erskine M. Rodman, the service was devoted to Miss Currie's work. Miss Currie spoke at some length of the good which has been done at the Netherwood camp during the past year, and referred also to the work conducted in New York.

Miss Currie said that it was a mistaken idea that the children alone are reached through the work, referring to several cases where whole families have been brought under the helpful influence of the Home. She laid a special stress on the help which the mothers of the children have received, and in addition to a general description of the work, she quoted many interesting incidents in connection with the work conducted at the Netherwood Home during the summer. Miss Currie returned to New York after the service.

At the conclusion of the service a collection was taken up and pledge cards circulated for the purpose of defraying a debt of about $300 for groceries and other supplies.

Sunday Excursion to Manch Chunk.

There is no more popular resort for a Sunday than Manch Chunk, and to reach it outside a delightful rail journey, and at Manch Chunk there is a diversity of amusements, the chief of which is a ride down the Switchback. This journey occupies more than one hour, and leads over and around the mountains with widely changing scenes at every turn. The Switchback is a gravity road, and the speed attained is close to a mile per minute. Another feature is Flagstaff, the summit of which is reached by trolley, and from the pinnacle point there is a view extending over miles and miles of beautiful country. An interesting spot close at hand is Glen Onoko, a short distance above Manch Chunk, and as it name implies, is a beautiful glen, with falls, cataracts, mountain paths leading to cool and delightful pools. On October 2, 1904, the New Jersey Central is to run a popular excursion to Manch Chunk from Plainfield by special train leaving at 9:30 a. m. Returning train will leave Manch Chunk at 5:40 p. m., and the round trip will cost but $1.50. Frequent train service will be in effect between Manch Chunk and Glen Onoko, and rides on the Switchback run every few minutes.

FOR PERMANENT PAVEMENT

Belief That Entire Business Section Should be Considered.

WOULD BE CHEAPER

Present Cost of Repairs to Macadam Very Heavy, But Would be Eliminated by Improvement.

Now that the city has decided to pave Watchung avenue, between North avenue and Second street, with vitrified brick, the Public Service Corporation to stand its share of the expense, there has been some talk among the business men of the city of the advisability of having the streets in the center of the town similarly paved, making it uniform. It is believed that a majority of the property-owners in the business center would be willing to pay their share of the expense to have a substantial pavement laid for it would add materially to the value of their holdings.

As there have been several important real estate deals in the business section lately, the most notable being the purchase of the Park avenue property by the Plainfield Trust Company, when this property is improved, no doubt efforts will be made looking toward the betterment of the avenue. It has been said that before any new buildings are erected it would be an excellent idea to arrange for having the avenue widened as much as possible. At present the buildings, purchased by the Trust Company, are considerably outside of the building line. When the new structures are erected they will be placed on the line and this will result in giving the avenue a little more width. It has often been regretted that when Park avenue was originally laid out that double the width was not allowed. One of the main thoroughfares in the city and upon which there is so much travel should be half again as wide. South of the railroad bridge the avenue begins to get wider and from that point to the city limits it easily accommodates all traffic.

The proposed plans for paving suggested by some of the business men include East and West Front street, between Watchung and Central avenues, Park avenue, between Front and Fourth or Fifth streets. The expense for such a pavement will be quite large, but shared by the property-owners and the city it would not make a burden, and besides it would be the beginning of permanent pavement. Another point in favor of this improvement is that the brick pavement would mean a great saving in the way of repairs, which with the present macadam is a necessity now and quite a bill of expense.

The heavy rains this year have damaged the streets in the city more than usual and it will require a considerable sum to repair them with top dressing and rolling. With a permanent pavement, such as brick, this expense would be eliminated. The first cost would be the greatest.

It is argued that the brick pavement is one of the best, as well as the least expensive, and if it works well on Watchung avenue, it would be economy to continue it elsewhere. No doubt some efforts will be made sooner or later to have the Common Council take up this question with a view to permanent improvement of the streets. Some persons who have made a study of the question argue that macadamized roads for a place like Plainfield are expensive things, for they constantly need attention where the travel is the heaviest.

CHURCH ENTERTAINMENT ON AN ELABORATE SCALE

HOPE CHAPELITES TO PRESENT STORY OF THE SCOTTISH REFORMATION.

One of the largest and most elaborate of church entertainments yet presented in this city, the great religious drama and story of the "Scottish Reformation," will be given at Hope chapel on the evenings of October 31 and November 1. Rev. T. E. E. Howard, pastor of the chapel, is arranging the details for the production and between sixty and seventy persons will take part.

It is a combination of drama, allegory and stereopticon views augmented by a large chorus and magnificent costumes. It is a stirring, instructive and pathetic story told by lecture, dialogue, music and tableaux. Among the characters are John Knox, Queen Mary and her court ladies, Puritans, Scottish Clans, Scottish soldiers, etc.

Among those who have volunteered to assist in the entertainment are Mrs. John Sheridan Zelie, Mrs. Frederic Meade, Mrs. G. Scott Simmons at Mamaroneck, the Misses Tracy, the Misses VanBockerck, Miss Carroll, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic H. Andrews, John Leal, Ira W. Trawell, City Judge J. William E. Hoagland, Miss E. Blun ton. David Bowden will take the part of John Knox. Tickets will be on sale at Schreiner's pharmacy in one week.

CRANFORDS DEFEAT PARKS

Local Golf Team Outplayed in a Tournament Match.

WESTFIELD, 5; COLONIA, 5

Arthur Murphy Wins a Cup—Other Results on the Hillside and Park Club Courses.

The Park Golf Club team was defeated on Saturday on its own course by a team from the Cranford Golf Club, in the Central Jersey Golf League tournament. The visitors had much the better of the match, winning out by a score of 10 to 4. Rev. J. O. McKelvey, Gus. W. Faber and Herbert Rogers were the only ones on the local team to score, and the Cranfords won handily. The summary:

Cranford—F. W. Davis, 0; J. O. Edgumbe, 0; C. W. Leighton, 3; L. M. Lyons, 3; J. L. Warner, 3; A. R. Edgumbe, 0; E. Bigoney, 1. Total, 10.

In the weekly competition for the President's cup, Samuel Townsend and John L. Watson were tie for first place with a net score of 84, Nelson A. Miller finished second with a net score of 85, while Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll and Gus. W. Faber divided the one remaining point, each making a net score of 89. For the Park Golf Club cup, Gus. W. Faber, Raymond B. Carroll and Nelson A. Miller took the points. These scores were posted:

Samuel Townsend, 97, 13—84; John L. Watson, 111, 27—84; Nelson A. Miller, 103, 18—85; Gus. W. Faber, 89, 0—89; Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, 105, 15—89; Raymond B. Carroll, 96, 5—91; Henry C. Wells, 106, 13—93; Charles L. Nichols, 115, 19—96.

An unusually large crowd of golfers were on the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club course on Saturday to take part in the various events scheduled, and the course was much improved. Arthur Murphy won a leg on the Men's Handicap cup with a net score of 76. These scores were posted:

Arthur Murphy, 84, 8—76; S. D. Lounsbery, 86, 8—78; W. L. Glenney, for 18 holes, 79; D. F. O. Ard, 88, 8—80; C. C. Burke, Jr., 98, 14—84.

In the weekly competition for the Golf Committee cup, A. L. Otterson won first honors with a net score of 74 and Arthur Murphy and S. D. Lounsbery finished second and third. These scores were posted:

A. L. Otterson, 92, 17—84; Arthur Murphy, 84, 8—76; S. D. Lounsbery, 86, 87—8; W. L. Glenney, 77, plus 2—79; C. R. Morgan, 88, 8—79; Dr. F. Ward, 88, 9—80; Willard Wadsworth, 88, 0—88; T. W. T. Maxwell, 111, 21—90.

For the Gaston cup three scores were returned:

A. L. Otterson, 92, 0—92; J. M. Unler, 99, 8—96; Henry L. Hall, 98, 0—98; T. W. T. Maxwell, 111, 1—110.

Another match in the Central Jersey Golf League tournament was played on Saturday between teams from the Westfield and Colonia Golf Clubs. The match was played at the latter's course and resulted in a tie, 5 to 5. The summary:

Westfield—Sherman, 0; Woodward, 0; Floyd, 2; Condit, 3; Oruse, 0; Trevvett, 0. Total, 5.

Colonia—Smith, 3; McIntosh, 2; Ward, 0; Brock, 0; Cruikshank, 0; Morris, 0. Total, 5.

The final round in the Governors competition was played on the Westfield course between Marshall Whitlatch and W. R. Davis. After playing eighteen holes the contestants halved the match and another eighteen holes will have to be played to decide it. H. E. Knight won the September handicap with a net score of 74.

A feature of the afternoon at the club was a cachra for the women, followed by a tea. Mrs. C. D. Orth won first prize and Mrs. H. W. Evans second prize.

GAVE UP PLOUGHING TO LEARN TO FIDDLE

'GENE O'REILLY LEFT THE FARM TO BE A VIOLINIST.

Throughout this section of New Jersey there is perhaps no person better known who has contributed to the enjoyment of both young and old at dances and receptions, than Eugene O'Reilly, the violinist. For fourteen years he has furnished music for dances in this city, as well as many nearby towns, including the country districts and his experience has been an interesting one in many respects.

Born in New York, he left the metropolis at an early age and after a short residence in Jersey City he moved near Bound Brook, where for several years he lived on a farm. He had an especial fondness for farm life and particularly in the care of trees, plants and flowers of all kinds. He could also do has share in ploughing and many a hard day's work he has put in on the farm.

One day while ploughing in a field his thoughts turned to music and he made up his mind that he would learn to play some musical instrument. He remembered having heard the violin when a boy and had a liking for that kind of music. He did not have to wait long for his opportunity, for one day while he was planting seed on the farm a man from an adjoining farm came along with a violin. 'Gene became interested and the two men began to talk business. The possessor of the instrument wanted to part with it and by way of a trade he was offered four pigeons. The offer was accepted. But now that 'Gene had the violin he had no bow with which to play, but he was fortunate in finding one in possession of another sharpshooter. He secured this easily by trading another pigeon, a good mate to one owned by the man who had the bow. The man cared little for the bow, but he did want a mate to his pigeon and a swap was quickly made.

Now that 'Gene had the violin and bow the next question was to learn how to play it. Nights after his day's work was over he would go to his room and strive for hours to master the instrument. He soon was able to play simple tunes and it was not before long before he was asked to play for country dances. This was twenty-five years ago and it marked the beginning of his musical career, although he later spent three years and a half in Washington, where he was in charge of the botanical gardens for the Government. With a change of administration he lost his job and he returned to Plainfield, where he has continued to make his home.

While in Washington he met a violin professor and improved his time by taking a number of lessons. Upon his return he devoted his entire time to playing at dances and receptions and today there is no more popular musician in the State than Mr. O'Reilly. Last year out of a possible seventy nights, he played sixty-four and his services are always much sought after.

'Gene says that many a time he has worked hard on the farm until 4 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon, gone home and dressed and then gone out and played all night at a dance. There is nothing that he would rather do than play a fiddle and his mastery over the stringed instrument is due to earnest and persistent effort.

MISS MAMIE REED MADE WIFE OF PETER PETERSON

QUIET CEREMONY AT SCOTCH PLAINS UNITES YOUNG COUPLE.

A quiet home wedding took place Thursday at Scotch Plains, when Miss Mamie Reed, daughter of Mrs. Frank Riker, became the wife of Peter Peterson, of Summit, the ceremony taking place at 5:30 at the home of the bride's mother on Bartle avenue. Rev. G. M. Shutt officiated, using the beautiful Episcopal service.

The bride, who was becomingly attired in white, was attended by Miss Sadie Wahl, as bridesmaid, John Alberts being the groom's best man. Immediately after the ceremony and congratulations had been extended, a bountiful wedding supper was served. While the merry guests were in the midst of the festivities, the happy people slipped quietly away to enjoy a short wedding tour, their destination being kept a secret. Upon their return they will reside in New York, where the groom is employed and has a home furnished for the reception of his bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Peterson received a large number of pretty as well as useful wedding presents, which will be pleasant reminders to them of their friends as they travel life's pathway together.

Miss Aaron, of East Fifth street, is spending a few days at Asbury Park.

END OF THE REUNION

Veterans of the 28th Conclude the Year's Business.

PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES

Assemblyman Swackhamer and Rev. Frank Fletcher Among Those Who Addressed Gathering.

The eighteenth reunion of the Twenty-eighth Regiment of New Jersey Volunteers, at New Market, adjourned Thursday at 5 o'clock after one of the most interesting and enjoyable sessions which has been held for years. From early in the morning till darkness fell upon the village the veterans held possession of the place. The residents displayed their patriotism by decorating their houses with bunting, while nearly eighty of the old fighters were made welcome and royally entertained.

It was a pathetic as well as a pleasant sight to see the evident enjoyment with which these old warriors, many leaning upon their younger relatives, retold the stories of "sixty-three," and exchange reminiscences of the battles of Chancellorville and Fredericksburg. It was in these two years that "the 28th" figured most strongly, and which reduced their ranks from 1,000 to 500 men.

The session convened in the afternoon at about 3 o'clock, the time being devoted largely to patriotic speeches by prominent veterans, and public speakers. A feature of the afternoon's programme was the rendition of several violin solos and old war songs by Samuel Frazee and James Dougherty, of this city, and Corporal Dobson, of Perth Amboy. The recollection of these songs, so often sung on the battle field, brought tears to the eyes of the veterans and they responded with enthusiastic applause.

Among those who spoke at the afternoon session were S. S. Swackhamer, of this city, and Rev. Frank Fletcher, of New Market. Both were greeted with cheers, and both richly deserved the applause accorded them. Mr. Swackhamer's remarks were particularly appropriate to the occasion, and delighted the audience by their simplicity and directness.

After a number of short addresses by other members of the association, the meeting adjourned. The reunion next year will be held at South River on the third Thursday of September.

ALFRED SPEER,

THE ORIGINAL

Port Grape Wine Producer in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had

The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while those grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. OLD CAPE COD WINDMILL.

It Was Built in 1797 and Its Stones Grind as Fine a Grist as They Did Then.

Boston (Mass.) Special.

One of the most prominent landmarks on the elbow of Cape Cod is the old windmill of Chatham. It stands on one of the highest hills in the town, about half a mile southwest of the village proper, and a short distance from the shores of Stage harbor.

The high, grayish brown tower and bare arms of this mill can be seen many miles at sea on a clear day. Vessels going over the shoals, from south of Monomoy to northeast of Pollock rip, can see the mill.

The mill is one of the few remaining in use of the many that once dotted the landscape on the cape. In 1849, when Thoreau, the naturalist, made an excursion down Cape Cod, he was much struck by the appearance of these useful structures. He says of them in his book "Cape Cod:"

"The most foreign and picturesque structures on the cape, to an Islander who is not, are the windmills—gray-looking, octagonal towers, with long timbers slanting to the ground in the rear, and there resting on a cart wheel, by which their fans are turned round to face the wind. These appeared also to serve in some measure for props against its force. A great circular rut was worn around the building by the wheel."

The mills, to Thoreau, looked "like huge wounded birds, trailing a wing or a leg, and reminded one of pictures of the Netherlands. Being on elevated ground, and high in themselves, they serve as landmarks—for there are no tall trees, or other objects commonly, which can be seen at a distance in the horizon."

The Chatham mill was built in 1797 by Col. Godfrey, a prominent citizen of the town, and was for many years managed by him. His homestead, a low-browed Cape Cod farmhouse, still stands at the base of the hill south of the mill, but the mill property has passed out of the family, and is now owned by a firm of grain dealers in Chatham. Every year, as the sails are bent, and it is put in commission to grind such grain as is brought to it by farmers, or is collected by its owners in the course of their business.

All its gear is in excellent repair, and the old stones grind as fine a grist as in the days when it represented the best type of mill known for the economical grinding of grain.

The great flour mills of the west were not dreamed of when this mill was built, but the grist that it ground when Chatham depended on it for its bread was quite as wholesome as any flour that comes to-day from the fancy mills of Minneapolis.

READY FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

Western Headquarters of Republican National Committee Already Established at Chicago.

Chicago Special.

Mr. Elmer Dover, secretary of the republican national committee, who recently opened the Chicago headquarters of the party for the impending campaign, is a young newspaper man who during two campaigns has shown that he knows all the ways and wiles of practical politics. He was born in Ohio 31 years ago, and served in various capacities in Ohio country papers until 1896, when he became assistant to Senator Charles Dick, then in charge of the Chicago department of the republican campaign. His work at that time commended Mr. Dover to Senator Hanna, who gave him an important part in the work of 1900. Upon the resignation of Secretary Heath, after the death of Senator Hanna, Mr. Dover was elected to the place. It is the intention of Mr. Dover to employ 250 men in the Chicago headquarters, who will be kept busy shipping republican literature to western points.

PLAINFIELDER WEDDED QUIETLY IN NEW YORK

HUGHES FAWCETT TAKES MISS E. G. PRIEST AS HIS BRIDE.

Miss E. G. Priest, daughter of Mrs. Annie Priest, of Norwich, England, and Hughes Fawcett, of 105 Rockview avenue, son of Thomas Fawcett, of Belfast, Ireland, were married at 5 o'clock, Thursday, at the Manhattan Hotel, New York, by Franklin W. Ware, of New York. Owing to a recent death in the groom's family, the affair was a very quiet one. There were twenty-six guests, mostly relatives from this city and Boston, present at the ceremony and at the dinner which followed at the Manhattan.

The bride was gowned in white silk, trimmed with Brussell lace collar, and she carried a bouquet of white roses. She was given in marriage by her mother.

After the wedding dinner, the couple left for a trip and upon their return will live at Mr. Fawcett's home on Rockview avenue. The bride, until recently, has been a resident of Norwich. Hughes Fawcett has been a resident of this city for some years. He is a New York merchant.

LITERARY.

Two notable campaign articles are announced for the November McClure's, which is published two weeks before the election. The last word concerning the candidates is to be written by high authorities; Parker by ex-President Cleveland; Roosevelt by Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts. What the two candidates and their parties represent will be set forth clearly by two men well qualified to speak and sound give two vivid pictures of these men of the hour.

Scribner's Magazine for September contains a number of outdoor articles peculiarly suited to the culminating month of the recreation season. Frederic Irland, the popular writer of fishing and hunting articles, contributes an account of a stage journey through the heart of Wyoming, under the title of "The Big Dry Country." A. Cary Smith, the veteran yacht designer, contributes "Yacht Racing Recollections and Reflections," drawn from his unusual opportunities for observing the growth of the sport in this country. He makes a strong argument for the personal element in yacht sailing. Walter Harris, an Englishman for many years a resident in Morocco, describes very picturesquely "The Berbers of Morocco,"—the wild tribes near whom Perdicaris was recently held in bondage.

Scribner's Magazine for October contains an authoritative article from a correspondent on the Russian side of the war who has actually seen that about which he writes. Thomas F. Millard, who has been a correspondent in four wars, and who wrote about the Boer and Pekin campaigns for Scribner's, has been four months with Kuropatkin's army, and in this paper he outlines the main course of the campaign in Manchuria, and vividly describes the causes which have led to the Russian defeat. His account of one of the great battles is the most picturesque and thrilling description of modern warfare that has appeared. Two maps of the fight are given which reproduced the positions exactly. Mr. Millard shows the reasons for the handicap which was on the Russian forces from the very first.

Despite the fact that the census reports show Americans are steadily drifting toward vegetarianism, we are still the greatest meat eaters in the world. Our meat bill costs us every year $100,000,000 more than our vegetables (including imported vegetable foods). In the aggregate we Americans pay every year about $3,250,000,000 for food, or about $30 a year (for the raw food) for each person. In addition to the foregoing it may interest you to know that among the most foods the egg bill ($143,300,000) is greater than that for any other item except cattle ($423,600,000) and sheep ($170,000,000); and that the bill for milk, butter and cheese ($323,000,000) is nearly four times as large as that for fish, oysters, and all other sea foods.—How the American is Changing His Food.—October Pearson's.

PERIL IN VENTRILOQUISM.

Funny Young Man Who Squeaked Too Persistently Is Oiled by an Old Engineer.

Rev. Madison C. Peters, of Philadelphia, who believes that churches, like other properties, should be taxed, is a favorite with boys. Talking to a group of boys one day, he said:

"When I was a youngster I wanted to be a ventriloquist. I wanted to play ventriloquial jokes on everyone in the world.

"So I bought a book on throwing the voice, and, with a friend named Jake, I began to study the difficult art. I had poor success, and Jake also had poor success. He, though, imagined he was doing well, and one day he declared that he was a quite good enough ventriloquist now to begin to do a little fooling.

"Jake knew an old engineer in a factory, and the next afternoon he visited him. He seated himself in a corner, and, after a little conversation, he imitated the squeak of badly oiled machinery.

"The old engineer trotted to a certain valve and oiled it.

"Jake let, a few minutes pass and emitted another series of squeaks.

"'Drat that valve,' said the engineer, and he oiled it again.

"A third time there came the squeak, and now the engineer saw through the joke. He walked up quietly behind Jake and squirted a half-pint of oil down the back of his neck.

"'There,' he said. 'There will be no more squeaking to-day, I'm sure.'"

MOSQUITOES TAKE TOWN.

Village Down East Practically Depopulated Because of Ravenous Insect Swarms.

A village of 400 inhabitants 36 miles from Bivalve, Md., is practically depopulated on account of mosquitoes. They are so thick that over two-thirds of the inhabitants have left their homes, going to the bay on steamers to be rid of the pests.

Cattle in the marshes are dying by the score, and many are driven into the river to get relief and are drowned.

George Phillips, a traveling salesman for a wholesale tobacco firm, of New York city, was attacked by a swarm of the pests. His horses became frantic, throwing him out of his carriage and breaking both his legs and three ribs.

A camp meeting which was in progress had to be postponed. The steamers plying between there and Baltimore run at top speed between Bivalve and Deal's Island, and do not stop at these landings on account of the mosquitoes. Deal's island is one of the largest shipping points for soft-shell crabs, and all shipments go to New York city.

KEPT WEDDING A SECRET

'Plains Girl Tells Parents She Has Been Married a Year.

PARENTAL BLESSING

Miss Minetta Buckley and William Wood Stole Off to New York and Were Wedded.

After nearly a year's silence, Miss Minetta Pauline Buckley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Buckley, of Scotch Plains, formerly of Park avenue, and William Milner Wood, of Taunton, Mass., have announced to their families and friends that they are married, the ceremony taking place while on a pleasure trip to New York city last October. The announcement came as a surprise to all, for while it was generally known among their immediate acquaintances that an engagement existed, none but the bride and groom knew that the ceremony had already been performed.

Several months ago Mr. Wood, who is employed by the Campbell Auto Plate Co., was transferred to the company's office at Taunton, Mass., but the young couple were not ready to announce their marriage at the time. Last week Mr. Wood was granted a vacation and taking advantage of his leave of absence, came on to Scotch Plains and on Thursday morning the happy couple, who had kept the match a secret for a year, sprang the surprise upon the bride's parents. After an explanation was made the young couple was forgiven as usual as their was no opposition to their marrying.

They will go to housekeeping October 1 at the groom before leaving Taunton, to break the news and claim his bride, furnished a home complete.

The bride and groom have a host of friends in this city, where they formerly resided, both being active workers in St. Stephen's church, Netherwood, the bride being a member of the choir and a musician of some note. Mr. Wood has been employed by the Campbell Company for several years past and holds a lucrative position in their Taunton office.

CITY TAXES WILL BE DUE ONE MONTH LATER

LEGISLATURE FIXES DECEMBER 15 AS THE DATE INSTEAD OF NOVEMBER.

It is well for taxpayers to know that according to the State law which fixes the time, taxes in this city will be due on December 15 next, and not November 15, as usual. The Common Council fixed the November date for the convenience of the citizens, it being argued that by having taxes due the middle of December, it had a tendency to injure the holiday trade with the local merchants.

This year the Legislature fixed the date at December 15, making it uniform throughout the State. The change was not to the liking of people in this city, but the State law rules and nothing else can be done but adhere to it. Collector F. H. Smith will within a short time, send out the tax bills, the Common Council having voted $100 for the employment of an assistant in Mr. Smith's office.

LITERARY.

The discussion of the marriage question in Madame has attracted much attention, being referred to by some of the leading newspapers as "a discussion of real merit." As marriage is so interwoven with all the important affairs of humanity and has to do with much that makes life worth the living, any measure or agitation which will tend to elevate the standard and ideals of marriage is of lasting benefit to the race, and should be given encouragement and support by thinking people. A bishop of the Episcopal church recently said on this subject: "Surely it is high time to remind men that holy matrimony has a sacramental character. Divine grace alone can hallow love of man and woman and enable them surely to perform and keep the vow and covenant betwixt them made."—Madame for October.

Bacon Completing Flat Building.

Frank M. Bacon, who holds the deed to the half-completed flat building on New street left in that state by the disappearance of Frank Coos, of Philadelphia, has caused work to be resumed on the structure. He will have it pushed to completion and when is is in such shape that something can be done with it, the differences between the original owners of the property, the mortgagees and the contractors will be settled. Nothing is being done with the four houses on Madison avenue also left half completed by Cook's going away.

Mrs. D. E. Mundy and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Enger, of Plainfield, have returned from a visit with Bound Brook friends.

ANOTHER BOROUGH CLUB

Mayor Smalley With Others Form a New Organization.

"JUST FOR SOCIABILITY"

One Member Declares Nobody Wants to Antagonize the U. S. Grant People.

Borough voters on the Republican side of the house to the number of fifty or more gathered in a vacant store on Somerset street, Thursday, and formed a "distinctly social organization." The attendance included many over-the-brook notables, among them being Mayor Smalley, Former Mayor B. A. Hegeman, Jr., Frank Rowley and others.

Peter A. Emmons called the meeting to order and presided while Frank Rowley acted as secretary. After a few preliminaries the following committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws: N. B. Smalley, E. A. Hegeman, Jr., and William C. Dunham. With the exception of signing the membership roll this was practically all the business transacted and adjournment was taken until (Thursday) evening. Forty names were placed on the list, and the number will undoubtedly be doubled within a short time.

No name was selected for the organization, this being left to a committee which will report at the next meeting. It was decided to have the rooms opened every night throughout the winter and means will be provided to entertain the members.

Nevertheless the recognized Republican organization of the borough has been the U. S. Grant Club, of which Mayor Smalley was formerly president. The new club numbers many of those who were once prominently identified with it, but in a statement to a newspaper reporter Friday morning, one of them declared it was not the intention of the members to antagonize the Grant organization in any way. It is a significant fact, however, that the latter club is now in the hands of Mayor Smalley's political enemies and the formation of his friends is looked upon as a move toward hostilities. The Grant headquarters are well provided with material for the amusement of voters and it furnishes all the sociability necessary for voters who seek it.

EDUCATIONAL COURSES AT Y. M. C. A. FOR SEASON

TO PROVIDE INSTRUCTION FOR THE WINTER TERM.

The date for the opening of the Y. M. C. A. educational department has been set for October 17. Several meetings have been held in the interest of the educational department, and special pains will be taken to provide for instruction to the men in the machine shops. There will be other meetings to consider this subject at which there will be representatives of the local shops and factories. It is expected that the work in the educational department will cover practically the same subjects, which were covered last year, though the course may be altered in proportion with the demand. Drawing and the commercial courses are sure to be on the list of subjects while other studies will be introduced if the demand of the public so requires.

The classes will start on the evening of the eighteenth in the association rooms, and according to the applications already filed, there will be a large attendance.

It is expected to have I. W. Travell, the principal at the High School, to speak at the opening meeting, in which the courses of study will be outlined.

Thirtieth Regiment to Meet.

The Thirtieth Regiment of New Jersey Volunteers will hold its annual reunion at Flemington on the second Wednesday in November. There will be a large number of local members in attendance, and the management of the affair will be in charge of Peter V. Weaver. The names of the attendants at the reunion from this city will be announced at a later date.

Will Rally at the Casino.

The local Republicans have decided to hold their political meetings at the Casino. There will probably be two large mass meetings, at one of which Congressman Fowler will be the principal speaker. The dates will be announced within a short time.

Y. M. C. A. Concert in October.

The fourteenth concert of the Y. M. C. A. orchestra will be held at the Y. M. C. A. Hall Monday evening, October 10, at 8:15 o'clock. Miss Etta Rayhert, the soprano of the First Presbyterian church, will be the soloist. A silver offering will be received at the door.

Mrs. Lewis Sheppard, of this city, has been visiting relatives at Glen Gardner.

DEMOCRATIC CLUBS MEET

John Moody Chairman of Enthusiastic Gathering.

MARTINE TAKES PART

Former Orator Reads Platform and D. J. Carney is Active.

Delegates composing the convention of State Democratic Clubs assembled by hundreds shortly after noon Wednesday in Krueger's Auditorium, Newark. The Plainfield Democratic Club was represented by Charles A. Sturtevant, Clarence I. Teel, John MacIntyre, J. V. F. Dilts and James E. Martine.

James E. Martine was a prominent figure as was Davis J. Carney, the North Plainfield leader, who was seated on the stage.

The object of the convention was to form a permanent league of clubs, to include a chain of organizations taking in not only all the counties of the State, but the cities, towns, boroughs and wards. These clubs are to act as aids to the regular party organizations of the municipalities and counties throughout the campaign, and to form the nucleus of auxiliary campaign committees in future elections.

It was an hour after the appointed time for convening when the convention was called to order by State Committeeman Willard W. Cutler, of Morris, chairman of the committee in charge of the bureau of clubs.

Robert A. Haggerty, of Newark, was elected to assume his assigned place as grand marshal of the parade, it was a few minutes of noon when Haggerty gave the order to march. A platoon of eight mounted policemen formed an escort in front. After them marched Haggerty, and after him Voss's band.

The Essex delegations had the right of the line. After the Essex men came the Passaic Democrats, who marched under the silk banner of their organization. Then came Union, Somerset, Morris, Bergen, Sussex, Warren, Mercer and the lower counties, of which Salem, Camden, Gloucester, Cape May, Ocean and Atlantic sent representatives. The left of the line was held by the Monmouth and Middlesex men.

John Moody, of Union County, was named temporary chairman, and it was announced that Colonel Edwin A. Stevens would be president of the permanent league.

Over the stage the delegates read the motto:

"Turn the Spendthrifts' Out—Get Close to the People—They Cast the Votes."

After Secretary McKean read the call Mr. Cutler named John Moody, of Union, as the temporary chairman. Mr. Moody said that the big representation present indicated that the Democracy of the State was inspired with enthusiasm stronger than in many years. He predicted that the "old rock-ribbed Democratic State of New Jersey" will once more this year return to the Democratic party. He spoke of Parker and Davis and there were cheers. Then he mentioned the name of Charles G. Black. At once the hall was filled with cheers and shouts, which continued for a full minute and ended with three tremendous cheers for the Gubernatorial candidate.

Mr. Moody characterized the Republican plank on the equal taxation issue as a "straddle" that would, he predicted, prove unsatisfactory to the people. He declared the Democratic utterances on the taxation question to be fair, frank and unmistakable, and such as were in keeping with the desire of the citizenship of the State. When he predicted success for Black the delegates yelled loudly and long in approbation.

Mr. Moody introduced State Chairman William B. Gourley to the convention. Gourley was warmly received.

After all the delegations had named their representatives Mr. Moody announced a recess until 2:30 o'clock to give the committee an opportunity to organize and prepare for the regular business of the convention.

Upon reconvening the committee on resolutions submitted the following, which was presented by James E. Martine, of Union, the "Farmer Orator," as chairman of the committee, and adopted:

"We, the regularly accredited delegates representing the Democratic organizations of New Jersey in convention assembled, reaffirm our fealty to the principles of Democracy as enunciated and exemplified by Thomas Jefferson and a long succession of able and patriotic Presidents.

"We approve most heartily and unreservedly the platform of principles adopted at the Democratic National convention held at St. Louis, and pledge our individual and united support to the candidates of our party named in nomination at the same time for the offices of President and Vice President of the United States—Alton B. Parker, of New York, and Henry G. Davis, of West Virginia.

"We also enthusiastically approve the platform announced by the recent Democratic State convention, held in Trenton, and to the brilliant and able candidate for Governor, Charles G. Black, who is so fittingly an exponent of the leading and all-important issue of the campaign—'equal taxation'—we tender congratulations, and predict for him a magnificent triumph at the polls on November 8 next, and to which end we will go forth to our homes determined to not relax our energies in his behalf until victory is assured.

"We denounce the platform of the late Republican convention, and particularly on the question of equal taxation, as a miserable makeshift and fraud, calculated to hoodwink and deceive the people on this vital issue.

"To the Democratic State committee we tender the assurance of our anxious and willing desire to aid it in every possible way in its laborious, but patriotic, work, in the full hope and belief that there is something for us all to do, both as organizations and individual Democratic citizens who desire to see the Constitution maintained in its integrity, and who believe that the preservation of a republican form of government depends upon the defeat of the party now in power in both State and Nation."

The committee on organization offered the general plan and scope of the permanent association, which was adopted. The name was fixed to be "The New Jersey Democratic Association." The objects were declared to be "to foster the formation of Democratic clubs and societies, and insure their active co-operation in disseminating Jeffersonian principles of government; to preserve the Constitution of the United States, local self-government and freedom of elections; to resist revolutionary changes and centralization of power; to oppose the imposition of taxes beyond the necessities of governments economically administered; to promote economy in all branches of the public service; to co-operate with the regular organization of the Democratic party."

The officers are to consist of a president, vice president, secretary and treasurer. The duties of these officers were committed and the appointment arranged of an executive committee to consist of one member from each county, together with the officers.

The permanent officers agreed upon during recess were as follows: Colonel Edwin A. Stevens, Hudson, president; John L. Wynn, Passaic, vice president; Franklin H. Halliday, Essex, treasurer; William S. McKean, Essex, secretary.

Calvin D. McMurtry, of Somerville, was appointed a member of the executive committee and Wilbur Van-Houten, of Somerset, was appointed a vice president.

There were fifteen clubs from Union County represented.

Somerset county—Chairman of delegation, Robert L. Stevens; committee on credentials, Horace Coddington; resolutions, William Frost; organization, Charles J. Furey; finance, Jacob Schurts.

Robert L. Stevens was chairman of the Somerset County delegation. Horace Coddington was a member of the committee on credentials; William Frost on resolutions; C. J. Furey on organization and Jacob Schurts on finance.

Uncle Sam Wants Bids.

Postmaster E. H. Bird has received word from Washington to advertise for bids for the carrying of the mail between this city and Washingtonville. The contract held by the present carrier expires July 1, 1905, but it is a way the Government has of being prompt in transacting business, and if this matter is no exception to the rule.

Gates Will Enter College.

John Gates, of East Third street, a well known young colored man, has received word from the authorities of Howard University, of Washington, D. C., that he has been successful, and has passed the necessary entrance examinations. He will enter the University in about a month.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 2.

Topic.—How we are in training to succeed others.—Deut. xxxiv, 7-12; Josh. i, 1, 2.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

The worker may fail, but God's work goes on. God always has men in training to succeed the workers in His vineyard. A man of great worth and value dies and men exclaim, "Who can take his place?" But in a very brief space of time the gap is filled and the work goes on. The man was never born whose place could not be filled. Not that God calls one man to do another's work, but to carry forward His work. Joshua succeeded Moses, but he was not a second Moses, but himself. With the reaching of the promised land the work of the deliverer, the lawgiver, the organizer of church and state was over. He therefore is called to his heavenly reward, and Joshua, the general, replaces him, because the conquest of Canaan is now the duty of the hour.

God, knowing that this hour of transfer of place and power would come, had Joshua in training for it even before Moses died. "Joshua, the son of Nun, was full of the spirit of wisdom, for Moses had laid his hands upon him, and the children of Israel hearkened unto him." Thus Joshua was designated the successor of Moses and was in training for the time when the clock should strike the hour, and when it did strike he was ready. God must at all times keep training workers. It is wonderful how soon one must give up to another, and the work would suffer greatly if the newcomer were untrained. Moses was trained in Egypt and Midian for his great labors. David was designated as the successor of Saul long before the succession took place. Elisha was trained to carry on the work begun by Elijah. John the Baptist was the great worker for a time, but Christ and His disciples carriedon the work after him.

Even great men, great leaders, great workers, fall by the wayside, but somewhere, perhaps in an unknown, obscure place, God has one ready to take up and carry on the work. In fact, all young people, and especially Christian Endeavorers, should feel that they are in training to carry forward the work of God in larger spheres as the successors of those who now hold the important places. The future officers, leaders and workers in our churches will be the young people of today, and in what way could they be better trained than by pledging themselves to God in such an organization as the Christian Endeavor society? Our society is a training school. It is not an end in itself, but a means to an end, and that end is to prepare Christ's young people for the future work of the church. The business and professional worlds today want trained men. Skilled workmen are in demand, and young women spend time and money that they may prepare themselves for work. Shall Christian young people do less, especially when they have a training school at home where no tuition is charged and there is practically no expense? When trained, God called Joshua to service. God wants picked workers today. Let us prepare ourselves and be ready when He calls us to any mission whatsoever to do His will.

at Buffalo was Fanny J. Crosby, "the blind hymn writer." Four addresses in one day, one of them before an audience of 3,000, is an unusual record for a lady eighty-four years old and blind from earliest infancy. Fanny Crosby, though belonging to the Methodist church, is enthusiastic in her support of Christian Endeavor and a firm believer in Christian Endeavor principles.

Endeavor In Korea.

P. L. Gillett, Y. M. C. A. secretary for Korea, located at Seoul, writes of the interest in the Christian Endeavor society which he started there some months ago. He says: "Our society among the foreign children of the community is active and prosperous. The meetings are conducting a Sunday school every Sunday with an enrollment of about eighteen Korean boys and girls. They have also distributed some 4,000 tracts within the last few months. Our meetings are bright and interesting, because each member helps to make them so."

State Sunday.

New York is going to observe Oct. 16 as state Sunday. A special programme has been issued by the state secretary's office to be used by the 2,500 societies. The day is for the purpose of making every one acquainted with the work of the state union.

From the Keystone State.

The latest compilation of Pennsylvania figures puts the total number of Endeavorers in the Keystone State at 135,000.

They organized 117 new Junior societies last year.

The tract department of the state union sent out nearly 1,200 letters during the past twelve months.

Eighty-two new societies have been organized since July, 1902.

WEE HERO GIVES UP JOY.

Insists That Dying Girl Should Have the Outing to Which He Had Looked Forward.

There was room for but one more, writes a New York correspondent, and that was a tightsqueeze. The Little Sisters of the Poor came for little Washington Rascvis in a big wagon. He could not meet them at the mission as other children did, for he was lame from a fall. He had been wild to go on this particular picnic. He had been in bed for months, and the doctor had promised if he persisted in taking the exercises he prescribed he would be well enough to go.

Poor Washington! how he suffered at nights, but he was brave. It took all the fortitude he could muster to stretch his muscles as the doctor had ordered him to do, and without tears to relax them. But he was bulging everything on the picnic, and to-day was the day.

He was up before dawn, chattering of cows, pigs, bears, alligators and other animals he expected to see in the country. The time at last arrived and the big wagon and its load of laughing children. Such a bunch! Big and little girls and boys of all shades, from the African black to the light hue of the mulatto, combed and curled and kinked. Friends of impossible kinkiness.

Washington had been watching at the window and when the wagon drew up to the door he was ready with his bucket and shovel and toy gun (for a Long Island buffalo, probably).

But Washington overheard a conversation between the sisters and the driver about a poor little negro girl who was dying of consumption. She could not go, and it was probably her last chance. There was no room—no, they could get another one in—poor little girl, she had cried so.

The tears were waxing for him and his chum in the street was calling to him, but Washington would not go—no, he did not feel well enough—but could he speak to the sisters? A whisper and protest, a few tears that the little boy on new crutches tried to hide, and the bucket and shovel were put in the wagon with instructions how to use them.

"Let the little colored chile go, it is going to die sure all de things she can in de country, for, lady, mebby hebben ain't like dat."

CIRL SLUGS BOLD MASHER

Hoosier Young Woman Uses Fist with Good Effect on a Cheeky Male Stranger.

That mashers run a risk of their lives when they accost Hoosier girls was demonstrated in front of the court house at Logansport, Ind., when Miss Myrtle Robertson, daughter of Sheriff S. C. Robertson, of South Bend, administered a short arm jolt to one, and sent him sprawling in the gutter.

His identity was not learned. He took to his heels immediately, and ran across Third street bridge, zigzagging through dizziness, and holding his hands to his aching face. Sheriff Robertson came to Logansport to take Cyrus G. Strunk, an insane man, to Longcliffe. His daughter accompanied him.

Those who saw the man declare he was a stranger in Logansport. He left a bench in the park, and began to walk up and down in front of the jail. Finally he spoke to Miss Robertson.

"It's a lovely day," said he.

Miss Robertson drew back in astonishment. Her big eyes blazed and her face flushed. Her pretty fingers clinched themselves into a firm, symmetrical knot, and her little arm unfolded itself in a "hook" that would do credit to Fitzsimmons. The masher went down, attempted to rise, tripped and fell again. Then he ran.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Oct. 2: "The Sacred Writings."—II Tim. ii, 14-17.—Bible Study Rally Day.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES.

The vacation season is over, and the people are getting home and settled again into the regular routine of work. Business and school duties are resumed. We need to take up our church work also as speedily as possible. In a few weeks the holiday planning will claim attention. Social engagements will increase, and the time of many will be fully occupied. If we can secure the interest of our young folks in a plan of Bible study before their time is too fully engaged otherwise we shall have gained a great advantage. Our plans need to be well matured and then vigorously worked.

It is almost impossible to build up a strong Christian character without constant study of the Christian Scriptures. If we do not get hold of people and needs to know in matters of faith and practical living. Lack of knowledge of these things is the chief cause of backsliding among Christians and lack of conversion among other people. The Truth does not get hold of people and shape their lives because they do not realize it. It has never become real to them because they give no attention to the literature which contains it in the best form. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

Never was the close, persistent study of the Bible more needed than at the present time. The enlarged and more accurate knowledge of the natural world which we now have ought to make reasonable views of God, man and the universe in their relations to each other now held deeply and vitally affect our understanding of the truths of religion and make absolutely necessary the study of the Bible from this new viewpoint.

The modern studies in language, the discoveries on the sites of ancient cities and explorations in Bible lands, the comparison of the sacred books of all the great religions of the world with each other and with the Christian writings—all these and many other influences combine to make the revelation of religious truth in the Bible more vitally important than ever before. Our view of the Bible is unlike that held by men in times gone by. We must put the eternal principles of divine truth found in our holy books into language and thought now current. We can do this only by careful and devout study of the Bible itself for ourselves. We must know what it has to say to us in our present conditions of life and with our new problems. To know how men walked with God in ages past is of value to us only as we learn thereby how we can now and here walk with Him.

The demand of the time above all other needs is a robust righteousness. This comes only from those who are clean and sunbeturbge, clear eyed, whole souled and honest as daylight.

There is but one place where such equipment has ever been obtained by any man in any age. In the secret place of the most high, in spiritual communion, the soul seeking receives the prophetic inspiration which is of the nature of salvation. The Spirit speaks most commonly and plainly through the written word. In searching the Scriptures we find the mind of the Master.

Our study will give best results when class work and individual investigation are combined. Our leagues should plan for systematic prosecution of a course during the autumn and winter. Some particular section should be selected, such as a single book, or, better still than this, a period of history or a particular topic, such as Hebrew prophecy, or the spread of the gospel in the apostolic age, or progress in practical religion from Joshua to Josiah, or application of the teaching of Jesus to the affairs of everyday life or any of a multitude that are pressing for attention at the present time.

Study all sides of the topic. Arrange to have an occasional lecture on the literature connected with the subject, on the geography of the countries, the contemporary history, the persons involved, the manners and customs of the period and such items of interest as are best treated in this manner. Illustrate these talks with the best views to be had.

Divide up the subtopics and have papers and talks given by as many different members as can be interested to take such parts.

Study anything and everything that will help to a better understanding of the subject in hand, but never forget that the best source of information is always the Bible itself. Read it over and over again and compare one part with another.

Whatever others do or don't do, as for you, begin at once and persist in careful and regular study of the Bible.

Faith and Grace.

Faith and grace co-operate in working out the second of the steps of redemption, in setting forth fully the ways in which God delivered His people out of Egypt to bring them into the promised land. This is a grand historic type of the way in which God brings sinners out of the house of sin into the rich inheritance of His promises.—J. R. Whitney.

In Our Father's Keeping.

The gulf is deep between us, while parted here below.
You in your path of duty and I in mine I know.
We know not what's before us of happiness or pain,
Or if, this side of heaven, we'll ever meet again.
But in our Father's keeping, sweet, we leave it all to Him,
We'll do the work He gives us until He bids us rest.
And whether long the parting or soon to meet once more,
His loving care will guard us 'tis parting sure.

TAX RATE IS THE SAME

Common Council's Finance Committee Agrees on $2.52.

TO RAISE $237,672.94

Exact Individual Assessment for the Various Departments of City Rate.

The finance committee from the Common Council met Wednesday and fixed the tax rate for Plainfield for 1904 at $2.52 on the $100, the same as last year. In fixing this rate several changes have been made in some of the principal items as will be noticed by comparing figures for the two years.

This year there is to be raised for general purposes, including $35,000 for street improvements, $47,500; for lighting, $13,500; for principal on sewer obligation, $6,640; for support of city poor, $5,700; for public library, $4,000; for fire department, $33,700; for public schools, $68,800; county purposes, $45,888.14; for State schools, $16,544.10, making a total of $237,672.94.

County tax, .47 cents; State school, .17; fire department, .35; library, .05; city and city light, .65; poor, .07; free school and bond, .73; principal on sewer bond, .06; interest on sewer obligation, .05. Total, $2.32.

As compared with last year these changes are noted: The amount raised last year for general purposes was $48,975, for lighting, $12,800. The principal on sewer obligation is the same. The interest on sewer obligation last year was $6,800, support of poor, $6,000; public library, $4,000; fire department, $32,000; public schools, $64,000; county purposes, $43,570; State schools, $16,085.

The individual assessment last year was as follows:

County tax, .49 cents; State school, .18; fire department, .35; library, .04½; city and city light, .66½; poor, .06¾; free school and bond, .69½; principal on sewer bonds, .06; interest on sewer obligation, .07. Total, $2.52.

Now that the finance committee has passed on the books of the assessors and fixed these various amounts, it is up to the Common Council to confirm the same. It is with the power of the Common Council to change any of these figures if it so desires, but there is every reason to believe that the figures will stand.

ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION TO GIVE ENTERTAINMENT

HIGH SCHOOL BOYS PLAN FOR A MINSTREL SHOW.

The board of directors of the Plainfield High School Athletic Association met Wednesday and appointed the following committee to arrange for the regular fall entertainment: Charles Potter Titsworth, chairman; Chester Briggs and Geo. Bentley. It has been the custom for many years to hold this entertainment in the fall for the benefit of the spring baseball team. The track-meet, and the basket ball team usually pay for themselves. Last year the form of entertainment consisted of a glee club concert, though it is not known whether this sort of a programme will be rendered or not. There is no doubt that a glee club will be formed among the pupils of the school.

They are fortunate in having as a member of the faculty, Samuel R. Howe, Jr., who was the leader of his college glee club for three years. One of the members of the school said that there was no doubt that Mr. Howe would be willing to devote his services to the organization of a vocal as well as instrumental glee club. Mr. Howe is a mandolin player, and there are several good players in the school.

With regard to the form of entertainment which will be given, the High School men are of the idea that they have thought of getting up a minstrel show in the school for some time, and that the fall entertainment might be one of that nature. He stated farther that there are several members of the school who were experienced in the art of minstral entertaining. This nature of a show is a decided departure from anything which has been attempted before, and seems to be favorably considered by the members of the association.

TAX COLLECTOR HUSTLING

Commissioners of Appeal to Meet Tuesday, Oct. 25.

SENDING OUT BILLS

All Taxpayers Must Have Their Bills Within Two Weeks.

As Collector of Taxes F. H. Smith is obliged to get the tax bills out before Tuesday, October 25, the day the Commissioners of Appeal meet, this is naturally the busy time of the year for him. As the intervening time between tonight and October 25, is comparatively short, it may be necessary for Mr. Smith to secure assistance. This he can do for the Common Council appropriated a sum not to exceed $100 for this purpose.

In all Mr. Smith has about 14,000 bills to send out. A majority of these bills will be received by those for whom they were intended, within a day or so of the time of mailing. Others will not receive their bills under two or three days possibly. However, they must be sent in time to allow the taxpayers time to meet the Commissioners of Appeal if they are not satisfied with their assessment, and have them adjusted. The Board of Assessors, as usual, have tried to be very fair in the matter of assessment and while some kicks are expected, no great number are looked for. It has not been found necessary to change the assessment of many property-owners, but in the case of new buildings and new residents rating have been established for the first time and it is possible that there may be some objection.

The tax bills this year, in addition to containing the individual assessment also contains on the back the various amounts fixed to be raised for the different city departments. This heretofore has not been done. It is considered an excellent idea though, for it acquaints the taxpayers with these figures giving him a better idea as to the amount to be raised.

It is a source of satisfaction not only to the Board of Assessors, but to every official and taxpayer in the city, that the city is enjoying a steady constant growth. With each succeeding year the total tax valuation has shown a good increase, and it is largely due to this that the officials have been able to keep the rate down to $2.52 as there are more people to help pay the expense of running the city. Much assistance has also been received in this direction through the erection of new buildings, residential and otherwise.

According to the State law governing this matter, the assessors are supposed to assess practically full value. This is never done, however, the purpose being to assess in such an equitable manner that the amount necessary to run the city can be raised without any hardships to the individual. It is frequently thought by taxpayers that their assessment is unjust and that the assessors put it on them too heavy. It is not the intention or purpose of these officials to assess any too heavily and they try to be as fair as possible.

Persons in a position to know claim that there is no city or town in New Jersey that is getting any more or some times as much for its money than Plainfield, and in this respect the citizens are to be congratulated. There are many cities where expenses are much higher and the advantages much less. It is often customary and the rule to pay salaries to Councilmen, but here the members of the Common Council serve without any compensation and in view of the amount of work they are often called upon to perform, they are giving considerable of their valuable time to the city for nothing.

Celebrated Birthday Anniversary.

John Gottlieson, of Watchung avenue, celebrated the fifty-fifth anniversary of his birthday, last Sunday. Many guests from Plainfield and other cities were present to assist in the celebration. Mr. Gottlieson received several handsome presents, including a gift from Mrs. J. Fred MacDonald in appreciation of his services as night watchman at the silk mill. Among the out of town guests were Mrs. Peterson, and Miss Jennie Barkley, of Fort Lee.

Private Morrison to Go West.

Arthur Morrison, a prominent member of Co. K, will leave the city within a few days to go West, having secured a position with the Standard Oil Company. He has been assigned as timekeeper of a big gang of men which will lay a new pipe line through Texas at the rate of 100 miles a month.

Has Made Dentist.

Dr. Emerson G. Curry, of Woodstock, Ont., a graduate of the dental department of the University of Pennsylvania, has leased the old Reed & Coddington's office in the Babcock building and this week will open handsome dental parlors.

EDITOR FINED $500 FOR CONTEMPT OF COURT

JUDGE STRONG, THE COMPLAINANT, PASSES THE SENTENCE HIMSELF.

Judge Strong, of the Middlesex County Courts, Friday, adjudged Francis W. Daire, editor of The New Brunswick Times, guilty of contempt, and sentenced him to pay a fine of $500 and all costs of the prosecution, including the stenographers' fees.

Upon the suggestion of his son, Ain Strong, who conducted the case for him, he amended the sentence as pronounced to provide that the defendant stand committed to the county jail until the fine was paid.

Mr. Daire's counsel immediately gave notice of an appeal to the Supreme Court, which acted as a stay. Mr. Daire gave bond in $1,000 on the approval. As this bond must be approved by a justice of the Supreme Court, the case was continued until Saturday, to permit of the preparation of the bond.

He declared that the defendant was adjudged guilty because an objectionable editorial, which had corrupted upon the sentencing of Alfred Cooley to pay a fine of $75 on a plea of non vult to carnally abusing Mary Kavanagh, had "wilfully distorted facts." The defense had in court the girl, her father and her mother, but she court threw out all their evidence except as to what transpired in court on the day of the sentence.

This precluded the introduction of their evidence as to the facts in the case.

The proceedings were marked by a fierce denunciation of the defendant by Judge Strong.

HIS NATAL DAY.

Thirty Friends of Arthur Ross Help Him Celebrate the Event.

Thirty friends of Arthur Ross, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ross, of Berckman street, tendered him a pleasant surprise party, Saturday evening, in honor of his twelfth birthday. The affair was arranged by the Misses Anna Martin, Helen Crook and Eleanor Gulberg and was a complete success in every respect. Music and games were features and supper was served at the close.

Among those present were the Misses Sarah Harper, Sadie Leahy, Sophia and Lillian Bows, Edna Johnson, Hazel Morrison, Dorothy Smith, Anna Smith, Helen Myers, Jennie and Gretchen Giebler, and John Harper, Robert Gulberg, Arthur Dann, Fred Crook, Bergen Mosier, Harry Lievers, Joseph Green and John King.

FRIENDS EMBARRASSED. A PROSPECTIVE GROOM

N. G. CAMPBELL SHOWERED WITH RICE AND HIS TRUNK DECORATED.

Numbered among a big truck load of trunks which went out from the North Avenue station one morning last week, was one artistically decorated with pink ribbons and many rainbows that made the expressman smile and look around for the owner. No one was in sight with which it could be connected and for the time being the embellishments remained a mystery. Many commuters who saw it were still further impressed with the fact that a wedding was "in the air" somewhere, when on the next afternoon, a young man was pursued through the Liberty street ferry houses and over to the Plainfield train by several young women who showered him with rice and confetti.

No blushing bride was with him and the mystery deepened until today when the trunk and the pursuit incidents were cleared up by the following announcement: "Miss Catherine A. Anthony, of Catawissa, Pa., and Nathan Garfield Campbell, of Prospect place, Plainfield, will be married in St. Matthew's Evangelical Lutheran church, Catawissa, Tuesday afternoon, September 27, at 6 o'clock."

Mr. Campbell is private secretary to Vice President W. G. Rooler, of the New Jersey Central, and had sought to keep the fact of his coming marriage a secret but friends learned the state of affairs and had their little jokes before he got away.

PARISH HOUSE PLANS.

Handsome Addition to be Added to Grace P. E. Church Property.

The plans for the new parish building of Grace Episcopal church are now ready and work will be commenced soon. The building will measure 58x10 by 72x8, and will be of brick faced with Martensville stone. On the second floor will be an auditorium. The architect is R. W. Gibson, of New York.

The addition is to be on the right side of the church office. In the basement there will be a morning chapel, demonstration room, and living room for the sexton. On the first floor there will be a Bible class room, infants' class room, rector's office, locker room and pantry. The second story will be principally occupied by a fine auditorium, capable of seating 371 people, and provided with an up-to-date fire escape as well as a stairway. There will also be five class rooms on this floor adjoining the auditorium.

AIMING AT RAILWAY

Japanese Strategy In Vast Turning Movement.

EMPEROR NICHOLAS GOES TO ODESSA

While Reports Say a Force of Japs Has Crossed the Yalu, It Is Thought They Are Only Scouting Parties.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—A St. Petersburg dispatch says that General Kuropatkin has learned from Chinese spies that the Japanese is carrying out their vast turning movement from Liaoyang in the direction of Dondzang, in the valley of the Taitse, are aiming to strike eventually at the railway north of Mukden.

A Mukden telegram reports that the Japanese have crossed the Hun river fifty miles above that city, but it is believed that only scouting parties of Japanese have crossed the river.

The movement of Japanese forces on the Liao river which was reported in a dispatch from General Sachuroff to the general staff is all the more significant since Haicheng is the strategic point of roads leading to Tie pass, Mukden and Siminitin. The announcement that the Russians are fortifying Fakoman, twenty-five miles northeast of Mukden, shows that General Kuropatkin is preparing to check the flanking movement on Tie pass from the west in case Siminitin should have to be evacuated.

The entire absence of news from Port Arthur, it is feared, indicates a close blockade there. Ribarto dispatches from General Stoessel have been coming through regularly.

The admiralty has not received any details of the reported sea fight off Aniva, at the southeastern extremity of Sakhalin. The Vladivostok squadron, it is understood, is still in the harbor. The cannonading at Aniva was probably a Japanese attack on blockade runners.

A telegram received here from Batum reporting that powders are being transported along the Caucasian coast brings the first information that troops there are being mobilized. There are only two army corps in the Caucasus, and one of these has apparently been ordered to the far east.

Prince Serafnolk Mirsky was received in audience by the emperor. The prince will assume charge of the ministry of the interior tomorrow.

The emperor has left for Odessa. It is his intention to visit Tsrnopol instead of Kishineff, as has been previously announced.

Women May Smoke in Public.

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—Women may smoke as much as they choose while riding in automobiles so far as the police department is concerned, according to an announcement made by Police Commissioner Waldo. This announcement came after much newspaper comment had followed an arrest of a member of an automobile party Sunday evening, the arresting policeman taking occasion to rebuke a woman in the automobile for smoking in public. "The smoking was only an incident of the generally disorderly character of those in the automobile," said the commissioner.

Fraternal Societies Congress.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 28.—The national fraternal congress has convened here on the world's fair grounds. More than 200 delegates were present at the exercises, which were opened by William R. Eidson, president of the Missouri fraternal congress. President Francis welcomed the congress to the exposition. Addresses were made by President J. A. Patterson of the Canadian Fraternal association and Edwin O. Wood, president of the national fraternal congress.

Nott Memorial Celebration.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Sept. 28.—Arrangements have been completed for the Nott memorial celebration to be held by Union university tomorrow, commemorating Dr. Nott's installation as president of the college 100 years ago. Distinguished guests will be present, including three grandsons of the distinguished educator, Judge Nott of Washington, J. V. H. Nott of Katrine, N. Y., and Bishop Potter of New York.

Wild Cat Land Swindles.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Sept. 28.—United States special agents have arrested J. D. Anderson, representing realty companies of Indianapolis and Des Moines. The arrest was made on an order from the postoffice department which claims that the companies are wild cat schemes and that thousands have been swindled in all parts of the United States.

Crank Letter Writer Arrested.

DES MOINES, Ia., Sept. 28.—Charged with writing and sending threatening letters to President Roosevelt, Miss Roosevelt and Helen Gould, a man giving his name as Edward DaBeimer has been arrested by the United States authorities and has been lodged in jail at Fort Dodge.

D. H. Goss a Suicide at Strassburg.

BERLIN, Sept. 28.—D. H. Goss, president of the American institute at Strassburg, has shot and killed himself there. Mr. Goss left a letter saying he feared he was becoming insane and for that reason had decided to commit suicide. The American institute is closed.

New Minister From Guatemala.

Alta Axworth Made a Record.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 28.—At the second day of the Oakley Park grand circuit meeting, in the Horse Review Futurity stake for foals of 1901, purse $7,000, Alta Axworth, after finishing sixth to Princess Athel in the first heat and second to Grace Bond in the second heat, won the race in three straight heats, making a world's record for the best five heats ever trotted by three-year-olds, as well as a world's record for the fastest fifth heat ever trotted by three-year-olds. Major Delmar will try to break the world's trotting record here tomorrow.

Parker to Help Hill to Wed.

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—The Hotel Seville, says the New York Sun, where Judge Parker is staying during his present visit to the city, is diagonally across Twenty-ninth street from the Little Church Around the Corner. Soon after the arrival of the judge a report was circulated in and about the hotel that the rumor that David B. Hill was to wed May Irwin, the actress, was really true and that the wedding was to take place at the Little Church Around the Corner and that Judge Parker was to be present as witness. It had been announced at Democratic state headquarters that Mr. Hill was expected in the city during the day.

Vegetarian Congress at St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 28.—The fifth international vegetarian congress has opened here on the exposition grounds. As this was the first congress held in America the foreign delegation was large. The congress was called to order by the chairman, F. J. Conrad of New York city, who introduced President R. H. Reichard of the St. Louis Vegetarian society. An address of welcome was made by President Jar. Hendry A. Mutch of the American Vegetarian society, Philadelphia, to which William E. Axon, LL. D., London, responded.

Thirty Persons Injured.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 28.—A list of the injured in the Iron Mountain railroad wreck, telephoned from Piedmont, Mo., contains the names of thirty-one persons. Late reports say that some of the injured are so badly hurt that it is thought they will die. The most seriously hurt are: R. S. Hayes, Fayette, Mo., injured on head, neck and hand; Mrs. J. W. Michaels, Little Rock, Ark., wound in head; Mrs. H. Hill, Little Rock, Ark., shoulder dislocated, probably fatally injured.

Miss Bertha Runkle to Wed.

PEORIA, Ill., Sept. 28.—The engagement of Captain Louis N. Bash, U. S. A., to the novelist, Miss Bertha Runkle of New York, has been announced. Captain Bash, who is now serving in the Philippines, is the son of Major Bash, retired, of this city. The wedding is to take place at Miss Runkle's New York home late in the autumn.

Major Adams Dead.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 28.—Major Thomas Adams, assistant inspector general of the presidio, is dead here from injuries received last Saturday when he was struck by a street car. He was fifty-nine years old and a graduate of West Point. In point of service he was the oldest artillery officer on the coast.

BOSTON, Sept. 28.—William T. Way of this city has been informed by Herbert H. D. Pierce, third assistant secretary of state, that the Mexican authorities had passed sentence upon the persons concerned in the murders of Mr. Way's brother Clarence and Edward B. Latimer, another American citizen.

Cashier Committed Suicide.

LONGFORD, Kan., Sept. 28.—J. J. Marty, cashier of the Longford bank has committed suicide here. Despondency over long continued ill health is supposed to have led to the deed. Witnesses represent Frank Clay county about eight years ago. Marty was elected by the Legislature.

VICTIM OF MALPRACTICE

Colored Woman's Death Result of Criminal Operation

AN ARREST FOLLOWS

Louis Harris Makes Complete Confession When Taken Before the Body.

Alone in her apartments at 543 West Fourth street, Eva Weaver, an attractive young colored woman, died Monday morning, the victim of a criminal operation performed upon her in New York city a short time ago. Circumstances in the case soon after the body was found led the police to investigate and the arrest of Louis Harris, a well known colored cook, was ordered by Chief Kiely. When confronted with facts and taken before the body, Harris made a complete confession and acknowledged that he was responsible for the trouble which led to the woman's submitting to malpractice. He was turned over to the New York authorities Monday afternoon.

Mrs. Weaver came to this city from Richmond, Va., a year ago and despite the fact that Harris is married man with a family, he sought her company and was with her a great deal of the time. He occupied the lower part of the house at 543 West Fourth street and secured the upper apartments for her. Last month Mrs. Weaver went away from the place and did not return until two weeks ago. She had since been confined to her room and yesterday as one of Harris' children went to call on her, she was found dead in bed.

The body was removed to Cole's undertaking rooms and Sunday night an autopsy was performed by Drs. Lufbarrow, Clawson and County Physician Westcott. Following the death, rumors of suicide, spread about the neighborhood, and this was generally believed until the doctors completed their examination. On the strength of their findings Harris was taken into custody. Members of the local colored church raised the funds to defray the expenses of burying the body.

Harris is well known throughout the city and is considered an excellent chef. For a long time he has been employed at local hotels and is credited with having made good wages, nearly all of which, the police say, was spent on women. He is a step-son of Rev. Scott Wallace, pastor of the Calvary Baptist church.

CASINO RENOVATED, A HANDSOME PLAYHOUSE

BEAUTIFUL DECORATIONS AND HANDSOME FURNISHINGS MAKE IT INVITING.

A corps of painters and decorators from Woolston & Buckle's, yesterday completed extensive improvements to the Casino which have made the building handsomer than at any time since its erection. The alterations were planned by Manager Mase Edwards, having been given carte-blanche by Mr. Fisk and the work was carried out under his personal direction. The color scheme harmonizes perfectly and will prove restful to the eyes of the audiences. The main hall is done in a soft red and olive green with a finish of ivory on the ceiling. The proscenium arch is in sienna tone and the heating arrangement is resplendent in bronze. New red curtains have been hung on the tage in place of the old gold drapings formerly in place and new furnishings have been placed throughout.

The entrance halls are in robin's egg blue and white and the auxiliary rooms have all been changed in varying hues. Handsome furnishings, fine carpets and many other embellishments have been added and everything is cosy and inviting. The bowling alleys in the lower part of the building are now being thoroughly overhauled and within another week everything will be in readiness for the busy season in prospect.

Father Boone Leaves Elizabeth.

Rev. Father Boone, who has been pastor of St. Patrick's church, Elizabeth, for several months past, has severed his connection with the parish and returned to his home here. Later he will go to Washington to complete his studies for the Sulpician Seminary. Rev. Father Lundy, of Newark, a graduate of Seton Hall College, will fill the vacancy left by Father Boone.

Confectionery In Babcock Building.

The Wilmington Candy Company, with headquarters at Wilmington, Del., has leased half of the old Woodhall & Martin store in the Babcock building, next to the main entrance, and on October 1 will open a large confectionery store. The company has one store in Trenton, one in Wilmington and a third in Pennsylvania.

CLINTON AVENUE A. C. LOCAL AMATEUR CHAMPIONS

DUNELLEN A. C. IS DEFEATED IN THE FINAL GAME.

In spite of the fact that many of the local baseball fans attended the Westfield game, a large crowd was present on Crescent Oval, Saturday afternoon, when the Clinton Avenue team won the local amateur championship by defeating the Dunellen team. The score was 5 to 3. It took but one inning of erratic pitching on the part of Smith, the High School twirler, together with a number of errors on the part of the Dunellen team, to put an end to their chance of winning the championship title. This inning was the first in which, as the result of a number of bunched hits, the Clinton Avenue aggregation netted three runs. A run in the previous inning, and another in the seventh was the extent of their scoring ability, but it was enough to settle the dispute with regard to the amateur championship of this vicinity. The Dunellen players were able to score but three runs. Their hits, five in number, though more than their opponents, were scattered and consequently of little value.

VanArsdale pitched a strong game for his team, and held the score down in good style. For the Dunellen team, Giles and Craig were always found ready to take anything that came their way.

The following is the line-up and the score by innings:

Clinton Avenue—Barnes, 1b; Bateman, 2b; B. Martin, 3b; O'Loughlin, c; Herman, rf; J. Martin, cf; Taylor, cf; Magne, lf; VanArsdale, p.

Dunellen — Giles, 2b; Craig, ss; Mack, ss; Matthews, 1b; Hill, rf; Graham, c; Garvey, cf; Smith, p.

ENTERTAINMENT FOR VISITING Y. M. C. A. BOYS

COMMITTEE IS APPOINTED FOR CONFERENCE TO BE HELD NEXT MONTH.

The cabinet of the boys' department of the Y. M. C. A. with Boys' Secretary Kenneth Robbie has selected the committees for the State boys' conference which will be held here on October 28, 29 and 30. It is the desire of the directors to have the work carried on as far as possible, entirely by the boys, both in entertaining the delegates and in taking charge of the meetings. It is six years since the conference was held in this city, last year's being held at Newark.

Under the direction of Kenneth Robbie and the boys' work committee the following committees from the boys' department have been chosen to take charge of the management of the conference: Entertainment committee, O. S. Rogers, chairman, Stanley Karney, George M. Rittenhouse, Albert Codington, Milton St. John, Charles Lane, Leslie Lilley; reception committee, Dr. Herman Prebasco, chairman, W. B. Caldwell, Howard Freeman, Harold Robie, Dudley Wilcox, Edward Alpaugh, James Fleming, Bert Leggett, William Flanders, William Douglas, Fred Reed, Leland Manning, John Valiant, Leslie Brokaw, Louis Hiles, Lawrence Edgar, Ray Hart, Otto Mueck, Norman Loughlin, Frank Webster, William Bartle, Gaynor Fountain and Weston Gavett; banquet committee, Edgar Freeman, Henri Marris, Robert Sellers, Roy Gates, John Scofield, William Bailey and Cary Adams. The ushers will be selected by Harry Thompson, Stuart Freeman, George Bentley, Marshall Ward, Henry Pound, M. B. Sensenig, Paul Collier, Gideon Fountain, Roy Woodhull and Fred Martin.

It is expected that the number of delegates at the conference will be the largest which has attended any convention for many years. There will be delegates from three to five different associations in the state.

ANOTHER BASEBALL SERIES.

Elizabeth Agrees to Play Three Games With Plainfield.

Manager George Johnston, of the Plainfield A. C., has arranged a series of three games with Manager Fred Burke, of the Elizabethport team, the first of which will be played on Crescent Oval on Saturday. The second contest will be played on the same on Saturday, October 8, and the third contest will be at Elizabeth on Saturday, October 22. By this arrangement, Saturday, October 15 is left open for the contest with the New York Nationals on the grid.

There will be no further games with Somerville this season.

Miss Linda Butler and Miss Marie Bourgeois, of East Front street, have gone to Belmar to spend a few weeks.

HUNT CLUB ORGANIZED

Prominent Men Identified With the New Association.

L. E. WARING, CHAIRMAN

Committee Appointed to Draw Up By-Laws and Constitution.

The Watchung Hunt Club was formed at a meeting held Monday evening at the Casino. The organization was permeated by Dr. Middleton O'Malley Knott last year, but as it was rather late in the season, no steps toward a permanent organization were taken. Several fine hunts were gotten up, all of which were conducted by Dr. Knott, and the public was allowed to participate in the sport at will. Last season was the first time that hunts were held in this city, but as there were so many who were interested in the affair, the idea of forming an organization soon became practicable to those in charge.

The matter was discussed for the first time Monday evening, when a number of prominent men, including George P. Mellick, William Palmer Smith, Charles McCutcheon, Lewis E. Waring, Charels J. Fisk and W. J. Battfield, met at the Casino to take the initial steps in securing for Plainfield a permanent hunt club.

In addition to the temporary officers, Mr. E. Waring, chairman, and Dr. Knott, secretary, a committee consisting of Mr. Mellick, Mr. Crain, Mr. Brook and Dr. Knott was appointed to draw up a code of by-laws by which the association will be governed. They will present their constitution at a meeting next Monday evening at which time the regular officers will be chosen.

Dr. Knott stated last evening that the membership of the club was likely to exceed even the brightest expectations, about thirty having signified their desire to join.

The club already secured several packs of excellent hounds, from England, and some from the best kennels in this country. The first hunt under the auspices of the club will be held next Saturday, starting from the Netherwood Hotel. The exact time of starting will be announced later, the officials having not yet decided.

NEW BRUNSWICK BOYS GOT BILL'S CHECK—ALMOST

"MAYOR" SMITH RECONSIDERED HIS DECISION TO MAKE CONTRIBUTION.

The New Brunswick Home News of yesterday relates the following account of a "soliciting" committee's visit to the first citizen of New Market:

"Terrance Murphy, manager of the High School football team, and G. Barron, a committee appointed by the members of the High School Athletic Association, to raise a subscription fund for an athletic field, went to New Market recently for the purpose of having an audience with Mayor 'Bill' Smith.

"The plan formed by the members was to raise a subscription fund for the purpose of buying an athletic field, and it was proposed by some that a committee should go and see Mayor 'Bill' Smith, who, they thought would give it a 'boost.' Messrs. Murphy and G. Barron bravely volunteered to go.

"They finally arrived at New Market, and after some difficulty found Mayor Smith's residence. On being ushered in, they found 'Bill' Smith to be a good-natured fellow. After introductions and explaining their business, Mr. Smith readily consented to give them a check, and started to go to his desk. Half way across the room Smith's foot became tangled with a new carpet and he fell on a convenient, soothing things generally. This put the Mayor out of humor with the business at hand.

"After a long, though not uninteresting stay, the committee arrived home. They will probably have another audience with him at a later date—after election."

DIVORCED WIFE'S CLAIM

Legal Move Against A. R. Keller is Blocked by Court.

AFTER PROPERTY

Wanted Receiver's Jurisdiction to Cover Second Wife's Estate.

Augustus R. Keller, a residens of this city, and a book publisher in Philadelphia, from whom his first wife was divorced in April, 1903, is involved in further legal troubles. An application made by Annie L. Keller, Mr. Keller's first wife, to have extended the jurisdiction of a receiver she had appointed for the property of her former husband, Augustus R. Keller, so as to cover certain property owned by Keller's second wife and located in Eleventh avenue near Twenty-first street, New York, was denied yesterday by Justice Herrett in the Supreme Court of New York.

After Mrs. Keller's divorce was granted there followed a number of real estate transactions.

In opposing the application for the extension of the jurisdiction of the receiver Fred Howe, counsel for Keller, said that in February, 1903, Annie L. Keller sued for an absolute divorce and that while that suit was pending she, in consideration of $6,000 paid to her by her husband, joined him in a deal conveying valuable real estate on Fifteenth avenue to Henry Schmidt. The lawyer said that after Mrs. Keller got her divorce, with alimony at the rate of $25 a month, Schmidt reconveyed the property to Keller. A few days after his wife got her divorce Keller married another woman to whom he conveyed the property in question.

Recently the first Mrs. Keller obtained an order in the Supreme Court increasing her alimony from $25 to $125 a month. Subsequently she procured from the receiver appointed for her husband's real estate in New York. Under this order the first Mrs. Keller today sought to have the Court order the receiver to collect the rents of the second Mrs. Keller's property.

Moses H. Grossman, of counsel for Keller, said that legal notice had not been served on Keller previous to the applications for an increase of his first wife's alimony and of the appointment of a receiver of his real estate.

Counsel said that he would apply to have these proceedings vacated. He said that Keller was a member of the firm of Gebbie & Co., book publishers.

CO. K TO RESUME DRILLS ON MONDAY NIGHT

MEDALS TO BE AWARDED TO THOSE WHO ATTEND ALL DRILLS.

The regular weekly drills will be resumed by the members of Co. K on Monday night at the armory in West Front street, at 8:15 o'clock. The members will wear blue uniforms and all men not uniformed will report to the quartermaster-sergeant on the above date.

With a view to increasing the attendance at the regular weekly drills, the regiment will present a medal to each enlisted man at the end of the drill season who shall have attained 100 per cent. in attendance at drills, and in the performance of duty.

Immediately after the drill on Monday night, there will be an election for corporal to fill the vacancy by the removal from the State of Corporal Stephen A. Stover. After the election the regular business meeting of the company will be held. Every member is expected to be present as business of importance pertaining to the work of the company for the winter will be brought up for discussion. While the work of the past has been excellent, it is the intention of the officers, with the help of the members, to make the coming year the banner one in the organization.

Another Resident Pitcher.

Plainfield is rapidly getting a colony of famous baseball pitchers. Already numbering "Christy" Mathewson and Virgil Garvin among its residents, a third was added yesterday when Louis Wittee, of the Baltimore Eastern League, moved into apartments in the new Stillman flats. He is well known in the baseball world and next year is to wear the uniform of the New York Americans.

ACADEMIC LEAGUE ACTIVE

Jersey School Boys to Hold Track Meet Here,

FOOTBALL PLANS

Newark Academy to Play Leal's School on Oct. 22 on Crescent Oval.

A meeting of the New Jersey Inter-Academic League was held at Newark Academy, Monday afternoon, for the purpose of discussing matters pertaining to the league, held over from the spring meeting. The following schools are represented in this league: Leal's School, at this city; Pingry School, of Elizabeth; Newark Academy, Montclair Military Academy, and Carteret School, of Orange. Each school was represented at the meeting by a delegation of one instructor and one student. Sugars, the manager of the local school's football team, was present as the delegate from Leal's.

Among the other items of routine business, it was decided that the teams need not necessarily wear any regulation uniform, and that the officials in all games shall be chosen from disinterested college men by the delegation of instructors. It was also decided that each league game shall be played with a new ball, which will become the property of the winning team.

A committee to provide stationary with colors, consisting of the following members of the delegation: Styles, of Leal's School, chairman; Keeney, of Pingry and Smith, of Montclair. The first league football game will be played between Leal's and Newark Academy on October 22 at Crescent Oval.

After the subject of football was dispensed with, the question of the organization of a basket ball league was considered, and the committee decided to wait the decision of Pingry School, with regard to their representation on the floor this year, before any definite plans are undergone. The Pingry boys have never played basket ball, and in all probability they will not undertake the organization of a team this fall. In that case the other teams will meet, but no official league games will be played.

It has finally been decided to hold the annual fall track meet under the auspices of the Plainfield High School Athletic Association in the last week of October, probably on Friday. It has also been determined to have an inter-class contest as well as a championship event. Last year this was attempted for the first time, and the class banner, offered by The Daily Press, was won by the class of 1905, with 1904 a close second.

The winning class will be the one which captured the greatest number of points in the field meet, any number of entries being allowed. Contrary to the precedent set by last year's meet, a relay race will be run this year, instead of the tug-of-war. The committee in charge of the meet, composed of the following members of the Association: Harry Thompson, chairman; Harold Robert and William Douglass, have secured the use of the Gentlemen's Driving Park for the purpose of holding the meet, and have drawn up a list of events the same as those in former years.

The various class teams will begin systematic training as soon as the contest tournament has been completed, and some good records are anticipated. Harry Thompson has won the medal for two years, and intends to enter the meet this season. All the entries have not yet been received, but it is expected that the number will be larger than formerly as each of the classes have promised to compete for the class championship.

HARRY FULPER DEAD.

Former Well-Known Plainfielder Passes Away at Rochester, N. Y.

Harry Fulper, a former well known resident of this city, died last Friday at his home in Monroe, N. Y., after a long illness with tuberculosis. He was the son of W. G. Fulper, who was the head of the United Tea and Coffee Growers Association which had a store where Dr. Shaw's West Front street pharmacy now is. The young man was twenty-five years old and was very well known throughout the city. He attended the local schools and after the family's removal to Brooklyn, he visited here at frequent intervals.

The funeral services and interment took place at Monroe, Monday afternoon.

Edwin G. Moffett, of Pine Bush, Orange county, N. Y., is visiting his brother, Councilsman Charles D. Moffett, of East Fifth street.

HARMONY AT CONVENTION

The Republicans of Somerset County Name Ticket.

N. B. SMALLEY ABSENT

W. G. Debele and J. H. Cooley Selected as County Committeemen —Candidates for Coroner.

Senator Joseph Frelinghuysen and former State Senator Lewis A. Thompson were conspicuous figures at the Somerset County Republican convention yesterday which nominated former Assemblymen Edward P. Conger, of Franklin township, for sheriff and Irving Hoagland, of Franklin township for Assembly, as stated in yesterday's issue. Mayor Newton

Edward Cooper.

B. Smalley, former State Senator Charles A. Reed, former Mayor B. A. Hegeman, Peter Emmons and other North Plainfielders who are usually busy at such gatherings were not on hand and no letters of regret were received from them. Whether they will express sympathy for the nominees on election day is not known as yet.

For coroner, Dr. M. G. Smalley, of Gladstone, Dr. F. L. Field, of Liberty Corner and Dr. C. B. P. Fisher, of Round Brook, were named. There being two vacancies a vote was taken for two with the following result: Fisher, 39; Field, 27; Smalley, 2. Fisher and Field were accordingly declared the nominees of the convention.

David Hastings, A. W. Gibb and H. W. Bonsewig were appointed to escort the nominee and A. G. Anderson, Stephen Benning and Andrew Lutkins, the Assembly nominee, to the stage, and each made brief addresses.

Vacancies in the Republican County executive committee were filled as follows: Bedminster, Charles Wyckoff; Bridgewater, J. A. Mats, Jr., J. S. Frelinghuysen, Gen. Hope; Franklin, James H. Fisher, George Wolfe, Dilmon VanNostrand; Hillsborough, Walter French, J. F. Amerman; Millstone borough, P. V. D. VanDoren; Rocky Hill borough, Edwin S. Voorhees; North Plainfield borough, William G. Debele, J. H. Cooley.

The friends of Charles F. Behring, of North Plainfield township, who was "turned-down" as a candidate for the sheriffalty nomination, are outspoken today against the treatment they received and declare that they will have a reckoning for the same. In North Plainfield borough and township who were parties to the scheme. It is generally believed among North Plainfield Republicans that the ticket will suffer on election day as a result. One thing is taken for granted and that is that if the Democrats name a good ticket they will have excellent chances of winning again in Somerset county this fall.

Irving Hoagland, who was nominated for the Assembly at the Somerset County Republican convention held at Somerville, yesterday, is a resident of Franklin township. He is a nephew of the late Assemblyman Harry Hoagland, and is about thirty-five years old. He is a lawyer by profession. Two years ago he run for the Assembly on the Republican ticket and was defeated, together with the other Republican nominees. At present he is considered the strongest candidate the party could name.

Edward K. Cooper, who received the nomination for sheriff at the Somerset county Republican convention held at Somerville yesterday, is well-known throughout this section of the State. He was born on the Cooper homestead at North Stirling, Warren township, and has always lived there. He is the son of the late John Cooper. Like his father, Mr. Cooper has been a farmer. He received his education in the public school at North Stirling. In 1903, the Somerset county Republicans selected him to represent them on the lower branch of the Legislature. Two years, 1900 and 1902, he served as an Assemblyman. He was succeeded by S. S. Swackhamer. He is president of the Somerset County Agricultural Society and is identified with other organizations.

BOROUGH'S NEW STATION

Former Engine House Ready for Police Department.

A MODEL STRUCTURE

Splendid Arrangements for Court Proceedings and the Keeping of Prisoners.

Contractors have completed the extensive improvements to the former Warren Engine house, transforming it into headquarters for the borough police department and last evening, for the first it was thrown open to visitors. Many residents availed themselves of the opportunity to inspect it and as soon as it is formally accepted by the Common Council it will be taken possession of by the officials. It is one of the most complete station houses in this section of the State and in addition is the property of the municipality, a distinction not enjoyed on this side of the brook.

The first floor of the building is divided into two rooms, the first of which is to be used exclusively for the court proceedings. A small platform, surrounded by a railing has been placed at one end where the Recorder's desk will be situated and there are numerous tables and chairs nearby for lawyers and newspapermen. Another railing crosses the center of the room, back of which spectators will be seated. But thirty-six chairs are to be installed and according to Recorder Lloyd the number of adjustances to trials will be restricted to that limit. It is also his intention to enforce the rule prohibiting young men and curiosity seekers from crowding into the place.

Back of the court room is a separate compartment, the cells are located, four in number. They are of steel, with bunks and accommodations for two prisoners. The sanitary arrangements are complete in every respect. Entrance to the cell room is through a steel-grated doorway and the rear is guarded in the same manner.

The upper floor is also divided into two rooms. The rear part is mainly taken up with one large steel cell which will be used mostly for female prisoners in order to isolate them from the men. It will also prove advantageous to the department in keeping boys away from the ordinary run of prisoners and by separating groups prevent them from communicating with each other. To what use the other section will be put, has not yet been decided upon but it will probably be as a dormitory. It is proposed to have at least one day marshal, a single man, sleep there during the night in order that police assistance may be secured by telephone at any time, similar to the rule in force in the city department. In addition it may be used as a meeting room for the police committee, recorder and other officials. The lockers formerly used by the firemen are in place and will be fitted up for the policemen.

A tall glass front is now where the large main entrance doors were and the latter have been placed in the rear. Neat gold letters convey the information that the building is "Police Headquarters," and the usual green light is to be installed. The present illumination will be by electricity and the whole structure is in a thoroughly renovated condition, it being almost impossible to tell that it was formerly an engine house.

When the new building is occupied, the present station house and headquarters will either be torn down or altered into a dwelling. In keeping with the improvements, it is Recorder Dodd's intention to inaugurate a policy that will place his court on a par with any in the State and conduct it in the efficient manner that has been maintained since his entrance to office.

Colored Republicans' Dance.

The second annual dance of the Plainfield Fourth Ward Colored Republican Club will be held Thursday night, October 27, in T. A. E. Hall. There will be dancing from 8 o'clock in the evening until 5 o'clock the next morning and music will be furnished by Eugene O'Reilly's full orchestra. The committees in charge consists of James Babbitt, Charles Sheldon, George Reggies and Frank Nelson. Firman Sharp and W. H. Burns will be floor managers.

Plainfielders Get Big Game.

Robert Rushmore and Marion S. Ackerman have returned after an extensive through Newfoundland. They spent much of the time away in hunting and brought with them as evidence of their prowess five big caribou.

Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Comerford, of High Bridge, have been visiting their daughter here.

BALM FOR JILTED GIRL

Gets Verdict Against Baldwin for $7,125.

JURY OUT ONE HOUR

Amount One of the Largest for Breach of Promise Rendered by Middlesex Court in Years.

After remaining out but one hour, a jury in the Middlesex County Court at New Brunswick yesterday afternoon, returned with a verdict of $7,125 for Miss Bertha Gates in her damage suit for breach of promise against George Baldwin, of this city. The amount is one of the largest for a matter of this kind rendered in years and it occasioned great surprise. As yet the defendant has given no notice of appeal and he evidently will not as he has no property and his only alternative is to surrender his body.

The suit was brought by the young woman through her father, William Gates, of Hamilton street, New Brunswick, and Baldwin practically admitted her charges throughout. She declared that she had met him as a dance at Fords, near Perth Amboy, in May 1903, and that their friendship soon ripened into love. He proposed marriage, she says, and was accepted. He was received at her home as her future husband and she visited him frequently at his residance in this city. After the engagement had dragged along she asked that the wedding date be set but the young man always had some excuse for putting it off.

When action was first brought and the case was about to be heard, Baldwin offered to marry the girl but she refused to accept. It caused the court to adjourn proceedings, however, in order to give the parties time to consider but nothing was done. The taking of testimony was resumed Monday and concluded yesterday afternoon, Judge Reed presiding. In the summing up, the defense offered testimony attacking the character of the girl and also showing that she offered to marry her. The plaintiff rebutted this with facts showing that Baldwin at the time he made the offer to wed was attacking her character.

Baldwin is twenty-four years old and resides on West Front street. He is a buyer and seller of hay in connection with his brother, William O. Baldwin.

On application of Baldwin's counsel, Supreme Court Justice J. Franklin Fort this morning set the verdict aside as excessive. The date for a re-trial has not been set.

WILLIAM H. ROGERS WEDDED 25 YEARS AGO

FRIENDS SURPRISE COUPLE ON OCCASION OF ANNIVERSARY.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Rogers, of Central avenue, observed the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding Tuesday in an unexpected manner. For several days they had been visiting in Washington and they had been home but a short time last night, when a large number of their friends called on them. The host and hostess were completely surprised, not having the slightest intimation of the visitation.

A feature of the affair was that the guests each brought a photograph of himself or herself taken many years ago and "a study of these proved a happy form of amusement during the evening. The social features were not the least of those enjoyed, while refreshments were served before the guests departed. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers were the recipients of many presents of use and value.

Anniversary Service.

Dr. A. H. Lewis will speak on the subject "Individual Helpfulness" at the meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E. of Trinity Reformed church, Sunday evening. There will be special music and singing, the service marking the nineteenth anniversary of the society.

Horse Strays Away.

A bay horse belonging to Roth & Co., the bakers, strayed away from the pasture of John L. Darby at Alton, Sunday. Despite a diligent search it has not yet been found and the local police have been asked to aid in the hunt.

Oracle Published.

The first publication of the Plainfield High School Oracle will be out today. This is not the first edition issued by the present board of editors as they had charge of the paper the latter part of last year.

SEPT. HEALTH RECORD

Board Reports 32 Births and 12 Deaths During Month.

BUT SEVEN MARRIAGES

House-to-House Sanitary Inspection Finished for Year—Routine Business.

At present there are few cases of contagious disease in Plainfield, according to a report at the October meeting of the Board of Health, held yesterday afternoon. Dr. R. Vaud. Hodges, F. W. Dunn and Chester Dunham were the only members present and there was very little doing in the way of important business.

During the month of September there were two cases of measles and no deaths, eight cases of typhoid fever and one death, one case of scarlet fever and no deaths, seven cases of diphtheria and one death. There was one death from tuberculosis. Of the eight cases quarantined during the month, three were released, leaving five still under quarantine.

On September 1, the work of house-to-house inspection was brought to a close and during the month all the remaining notices were served.

The Board granted offal permits to Theodore Glaser and W. T. Baskin. E. B. Mipley was granted a permit to sell milk and Benjamin F. Brockman a permit to remove dead animals. The plumbing bonds of Andrew L. Ostrom, Louis Morel and Nicholas Ody were ordered filed.

During September there were reported seven marriages, thirty-two births and twelve deaths. Of the seven marriages, six were white and one colored. Twenty-five of the births were white and seven colored, twelve were male and twenty females. Of the twelve deaths, nine were white and three colored, three were male and nine female.

Of the twelve deaths one was under one month, two were between the ages of one and five years, two between the ages of five and twenty years, three were between the ages of twenty and forty years, two between the ages of forty and sixty years and two were over sixty years of age.

CONGREGATIONAL MEN'S CLUB ELECTS OFFICERS

WILLIAM D. WADSWORTH IS CHOSEN PRESIDENT OF ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting for election of officers of the Men's Club, of the Congregational church, was held last evening. The meeting was largely attended, and being the first since the club disbanded for the summer, was a very interesting one to all present.

The officers for the coming year were elected as follows: President, William D. Wadsworth; vice president, F. B. Mackelyre; secretary, J. A. Fowlkes; treasurer, Charles Steiner. In each case except the vice presidency, the old officers were re-elected. Alexander Miller, who was vice president last year, was obliged to decline the nomination on account of his health.

Following the election of officers, Stacy Reynolds and S. W. Dunning were appointed to the executive committee to take the places of those whose officers have expired. The other members of the executive committee are A. C. LaBoyteaux, Frank Weeks and Rev. C. L. Goodrich. A meeting of this committee will be held in a short time to arrange for the future meetings of the Men's Club, and to decide upon some form of entertainment. An effort will be made to increase the membership of the club during the next year, and all who attend will be welcomed and given a good time. At the conclusion of the business meeting, a social time was enjoyed.

Central's New Ferry.

According to the latest reports the New Jersey Central's new ferry from Communipaw to West Twenty-third street will be in operation January 1. The new ferryboss Wilkes-Barre, which is to ply between the two points, was delivered to the officials yesterday and the boat is now complete with one exception.

Rhine Thief Again.

Left by the owner in front of the Y. M. C. A. building yesterday afternoon, a wheel belonging to T. M. Day, Jr., of Carlton place, was stolen. It was of a Cleveland make, with new enamel bands and black frame. The theft was reported to the police and they are on the lookout.

WILL SUBJUGATE HERERO

Campaign Against Savages in German South Africa Entrusted to Gen. von Trotha.

Berlin (Germany) Special.

Lieut. Gen. von Trotha, commander of the Sixteenth infantry division of the German army, has just sailed for German South Africa to take charge of the campaign against the kaiser's rebellious subjects—the Hereros. These warlike natives, 50,000 strong, have provided the kaiser's crack army with the toughest military nut it has been called upon to crack since the war with France, and after six months of blundering by leaders of lower rank the emperor decided to send an officer from the general staff to the scene of action. Gen. von Trotha, who enjoys a fine reputation as an organizer and tactician, is taking with him reenforcements of 1,500 men and horses, and he will assume the active command of the colonial army late in June.

LIEUT. GEN. VON TROTHA.
(Commander of the Imperial German Troops in South Africa.)

The new commander-in-chief is 56 years old. From 1894 to 1897 he commanded the kaiser's colonial forces in East Africa, and in 1900 he accompanied Count von Waldersee to China with the rank of major general.

Problems that will tax Gen. von Trotha's abilities to the fullest await him in West Africa. The Hereros have proved a crafty and stubborn foe. In the serious engagements that have so far taken place they have succeeded in defeating the kaiser's troops signally. Their resistance has, indeed, become so stanch that the Germans have practically declared a truce, pending the arrival of reenforcements from home. Armed with the Mauser rifles and ammunition supplied to them by German settlers in peaceful days, the Hereros have shown that they are strategists as well. On two occasions they have decisively outwitted their crack antagonists, killing and wounding more than 100 officers and men. There is considerable mystery about the result of one fight, and the wherewithouts of a machine gun, with which the natives are believed to have got away. The Hereros, like the Boers, are all mounted, understand the art of fighting behind cover, and seem to have mapped out a comprehensive guerrilla campaign.

NEW WOMAN'S CLUB HOUSE

It Will Be Located in Chicago and Become a Center of Cosmopolitan Activity.

Chicago Special.

Although one of the youngest organizations of its kind in the city, the West End Woman's Club has the distinction of being the first in Chicago to erect a building for its own use. The club has recently broken ground for the construction of a beautiful home to be erected on the northeast corner of Ashland boulevard and West Monroe street, 47x153 feet. The building will be of three floors, in old colonial style, with red bricks laid in black mortar with trimmings of white stone and green blinds. The basement floor will contain steward's apartments, a gentlemen's lounging room, a dining room with a seating capacity of 400, and kitchen and check rooms. The first floor will contain a large assembly room with seating capacity for 500. At the end of the room will be a stage, perfect in acoustics. There will also be a reception room, office, large parlor, check room and service rooms on this floor. The second floor has four large committee rooms, as well as a large service room. The interior is to be in the colonial finish and woodwork in white enamel.

The membership of the club is over 300 and the work includes philanthropic, educational and municipal study. The club has at present over $10,000 in the treasury and it is expected that the full amount will be raised before the completion of the building.

PHYSICAL CULTURE TO WARD OFF DEADLY DISEASE.

Children's Athletic Club of Philadelphia Fights Ravages of Tuberculosis by Rational Gymnastic Training.

Philadelphia (Pa.) Special.

An athletic club, which fixes its dues at the extortionate figure of one cent a week, suggests an unusual departure in the world of clubs. Moreover, for many other reasons, the Children's Athletic club of Philadelphia, composed entirely of the children of the poor, organized to fight by physical training the ravages of tuberculosis, marks an important innovation in the charitable work of that city. Mrs. Florence L. Williams, the founder ago from Buda-Pesth. A man named G— had been sentenced to a year's imprisonment, and a pretty girl, Etelka S—, who had known the prisoner for some years, vowed that she would commit suicide forthwith if she were not allowed to marry him. In vain her father tried to dissuade her from her project. All his pleading was useless; and at last, through his lawyer, he made representations to the minister of justice to the effect that his daughter's mind would give way unless her wish were granted.

As the result of this request, the convict was granted an hour's freedom, and, with a warder for best man and an escort of police, the marriage took place. As soon as the ceremony was over, however, the bridegroom was marched back to prison again, his wife bidding him an affectionate good-by at the door of the jail.

A week or so later Weggenstein, near Geneva, was the scene of a similar unconventional wedding. The bridegroom had been sentenced to two years' hard labor for burglary; but when sentence was passed he begged permission to marry before going to the central prison. On the wedding morning the convict in handcuffs was escorted to the office of the magistrate, where the civil ceremony was performed, with a couple of uniformed warders as witnesses. After the ceremony the wedding party, warders and all, adjourned to the house of the newly-wedded pair, where a sumptuous breakfast awaited them.

More romantic was the recent union of a French convict to the daughter of a Brazilian nobleman. So attached was the young lady to her lover that, in order to be near him, she spent the weeks between his arrest and sentence as a domestic servant. When at last he was sentenced to transportation to Cayenne, she obtained permission to marry him, so that in time she may join him as his wife in the penal colony.

On the wedding morning the bridegroom from the central prison at Bloun, in Auvergne, to the town hall, with his bride and four warders, in a carriage and pair. The bride was soberly attired in black, and carried a bunch of violets. The ceremony was performed by the deputy-mayor, with a few local officials and municipal councilors as spectators, and at its conclusion the strange wedding party drove back to the prison. The bride had provided some dainties and a small wedding-cake for the occasion, but the governor of the prison was obdurate, and the utmost concession he would make was to allow the bridegroom to eat a slice of the cake. The bride at once returned to domestic service.

But the continent has no monopoly of prison marriages, as was proved a short time ago in Scotland. A plowman was arrested within half an hour of the time fixed for his wedding, on a charge of theft, of which, it is only just to say, he denied all knowledge. On learning the news the unhappy bride was distracted with grief, and called at the police office to beg that the marriage ceremony might be performed in one of the cells. The request was refused; but during the afternoon the prisoner was liberated on bail, and the couple immediately proceeded to the manse, where the marriage knot was tied.

An interesting case of proposal in prison was reported from Paris on the first day of this year. A young Parisian dressmaker, who had been abandoned by her lover under cruel circumstances, was charged with throwing vitriol at him. The circumstances of the case aroused wide sympathy, and led to an immediate offer of marriage.

The offer was accepted; but the marriage thus strangely brought about cannot take place until the young dressmaker has served her sentence of 12 months' imprisonment.

MENACED BY RUSSIA.

WHAT WAR IN FAR EAST MEANS TO SCANDINAVIA.

Sweden and Norway Must Be Prepared for Muscovite Invasion—Some Kind Words for the Brave Japs.

Stockholm (Sweden) Special.

No matter how the present Russo-Japanese war may end, the Scandinavian countries must be prepared for all possible eventualities. This is the editorial counsel of Varia, the illustrated monthly of Stockholm. Swedes and Norwegians have been much exercised over the oppression of Finland. Says the Varia, in commenting on the increase in the term of military service in Sweden:

"Knowing only too well the unappeasable land-hunger of the Muscovite, the Swedish government has arranged for extensive mobilization, in order to assure the readiness of the army. One of the most important points, from a strategic view, is occupied by the island of Gothland, situated in the midst of the Baltic, rightly known as 'the eye of the Baltic.' This island is now heavily fortified and garrisoned. Sweden must take still further measures to insure her safety, says this magazine, which is pleased that the harbors of Stockholm and other Swedish cities have been mined and garrisoned.

"The Scandinavian press in general fears to give utterance to any convictions that might incur the hostility of Russia, but the Varia, in a rather unusual article, speaks out boldly about the war in the far east. The interests and sympathies of the European nations, it says, are more evenly divided than the rest of the world imagines.

"Those powers that desire the advance of culture, liberty and progress, as England (and America), sympathize with Japan, while those nations that stand for militarism, despotism and the repression of the rights and privileges of the masses—that is to say, the powers that still oppress and hinder the progress of liberty and enlightenment in the nations of Europe—are hoping for the success of Russia."

In the latter class, says the Varia, stands Prussia, whose "old-time friendship for Russia is not diverted, notwithstanding the latter's alliance with France." It continues: "Did not the German emperor send the autocrat of all the Russias a helmet as a token of encouragement, while his government shows an admirable partisan zeal in preventing the escape of Russian subjects from the rigors of deportation to Siberia or other hopeless confinement in Russian prisons?" Japan's success has been a most disagreeable surprise to Europe, the Swedish magazine declares.

"We have been long accustomed to regard foreign peoples with a sense of distinct superiority, and the easy victories that have been won over Asiatic races, such as the Chinese, have not served to lessen our contempt for their military qualities. We are contemplating a development of which no European dreamed. . . .

"What the present emperor of Japan, Mutsuhito, together with his counselors, has performed seems almost to surpass everything that one has been accustomed to admire in the greatest rulers and statesmen of the world. It serves to elevate him immeasurably above rulers of the stamp of Czar Peter I., surnamed the Great, who could not, with all his tyranny, elevate his people above that half-barbaric state in which it still remains even to this day."

Whether Japan wins or not, says this magazine, she has demonstrated her right to be classed as a world-power. "If, by the shortsightedness of the European powers, Japan should once more be robbed of the material fruits of her victory, her energetic and progressive people will, in any event have established their position and right to occupy a prominent place among civilized nations."

Jersey Heifer Went Fishing.

Peter Sutphen, a farmer living between New Brunswick, N. J., and Middlebush, lost a heifer which had learned to stand in a brook and snap up the little fish which approached. He asked the police to help him find the heifer. They suggested that he look along the river, as she might have gone fishing. A few hours later Sutphen telephoned the police, thanking them for their suggestion and stating that he had found his pet knee deep in the Raritan river hunting for fish.

Another Criminal Is Led to the Altar in Handcuffs—Nobleman's Young Daughter Becomes Wife of Convict.

Whether or not 1904 has brought much comfort to the leap-year young lady, it has certainly produced quite an epidemic of convict-weddings—indeed since the year dawned it has been scarcely possible to take up a continental paper without reading of some dramatic pilgrimage from the prison to the altar and of the progress of the bridegroom, after a too brief honeymoon, back to jail.

A typical case was reported a few weeks ago from Buda-Pesth. A man

TWO DOLLARS PER HOUR.

SUES GIRL'S FATHER.

UNIQUE DAMAGE CASE FILED IN MONTREAL COURT.

Rejected Lover Wants $2,325.40 from Chosen Father-in-Law for Breach of Promise—Charges for Courting.

From Montreal, Canada, a correspondent writes of the New York World of a unique law suit. It does not often happen, he says, that a man is called upon to sue for breach of promise to marriage the man he once hoped to make his father-in-law. Yet that is what the action taken in the superior court by Jerome Intersnoscia, advocate, of Montreal, against Vincent Bonelli, of Vicksburg, Miss., amounts to.

Mr. Internoscia is not repining. Although he is not to marry the young woman who occupied his time and thoughts for two years, he will nevertheless take a wife on August 22. Indeed, Mr. Internoscia says that the young lady whom he now hopes to make his wife was highly incensed when his former matrimonial intentions became public property, but Mr. Internoscia, having weathered that storm, will now prosecute the action to the end.

"I am first called upon to educate other people's children," says Mr. Internoscia, and I want to recover from her father the amount of money I spent upon Miss Bonelli."

That amount Mr. Internoscia sets at *$2,325.40. Discussing the case, Mr. Inter*noscia observed that it might look foolish for him to sue for the odd cents, but he expects to be asked for a bill of particulars. It was necessary for him to put down all the items he could remember. Notwithstanding a good memory, Mr. Internoscia is of the opinion that he stands to lose money, even if he wins his case.

In Mr. Internoscia's account there are many minor items, but the main one, aside from the months spent upon tuition, is thus stated: "The sixth part of the account gives the amount of time which the plaintiff can prove he has spent for the defendant's daughter, and for such time, taking into consideration the plaintiff's position as a professional man, two dollars per hour is the least that can be charged, and plaintiff's time is worth two dollars per hour when charged as in the case in question."

Mr. Bonelli, the defendant has been a resident of Vicksburg, Miss., for 25 years, where it is said he has accumulated much wealth. The summer season the family was sent to spend at St. Agath, a fashionable resort near Montreal. It was here that Mr. Internoscia first met Miss Annie Bonelli, on July 18, 1902. Three days later Mr. Internoscia returned to Montreal and his third letter having been answered by the young woman he promptly proposed matrimony.

Evidently Mr. Internoscia is a very methodical man in his love affairs, for his statement of the case contains extracts not alone from the letters which Miss Bonelli wrote to him, but also from those which he wrote to Miss Bonelli. Miss Bonelli, it would appear, did not think—this in response to his offer of marriage—that her love was as great for him as his love for her, "but I am very grateful," she adds, "for the great love you show me, and trust that I will be able to return love as great."

Mr. Internoscia did not rest upon that as discouraging. He continued to press his suit with such good results that on August 22, 1902, he became formally betrothed. At that time it was understood that the marriage would take place in July, 1904.

Having become, as he thought, satisfactorily engaged, Mr. Internoscia says that he did not think any more of looking for some suitable lady who would marry him shortly, as plaintiff would have wished, but kept himself away from society, deeming himself engaged, and continued to spend his time and his money for defendant's daughter, as he felt practically bound to do it, in view of all that had happened."

The breaking up of the engagement, Mr. Internoscia asserts, was due to religion. Miss Bonelli was, like her father, an Anglican. Mr. Internoscia was a Presbyterian. But Mr. Internoscia, such action, Mr. Bonelli's wife asserted that he was perfectly willing his wife should entertain whatever religious opinions she chose. The whole fault of the final disruption, which took place last January, he blames on Mr. Bonelli's "overbearing and stubbornness" and asserts that "the plaintiff has a legal claim to recover from defendant all damages which the former suffered through the fault of defendant's minor child as well as through defendant's own fault."

WAS A DAISY INDEED.

METEORIC CAREER OF KENTUCKY GIRL IN OKLAHOMA.

Gained Fame by Leaping from Cowcatcher and Hanging Her Skirt on a Bush, Thus Staking Her Claim.

An advertisement for the sale of a valuable lot by the administrator of the estate of Nancette Pellegrini means to those who are in possession of the fact that it is the closing chapter in the story of the most spectacular woman who has ever called Oklahoma home. She is dead now, and, strange to say, there are no distant relatives fighting over the wealth she left behind. A few there have been who have laid claim to the lands she owned, but when traced to the end their claims have proved false, or, at least, shadowy.

Miss Nancette Daisy, her name before her marriage, was a Kentuckian and a beautiful woman. It is hinted that prior to going to Oklahoma she was assistant state librarian in Kentucky, but little more than this her antecedents are little known. But she was a good "mixer" and a "wire puller" and showed other evidences of making her way in the politics of the state which claimed her birth.

The Chicago Inter Ocean says that it was on April 22, 1893, that she first came into prominence. It was that date old Oklahoma, as it is now designated, was first opened for settlement. Miss Daisy contrived to make friends with the engineer of the first train which went into Oklahoma from the south. From a point near the state's border she boarded the train, taking a station on the cowcatcher of the engine. When the train reached a point a few miles north of where Britton, Okla., and south of Guthrie, Okla., are now located, she gave the preconcerted signal to the engineer, who slowed the train while she leaped to the ground and hung on a convenient bush her petticoat, which she had inscribed with the legend: "This is my claim." Being a woman of considerable breeding and education, she naturally fell in with the better element and numbered among her friends the newspaper men and the politicians of the day. None of them, however, were better "wire pullers" or lobbyists than she, and the first few legislatures bear ample testimony to this fact. She was soon dubbed "Kentucky Daisy," and to the majority of the people of Oklahoma she so remained until, like her namesake, she faded from the life of the territory.

This fading process was a long way off, however. She had a facile pen, and while in Guthrie was correspondent for big dailies in St. Louis, New York, Chicago, Dallas and Cincinnati, and was occupied part of the time in doing local work for Guthrie papers.

A few years later this spunky and beautiful Kentucky girl was again a conspicuous figure in the public eye when she made the run with the thousands of others at the opening of the Sac and Fox reservation. Astride a strong white horse she was well in the lead and stood a good chance to once more win a claim, but the horse suddenly stumbled and she was thrown violently to the ground. It was thought she had been killed and was so telegraphed all over the country, but instead she was merely stunned, and upon regaining her senses laid claim to the ground upon which she had fallen.

This became a part of the town site of Chandler and is the lot which is now being advertised for sale.

Although she had had during her career many tempting offers of marriage, it was her fate to fall in love with a young and handsome Swedish soldier, member of a troop of cavalry maintained in Oklahoma by the government. This young fellow was some ten years her junior, but despite this they were married, and, while he remained in the army, she continued her work in public life. By this time, however, Mrs. Svegeburg, her husband's Christian name, was not so young and fresh as in the first days of Oklahoma, and for this and other reasons the Swedish soldier commenced to view his marriage as anything but tasteful. He was suddenly transferred to Chicago, and, although his wife remained in Oklahoma for some time, her love for her husband was strong, and at length yielding, she followed him there.

Upon her arrival she discovered he had secured a divorce from her and remarried. She never returned to Oklahoma, and was heard of no more until her death, which occurred last autumn. At that time a Chicago attorney went to Oklahoma and told of the pitiful death of the one time well-known woman.

EARL GREY IS APPOINTED.

Famous Nobleman Will Succeed Lord Minto as Governor General of the Dominion.

London (Eng.) Special.

It is announced that Earl Grey, lord lieutenant of Northumberland, has been appointed to succeed Lord Minto as governor general of Canada. Earl Grey is a brother-in-law of Lord Minto. The latter's term does not expire until October, so the official announcement of Earl Grey's appointment will not be made for some time.

Earl Grey was once the government's commissioner and delegate to administer the vast territories of the South African Chartered company in conjunction with Cecil Rhodes. He was one of the founders of that company. He was a godson of Queen Victoria's prince consort and a favorite at court in her reign. When King Edward as prince of Wales visited America Earl Grey was the chief of his suite.

The earl is a handsome man under 50 and was known as Albert Grey until he succeeded to the peerage of his crotchety old grandmother.

The old earl was the most cross-minded man that it is possible to conceive, and like all of his children of his own, his country seat of Howick hall was always filled with members of his numerous family of brothers and sisters, their children and grandchildren. A peculiarity about them, for which they are still distinguished, is their strange custom of calling one another by their Christian names, even the very great-children addressing their grandfathers and grandmothers as Cherie or Mary.

Howick hall, now in the possession of the present Earl Grey, is one of the stateliest mansions in Northumberland and lies near the coast, surrounded by wooded estates of nearly 20,000 acres. Lord Grey's town residence is at Dorchester house, that magnificent palace facing the entrance of Hyde Park, in Park lane, a mansion which he owns in common with his brother-in-law, Capt. Holford. The two brothers-in-law inherited it from old Mr. Holford, who died a few years ago, leaving a fortune of $30,000,000.

The Earl and Countess Grey must not be confused with Earl and Countess De Grey, who are entirely different people, being the son and daughter-in-law of the marquis of Ripon, who was special ambassador to the United States in connection with the Alabama controversy.

TEXAN CHATELAINE CHARM.

It Is a Revolver, Made of Gold, But with All the Qualities of a Real Shooting Iron.

New York Special.

To take home with him as a souvenir of New York, a Texas man recently found nothing so attractive in the whole metropolis as a revolver, which he purchased at a jeweler's and for which he paid $50. It might seem to be taking coals to Newcastle to take a revolver to the big southern state, but the Texan said that the best woman-shot in his part of the country had never seen a revolver like this. It was a tiny one, barely two inches long, made entirely of gold, but with all the qualities of a regular shooting iron. It carries cartridges no bigger than a pea, and it makes a decided pop and genuine flash of flame when it is fired. It is a novelty from Paris, and is put up in dainty little leather covered velvet-lined cases, like any other article of jewelery. It is, of course, worse than ornament, and its possibilities are many. Mounted as a hatpin, a tiny chain attached to the trigger is pulled to set it off and suggest further hostilities to the ubiquitous mosquito; or, dangling from a chatelaine, it is used to intimidate the guilty man who buries his face in the paper while the pretty woman before him hangs to a strap in the street car. The uses of the tiny pistol are infinite, and the man from Texas says that there will be new ones discovered when he gets home.

AT THE PHOTOGRAPHER'S.

Valuable Hints For the Person Who Wishes a Good Picture.

Almost miraculous in their startling effects are the proofs you so fondly waited for, and, alas, instead of being a beauty, as you dreamed, you are of—nore than not a sight.

It is a funny thing, but often Madam Venus comes out as homely as sin, while Miss Ugly Face displays charms of countenance you never suspected.

Part of this is due to the fact that Miss Ugly Face knows the bitter truth about herself and watches out, while Madam Venus plants herself any old way before the camera.

Then, too, there is the question of features. Have you ever realized how much you can help the photographer by improving them? Lack of eyebrows is the most usual blemish in an otherwise good looking photograph. The strong light in which the sitter is placed tends to make a natural growth appear too scanty, and the most experienced women always darken their eyebrows with a grease pencil or even the ordinary one. If your lashes are too light you can darken them, too, and this is done by a bit of theatrical makeup. Take a small tin dish, hold it over a spirit lamp and melt in it one-fourth of a stick of eyelash cosmetic; then dip a camel's hair brush in this and pass it lightly over your eyelashes while it is still hot and liquid. It is a great improvement also for those whose lashes are too thin.

If you have thick lips wonders can be accomplished with a stick of grease paint No. 1, flesh color. Using this, you can mark out considerably more than a line of the objectionable red of the lip, and the remainder can be given distinctness with a touch of pink salve. With this same means moles will disappear in the photograph and scars become beautifully less.

Of course if you have a thin neck that need not prevent you from being taken decollete, for the photographer will "remove the bones." A low necked gown is one of the best for a photograph because it does not present idiosyncrasies of fashion which are apt to go out of style.

And don't look pleasant unless you feel like it. Be natural.

with white pillars supporting the balcony on either side. The general tone of the room is green and oak, and this is heightened by the graceful palms in green jardinieres. GOWNS FOR AUTUMN.

Princess and Directoire Styles Are Predicted for Elaborated Gowns.

Princess gowns are to be worn again to a large extent. They will take the form of the genuine old fashioned princess dress, which has been modified of late out of all recognition.

Many of the new princess styles will be fashioned in two distinct pieces contrived in such a manner that the division is not visible.

A charming princess dinner dress is carried out in point de venise mounted on pale pink mousseline de soie. The decolletage is draped with white tulle and adorned with festoons of pearls. The sleeves, which open to reveal the shoulders and upper parts of the arm, are held by bretelles of pearls.

Directoire styles are to have great vogue this season, and when all the characteristics of this mode are not employed in a single frock there will be little hints of the directoire in most of the up to date costumes.

The picture is of a dainty little costume of cream colored voile with modified touches of the directoire style to be seen about the cape collar revers and cuffs of black taffeta. The cuffs have smart little frills of narrow lace edging, which shows up very prettily over the wrinkled undersleeve of mousseline de soie held at the wrist with velvet ribbon. The girdle is of the black taffeta and fastens with a long, narrow gilt buckle.

FASHION'S TREND.

Crosses as Pendants—Much Jewelry Is Now Worn.

A great deal of jewelry is being worn, and even the fastidious woman is not averse to wearing the mock gems in artistic and eccentric designs which a few years ago she would have considered bad form.

Garnets are again fashionable, and an old bracelet of these pretty red stones, a real heirloom, is an object to be cherished and worn.

Crosses of all kinds will be seen dangling from my lady's little neck chain of this linked gold. The mosaic cross set in dull Roman gold is a revived novelty, as is also the golden snare with ruby eyes worn around the throat.

A pretty stone that is coming into vogue and harmonizes well with the reddish tints to be seen in so many of the fall fabrics is the Mexican opal. It is not expensive and quite repays in beauty of coloring for an elaborate setting. Mexican opals linked with antique gold make a charming bracelet. Hatpins in this tone are exquisite for the keeping in position of hats trimmed with orange and red.

Women who possess old lace should always wear it, but it is too costly for the multitude, who need not, however, despair, for there are such admirable imitations, which demand a connoisseur to distinguish them from the original. The transparent lace trimmed dresses are very fascinating, and so are the downed volles and delaines, which only need lace for the yokes, but they all have to be made up over silk foundations.

The hat pictured is of light brown beaver, the high dented crown encircled with a roll of orange velvet. At the very much raised side are bunched of brown ostrich feathers and an orange aigret.

WINTER COLOR SCHEME.

The Smart Autumn Petticoat—A Suggestion In Economy.

The colors to be most in vogue during the coming winter are what might be called indefinite tints, although the new colors are a little more pronounced in tone than the pastel shades. The fact is that strong definite colors wear themselves out too quickly by their fastidence, whereas these softer shades compensate in virtue by trying the eye less.

For the woman who is obliged to study economy and has to make one frock do the duty of several a dress of inconspicuous indefinite color is a boon.

Black, brown and champagne colored silk petticoats are to be very fashionable this year. With the autumn tailored suits the brown and champagne skirts are quite a feature. The changeable petticoat is fashioned with two wide pinked out frills headed by rows of graduated brown velvet ribbon.

The woman who is going to invest in two tailor made costumes this fall should select one of the gowns in blue or green cloth and the other in white.

Pastel blue liberty silk fashions the dainty theater blouse herewith pictured. It is oddly made with the waist gathered around an emplecement of the silk adorned at intervals with groups of small gold buttons. These buttons also trim the center plait, which stops a little above the bust line. The puffed sleeves terminate in ruffles of lace.

MODES IN SLEEVES.

What the Fashionable Woman Will Wear on Her Arms.

Sleeves will receive an unusual amount of attention in the winter modes and will form the most important portion of the season's bodice. Styles are so varied that it is not necessary to have any two sleeved alike, no matter how many gowns are included in the wardrobe. Very few plain sleeves are seen, even the bishop's models being tucked at the top to form fitted caps and around the arm near the cuff to increase the apparent size at that point.

Sleeves made in two or three sections are not uncommon. They have fitted caps, from which depend deep flounces or ruffles of material. These flare out widely over an undersleeve of lace or tucking.

Some of the new sleeves have flounces gathered into a band that reach to a point half way between elbow and wrist, giving the impression of a three sectioned sleeve.

Accordion plaited sleeves are a new mode somewhat on the order of the popular "angel" variety. These are slashed from shoulder to hem on top and fall loosely to each side, displaying a closely fitted undersleeve of net or lace.

The attractive frock illustrated is of tan mousseline silk. The long, graceful skirt is elaborately trimmed at the bottom with a tan silk spotted with rings of a darker shade between other bands of brown velvet and cream lace insertion. The full blouse front and puffed sleeves of the bodice are of the spotted ring silk. The sleeves are banded with velvet, and about the upper part of the waist are fitted emplecements of the same material between insertions of lace. The high folded girdle is also of the velvet. Three graduated tabs of lace ornament each side of the blonsed front.

Girls Who Do Things

And Girls Who Would Like to Do Things

THERE is more harm accomplished by leaving things undone than by doing things, and if this bit of philosophy were more appreciated by those who are always afraid to step out it would be well for the progress of the world.

There are two kinds of people in this world—the people who do things and the people who spend their time thinking about them. I have no patience with the girl or woman who says, "I have such a small income I wish some one would tell me how to make some money," or "I'd like to have some of my writing accepted by a newspaper if I only knew how to get at the editor."

The girl who will say that sort of thing is never the girl who does things. Indeed, she will spend her life speculating and thinking about them.

People can help you some, but they can't actually do the thing for you, and it's my experience that the actual help counts for very little. It is your part which means everything. There isn't a girl, if she really is in earnest about wanting to earn money, who can't find some way of doing it if she tries, and if a young woman writes acceptable stuff she won't have any difficulty in getting a hearing with any editor. She won't need any private copyrighted ways of getting "at" or "around" him.

I have in mind a girl who came to New York to study and better her condition. She had a voice of fair promise. She spent a winter having it cultivated, and then in the spring she was forced to go home because her parents declined to furnish any more money for lessons. She wept piteously. "My whole life is ruined!" she sobbed. "In another year I could have done something with my voice!"

"Do you mean to say you are actually going back to the country to live there all the rest of your days because you haven't the gumption to raise a few dollars?" a practical friend asked her.

"Why, what can I do?" murmured the weeping one.

"Do? Why, anything honest that would bring you the money and give you time for your lessons! You could even get a position in some musical comedy company as a chorus girl. Those comedies run a long time in town, and when it was about to go on the road you could try for another. It isn't hard for a good looking girl to get a position, and that means $15 per week—enough to pay for your lessons at professional rates. Or you could enter an office and study in the evening. I would even go out as a servant girl and use the wages and the $10 your people allow you for board in taking evening lessons, and I certainly wouldn't give up until I had gone to every church in town and found out whether or not a voice as good as mine, even though uncultivated, was not needed in its choir."

But the future Patti simply went home. She could do things if the money and the letter of introduction were placed at her elbow; otherwise it was too hard.

"How do you have the courage to move around so on the stage? I stay just in the spot where the stage manager puts me. You might as well spare yourself the trouble; no one in the audience notices us, and he may speak to you for doing something you ought not to," said one "extra lady" to the other.

"If I do something I shouldn't, I want him to tell me," retorted the ambitious one. "And I can stand that a great deal better than being planted in one spot, like a tree or a potato, in a scene that calls for action."

The result was that the girl who tried to do things was noticed and given a line to speak, while she who remained planted in one spot for fear of doing anything else is still in just about that same spot, as far as her profession is concerned.

And so it is in everything. It's the girl who takes the initiative, the girl who does things, who gets there.

MAUD ROBINSON.

MODES FOR RAINY DAYS.

Military Touches on Rain Coats, Some Leather Trimmings.

The smart woman always contrives to look her best on a rainy day, and the nattiness of her toilet is a pleasure to behold and a comfort at the same time to the wearer.

A mackintosh is no longer a thing of ugliness, and any woman who will part with a few dollars has a chance of looking as smart on a rainy day as on the day when the weather smiles.

The military influence has crept into the trimming of the rain coat, and this strictly waterproof cloth garment is now adorned with epaulets braided in military fashion and trimmed with gilt buttons, and in some instances the coat is fastened with frogs made of a wash braid.

Leather plays a part on the new mackintosh and is to be seen sporting itself as collar, cuffs and belt on some of the most stunning wraps.

Evening frocks are reminiscent of the days of Marie Antoinette, and tulle is the fabric most liked for a young girl's ball gown. The bodices are pointed, and there is a decided change in the cut of the decolletage. The round neck is out, and in its place comes the V or square shape.

A new pair of sleeves will bring an old gown into line with the newest ideas just now. The mousquetaire sleeve made by shirring up the inside seam is a novelty that will appeal directly to the home dressmaker. Sleeves are even being made of a contrasting material, and velvet sleeves in a cloth gown are considered very smart.

Dainty ivory cloth gowns show a waistcoat of ivory braid, silver thread and a touch of pale blue.

The smart new rain coat illustrated is in tweed of a pretty pale gray piped with green suede. A feature of the coat is the adjustable double cape, which, when removed, reveals a perfectly modeled raglan sleeve.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

THE SHAPES IN HATS.

Most Chapeaux Are Large—The New Fashion In Veils.

Large hats are certainly to the fore for all occasions. They are worn very much uplifted at the sides—after the fashion of the Gainsborough and Reynolds hats—and low over the forehead.

Among the new fall shapes are to be found the cavaliers. These large and picturesque hats have straight brims and high crowns and are tilted on the head at a decided angle. Some cavalier hats dip down over the face, and others flare back in a saucy fashion. This shape may be turned up at one side or both, or not at all, according to the fancy of the wearer.

For trimming the cavalier hat plumes are mostly used, and on evening hats white feathers are the thing. On models of a paler color black and white tips are attractively bunched.

The fashion of wearing veils draped over the brims of hats is fast disappearing, and the prettier style of arranging the veil either over the face or completely veil is more becoming. The long ends of the veil are brought loosely around the throat and tied in a careless bow or pinned to one shoulder.

The charming cavalier hat illustrated is an evening creation in soft white felt adorned with two white ostrich feathers, one curling over the brim and one encircling the crown.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

HE HAD DONE SOMETHING.

Not What His Father Wanted Him to Do, But It Suited Mother All Right.

As the son of the house went out of the front door in festal raiment and swinging a stick with a satisfied air the father of the family growled savagely and turned his paper with an impatient movement. "There is some satisfaction in raising chickens," he said, gruffly. "If it's a hen it lays eggs and if it isn't it makes a fair substitute for an alarm clock—or a broiler."

"What do you mean?" inquired the elderly lady occupied with the stocking basket, relates the Chicago Daily News.

"I mean Clyde isn't ever going to arouse a slumbering world. I wish I could wake him up and make him do something."

"Why, he goes down to the office every day, and I'm sure nobody could want a steadier boy. If he does go out in the evening he tells me where he goes."

"Oh, yes. I know all that. And he'll be home before half-past ten o'clock. He's never even asked for a latchkey. Why doesn't he do something?"

"Do what?"

"Oh, anything. There are boys that haven't had half his advantages pushing themselves right to the front. He goes plodding along, plodding along, just in the same old rut all the time. His hasn't any initiative—any force. He doesn't do things."

"You're too severe with him, father," said the elderly lady. "You ought to be thankful that he doesn't. I read the other day about a young man robbing a bank. Clyde might do that, but he doesn't. I don't suppose you'd like it if he went out murdering people. He might do that, but he doesn't. He might set fire to a house, but he doesn't, and he might do all sorts of wild and dissipated things. I'm grateful, the more I see of other young men, for the things that Clyde doesn't do."

"Well," said the father of the family in a softened tone, "I suppose negative virtues are better than active and positive vices, but, all the same, I wish he would do something."

"He has," asserted the mother, rather indignantly. "He dug up and raked the whole of the flower bed along the fence for me before dinner."

EUROPEAN FARM PROGRESS.

Modern Methods Have Been Adopted by Agriculturists of Various Countries.

British experts who have been trying to discover what is the matter with the English farmer assign as one of the causes of his having fallen behind his brethren in other European countries that he has not followed their example of cooperation with his neighbors, says Youth's Companion.

In Denmark, France, Holland, Germany and Belgium, within 25 years, the farmers have adopted modern methods of doing business, and by so doing have raised agriculture from a low estate and made it profitable. In France, for instance, in 1880, a professor of agriculture, convinced that if farmers could be persuaded to buy artificial fertilizers their lands would be made much more productive, succeeded in inducing a group of farmers to club together and send a large order to the manufacturers. The whole price and a low freight rate brought the fertilizer within their means.

From this small beginning "agricultural syndicates" have grown until they contain nearly 500,000 farmers, who purchase every year fertilizers, seeds and machinery worth $20,000,000.

Combinations for selling their produce have not yet succeeded in France, but in Denmark, Holland, Belgium and Germany the farmers have united to raise produce of uniform quality and for securing favorable markets for what they raise. The market-gardeners in Holland have cooperative societies which inspect the goods, reject those not up to the standard, and label with a registered trade-mark those that are passed. In this way they have established a reputation for their product.

The Danish butter-makers and chicken-raisers have adopted a similar plan, and their produce has risen materially in price in the London market since it has been forwarded in uniform packages and of uniform quality. Cooperation in Belgium, both in purchase and sale, has resulted, according to one authority, in increasing the return of each 25-acre farm by $500 a year.

The National Farmers' exchange, recently incorporated in South Dakota, is evidently not the first "farmers' trust," nor will it be the last.

Chinese Burial Customs.

When a rich and important Chinaman dies, his funeral is conducted with much pomp and splendor. His friends and relations, instead of sending wreaths, send innumerable banners. These are made of white silk, with inscriptions beautifully worked in black velvet, and express the senders' good wishes to the deceased himself or to the members of his family for many generations. On the day of the funeral these banners are carried by hired men, who are all dressed alike for the occasion. After the funeral, which lasts for several hours at the cemetery, is over, the banners are all brought back, and eventually grace the rooms of the late Chinaman's house.

Wounds Dressed with Burnt Straw.

At a cost of one shilling Japanese doctors can dress the wounds of 500 men. They use a finely-powdered charcoal obtained by the slow combustion of straw in closed furnaces. Sachets filled with it are applied to the wounds, and its antiseptic and absorbent qualities generally effect a rapid cure.

CZAR'S THRONE IN DANGER.

Russian Military Circles Said to Favor Grand Duke Vladimir for Regent of Empire.

Odessa (Russia) Special.

There is a persistent rumor here that a conspiracy is afoot in military circles to dethrone the czar and make his popular uncle, Vladimir Alexandrovitch, regent. The purpose of this rumor is closely similar to that which caused so much disquiet immediately after the demise of Alexander III. At that time it became an open secret that there was a court conspiracy for making the grand duke regent, the reason to be assigned therefor being the unfixed character of the present monarch.

The prompt action of the late Gen. Count Mussin-Pushkin prevented the succession of Vladimir Alexandrovitch. If the current reports be well founded a similar coup d'etat has quite recently been nipped in its hatchment. The depressed and nervous condition of the czar which has lately given such deep concern to his majesty's medical attendants, the confusion and dismay created at the war office and in the military council by the disasters at Port Arthur and on the Yalu and other contributory causes led to an incipient cabal in favor of making Vladimir Alexandrovitch regent. The grand duke, it is to be remembered, commands the metropolitan garrison, including all the guard regiments and all the troops within the government of St. Petersburg, and he has always been the favorite of the army. The wife of the grand duke, Maria Pavlovna, has ever been known as a born political intriguant, and shares her husband's ambition.

GRAND DUKE VLADIMIR.
(Slated for Regent of Russian Empire by Military Party.)

The late czar was fully aware of the trouble which his brother's ambitious inclinations might eventually bring about. Hence it was that during the last five years of his reign Vladimir Alexandrovitch was kept on leave of absence for nine months out of the 12, when he spent the greater part of his time in Paris, Biarritz and the Riviera.

FORTUNE OF ROCKEFELLER.

It Is So Enormous That the Ordinary Human Mind Can Hardly Comprehend It.

New York Special.

News that John D. Rockefeller has succeeded in starting a $2,500,000,000 mining combination naturally evokes the question: How much money is he worth and how much money does he control?

Well-informed gossip has credited him with a fortune of $1,000,000,000. He is the chief stockholder of the Standard Oil company. He has controlling interests in more than half a dozen other corporations of enormous dividend earning capacity. In addition he has heavy minority interests in nearly a score of other rich enterprises. According to well-informed financiers Mr. Rockefeller has controlling interests in the following corporations:

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER.
(Said to Be the Richest Human Being That Ever Lived.)

Standard Oil	$ 700,000,000
Amalgamated Copper	127,500,000
Cabinet and Heating	2,500,000
American Linseed	2,272,500
Dock Produce company	1,000,000
St. Paul railway	146,250,000
Total	$1,079,128,500

He has heavy minority interests in United States Steel, Colorado Fuel and Iron, United States Leather, Consolidated Gas, International Harvester, New York Central, Pennsylvania, Missouri Pacific, Wisconsin Central and others.

Among the officers of all these corporations the name of John D. Rockefeller figures only once—as president of the Standard Oil company. In Missouri Pacific, Colorado Fuel and Iron, and American Linseed stocks the name of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., stands in the directorate as the representative of the father. William Rockefeller is another name probably to represent his brother's interests on occasion. No one may guess how many names of confidential clerks do service in this capacity.

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES

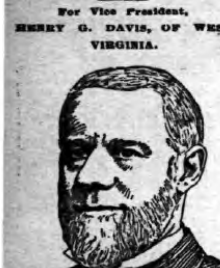
For President,

ALTON BROOKS PARKER, OF NEW YORK.

ALTON B. PARKER.

For Vice President,

HENRY G. DAVIS, OF WEST VIRGINIA.



HENRY G. DAVIS.

The Democrats of the Fifth Congressional district are to be congratulated on having presented to the voters the name of a man worthy of a seat in the halls of Congress. In James E. Martine the Democrats have a candidate who commands respect and serious consideration. Few men are so well versed in the science of politics as is the distinguished citizen and gifted orator who has been selected as the opponent of Congressman Charles H. Fowler. On no question affecting the administration of National affairs is he without a fund of knowledge. The politics, past and present, have been made a life study by him and he has an ability to expound those of the Democratic faith in a manner which commands the attention of his hearers, even those who disagree with him. Whether Mr. Martine can get at Mr. Fowler is another question. In fact, unless Mercer county should give him a majority his chances would not be bright, for Union county's Republican majority this year would be hard to overcome. The Republicans in this county are united, at least a far as can be judged by all outward signs. True, Mr. Martine will receive a complimentary vote in this city, although it is a Fowler stronghold, for those who know the former-mayor admire his admirable qualities and many will be reluctant to cast a ballot against him. Mr. Martine should receive at least the vote of every Democrat in the district.

Funeral of Mrs. Hanson.

The funeral of Mrs. Anna C. Hanson, who died Friday, were held from the home of her son, James Hanson, of Jackson avenue. Rev. Dr. Cornelius Subenck officiated. The pallbearers were the three sons of the dead woman, James, Martin and Peter Hanson, and her son-in-law, Peter Mackey, James Bonsen and William Classin. The burial was at Hillside cemetery.

Will be Wedded Tomorrow.

The wedding of Miss Bertha Benner, of Somerville, to Charles Herrmann, of the borough, will take place tomorrow afternoon at the bride's home. They will reside on Johnson's drive where a furnished home is awaiting them. The ceremony will be witnessed by a large number of guests.

James Stafford and family, of Montreal, Canada, who have been spending some time at Asbury Park, have returned here for a short visit prior to returning home.

AMUSEMENTS.

In Australia things happen, and in "Mr. Wix of Wickham," the transplanted English musical comedy which R. E. Rice's company presented last night for the first time in America, at the Bijou Theatre, and the scene of which is laid in Australia, things of a nature calculated to please and amuse the audience happen from the rising of the curtain until the final fall. Few of the musical shows that have come to this country from England have had the snap and go of this production, and the vigor of its action coupled with a number of excellent songs and the capable work of the principals and chorus should make it an immediate and continuing success. The company includes Harry Corson Clarke, David Lushgow, Julian Dalton Stirage, Sydney De-Grey, Frank Lalor, Arthur Wooley, Douglas Flint, Andrew O'Neill, Fred Waters, Milton Pollock, Thelma Fair, Alice Maude Poole, Laura Guerite, Catherine J. Hayes—"not slim, but prepossessing"—Frances Wilson, Cecile Mayer and David Abrahams as a trollicsome kangaroo, with a chorus lively, energetic and attractive.

Play goers who are looking for a rare dramatic treat will find it in "A Texas Ranger," the new cowboy play in which Sidney Ayres, the young, romantic actor, takes the leading part. Mr. Ayres is supported by one of the best companies of players ever seen in New York. Among those may be mentioned, Edward Emery, Jack Drumelr, Alex. Kearney, Ted F. Griffin, Louis Theil, Howard Messmer, Wm. Phinney, Steph Hoyt, J. Ford Tiebner, W. C. Tucker, Miss Florence Lester, Miss Grace Cahill, Miss Bessie Davis, Miss Effie Gillette and Miss Hattie Foley. "A Texas Ranger" is a true picture of ranch life in the great southwest, and is instructive as well as entertaining. Critics wherever the play has been seen speak in the very highest terms of it. The scenery is accurate and the furnishings come direct from Texas, where Mr. Ayres has spent several months in preparation of this play. "A Texas Ranger" was seen for the first time at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, New York city, last Monday night.

Lew Dockstader, the king of minstrelsy, and the only blackface comedian whose merits make an annual Broadway, New York, engagement profitable, begins an extended engagement at the Herald Square Theatre on Monday. Mr. Dockstader is by far the funniest minstrel who ever amused an audience and this year his songs and monologues are more screamingly funny than ever before, if such a thing were possible. Although the first part of the evening's entertainment shows the old time minstrel half circle, there are many new and novel specialties introduced, which do not detract at all however, from the songs and dances and jokes which have from time immemorial been identified with minstrelsy. Besides these features there are two big spectacular scenes which as spectacles of beauty have never been eclipsed in any theatrical entertainment whatsoever. An idea of the magnitude of Lew Dockstader's Great Minstrel Co., may be had when it is learned that two sixty-foot baggage cars are required for its transportation, that the production cost $60,000 and that it numbers over seventy people.

TRINITY Y. P. S. C. E. SELECTS NEW OFFICERS

REPORTS SHOW SOCIETY TO BE IN A PROSPEROUS CONDITION.

At a regular meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E., of Trinity Reformed church, last night, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, H. F. Crawford; first vice president, Miss May A. Randolph; second vice president, William M. Labouchette; recording secretary, Miss Lena Cortell; corresponding secretary, Miss Mabel Wilson; treasurer, Miss Anna Searing. The reports of the different committees showed the society to be in a flourishing condition.

The report of the treasurer showed that $66.74 had been raised during the year and $50.03 expended, leaving a balance in the treasury of $15.31. The missionary fund amounted to $67.54 of which $61.11 has been expended, leaving a balance on hand of $26.42.

Mrs. H. S. Potter resigned as corresponding secretary, after several years of faithful service.

Lunch for Business Men.

Following the installation of Frank Lawrence in chief in their culinary department, Timbo & Co. have inaugurated a business men's lunch. It is to be served every day from 11:30 until 2:30 and embraces soup, choice of meats, vegetables, coffee, tea or milk and dessert. It has already won popular favor, having filled a long felt want.

Mrs. W. S. Bullock, wife of Councilman Bullock, has returned from New Haven, where she attended the funeral of a relative.

THE LAWLESS SPIRIT.

Roosevelt's Public Career Abounds in Incidents Affording Abundant Evidence.

"I am reminded," writes Samuel Untermyer to the New York Times, "that the Panama conspiracy (which history will record as one of the foulest and most cowardly crimes of modern times, and the blackest spot in the existence of a nation that had just accomplished one of the most ennobling and self-sacrificing acts in the cause of human liberty that was ever known) is not the only instance in which Mr. Roosevelt has shown that he regards the Constitution as subject to the Executive will, to be molded, ignored, or trampled upon to meet his views of expediency, instead of looking before him. His public career affords abundant evidence of his determination to wield all the powers of government on the dangerous "rough rider" principle that all means are justified to accomplish the desired end."

This great lawyer, in a lengthy letter, points out the existence of "the lawless spirit" in President Roosevelt, when he, as Governor, removed District Attorney Gardiner. The New York Times comments upon the Untermyer letter and says editorially:

"This newspaper was not reckoned among the ardent admirers of District Attorney Asa Bird Gardiner. We deplored and censured his indiscretions, personal and official, and at any moment during his term of office we should have acclaimed a successor to him appointed in conformity with the provisions of law. Yet when Governor Roosevelt removed Mr. Gardiner we were compelled to declare that the action he had taken was wanton, lawless, and a dangerous usurpation of power. The Commissioner appointed by Governor Roosevelt to hear the charges against Colonel Gardiner had reported that they were not proved, and that no action should be taken. Subsequently, without further hearing, and, as this community pretty generally believed, without proper cause, the Governor removed the District Attorney and appointed Mr. Philbin in his place.

"It was a perfectly characteristic act, yet New Yorkers did not know then that it was characteristic of Mr. Roosevelt. They would have been disposed to regard it as a sporadic outbreak. They now know by repeated exhibitions of Mr. Roosevelt's disregard of law that having his own way, either with or against the statutes and the Constitution, is a confirmed habit with him. The Gardiner incident is illustrative of the Roosevelt temperament."

INDUSTRY DECLINING.

Our imports have declined for July to $71,122,520 against $82,187,825 in 1903. The total value of exports for July was $94,853,451, against $91,813,-288 for July, 1903. For the same period the expenditures of the government exceeded the receipts by over $17,000,000, which would indicate a deficiency of over $75,000,000 for the fiscal year. If the Democrats had elected a majority in Congress two years ago, these ominous figures would be pointed to by the Republicans as the result of such a victory, but now we know—for Shaw has told us—protection is panic-proof, and "prosperity" and high prices are still with us. We will have to issue bonds and increase taxation in some way under this devastating policy of the Republicans, which is evidently destroying our foreign trade and reducing our ability to buy foreign goods. But the trusts are constantly getting a firmer grip of the situation, and will furnish us all we ought to have at the high prices the tariff allows them to charge. But, as Secretary Shaw says, high prices is an accompaniment of prosperity, and to keep it we must vote the Republican ticket, pay and look pleased.

LAND FRAUDS.

The Interior Department is just as honeycombed with scandals and filled with grafters as the Post Office, though but little has been said about it. The General Land Office, if investigated, would far outstrip, in the amount involved, the frauds in the Post Office. The little already exposed shows the vast ramifications of the land ring and the enormous acreage they have wrongfully appropriated. The claim that the Roosevelt Administration is willing and anxious to punish grafters and prevent stealing is not borne out by the lack of prosecution of the land ring. There is an ominous quiet in the Interior Department at Washington; orders have been given that no one, under threat of dismissal, must give out any information. Months ago Secretary Hitchcock promised that directly the grafters were corralled, the facts should be furnished to the public, so either the plunderers are still at large, or it is feared that exposure will "hurt the party." The claim that this is a reform administration is not substantiated by what is being done, but its whole efforts are being used to perpetuate itself, instead of cleansing the government by punishing the grafters.

DROPS DEAD ON TRAIN

Conductor L. C. Hurtt Stricken With Heart Disease.

CIVIL WAR VETERAN

While in Charge of a Central Railroad Train, Man is Carried Off.

Louis C. Hurtt, for nearly thirty years an employe of the New Jersey Central, died suddenly between Elizabethport and Newark on Monday while in charge of his passenger train as conductor. Heart disease was the cause of death. He lived on West Front street, near Clinton avenue, having moved there several months ago, from Summit avenue.

Mr. Hurtt had been troubled more or less with his heart for some time, but when he left the house this morning to go to Dunellen, from which point he always took his train, he was in his accustomed health.

Mr. Hurtt was born near Trenton, but for many years lived at Manasquan. He served in the Civil War with a New Jersey regiment and was a member of the Grand Army. Owing to the poor health of his daughter, Miss Grace Hurtt, the family moved to this city a few years ago. He was a faithful employe of the New Jersey Central and held one of the best of records.

He leaves a wife, daughter of Mrs. Ann Brown, of Washington avenue; and three children, Lewis and Charles Hurtt and Miss Grace Hurtt.

HILLSIDE TENNIS PLAYERS HAVE AN EXCITING SET

BEERS AND GODDARD TURN TABLES ON EACH OTHER.

Though the finals in the men's tennis tournament for the championship of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club were to have been played off Saturday, but one match took place. This was the finishing match in the semi-finals, and leaves the contest between T. M. Day, Jr., and Fred W. Goddard. The deciding match will take place next Saturday.

At the courts Saturday one of the most interesting sets which has ever been played at Hillside took place. It was between F. W. Goddard and A. D. Beers, and resulted as follows: Goddard defeated Beers, 6-3; Beers defeated Goddard, 8-6, and Goddard defeated Beers, 6-0. In the sets took a long time to be played, the finals were not begun. Beers was a little flighty in the first set, and it went to his opponent with comparative ease. The next two sets were as good exhibitions of tennis as one could wish to see, each point being won after a hard rally, sometimes lasting for several minutes. Beers steadied up remarkably in the second set, and though hard pressed by Goddard came out ahead after fourteen games had been played. In the last contest, the tables were turned, and Goddard proved the stronger by the same score.

In the final match, the winner will be determined by the best three out of five sets, and a most interesting struggle for the cup is anticipated. Mr. Day has won the cup in former years, and is playing his usual game this year, while Goddard has won his way to the finals in fine style, putting up a strong game.

Baptist Anniversary.

The New Jersey Baptist anniversaries will be held at the Central Baptist church, Trenton, October 24, 25 and 26th. The programme includes the ministers' conference, meeting of the Baptist Young People's Union on Monday, the convention and Woman's Baptist Home Mission conference on Tuesday and the meeting of the education society and social union on Wednesday. A large number of prominent ministers and workers from all parts of the State and the United States will be present and Plainfield will have a big representation.

People's Party Rally.

The People's Democratic Party will open its campaign in this city, Saturday evening, at Reform Hall, with a grand rally and mass meeting at which George Hoenscher, candidate for Governor, and Joseph R. Buchanan, of Newark, will speak. Thomas Watson, candidate for President, will speak in the Kruger Auditorium, at Newark, Friday evening.

S. H. Smith to Wed.

The marriage of S. H. Smith and Miss Bettie Lanyon, both of this city, will take place Wednesday evening, October 12. The ceremony will be performed at the Filmore Baptist church, Rev. E. J. Grudup officiating. Walter Scoggs will act as best man, and Miss Fannie Scoggs will be maid-of-honor.

Miss Lucy M. Doremus, of West Front street, has returned home from Rockville Center, L. I., after a vacation of six weeks.

MAY NAME ATTERBURY

Probable Choice of Democrats for the Mayoralty.

CONVENTION, OCT. 19

Not Likely That Anyone Will be Nominated for City Judge by the Minority Party.

Chairman J. V. B. Dilts has issued a call for the Democratic city convention to be held Wednesday night, Oct. 19. The meeting will take place at the Democratic Club's rooms in Central Hall, North avenue.

Already several names have been mentioned in connection with the mayoralty nomination. Among them are A. H. Atterbury, Fred W. Yates and former Councilman Vincent L. Frasee. It is reported that Mr. Yates declines to run for the nomination. Mr. Frasee has some good backing, and he is out to win according to statements made by his friends. For a long time he was the sole representative of the Democrats in the Common Council and became known as "the lone star member."

Chairman J. V. B. Dilts.

To a reporter for The Daily Press Mr. Atterbury said today that he had been approached regarding the nomination for the office, but declined to state whether he would accept the honor. He said that he was inclined to believe it his duty to accept should such a nomination be offered him, but had nothing definite to say at this time. It is generally believed that Mr. Atterbury would make the most formidable candidate the Democrats could nominate, his standing in the community being such as to warrant strong support for him at the polls.

It is not expected that any nominations will be made for the city judgeship.

LEAL'S BOYS WIN THEIR OPENING CONTEST

WESTFIELD HIGH SCHOOL VANQUISHED BY SCORE OF 26 TO 0.

Leal's School football team opened its season Saturday by defeating the Westfield High School team in a game well played game. The score was 26 to 0, and was largely due to the excellent work of Edwin Daniel, the right half back of the Plainfield aggregation. His runs were long, and how as counted on at any time to tear off from five to twenty yards. At three critical stages in the game, he made touchdowns from the forty yard line.

Generally speaking the game was won by strong defense on the part of the local aggregation. Westfield being unable to gain but few distance. The ball was in the home team's territory the greater part of the game. A feature of the game was a goal from the thirty yard line made by Dallas in the second half. The following was the line-up of the Leal's School team: Clenney, left end; Estes, left tackle; Lawrence, left guard; Valiant and Manning, center; Strong and Endicott, right guard; Cantis and Waring, right tackle; Sutton and Underhill, right end; Wilcox, quarter back; Daniel, right half-back; Dallas, full back.

Touchdowns—Daniel, 2; Dallas. Goal from field—Dallas. Goals from touchdowns—Wilcox, 2. Umpire—Estes.

George Finger's Purchase.

George Finger, of East Second street, has purchased the business property on Somerset street occupied by John H. Worth, the harness maker and H. Solomon, the tailor, and he expects to improve the property a little later with a view to occupying it himself. It is said that the purchase price was $6,000.

Social Club's Winter Dance.

The Gable Club, a recently organized social organization, has issued the Cestus for a series of eight invitation dances to be given during the coming winter. The first will take place the latter part of the present month.

State Supervisor of Roads R. A. Meeker, of West Front street, has returned from St. Louis.

AMUSEMENTS.

The first of Henry W. Savage's attractions at the Grand this season is "The Prince of Pilsen," and a reposition of the fine entertainment it provided last season is looked for. Three of last season's company who made individual hits are in the cast—Arthur Donaldson (the real prince), Ivar Anderson (the naval lieutenant), and Jeannette Bageard (Sidoni, the French maid). These three were also in the original cast. Most of the others have had "Prince of Pilsen" experience, notably Trixie Friganza, who plays the widow. Jess Dandy, impersonator of Hans Wagner, and Almyra Forrest, who has the role of Edith Adams. Marie Welsh as Nellie, Stella Martine as the bell boy, Percy Ames as Lord Shrimpson, and James Francis Sullivan as Francois complete the cast.

George Ade's comedy "The College Widow," is providing an immense popular attraction at the Garden Theatre, New York, and the beginning of the third week, Monday evening, finds this Henry W. Savage attraction enjoying the remarkable success it scored on its opening night. Every performance during the past two weeks has packed Mr. Savage's new play house to the limit, and Mr. Ade's coy widow, with her amusing associates, including "Silent" Murphy and "Bob" Hicks, Flora Wiggins and others are safely established on a substantial wave of unlimited popularity.

STOLE MOTHER'S SAVINGS

John Keene, of Dewey Park; Decamps With Her $150.

LOCAL POLICE GET HIM

But Mamma Weakens When He Selvels and They Go Back to Drakeville Together.

The usual ante court quietude prevailed at police headquarters at 8 o'clock Monday, when the officers in charge were startled half out of their senses by the entrance of a dishevelled looking woman in the last degree of hysterics. With her voice pitched in a shrill key she began telling excitedly some trouble that had occurred but it was several minutes before she could be calmed down sufficiently to talk coherently. She then gave her name as Mrs. Keene, of Dewey Park, and said that her son, John Keene, had robbed her of $150, which represented the savings of years. She was sure he hadn't gone far away and after getting his description several policemen hurried out.

The undutiful John was soon located, in a Front street clothing store, laying in a complete wardrobe from silk underwear to tall overcoats. He was virtually "daught with the goods on" and collapsed when the officer invited him over to headquarters. There the sobbing and hysterical Mrs. Keene weakened and after the greater part of the $150 had been restored to her she fell on John's shoulder and wept —and all was forgiven. John unveiled a little, promised to behave himself and the last the bluecoats saw of mother and son was when they boarded a Dunellen car and started back for the hamlet where Silas Dewey Drake's ward is accepted as Gospel truth.

WESTFIELD DEFEATS ALL-PLAINFIELD TEAM

DENMAN'S AGGREGATION WINS BY A SCORE OF 9 TO 6.

The team of Plainfield baseball players which went to Westfield Saturday and crossed bats with Manager Denman's aggregation met defeat by a score of 9 to 6. Despite the great odds against them, the locals put up a good game and verified the belief that the city can put a strong nine of strictly amateur plays in the field.

"Jimmy" Montrose was in the box for Plainfield and pitched in good form. He was touched up for eleven hits, while six were made off Waller. Westfield came in bunches and that was what enabled them to get around the bases. Plainfield made six errors and the other side three.

The line-up was as follows:

Plainfield—Allen, c; Montrose, p; Egan, 1b; Martin, 2b; Enright, ss; Cooney, 3b; Dailey, Overton, rf; Flannery, cf; Taylor, lf.

Westfield—Friedberg, c; Waller, p; Rockford, 1b; Burch, 2b; Smithson, Patience, ss; Barry, 3b; Seward, rf; Mallen, cf; McManus, lf.

New Dancing Academy.

The upper floor of the Bohepflin building on West Front street, has been leased for a dancing academy and among the improvements to be made will be a new hard-wood floor, and men and women's dressing room, smoking room, and the hall will be attractively decorated. Dances will be held every Saturday night with a full orchestra in attendance and classes will be formed under the direction of Frank Burk and a number of up-to-date novelties will be introduced during the season. The hall will be completed about October 15, and it can be rented for receptions and amusements by corresponding with the chairman, B. A. Farenbek.

Democrats' Mass-Meeting.

Congressman John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, Gubernatorial Candidate Charles G. Black, of Jersey City, and Congressional Candidate James R. Nartine will be the speakers at a Democratic rally to be held in Reform Hall on Friday night, October 28. The Democrats will hold three other mass-meetings here during the campaign.

Exchange of Properties.

Benjamin R. Force, of East Front street, has exchanged his residential property on East Front street, formerly occupied by him with Peter Thompson for the latter's residential property on East Seventh street. Mr. Thompson will occupy the Front street property.

Fair Estate Robbed.

A suit filed by William Rogers, an oldtime miner and prospector, discloses the fact that the Morgan mine at Angels camp, California, owned by the Fair estate, has been robbed of no less than $100,000 worth of gold. The thefts are said to have been the work of four or five men employed in the mine.

LIQUOR MEN CLAIM VICTORY

State Organizer Tells How High License Was Defeated Here.

IN CITY AND BOROUGH

"Thanks to Organization and Influence of Friends of the Industry"—Their Tribute to Judge Schenck.

The report of State Organizer Buckridge at the recent convention of the New Jersey Liquor Dealers' Protective League as far as it concerns Plainfield and North Plainfield is worthy of note at this time. The report is published in full in "Justice," the liquor men's paper, and the following is an extract from it:

"The first attempt at higher license originated in Plainfield. In his annual message, the mayor of that municipality recommended an increase from $700 to $1,000. There was no desire for a less number of licenses, or any complaint concerning the repute of the saloons, but with them or the management of the places conducted by the licensees. The city simply wanted more money and the easiest way to get it was to raise the fee. Called in consultation in the matter, I suggested that the Association, which had been permitted to drop out of existence, be revived, or a new one organized. Meeting the approval of all the dealers, after some earnest effort and individual interviewing, a new organization was effected. Steps were immediately taken to defeat the proposed measure, which had reached the third reading and final passage in the Council.

"Without entering into details, suffice it to say that the fee in the City of Plainfield today is $700, thanks to organization and the influence and assistance of friends to the industry, which in any emergency can produce what money will not purchase, and accomplish results not to be attained only through the time-tested principle, 'Union There is Strength.' Thus were the dealers of Plainfield benefitted individually to the extent of $300 annually, and the concerted movement of our enemies to start the high license ball a rolling all over the State frustrated.

"Another similar and notable victory in this line was the defeat of the proposed increase of the license fee in North Plainfield from $200 to $500, as recommended by Mayor Smalley to the Hon. Judge Schenck of the County Court of Somerset County. Through the efforts of the Somerset County Association, to which all of the North Plainfield dealers belonged, and with the aid of a just and fair-minded jurist, the proposed increase was defeated, thus saving the dealers of that municipality $300 a year each, and adding another and very notable victory over our adversaries. In this contest, as well as in an indefatigable and expensive effort to abate the illicit traffic nuisance in Somerset County, I desire, in the most emphatic manner, to praise the loyal work done by the Somerset County Association, and to recommend favorable notice of His Honor Judge Schenck for his upright and unprejudiced consideration and decision in all matters that have come before him for judicial hearing and adjudication regarding our industry in that county."

There are cheap houses and there are houses not so cheap, but if a man can get a good house built cheaply it is to his advantage to do it. Herman Hansen is a house builder and he can quote estimates that will bear competition with any other contractor.

When in doubt as to what to give as a birthday present, if it's mother, sister or sweetheart, why not select one of those pretty palms or plants at Charles L. Stanley's North avenue flower store. They are always acceptable and add to the appearance of a home.

The Plainfield Spring Water Company would like to send you a five-gallon bottle of their water. You will use no other when you have once tried theirs. Their business is constantly increasing, which is a sign that the public is beginning to learn the value of their product.

The specials in fall clothing at the Surprise Store at the present time include the following attractions: Young men's long pants suits, double or single breasted coats, well tailored, made of fancy worsteds and mixed cheviots, are selling at $5 95; men's suits, latest cut, and popular shades, $7.48. You should give your attention to these offers if you have not yet invested in your fall clothes.

AN HONORABLE RECORD

Capt. William Hand is Truly a Civil War Veteran.

IN MANY BATTLES

Has Frequently Been Selected to Carry the Flag at the Head of New Jersey Troops on Parade.

From among the many hundreds of veterans from this State who attended the National Encampment of the G. A. R. at Boston last month, an honor was accorded Captain William Hand, of East Second street, which is eagerly sought after by all of the "boys" who wore the blue during the Rebellion. He was selected to carry the colors at the head of the New Jersey division, not because of any partiality from the commanding officers but for his honorable record as a soldier and his military bearing. The picture published in today's Daily Press shows him in company with another veteran just as they were waiting for their horses before entering the parade.

It was not Captain Hand's first experience as a color bearer as three times previously he had been selected for the position in parade, all of these at Washington, D. C. The first was when the Union troops were reviewed by General Grant after the close of the war, the second during Grant's first inauguration and the third at the National Encampment at Washington twelve years ago. On each occasion he was on horseback, making it more difficult to properly uphold the heavy flag, but at the end of each march, no matter how long, he has been highly complimented.

As a veteran the genial captain has a record that is equalled by few Union soldiers and as yet he has met with no one in this State who can say way approach it. He enlisted in Co. B, Third Regiment, N. G. N. J., at Elizabeth on August 11, 1862, which was commanded by General Drake. In February, 1863, he was promoted from private to sergeant for gallantry in action and in July of the same year was made First Sergeant. Further promotion came on October 15 when he was advanced to Second Lieutenant of Company I. He was acting regimental quartermaster from February 1, 1865, until June of that year when he was promoted to First Lieutenant of Company E. His regiment took part in nearly everyone of the big battles and he was present for duty at every engagement. Only once was he wounded despite the fact that he was exposed to danger more than usually. At Gettysburg where three-fifths of his regiment went down never to rise, a bullet buried itself in his right foot. He was ordered to the hospital tent but the piece of lead had no sooner been extracted than he was back again and remained with the survivors of the gallant Third. Some of the battles through which he passed unscathed were Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, the Wilderness, Spotsylvania Court House, Cold Harbor, before Petersburg, Mine Run and Farmville. At Gettysburg, where he was wounded, his daring attracted the attention of many of the officers and he was warmly complimented for bravery and reported officially for promotion.

He was one of the thousands of men who witnessed Lee's surrender and when the Union troops were dismissed, he at once returned to Plainfield. He is a member of the local G. A. R. Post and in all of the Decoration Day parades he is one of its most conspicuous figures, as at the present time possessing more energy than many men half his age. He personally superintends the large tracking boat upon which he and his son, Fred Hand, conduct, and is one of the most active Civil War veterans to be found in the Eastern states.

WILL OBSERVE FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY IN FITTING WAY.

The Miantonomo Tribe, No. 112, I. O. R., is arranging for a big celebration of their fifteenth anniversary on Friday evening, October 14. At a meeting Saturday night the anniversary committee reported that an entertainment would be held at which instrumental and vocal selections would be rendered and short talks given by the members of the Board of Great Chiefs who have accepted an invitation to be present. Dancing is to follow and refreshments served. Visiting tribes will come from Plainfield, Bound Brook, Somerville, Westfield, Cranford, New Brunswick, Rahway and Elizabeth. The celebration will not be open to the public, but members will be permitted to bring their wives, daughters and friends.

William Mowcom delivered a short address, describing his recent visit to St. Louis, where he attended a session of the Great Council of the United States. Brief talks were also made by Charles Holstein, David C. Allen, Robert A. Slorah, John T. Green and others.

POLICE GET "PROF. LYTTON"

Noted Swindler Landed in Chicago Through a "Tip" From Chief Kiely.

HE IS WANTED HERE

Indictments Against Him All Over the Country, But Plainfield is to Get Him First — His Career.

Wanted by the police in cities all over the United States, John Hand, alias Harry H. Waite, alias Dr. Hamilton, alias Professor Lytton and a dozen others, is in custody and is to be turned over to Chief Kiely, of the local department. One of the smoothest and slickest swindlers in the country he has defrauded women out of hundreds of thousands of dollars by posing as a clairvoyant and medium. He got away with $500 from Mrs. Abbie Drake, of Orchard place, and his capture has been the result of her complaint. On information furnished the Chicago police, by Chief Kiely he was arrested in that city Saturday afternoon, and is being held until requisition papers can be made out and an officer sent for him.

His method has been to open an office in some city and by inserting display advertisements in newspapers extolling his powers, attract patronage. As a rule women flocked to his place and after selecting his victim, would give one or two sittings without making any headway beyond learning whether she had any money. If so, he would declare that in order to have a successful seance it would be necessary for her to secure a certain amount and allow him to cast a "spell" over it and then for her to place it in her bosom. He always gave instructions that it was not to be taken out for a certain time, always long enough to allow him to get out of the city, as during the "spelling" process he would remove the money from whatever it was in and insert newspaper clippings. The victim's attention would be distracted by peculiar incantations and shouts of "hocus pocus, abracadabra" or words to that effect.

He came to this city in December, 1900, and opened an office on West Second street and advertised himself as Professor Lytton. Among those who sought his services was Mrs. Drake who sought to learn something about a missing relative. He told her he could give valuable information but it would be necessary for her to have $500 and place it about her person. She had that amount in the bank and under his instruction drew it out and placed it in an envelope. At the same time he was working the same game on a man in Mrs. Drake, only she brought but $50. The "spell" was cast and when Mrs. Drake opened the envelope at home her money was gone and so was Professor Lytton when she hurried back, also her sister's $50.

The matter was placed in Chief Kiely's hands and an indictment was secured against Lytton. For a while nothing was heard of him and then he turned up in Denver, Col. He was arrested there but gave bail and fled. Then word came that he had been arrested in Scranton, Pa., after a desperate struggle in which he shot the chief of police. He was released on $2,500 bail but failed to return for trial. Next the Memphis, Tenn., police caught him and as they had a weak case against him, they turned him over to the authorities at Portland, Me. There he gave $6,000 cash bail and as usual left it go by default. That was the last Chief Kiely heard of him until a few days ago when a tip came that he had opened an office in Chicago. He wired Chief O'Neil a full description of the swindler with his exact address and his arrest followed. O'Neil telegraphed to Plainfield Saturday night that he was in custody and would be held awaiting instructions. It is possible that he will fight hard against extradition but the local papers have been in readiness ever since the indictment and the police anticipates no difficulty in proving his case.

The police have every reason to believe that Hand is the swindler's real name and his record shows him to be a clever all-around swindler. His father has been working the same game and a brother has helped him at various times. He is now wanted by the authorities in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburg and scores of smaller cities in the East and West.

ORDINANCE RAISING LIQUOR LICENSE FEE TO $1,000 PASSES TO THIRD READING

Mr. Tyler Presents Measure Which Meets With the Approval of the Majority of the Members.

BUCKRIDGE'S REPORT IS A BOOMERANG

When the Roll is Called Bullock, Daniel, Garrigues, Murphy, Tyler, Telles and Wilson Line Up in Support of Higher License—Gloak, Higham, Lee and Randolph are Opposed to the Ordinance.

Despite reports made to the contrary an hour prior to the convening of the October meeting of the Common Council, Monday, that matters had been fixed and that Mr. Tyler, chairman of the license committee, would not introduce his proposed amendment to the ordinance to license inns and taverns, which provided for an increase in the retail license fee from $700 to $1,000 and the wholesale fee from $500 to $800, as stated in the Daily Press of Saturday, Mr. Tyler presented the amendment and it was adopted on first and second readings and ordered engrossed and advertised.

Those who voted for the amendment were Councilmen William R. Bullock, Leslie M. Daniel, William A. Garrigues, Clarence Murphy, William S. Tyler, Theodore D. Wilson and Ralph L. Telles.

Those voting against the amendment were William L. Gloak, J. Stephen Higham, Hebert L. Lee and Frank DeW. Randolph.

The Daily Press account of the recent convention of the New Jersey Retail Liquors' Dealers Association convention, in which State Organizer Buckridge reported the great work of the local association in defeating the original effort to raise the license fee to $1,000, had been read by the members and a majority were deeply inclosed at the intimation therein. It was the chief topic of conversion before and after the meeting and the general opinion expressed among the lobbyists was that the State organizer had acted most injudiciously.

Mayor O. L. Jenkins was the originator of the idea to raise the fee to $1,000 and he found a worthy champion in Councilman Tyler, as well as other members. Although defeated at first, Mr. Tyler was persistent and in fact he did not drop the matter at any time.

When Mr. Tyler introduced the ordinance last night and moved its adoption on the first reading, Mr. Lee arose and stated that he was not ready to vote on the ordinance as there had been no meeting of the license committee and he had not had time to consider the matter.

Mr. Tyler in reply stated that he had attempted to hold a meeting of the committee on four different occasions and that Mr. Lee informed him that it was useless to hold a meeting.

Mr. Lee took exception to this statement and explained that he had informed Mr. Tyler that he could not attend a meeting either on Wednesday, Thursday or Friday night of last week, owing to other engagements, whereupon Mr. Tyler said that the real reason why a meeting was not held was that his fellow-committeemen had explained that there was no use for holding one.

Mr. Randolph stated in explaining his position that he had received a telephone call from Mr. Tyler asking him to meet, but that it was impossible for him to do so at the time.

Mr. Tyler continued by saying that he asked the members to meet him a half-hour prior to the regular meeting, but they had failed to do so and that by the words of both Mr. Lee and Mr. Randolph they had admitted that they knew something of the matter.

There was a slight ripple of laughter through the lobby, when Mr. Lee began to explain his reasons for not attending a committee meeting, it being occasioned by Mr. Tyler's remarks, asking Mr. Lee to be careful in making his explanation. Mr. Lee coincided by saying that he did not care to have any argument concerning the matter.

Prior to taking the first vote on the ordinance, some doubt was expressed as to whether Mr. Tyler could get enough votes to put the ordinance through, but after the first roll call there was no question on this point. The seven members stood solidly for the amendment, while the other four were just as firm in their belief. At the next meeting the ordinance will be called up on a third and final passage and there is no doubt that it will successfully pass by the same seven votes.

GIANTS VS. PLAINFIELD, CRESCENT OVAL, OCT. 15

MATHEWSON TO BE IN BOX FOR NEW YORK NATIONALS.

Arrangements are completed for the appearance of the New York Nationals on Crescent Oval on Saturday, October 15, with the Plainfield A. C. Jack Dunn, who is managing the New York end of the deal, has promised to bring the regular team to Plainfield and Christy Mathewson and Bowerman will be the battery.

This alone should guarantee a record-breaking crowd. Manager Johnston promises to have a team that will give the National League champions a hustle. He will have Eaton, the heavy-hitting third baseman from the Brooklyns, to cover that position for him, and he will quite likely have Charles Malley, also of the Brooklyns, for one of the positions.

It is possible that several New York American League players may be on the team and if this is true, the battle will be a royal one.

Death in Party of Thirteen.

John Harney, builder, who was drowned in Newark bay, last week, was one of thirteen local men who were to have held a clambake Sunday. The number was noted at the time arrangements were completed and Harney was one of the first to remark that some one might be "hoodooed" after it was over. His death so affected the friends that the bake was given up.

Mrs. Georgianna Messinger, of North avenue, who has been at the hospital for an operation, continues to improve.

Miss Colton, of Grove street, who has been very ill at the home of her brother, near Manch Chunk, Pa., is improving.

PHYSICAL DEPARTMENT OF Y. M. C. A. IS OPENED

AT ENTERTAINMENT LAST NIGHT ANNOUNCEMENT OF COURSE WAS MADE.

The annual opening of the physical department of the Y. M. C. A. was held last night at the association rooms. The event marked the formal commencement of the gymnasium work, and was of additional interest from the fact that the plans of the new physical director were announced last evening for the first time. Joseph Lorraine, of Boston, entertained the audience with musical selections and recitations.

The most important of Mr. Henckel's announcements was the fact that a course in "First Aid to the Injured" lectures will be conducted at the association during the coming year for the benefit of the gymnasium members. The lessons will be given by Dr. Norman Frohman, and will take place every week. The course covers a thorough outline of anatomy, the action of the heart and lungs, the circulation of the blood, and the process of digestion.

The gymnasium work will be the same as formerly, with the addition of a number of attractive features in the physical department. The schedule of the classes has been announced in the prospectus.

H. B. Putnam, of Rochester, N. Y., has been visiting friends in Plainfield.

Mrs. Irving Brown and her two daughters, of Central avenue, are planning a trip abroad where they will spend the fall and winter.

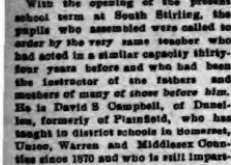
A VETERAN INSTRUCTOR

David Campbell Now in His 34th Year As a Teacher.

AN EVENTFUL CAREER

Secured His Education in Plainfield at the "Old Fourth Street" School.

With the opening of the present school term at South Stirling, the pupils who assembled were called to order by the very same teacher who had acted in a similar capacity thirty-four years before and who had been the instructor of the fathers and mothers of many of those before him. He is David S Campbell, of Dunellen, formerly of Plainfield, who has taught in district schools in Somerset, Union, Warren and Middlesex Counties since 1870 and who is still imparting the first rudiments of "The Three R's" to the district where he first began. One of the last of the "little masters" who divided the day's routine between hearing lessons from his younger charges and wondering how to keep the older ones from thrashing him, he is interesting from many points of view while his reminiscences are decidedly entertaining.



David S. Campbell.

He derived his own education in the Plainfield school at Arlington avenue and Fourth street, where the present Franklin building is and which was in charge of the late M. F. Marcley, by many regarded as the most efficient, if not the most conscientious instructor of his time in the State. Campbell's classmates numbered many of the city's most prominent men today and others who have made names for themselves in various parts of the world. Among those who are still living are John Vail, William Vail, Daniel Runyon, John Wyckoff, William Manning, Joseph Randolph, James Randolph, Sylvanus Compton, Cornelius Compton, Nathan Compton, Eugene Yarnell, Augustus Martin, Eugene Runyon, Joseph and Fred Busby, Oliver Leonard, Charles Hansen, Samuel Wilson, George Breen, William and David Linbarger, B. Frank Coriell, Jacob Manning, William S. Campbell, Dan Pound, George and Jephta VanFleet, Henry and Elias Bernhard, Samuel Ayers, George Neal, Alex Titsworth, T. A. Rogers, C. B. Rogers, Milford Ketil, William and Joel Hedden, Nelson Runyon, Andrew and Randolph Thorn, Charles McGinley, Richard Coriell, John Campbell, Charles Randolph, Samuel Pound, Voorhees Laing, Stephen Seaks, Bert Pyatt, Edward, John and Samuel Stewart, Simeon Randolph, Michael Reardon, Hugh Townsend, Hiram and Henry Woodland, John R. Morrison, Wallace Coriell, Jackson Pound and William Williams.

Leaving school in 1860 he occupied himself in various ways for two years and in 1870 he received his first appointment as instructor in the old stone school house at South Stirling now used as a beer bottling establishment. His trustees at the time were John C. Cooper, Sr., David D. Smalley and Augustus Moore, while his pupils included the present Assemblyman E. E. Cooper and his brother, John C. Cooper, Jr., who is now a trustee over the same school and all those in Warren township. In those days women teachers were very few as it required a man to maintain order. "Judge" Campbell, as he was called, had his hands full and there was many a day when he went home with bruises given him by some big, hearty farmer's boy who sought to win smiles from the girls by "lickin' the teacher." He held the South Stirling school for one year and in 1871 took hold of the one at South Plainfield. From there he went to Whitehouse and resigned in order to teach the Fredelit school in Hunterdon County where he remained six years. After that he taught at Basking Ridge, Bedminster, Warrenville and in 1880 in North Plainfield township. That brought him into prominence locally and in 1882 he was engaged by Plainfield for the Reform school at Arlington and Fourth streets where he had received his own instruction. He remained there until 1884 and in recent years has been in schools located in nearby counties.

During his earlier experiences, teachers' salaries were smaller, the curriculum more circumscribed and the appliances more simple and primitive than at the present time, but brain matter was very much the same and those who have graduated from his classes have been well equipped for their life's work. There were many trying times when unruliness and other obstacles would have discouraged others less persevering but he continued on undaunted and even now has no intention of retiring from the field. He rides his wheel to and from school every day and though his time is well taken up, there is nothing he enjoys better than an hour's reminiscenct chat about the time when he was "one of the boys" at the Fourth street school.

LITERARY.

The novelette in the current number of Lippincott's Magazine is a tale of the Great Lakes from the pen of Karl Edwin Harriman. Its title is "A Lad's Love," and through its pages the island folk-lore is presented as only one who loves them in their atmosphere of simplicity could do. The serpent in Eden comes (with a camera) from a near-by city and insidiously wins his way, amid the deep silence of the wood, into the favor of loving little Margy Kergan, whose true island lover has gone for a draught of the world's activity before settling down to "the simple life" with Margy. The story is an affecting one, relieved from deepest tragedy by native humor and a beautiful end.

If Mr. Roosevelt is elected, as most Democrats think he will be, what is to be the political history of the country for the next few years? Are the people satisfied, or are there forces of discontent, seeking fundamental change? Judge Parker was nominated, to a considerable degree, from the desire to suppress radicalism, led by Bryan, and incendiarism, led by Hearst. The important part of the Democratic campaign ended when Judge Parker was nominated. It had put itself in condition so go through the motions of a respectable opposition. It had failed to accomplish what some men hoped—to select a candidate and outline issues which should bring eloquently before the people what abuses indisputably exist, without expressing violence and ignorance.—Collier's for September 24.

Port Grape Wine Grower in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had

The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while those grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. The New Jersey apples, for instance, make a cider that was always popular the world over." If you want a wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards. Sold by Druggists.

EDUCATE WORKERS.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS IN GERMANY FOR THE YOUNG.

Cap the Common School Education by Fitting Boys and Girls for the Real Business of Life.

The department of commerce and labor is issuing a series of very interesting reports on industrial education in Germany. The latest one is from Deputy Consul Meyer, at Chemnitz, and deals with primary industrial continuation schools. These schools are scattered far and wide, and Mr. Meyer furnishes statistics to show that his branch of education has been quite fully developed in Germany.

The industrial continuation schools are the lowest of the industrial schools, and "cap the common school education by giving the young men and women who must at once embark upon the task of earning a living, the rudiments of a practical education." Attendance in most cases is compulsory. They teach no particular trade, but maintain distinctly general qualities, and are valuable to those who have not the wherewithal to obtain a higher industrial education. In describing the schools, Mr. Meyer says:

"In order to offer the most convenient time for instruction, these schools are held largely in the evenings and on Sundays. Such hours are extremely unfortunate, but apparently unavoidable. The student comes to his work tired from the day's labor and in a state of physical and mental lethargy. A movement has been on foot for some time to transfer the periods of instruction, so far as possible, to the daytime, but has met only partial success.

"In almost all of the industrial continuation schools the three great subjects of instruction are German, arithmetic and drawing. These are woven in with these fundamental branches subjects that possess value to local industry. In the larger industrial schools, which include all the general industrial schools of Baden as reorganized in 1868 geometry, trigonometry, algebra, physics, chemistry, natural science and mechanics are taught in elementary form. In the great majority of schools these subjects are, however, omitted as being too advanced.

"A very prominent feature of the work of these continuation schools is the giving of exhibitions, which occur in nearly every city of the country annually every year or half-year. The purpose of these displays of the work of the school is two-fold, to incite the students to greater effort in the competition for prizes, which are frequently offered, and to show the public what is expected of them. Not only do the students learn to recognize and appreciate each other's abilities and powers, but the interest of the public is enlivened and strengthened.

"It was in the second half of the last century that the question of compulsory or optional attendance at the general industrial continuation schools was raised. To-day that question seems to have been answered in favor of compulsion.

"On January 2, 1902, Prussia had 1,684 continuation schools, with 203,249 students, of which 1,095 were industrial continuation schools.

"In 1900 Bavaria had 274 industrial continuation schools, of which 225 were independent institutions and 49 were associated with 'real' schools. The total attendance was 39,247. Of the 274 schools 180 had compulsory attendance and 94 optional.

"Saxony has 44 industrial continuation schools at present. In 1890 there were 36 of these schools, of which 24 were maintained by associations, 10 by local political and school bodies, 1 by a guild, and 1 by a private person.

"In 1901 Wurttemberg had 226 industrial continuation schools for boys and 16 for girls. The former were attended by 19,639 students and the latter by 971.

"In 1902 Baden had 46 industrial schools, with 8,153 students, and 96 industrial continuation schools."

An Anniversary.

Office Boy—Mr. Smith, can I get off this afternoon? My grandmother's dead.

Manager—Tommy, don't you know that it is very wrong for you to tell lies?

"But she is dead, sir."

"When did she die?"

"Two years ago; but to-day's the anniversary and we're going to celebrate it."

And the manager, remembering that it was about two years ago that the grandmother came to see, told the little fellow to run along. He then closed down his desk, told the chief clerk that he had to run over to Seattle, but would be back at 5:30—and—followed the boy to the funeral celebration.—Tacoma News.

Miss Ines Sent—O, yes; but you know the old superstition. I'm afraid it will bring me bad luck.

Miss Sharpe—I wouldn't worry. This looks more unlucky than an imitation of bad luck.—Stray Stories.

Stephen, Leslie, Life of George Eliot. "By one of the most thoroughly trained biographics of the day."—Outlook.

Tiffany, Francis, Life of Dorothea Lynde Dix. "The life of Dorothea Dix was devoted to work in behalf of the paupers, prisoners and the insane. * * An unusually interesting story."

Traveiyan, Sir G. O., Early history of Charles James Fox. "It is the best picture that has ever been drawn of the transition from the old methods of statesmanship to the new. It is an admirable specimen of literary workmanship, and its charming pages are as instructive as they are fascinating."—O. K. Adams.

Washington, Booker T., Up from slavery; an autobiography. "In no other respect is the book more impressive and effective than in that of its complete identification of himself with his people."—Nation.

Wise, John S., End of an era. "The 'era' is that of slavery in the United States and the 'end' was the Civil War. * * * Mr. Wise has the born gift of narration * * * and * * the annals of the great rebellion are enriched by such a book."—Nation.

WHAT CONSTITUTES LABOR

The Man Who Employs His Brains and Capital as Much a "Laborer" as Any Other.

The little daughter of one of New York's best known bankers sat in his office one day waiting for him to get through with his business, in order that he might take her home. That evening she related her experiences to her mother, says the Wall Street Journal.

"Why, mamma," she said, "papa doesn't work. He simply sits at a desk and talks all day."

One may smile at the simplicity of this child, and yet a great many grown-up people in this world take exactly the same view she did. They think that all work, or to use the word now universally though wrongly adopted, all "labor," worth considering is that done with the hands.

We speak of "capital" and "labor" as producing the wealth of the country. It is from our use of these terms that much of the misconceptions, misunderstandings and mistakes that cause the most perplexing of issues in "the labor problem," springs. All wealth consists first of the gifts of nature, the products of the soil, the mines and the air; and, second, of the "labor" of man in gathering, transporting and adopting these products to human use. Capital is simply labor stored up, saved, accumulated.

It is a favorite theory of socialists that while the basis of all wealth is labor, there is, under the present economic system, "a surplus value," which, while really belonging to the laborer, has been wrongfully seized by the capitalists, thus creating the great inequalities in individual wealth.

But this theory depends upon the idea that it is manual labor alone that creates wealth. At any rate it takes very little account of any other kind of labor. The banker who sits at his desk and "talks" and the railroad president who rides in his private car over his "system" are not "laboring." They are "capitalists" who are simply existing on the labor of others. It is not too much to say that back of much of the agitation which is arraying the laborer against the employer, and the poor against the rich, lies this absurd fallacy that the only labor that produces anything is manual labor, and that the world consists of two classes, the laborers who toil at a wage that provides for a bare subsistence, and the "capitalist," the man who thrives by the labor of others, and who gets all the surplus of value after the wages are paid.

Of course such an idea must be got rid of if the world is to continue at peace under the present system, and certainly its eradication is necessary if we want to pass into an era of "the cooperative commonwealth," which is the dream of the socialist. All wealth, apart from the gifts of nature, is, indeed, the labor of man, and all who refuse to work, whether they be tramps or the idle rich, are equally enemies of their kind. But the man who employs his brains and his capital—the reserviored labor which is the result of long and intelligent endeavor in the past—in business enterprises of any lawful kind is as much a "laborer" as any one of his employes who may swing a hammer, weild a pick or tend a furnace. It may seem superfluous to say a thing that appears so self-evident as this, but in fact it is necessary. The most elementary principles are the ones most often overlooked.

TEST FOR TRAINMEN'S EYES

Is More Severe Now Than It Was Before Railways Became So Numerous.

"Tests for defective eyesight on all members of railroad train crews are much more severe and frequent than they were a few years ago," remarked a prominent railway official a few days ago, reports the Columbus Press-Post. "The reasons for these tests are obvious, as the safety of every moving train depends largely upon the keenness of vision of the men having it in charge. In these tests color blindness causes the most trouble, and is a constant menace to all trainmen, as the inability to name correctly the different colors at a glance is followed by instant dismissal from the service.

"A peculiar case was brought to light recently when a conductor on my road was being put through the test. He had been running a passenger train several years, and never met with an accident, and was deemed one of the best men on the road. When the different colors were placed before him singly he called them correctly at a glance, but when two or more colors were presented he was wholly unable to tell one from another. We were sorry for him, but of course were forced to let him go.

"Physicians seem to be unable to discover to just what cause this affection is due. Some say it comes when persons are born with it, while it comes upon others without warning at any time of life, and unless put to the test the victim will never know that he is so afflicted."

Fire in Darktown.

An old member of the fire department was talking about some of the big fires he had fought in his day, and he remarked: "But the most interesting fire is always a blaze in Darktown. If you want to see a lot of excited people you just ought to get in the midst of a small conflagration in Darktown at night. The negroes begin to empty houses of their contents for-blocks around. That is enough, but the real fun commences when they try to get their goods back into their houses, for it is a sort of grab game; everybody taking everything they can get hold of. I'll bet that after a fire in Darktown there isn't a house in the neighborhood of the blaze that was furnished like it was before the fire."—Atlanta Constitution.

ELKS' BAKE A SUGGESS

Plainfield Lodge's First Outing Thoroughly Enjoyed.

SEVERAL SPEECHES

Baseball, Quoits and Other Games Provide Entertainment for All.

Everyone of the 250 Elks who came away from the first annual outing and clambake of Plainfield lodge, No. 885, B. P. O. E., Thursday, were unanimous in their opinion that for an initial effort it was the most successful they had ever attended. Everything on the programme went off without a hitch and there was not a dull moment from start to finish. Nearly the entire personnel of the local lodge was present while members of the order from Elizabeth, Newark, New Brunswick and Jersey City were also noted.

The bake was prepared by Louis Morris, of Perth Amboy, and was served by him at 2 o'clock. Promptness in allotting each man his portion was a noticeable feature and there was plenty of everything. Before the members and guests started in on the demolition of chickens, clams, green corn, lime fish and other viands, the Elk odes were sung while everybody stood up. The out-of-town visitors were welcomed by City Judge Runyon, who is the exalted ruler of Plainfield lodge, and the cordial greeting he extended placed them at perfect ease.

When the last course had been disposed of, Exalted Ruler Runyon rapped for order and in his ready way, called upon Mayor Viehmann, of New Brunswick, who first made the suggestion for an Elk lodge in Plainfield, for a few words. He responded in a happy vein, dwelling on the benefits of Elkdom generally, declaring that it added to the spiritual as well as material welfare of its members. Mayor Viehmann has long been one of Elkdom's most enthusiastic followers and his remarks were listened to with rapt attention on the part of the Plainfield members. He was followed by former Senator Charles A. Reed, who asserted that the local lodge of Elks is a credit to the city and it is one of the best institutions. More songs were sung and dispersal was made to the ball ground where a second game was played between the married and single men teams.

The former was managed and coached by Judge Coddington while the latter was whipped into shape by Judge Runyon. The opposeless players won by a score of 11 to 10 and from the closeness it may easily be seen that excitement ran high. It required three umpires, David Smalley, J. A. Staats and W. W. Warnock, to keep track of things and even at that some of them were looking the other way when their best judgment was needed. Judge Runyon tallied the runs as they came in and the teams lined up as follows: Married—Cregar, p; Townley, c; Adams, 1b; Carroll, 2b; Rowley, ss; C. W. Runyon, 3b; Reed and Smalley, rf; Van Emburgh, cf; Bird, lf. Single—Hoyt and Woolston, p; Woolston and Slevin, c; Slevin and Hoyt, 1b; Zeglio, 2b; Blats, ss; C. Flynn, 3b; D. C. Smalley, Jr., lf; Overbaugh, rf; Haequer, cf. Those who did not care to watch the game pitched quoits or amused themselves in various ways about the grounds.

The singing of "Auld Lang Syne" brought the festivities to a close and the return to the city was made shortly after 6 o'clock. Before quitting the place at the proposal of the exalted ruler, three rousing cheers and a vote of thanks were given the member of the Watchung Spring Water Company for the use of the grounds and valuable assistance rendered in various ways.

The committee which arranged the affair consisted of William N. Runyon, William A. Coddington and Fred Nelson.

FOR CONGRESS, FARMER-ORATOR

Democrats of Fifth District Name James E. Martine As Their Standard Bearer.

ENTHUSIASTIC SCENE

Convention Was Held at Elizabeth Thursday Afternoon—The District Includes Union, Morris and Warren Counties.

Amid scenes of enthusiasm, James E. Martine, the "farmer-orator of New Jersey" and a disinguished citizen of Plainfield, was nominated at the convention of the fifth district, at Elizabeth, Thursday, as the Democratic candidate for Congress. The Plainfielder delivered a ringing speech in accepting the nomination flaying the Republican party without a "big stick" but with an eloquence which fully justified his claims as the orator of Jersey's Democracy.

County Chairman John Moody, of Cranford, as chairman of the last Congressional convention, called the delegates to order at the Lyceum theatre at 1 o'clock. The temporary secretaries were E. M. Meek, of Union; Joshua R. Salmon, of Morris, and J. J. Cullen, of Warren. As vice presidents these were named: J. J. Lane, of Union; Dr. Woolfe, of Morris, and Charles Quigg, of Warren county.

Mr. Moody stated the object of the meeting and briefly dwelt upon the issues of the present campaign. The various committees on credentials, resolutions, organization, rules and the like were announced and an adjournment was taken until 2.15 o'clock.

W. Allen Stryker, of Washington, Warren county, was selected as permanent chairman of the convention and the temporary secretaries were made permanent. After he made a short address, announcement was made that nominations for a candidate for Congress were in order. John Moody, of Cranford, placed the name of Mr. Martine before the convention, extolling his political virtues and the great work he has done for his party during the last forty years. The nomination was seconded by Mr. Flanagan, of Morris, and Francis Coyne, of Warren.

Mr. Martine was brought in by a committee appointed by the chairman. The "farmer-orator," after thanking the delegates, launching forth in an attack on the policies of the Republican party in the Philippines and on the Panama question, not forgetting to dwell at length on the effect of the Republican party's tariff law. Before closing he bitterly assailed Congressman Fowler for the speech of acceptance delivered by him at Morristown.

AN UNDERWEAR PLANT MAY COME TO PLAINFIELD

IF $15,000 WORTH OF STOCK IS SUBSCRIBED FOR HERE.

Several statements have been made about a large underwear factory coming here from Fonda, N. Y., but as yet no official reports have been received. Mr. Cone, a member of the company, gives Plainfield the preference of the three towns that are under consideration for suitable locations for the factory. New Brunswick and Freehold are both very eager that the plant should locate with them but Plainfield affords better opportunities for shipment and reaching the New York market.

The company wishes to dispose of $15,000 of stock in Plainfield and the establishment of such a plant here will depend largely upon the amount of stock that is subscribed for by people residing here.

The company will employ nearly a hundred hands with the probability of an increase in number after operations are begun in earnest.

Two or three buildings are under consideration here in Plainfield, and the company secured an option on the Sobeptkin building but it is understood that the interested parties have decided that they do not wish it. If the finishing plant only comes here the company will not find it necessary to erect a building of their own but should the company decide to locate all of their factories here a new building would be the result. An option has also been secured on the Bird property on the northerly side of Fourth street, near Park avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. William Dodd, of Bangor, Ireland, are visiting Mrs. Dodd's brother, Thomas Hanna, of this city.

STATISTICS OF BASEBALL

Records of Plainfield and Westfield in Recent Series.

EXCELLENT SHOWINGS

Hits, Runs, Errors, Strikeouts and Other Facts About the Games.

By way of comparison between the Plainfield A. C. and Westfield teams, it is interesting to note the results of the ten championship contests played this season. There was an extra game on the morning of Labor Day which did not count in the series, but which Plainfield lost. In the ten contests the Plainfield players were at the bat 320 times. They made thirty-one runs, sixty-four base-hits, stole twenty-one bases, made seventeen sacrifice hits, put out 300 opposing batsmen, had 130 assists and made twenty-three errors.

Against the above record the Westfield players were at the bat 305 times, made twenty-seven runs, sixty-one base hits, stole twenty-two bases, made fifteen sacrifice hits, put out 297 opposing batsmen, had 111 assists and made twenty-six errors.

In the matter of being at the bat, Plainfield exceeded them by five, and they made four more runs, three more hits, stole one more base, made two more sacrifice hits than Westfield. They put out seven less batsmen, but have a credit of nineteen more assists and made three errors less than their opponents.

As this record shows, Plainfield had the advantage in many ways, but certain observers of the contests claim that where Plainfield lost the series was in not being able to hit the ball at opportune times. An instance of this was shown in the last game on Saturday. In one inning the Plainfield team had the bases filled and two of the next batsmen struck out and the third flied out to Waller, thus losing an excellent chance to score several runs, provided there was a little hitting. There have been several instances of this kind in the contests.

In only two instances, on May 28 and September 3, did Westfield play an errorless game, while Plainfield played an errorless game on August 27. The most errors made in any one game was by Westfield on September 10, when they made eight misplays. Plainfield's highest number, six, was made in the first contest between the teams on May 28. In the hitting Westfield exceeded Plainfield in the greatest number in any game on June 23, when they pounded Davis up for fifteen. Plainfield made ten off of Waller on June 23. In one game, August 13, Waller was the most effective, allowing Plainfield but one hit, while on August 6, Westfield got but one off of Garvin. There were several games in which both sides were satisfied to get two, three, four and five hits.

The record for strike outs is held by the Plainfield pitchers with a total of seventy-nine against fifty for Westfield, all but three, which Thatcher, of the Brooklyns, had in one game, being credited to Waller. "Red" pitched in all but one game of the series. The highest number of strike outs is credited to Puttmann, of the New York Americans, who fanned thirteen Westfielders. Next comes Garvin with a record of twelve strike outs in his first game against Westfield and nine in the second contest against that aggregation. In his third game he struck out eight batsmen.

Despite these figures which show that Plainfield has been favored in many respects, the team was only able to win four games in the series. There are many who say that the Westfield umpire had much to do with Plainfield's defeat in some of the contests. He no doubt did the best he could, giving the decisions as impartially as he could. That his vision was off at times there is no doubt, but now that the series is concluded, it is poor policy to blame the umpire.

MISS H. M. CUMING NOW MRS. JAMES F. LA RUE

WEDDING AT THE HOME OF THE BRIDE'S PARENTS.

Miss Henrietta Woodward Cuming, of Putnam avenue, and James Frankyn LaRue, of E. Ninth St., were married at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Cuming, of Putnam avenue, Thursday, Rev. A. E. Finn, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist church, officiated.

The maid-of-honor was Miss Helen Frances Cuming, a sister of the bride. The best man was Asher Bissett, a cousin of the groom, and the ushers were Clarence B. LaRue, the groom's nephew, and Henry F. Cuming, a brother of the bride.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, the party entering the room while the strains of the Lohengrin wedding march were played softly on the piano. The ceremony was performed under a floral arch of green and white. The color scheme of the parlor and reception hall was pink and green, while the dining room was decorated in red.

The bride was attired in a gown of white point d'esprit, and carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses. The maid-of-honor was gowned in pink silk mousseline, and carried a bouquet of pink roses. After the ceremony an informal reception was held, at which time the bride and groom received the congratulations of their many friends. They received in the parlor.

After the reception and supper, the young couple left for a three weeks' wedding trip, during which time they will visit the St. Louis Exposition, and will spend some time at Washington. On their return Mr. and Mrs. LaRue will make their home on East Ninth street, of this city.

The bride and groom were handsomely remembered by their many friends with gifts of silverware, cut glass, furniture and china.

MORRISTOWN'S PARADE A COMPLETE SUCCESS

BEAUTIFUL PROCESSION WITNESSED BY MANY THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE.

Pronounced by visitors from every part of the State to have been one of the finest processions of its kind ever seen in New Jersey, the parade of the Morristown fire department passed off successfully Wednesday. Many Plainfielders were included in the thousands of spectators and all are enthusiastic over the manner in which the entire affair was conducted. Chief T. O. Doane was one of the invited guests and had been given a place on the programme but a pressure of other matters prevented his attending.

The procession was greatly enjoyed by Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Force, of Dunr street, the former especially, having been a member of Gazelle Engine Company, of this city, for seventeen years.

Thirty companies and nineteen musical organizations were in line and it required forty minutes for the parade to pass a given point. The Somerville Chemical Company won frequent plaudits for its fine appearance and the "Darktown Fire Brigade," a burlesque, caused much amusement. The decorations were the most elaborate the town ever saw, the buildings being completely hidden by bunting and flags. A notable feature of the day was the fact that all factories, business houses and schools were closed.

H. A. BANQUET.

To be Given by Plainfield Council on October 12.

The Grand Regent of the Royal Arcanum of New Jersey and his staff will be guests of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, at a banquet to be given at Troell Inn, on Park avenue, for members of the Council and its guests. It will take place Wednesday evening, October 12.

Since January, 1903, there have been added to the Council membership seventy-two names and five candidates are now ready to be received. It is the desire of the Council that the membership shall reach the three hundred mark by December 31 next.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 9.

Topic—Helping one another.—Rom. xv. 1-7. (As hearty as possible.)

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

The honorary members of the Christian Endeavor society are not unlike the soldiers who have laid aside the duties of war and have surrendered their places to younger men, yet their interest in the organization and its work does not cease, and with what joy they meet with former comrades and talk over the old days and past experiences! But their interest should not end here. They should keep up an interest in the young and give them whatever possible the advantage of their sympathy and previous experience, and in their turn the young soldiers should keep an interest in them and whenever possible help them and sympathize with them. Age and youth should always co-operate. This is especially true in Endeavor work. "Once an Endeavorer, always an Endeavorer," has ever been Mr. Baer's definition of Christian Endeavor membership. On this occasion, therefore, may a beautiful spirit of sympathy, co-operation and helpfulness be manifested by every Endeavor society throughout the world.

"Helping one another" is one of the cardinal virtues of Christianity. Nor can a true Christian disposition be better manifested than by a sincere, practical interest in the needs of others.

1. Helping one another is a Christian duty. "We, then, that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of others and not to please ourselves." "Ought" is a strong word, but it is given to us for the consultation of personal inclination or desire; it expresses a duty, and it is the duty of Christians to help one another. "Bear ye one another's burdens and thus fulfill the law of Christ" is the injunction given by the Galatians. And how little helps sometimes, though we may not recognize the fact! A kind word, a letter of sympathy, a warm shake of the hand, a prayer, practical assistance—how such things help and cheer us in the journey of life!

2. Helping one another is a blessing. Performed duties are always blessings. "And not to please ourselves." The Christian who ceases to help others soon comes to living simply for himself, and absolute selfishness is the most miserable condition into which we can come. Life becomes limited and stunted. We find ourselves "of all men most miserable." It has been said that giving is the great antidote to miserliness for those who are getting immensely rich or who have great riches. Self interest should encourage us to sympathy and helpfulness for the influence and joy it brings.

3. The purpose of helping one another. "Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification." Spiritual good is the purpose of Christian helpfulness. That should ever be kept in mind. The cup of cold water is given to quench the thirst, but it affords an opportunity to speak to the thirsty one of the living water that quenches the thirst forever.

4. The example of Christ teaches us how to help another. "For even Christ pleased not Himself." He might have done so, but He did not. He is our great example. Let us follow His example in helping others.

In the Ozarks.

At the recent rally of the Kansas City (Mo.) Union Miss Haus gave a very graphic description of how the young women of a society in the Ozarks determined a revolution in their town, another those familiar with the "tone" of a lumber town would appreciate the difficulty of the undertaking. Prayerfully they worked, under sealed orders given out every Sunday, and when the town met in vain, for gradually the leaven began to work, and all but one of the young men accepted Christ during a revival held there a little later. From four active members the society grew to eighty, but the very active members died the end is not yet. This stirring message induced twenty-seven Endeavorers who heard her story to pledge themselves to become soul winners this year.

BEAUTIFUL MR. TOAD

THE NATURALIST FINDS MANY POINTS IN HIM TO ADMIRE.

Silly Superstition Has Blinded the Eyes of Many to the Splendid Dress and Conduct of the Gardener's Friend.

Walk where you will in the twilight of these warm summer evenings, and the chances are that you will meet a toad. He may be hopping along the garden path, with a dignified pause after each hop; he may be skipping out of your way, across a dusty country road, or he may be moving back and forth in the bright field of an electric light. Watch him for a few minutes, and you will begin to take an interest in this lowly, homely, much-despised and often much-abused little creature, for you will find him leading a busy, useful life. To the average person he is simply a toad, very loathsome, probably venomous, and capable of producing warts on the hands of those who are indiscreet enough to touch his rough and unclean body. But give him fair play; judge him on twentieth-century evidence, and not only will these old superstitions be dispelled, but you will find your subject a harmless being, scrupulously clean, and, especially after he has shed his old skin, wonderfully beautiful. Yes, I see that smile of incredulity, but pick him up and look at his eyes, and perhaps you will no longer wonder that it was said that every toad has a jewel in his head. You may be willing to admit that every toad has two jewels in his head, when you look with appreciation at those dark, lustrous orbs with their rings of powdered gold. And that skin, which once you feared to touch, you will find on careful examination to be beautifully marked and tinted. The beauty was there all the time, but the evil of superstition had hidden it from your view.

Now set him gently on the ground, and follow him about at a reasonable distance; watch him off and on for the rest of the summer, and I think you will come to the conclusion that you have many neighbors who do less and talk more about it than your funny old friend the toad. Just make a list of the creatures he eats during the year, and you will find, as Prof. A. H. Kirkland did, that it includes such things as ants, cutworms, thousand-legged worms, tent caterpillars, ground beetles, May beetles, wireworm beetles, weevils, grasshoppers, crickets, spiders, sow-bugs, potato beetles, carrion beetles, snails and angleworms.

When you remember that most of these creatures are injurious to crops, and that during a large part of the year the toad fills his stomach about four times a day with them, you will admit that he does a pretty good season's work for the farmer.

It is in the spring and during the breeding season that the toad's habits have the most say for themselves. At this season hundreds of these little creatures gather in quiet ponds, which are soon awakened into life by the love-song of the males; a musical, rippling song which William Hamilton Gibson describes as the "sweetest sound in nature." Here the females deposit their eggs, very small and black, and set at short intervals in long strings of transparent jelly. A month later the eggs have hatched lying upon the mud at the bottom of the ponds or twined about the water plants which grow there. In about two weeks, the period of incubation depending somewhat on the temperature of the water, the eggs are hatched, and the polywogs wriggle out and begin to feed on the strings of jelly which lately encompassed them. They grow rapidly, and in the course of a few weeks more the legs are developed, the tail is reabsorbed, and the tiny toads leave the water for a life on dry land. They are very sensitive to the sun's rays, and during the day they hide away under all sorts of objects which afford them shade, until evening brings with a shower of rain tempts them out into the cool, moist air. In some cases, after rain, they come out in great numbers, and the country newspapers report that they came down in the shower itself. While these young toads are growing up and eaten by many species of birds, and even after they are full grown they are regarded as regular prey by hawks, owls, snakes, and probably skunks and many other nocturnal creatures. Yet for all that they usually spend their days under cover, doubtless saves them from many creatures which would otherwise prey upon them. Their only means of defense seems to be an acrid secretion of the skin, which is very distasteful to dogs and some other animals, but which quite fails to discourage the birds of prey.

Some time ago I saw a toad shed his old skin. First the skin split in a straight line down the middle of the back, and the toad with his hind legs pulled it down and off as one might pull off a coat. Then, rolling up the skin into a sort of ball, he promptly swallowed it, showing his disinclination to waste anything—even his cast-off clothes.

ERNEST HAROLD BAYNES.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Oct. 9: "Helping One Another."—Rom. xv. 1-7.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES.

"Now, we that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please ourselves."

How that chills our ardor! Just when we have got so we can limp and run and get along fairly well without holding on to things we are not to have the chance to make speed, but must hold up and help along somebody who happens to be lame or just lazy. "How provoking!" If you didn't say that out loud, you did think it and felt it inside.

Why couldn't everybody have been made strong and reasonable and nice? How much pleasanter it would have been for us if everybody had been made so as to be kind and agreeable to us! The world would have been much more attractive to us, and we should have been happier. So we think.

Well, things and folks were not all made that way, and certain. So the more important question for us to answer is, "What shall we best do about it?"

Perhaps as good a beginning as we can make will be to look around carefully and see how many weak ones there are whom we are called to help carry. It may be well to look over their infirmities so as to know better what our burden is to be. If you dare to, take a paper and set down the names and after them put in plain terms the chief difficulty with each one as you see it. When this list is finished go over it and think in each case what is needed to make that one just right and just that one's own.

Now take yourself in hand and make an inventory of your strength. Be careful not to miss any point of excellence or underrate its value. Incidentally you may perhaps have some thanksgiving and praising to do. Don't stop for that unless to jot it down in a place by itself. If any others appear, put them together. This is a real scientific way to study your work and the means at hand for doing it. If you have never tried this do not pass the suggestion lightly by. If you will give it a fair trial you will learn more about yourself and your neighbors in a little time than you ever imagined possible.

You will also learn something besides, possibly of more worth. You will awake to the fact that folks are all very much alike. All have some infirmity and each has some power.

Beyond this lies another truth. You will discover a law for having together. Each is needed by the others. None are so weak but they can help somehow. None are so strong but they need help at some time. Interdependence and not Independence is the condition in which we find ourselves. We must help one another.

Look a bit deeper and you will see the reason for this and bless God that He has placed weakness and strength over against each other so closely in this world.

When you stop using your strength in exhibition athletics and begin to pick up some of the infirmities you have listed, you get a new insight into living. You discover first of all that you are not as strong as you thought you were and not quite as clever. It sobers and humbles some. It hurts, but that doesn't harm you. It is the beginning of learn how to carry more easily. Skill comes with practice.

Soon you learn something else. You can carry bigger loads than at first. You are stronger than you were or than you thought you were. Then you feel better.

At first the work may be irksome and done only from a sense of duty. At length you get accustomed to it, then get to like to do it, and finally your whole life becomes absorbed in it. Then some glad day you are aroused to the fact that you have come into closest fellowship with Jesus and are doing His work. You have learned the mystery of happiness. It lies in the highlands of character beyond the hills of helpfulness.

The Rising Tide.

The tide is rising. It submerges point after point of weedy rock and runs farther and farther up into the clefts of the craggy shore, each wave flinging its crest upon the upper levels, to pour back in noisy waterfalls whose music dies to silence as the next wave comes. Up the rock ladder toward the lower pool the breakers climb and climb. At last a single wave throws its spray over the barrier wall, and as its drops fall life stirs in all the shady hollows under kelp fringe and waving weed. Stillness returns and then another dash of spray, a climbing wave whose crest falls over, a swift recurring tribute from the sea of its impoverished self. Until at last the ocean takes the pool to its embrace again to nourish and delight it and prepare it for renewed trial of loneliness when the tide goes out. It has the sorrow of waiting; it has also the patience of hope. If for awhile it lies bare to the sun's rays and the wind's buffeting, it belongs by nature and by expectation to the power and beauty and purpose of the sea that never fails to come to its relief. So God's purpose and refreshment include our waiting as completely as our active hours, and so His help is sure. But the poor, self dependent pool, to whose assistance the ocean never climbs, shrinks in the day and gathers the dust of the world and withers away at last with heat and drought, unsatisfied.—Congregationalist.

BOOKS REPRESENTED BY THESE YOUNG PEOPLE

LOTS OF FUN AT FIRST BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETY SOCIAL.

A congenial and fun-loving crowd was the one which attended the social of the Young People's Society, of the First Baptist church Thursday, and which helped to make the affair the most successful which has ever been given by the society. About eighty young people were present. The affair was a "book social," in which every one represented some book either by their actions or by costume. This method of entertainment together with other social games lead to promote the good humor of the crowd and to make the young people better acquainted, and all traces of formality were laid aside.

Though many of those who attended the social were clever in their representations of the various books, the following are especially worthy of mention: Miss Ada Drake, who won the prize, representing "The Fatal Marriage;" Dr. Norman Probasco, "The Little Minister;" Miss Velma Oakley, "Oliver Twist;" Miss Harriet Mattison, "American History;" Miss Ada L. Mackey, "Lambs Essays;" Miss Ella J. Mackey, "Les Miserables;" Miss Moffett, "Rose in Bloom;" Miss Johnson and Miss Esta Moffett, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch;" Miss Ethel Webster, "Five Little Peppers;" Miss Cook, "Clover;" Miss Adams, "Under Two Flags;" Miss Etta Acker, "Beautiful Joe;" Miss Florence Moffett, "American Notes;" Miss Florence White, "The Scarlet Letter;" Miss Etta Lewis, "The Four Feathers;" Guion Fountain, "Opening of the Chestnut Burr;" Miss Fanny Devlen, "The Fatal Wedding;" Miss Ada Fountain, "Black Rock;" Miss Emily Cortell, "Beside the Bonny Brier Bush;" Miss Carver, "To Have and to Hold;" Miss Mary Moffett, "Pan and Pressens;" Mrs. Mallison, "Through the Eye of a Needle;" Frank Simons, "World's End;" Harry Allen, "The Telegram;" Gideon Fountain, "We Two;" Cory Adams, "The Tale of Two Cities."

At the conclusion of the games refreshments of ice cream and cake were served by the committee, composed of the following members: Miss Velma F. Oakley, chairman; Miss Harriet Mattison, Miss Anna Mackey, Miss Ella Mackey, Mrs. J. S. Probasco and Fred Armstrong.

RESENTS OUSTING FROM STATE COMMITTEE

W. J. KEYS, OF SOMERSET, INDIGNANT AT DELEGATES ACTION.

Former Senator William J. Keys, who was recently turned down as the Democratic State convention for re-election as a member of the State committee from Somerset County, feels highly indignant over the action of the delegates and the treatment accorded him by Senator Childs, who was elected his successor.

After relating how he had labored to advance the interest of the party in this county the former Senator said:

"When I heard there was a movement on foot to retire me I consulted with those whom I had always considered my friends. Sheriff MacKurtzy, Surrogate De Mond and Senator Childs all assured me there was no sentiment against me, and that I would be re-elected. Childs declared he would have nothing to do with the State committee, and that he would like to see me retained as the member from Somerset. Feeling that my interests were safe in the hands of my friends, I abandoned any further effort on my part to secure my re-election. When the delegates convened Childs was nominated and elected. He did not decline the honor, and I feel that he has not treated me fairly. If he had said he wanted the place I would have made a fight, and I am satisfied I would have won out. I purpose to continue a resident of Somerset County, and will vote here in the future as I have done in the past fourteen years."

Malcolm Strong, of Central avenue, has entered the Belcher School in California as a student.

ANNUAL CONVENTION

Union County's Temperance Workers Re-Elect Mrs. Tomlinson President.

Plainfield, as well as all other parts of Union County, was well represented at the annual convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, of the county, held at Elizabeth, Thursday, it being one of the most enthusiastic gatherings held in recent years. Encouraging features were that the county membership is now 835, a gain of twenty-six over last year, and that there is a balance in the treasury.

Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, of this city, presided at the convention. The morning was devoted to the presentation of reports and election of officers. The principal officers being chosen as follows:

President, Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, Plainfield; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Morris L. Marick, of Dunellen; recording secretary, Mrs. J. B. Robertson, of Cranford; treasurer, Mrs. M. P. Cox, of Cranford; superintendent of soldier and sailor work, Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, of Plainfield; superintendent Sabbath observance, Mrs. Mary Winter, of Plainfield; delegate to the National convention, Mrs. Decker, of Elizabeth; alternate, Miss J. S. Robertson, of Cranford.

The afternoon session was devoted to reports, reception of visitors and a memorial service for the members who have passed away during the past year. There was also a soprano solo by Miss Decker, of Elizabeth, and a recitation by Walter Ford, of Elizabeth.

In the evening Rev. James Parker, of Jersey City, Prohibition candidate for Governor of the State, made the address. It was a convincing and persuasive argument in favor of prohibition and the abolition of the liquor traffic.

It was announced that the Union County Institute will be held in Plainfield in May, 1905.

GAVE GARDEN PARTY FOR WOMEN'S EXCHANGE

CHARMING EVENT ON LAWN HAD MANY FEATURES.

A garden party in aid of the Women's Exchange was held Thursday afternoon on the grounds of Mrs. H. M. Stockton's residence on Central avenue. The articles for sale were arranged on tables placed on the lawn on both sides of the house at some little distance apart. These were draped in a very picturesque manner with leaves and vines and decorated with flowers. The candy table was particularly attractive, and the gypsy tents, where two fortune tellers gave exhibitions of palmistry, were also very pretty, arranged with carpets and cushions. The tea table was placed out in the porch.

The tables were presided over as follows: Mrs. William Stillman and Mrs. Taylor, cake table; Mrs. Lemuel Serrell, lemonade table; Mrs. Howard Tracy, tea table; Mrs. Harry Hill and Mrs. and Miss Ubler, fancy work and useful articles; Mrs. Burton Hall, candy table; Mrs. Martin, ice cream; gypsy camp, Mrs. Maxwell, Miss May Redmond and Master Alan Stewart; fortune tellers, Miss Julia Redmond, Brownies tent. Miss W. A. Reinhardt was in charge of the waitresses.

The reception committee was composed of Mrs. O. T. Waring, who is president of the Women's Exchange, and Mrs. Julia M. VanBuren and Miss Elizabeth Cook, the two vice presidents. Mrs. Stockton, who gave the use of the lawn for the occasion and rendered other valuable aid was also present and took part in making it pleasant for everyone.

During the afternoon ping pong and clock golf contests were held under the direction of Mrs. Maxwell. The former was not concluded but at the time when play ceased Mrs. Maxwell was leading with Mrs. Lemuel Serrell and Mrs. Butler close behind. The clock golf contest resulted in a tie between Miss Julia Redmon and Miss Stewart, but in the final game, played to decide upon the winner, the latter fell to the former. Owing to the dull weather the attendance was not so large as it might have been, but in spite of this a profit of about $160 was made.

J. F. BUCKLE IS NOMINATED

Naming of Republican Ticket Proves to be a Cut and Dried Affair.

DR. HEDGES, CHAIRMAN

Banyon for Judgeship, Probasco, School Commissioner, and Hubbard and Westphal Once Again for Board of Freeholders.

Perfect harmony, in fact love feast, prevailed at the Republican City Convention held Thursday at headquarters in the Babcock building. The announcement previously made that there would be no contests was absolutely true and the actual time consumed in placing a ticket in nomination did not exceed twenty minutes. The slate as prepared went through without a hitch of any kind, there being not even a murmur in opposition. While the entire delegation from the four wards was not complete, it was nearly so. However, this made no difference as the roll was not called.

James F. Buckle.

As chairman of the Republican City Committee, Mayor O. L. Jenkins, called the convention to order. Dr. B. VanD. Hedges, of the Second ward, was chosen chairman and George S. Wean was made secretary. The call of the convention was read, after which the chairman appointed John H. Doane, of the Second ward, inspector; John Case, of the Third ward, judge, and Harry C. Runyon, of the Fourth ward, teller.

The first business was that of proceeding to the nomination of a candidate for Mayor. The roll was called by wards, the First, through Charles S. Smisek, nominated former Councilman James F. Buckle, and in so doing mentioned the fact that he had served the city faithfully for years and conducted well to the National standard-bearers of the party. The Second, Third and Fourth wards seconded the nomination of Mr. Buckle and the secretary was instructed to cast the ballot for him.

Next was the nomination of a candidate for City Judge. The First ward had no nomination, but when the Second ward, through Dr. T. S. Davis, nominated the present incumbent, William E. Banyon, it joined with the Third and Fourth wards in seconding the nomination and the secretary cast the ballot.

In nominating a candidate for school commissioner, City Clerk J. T. MacMurray, from the First ward, presented the name of Dr. J. S. Probasco to succeed himself. The nomination was seconded by the Second, Third and Fourth wards and the secretary cast the ballot.

The First and Second wards had no nominations for two members of the Board of Chosen Freeholders, but the Third ward nominated J. Frank Hubbard, of that ward, to succeed himself and the Fourth ward nominated William A. Westphal, of that ward, to succeed himself. Harry B. MacDonald nominated Mr. Hubbard and Harry C. Runyon presented the name of Mr. Westphal.

S. P. T. Wilbur had previously been mentioned as a candidate for Freeholder, but he withdrew his name before the convention was held, and his name was not brought before the delegates.

On motion of J. T. MacMurray, the chairman appointed a committee, one member from each ward, to fill vacancies, if any should occur on the ticket. Those selected were First ward, James T. MacMurray; Second ward, Dr. T. S. Davis; Third ward, Harry B. MacDonald; Fourth ward, Harry C. Runyon. After the appointment of this committee the convention adjourned.

VISITS PLAINFIELD AFTER 32 YEARS ABSENCE

FORMER POLICEMAN ON DUTY ON NIGHT OF GREAT FIRE.

After an absence of thirty-two years from the city, George Schinl, who was a member of the Plainfield police force in the early days, has been visiting friends and relatives here. He is now a resident of Philadelphia. During his visit he has noted many changes and he hardly knew the town. Thirty-two years ago he was on the police force here, and at the same time he had a shoe shop on Somerset street just back of Chris. Gloeckner's saloon. He was on duty as policeman the night of the big fire, Saturday, May 4, 1873, when the destruction of the city was threatened. He was also a member of Gazelle Engine Company and the old volunteer department.

The fire broke out Saturday morning, May 4, 1873, at 1 o'clock, in the building on the north side of Front street, near Somerset street, and Mr. Schinl discovered the flames coming from the rear of Bachman's dry goods store. Simultaneously the fire was observed by Officers Sleeper and Clark, who were approaching from opposite directions. Officer Clark ran to the M. E. church, and sounded the alarm by ringing the bell, while Officer Sleeper proceeded to the Second Presbyterian church and rang the bell there. Joseph A. Hubbard also rang the bell in the Seventh-Day Baptist church.

The fire spread on the south from Bachman's store to S. S. Vermeule's clothing store, thence to O. Runyon's furniture warerooms, thence to E. Dunn's meat market, which were all destroyed; thence to Mrs. Conklin's notion store, where the flames were checked. The total number of stores destroyed were those occupied by Mrs. Conklin, O. Runyon, Peter Dunn, S. S. Vermeule, G. Bachman, William H. Voorhees, J. O. Campbell and M. Giles, the latter two and the first named being damaged mostly by water. The total loss was $61,534 and the insurance amounted to $58,000.

5TH DIST. DEMOCRATS FOR EQUAL TAXATION

PLATFORM AS ADOPTED AT CONVENTION THIS AFTERNOON.

The resolutions adopted ratify the platform of the National convention at St. Louis and pledges support to Parker and Davis, and then state: "We condemn the usurpation by the present executive of the Legislative functions, believing that the limitations to the Constitution of our government as adopted by the fathers is essential to the maintenance of free republican institutions.

"We favor such reduction of the tariff as will secure equality of the burdens and the equality of opportunities, believing that the present system fosters trusts and monopolies, the enemies of fair trade and free competition, and further believe such revision should be made by friends of the people and not by those who profit by the evils of monopoly."

After approving the State platform and pledging united support to Charles O. Black, the gubernatorial candidate, the resolutions say: "Equal taxation is the paramount issue of our State campaign. This is a question so important and of vital consequence to the people of the State that every citizen is interested in its solution." Expression is made that Mr. Black is the most capable man to be selected to see that equal taxation is brought about. The failure of the present Republican State administration to bring about reforms in taxation is pointed out. The Republicans tel each campaign, according to the resolutions, what they will do, but in ten years of complete control have done nothing.

"The use of money for corruption purposes at elections is condemned and the declaration made that representatives to Congress should be elected by the free will of the people unhampered by the free use of money at the polls."

Building Permits.

A building permit has been issued to Robert Slorah, of 1116 West Front street, who intends to put up a dwelling house of two and a half stories, and measuring 24 feet front, 34 feet rear, and 28 feet deep. The architect is W. H. Olum, the masons, Leland & Thompson, and the carpenter Louis Bock, all of this city. A frame building is also to be erected by John H. Kenney, at 358 East Second street. It will be two and a half stories high and will measure 26x36x28 feet. Walter Wykoff and Michael D. Keeffe, of this city, are mason and carpenter, respectively.

COMMON COUNCIL THOROUGHLY AROUSED OVER EAST FRONT STREET "SPITE" HOUSE

Former Mayor Randolph Lays Bare Story of Alleged Attempt to Extort Money.

PETITIONER ATTACKS BUILDING INSPECTOR

Pierre Mali Joins in Mr. Randolph's Complaint and City Fathers Order That Corporation Counsel Marsh and Building Committee Take Action in the Matter.

The lengthy communication presented to the Common Council at its regular meeting Monday by Former Mayor L. V. F. Randolph, of East Front street, was one that called for earnest and serious consideration on the part of the members. The matter referred to Mr. Randolph's recent troubles in his own neighborhood with the "neighborhood wreckers," and he presented a complete and exhaustive report of the subject, of the alleged wrong that had been done him by the Italians and others who have sought to exact an exorbitant price from him for property in the vicinity of his own.

Mr. Randolph reviewed the matter from its inception three years ago when he purchased property opposite his residence and improved the same. He spoke of the plan to extort money from neighboring property-owners and failing in this so-called "spite-houses" were erected as a nuisance and menace to adjoining property-owners.

The petitioner in detail gave the real estate transactions in regard to the Magie property, formerly held by the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company under mortgage and how the same was offered to Robert Cannon for $2,500. It was afterward occupied by Italians, Antonio Mara and family. He said that he had received communications from and had been approached by lawyers, real estate agents and Italians seeking to dispose of this property to him at various figures.

Mr. Randolph says that he paid no attention to these persons and when they learned of his determination, they sought to annoy him by the erection of the "spite-house" and the occupation of the property by a large number of Italians.

He then mentioned the fact that on October 23, 1903, the property was transferred to Charles Beck and after that Italians called on him and sought to have him purchase it. Again they failed. Then other nuisances were introduced such as dogs and at the time between thirty and forty Italians were living on the place.

Mr. Randolph says that he called the attention of Mayor Jenkins to the matter, but no relief was afforded. He then reported it to the Board of Health and this body had Antonio Mara arrested for violation of health ordinances. He then went on to give a brief account of the recent city court proceedings at which time Mara was found guilty on four different counts.

Mr. Randolph then devotes considerable space to criticism of Building Inspector T. O. Doane, whom he charges with having granted a permit for the erection of the "spite-house" when he must have known that the plans and application did not conform to the building ordinance. He alleges that Chief Doane not only gave one permit, but a double one which allows the erection of another building of similar proportions and that the Italians have threatened to erect the second building. He states that the present building is three feet from the property line, which he claims is a violation of the ordinance, and he also mentions the fact that the Italians are permitted to build first outdoors for cooking purposes and that the stench therefrom is a great nuisance. He asks that the building inspector be called to account for issuing such permits, especially when he knew the circumstances, and he asks relief from the conditions with all possible haste.

City Clerk J. T. MacMurray, after reading the communication, which required about thirty minutes, suggested to the Common Council that the matter receive their earliest attention.

The matter was referred to the fire and building committee with instructions to confer with Corporation Counsel Marsh with a view to early relief. Mr. Garrigues suggested that the assistance of Mr. Marsh be obtained at once, while Mr. Daniel moved that the fire and building committee take such action as is necessary and proper in the premises and that the corporation counsel be authorized to do likewise from a legal standpoint. The motion was adopted, it being the sense of the members that speedy relief is necessary.

Another communication on the same subject was received from Pierre Mali, in which he personally protested against the invasion on East Front street. This was referred to the street and sewer committee.

NEW DEMOCRATIC CLUB

Party United in North Plainfield for Vigorous Campaign.

D. J. CARNEY, PRESIDENT

Club Rooms at No. 79 Somerset Street—Already Has 75 Members.

The North Plainfield Democratic Club was organized last Friday at its room at 79 Somerset street. A large number of enthusiastic Democrats were present and over seventy-five members were enrolled. The meeting was called to order by David J. Carney. Levi Kline was elected temporary chairman and Bert Bodine, secretary.

Nominations for president of the club were called for. David J. Carney and W. J. Conroy were proposed. The ballot resulted in 49 votes for Mr. Carney and 23 votes for Mr. Conroy. The other officers elected were as follows: Vice presidents, John H. VanWinkle, Jr., A. E. Kenney and C. W. Harding; secretary, L. B. Bodine; treasurer, M. M. French.

The president took the chair amid cheers and made a speech, thanking the club for the honor of election, and stated that the rooms would be open during the campaign and he wanted every Democrat to make use of them.

The club room is beautifully decorated and the room presented a very attractive appearance. Parker and Davis lithographs and portraits of Congressional candidate Robert L. Stevens adorn the walls. A piano will be installed today. A telephone is to be installed so the club will be right up to date.

A. E. Kenney made a stirring address while others spoke a few words of encouragement and all present seemed enthusiastic. The meeting adjourned to meet next Wednesday night.

SEBRING'S BUILDING ON HAND'S PROPERTY

ONE-STORY STRUCTURE MAY BE TORN DOWN AS RESULT.

Failure on the part of Charles P. Sebring to have his property on Watchung avenue adjoining the trolley terminus properly surveyed when he erected a one-story brick building on it a short time ago, may result in his having to tear the structure down. It adjoins the driveway belonging to and leading to the rear of the corner lot recently bought by Charles H. Hand and J. P. Homan, on which they propose to erect a flat building. In order to get its proper dimensions they had a surveyor map it out a few days since and it disclosed the fact that Sebring's building is two feet over their line.

He has been notified of the encroachment and unless some agreement can be reached, it is possible that the Sebring building will have to be set back and this will necessitate its partial demolition. The mistake is attributed to the fact that Sebring used the old fence line running down the driveway as a boundary, but it had evidently been shifted over. The building is occupied by Isaac Hatfield and T. A. Gathwaite as a fruit and lunch store.

R. A. ENTERTAINMENT.

Greenbrook Council Preparing for a Big Time Next Month.

Albert E. Willard, manager of the Plainfield Amateur Dramatic Club, goes to New York on Tuesday next to arrange for a band of professionals to give an entertainment during the early part of next month under the auspices of the Royal Arcanum, Green brook Council, No. 1725. There will be musical teams, sketch artists and specialties, and it will be one of the most high class entertainments given in this city for a long time.

The club met last night and transacted some routine business. It has now been reorganized for the winter season and expects to give frequent entertainments in Plainfield and elsewhere at which the best class of professional and local talent will be employed, and a special arrangement has been made with some professionals in New York, whereby their services can be secured at any time during the winter.

New members who have been admitted to the club are Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Linbarger, Miss Lottie Willard, who has just come from Buffalo, and Lou Schermerhorn, of New York, who, with his parents, expects to settle in Plainfield shortly.

TO PUT BAN ON CANDY

Children's Health Ruined by Cheap Confectionery.

PHYSICIAN'S DISCOVERY

Dr. Buchanan Finds a Startling Condition and School Board May Act.

Alarmed by the condition of many pupils examined by him in his routine as school physician, Dr. J. H. Buchanan has recommended to the Borough Board of Education that something be done to prevent the children from eating cheap candy, which they now do practically in a wholesale way. Out of 500 pupils taken from various classes a short time ago, he found more than half of them with their tongues coated with the indelible analine dyes, which in some instances are used largely to color confectionery intended for sale in penny lots. Many of them told him it had been there for some time and its presence explained to him why they complained of various stomach ailments. Its continued consumption is apt to lead to serious complications and it is a matter of record that candy dyes have proven fatal.

The school board is powerless to prevent the sale of the candy or take any aggressive step in the matter but it is possible that the parents of pupils would be asked to co-operate in getting the children to stop eating it. In speaking of the matter, Superintendent Wightman said the practice is prevalent in both of the borough schools and frequently pupils have had coated tongues for a week at a time. While none of them have been made seriously ill, cases where children have been troubled with indigestion can be directly traced to candy eating. On the city side of the brook, the same trouble exists, only it is not quite so prevalent as in the borough.

REPUBLICANS TO HOLD FOUR MASS-MEETINGS

CONGRESSMAN FOWLER AND LEE FAIRCHILD TO BE AMONG SPEAKERS.

Arrangements have been made for Republican mass meetings to be held in this city on October 13, 20, 27 and November 3. At the meeting on October 27, Congressman Charles N. Fowler and Lee Fairchild, of California, who made so favorable an impression here eight years ago, will be among the speakers.

It has been found impossible for Mr. Fowler to speak here at an earlier date on account of his decision to take the stump in Morris and Warren counties first and reserve his own county for the last. Congressman Barlow, of Connecticut, who is a brilliant orator, will also speak at one of the meetings, but until a conference has been held with the State Committee it is impossible to say on what date he will be here. The City Committee has arranged for the formation of a double quartette which will render campaign music at the various mass meetings and at headquarters.

The Republican Headquarters are now open to the public from 11 a. m. until 10 p. m., and a committee appointed for the purpose will obtain a piano shortly and arrange for the holding of musical entertainments. Freeholder William A. Westphal is now in charge of headquarters and will be glad to receive Republican voters. Campaign literature is being busily distributed and lithographs and buttons can also be had on application.

OLD RESIDENT DEAD.

William B. Manning, Aged Eighty-Four, Passes Away at His Home in South Plainfield.

William B. Manning, one of the oldest and best known residents of South Plainfield, died at his home there Friday afternoon, after nearly a year's illness. He was eighty-four years old and had lived in that section nearly all his life. He leaves a widow and four children. The latter are Albert Manning, the Misses Laura and Anna Manning, who live at South Plainfield, and Mrs. William Voorhees, of Asbury Park. He was a member of the South Plainfield Baptist church.

Veteran Voters.

Dunellen boasts of a citizen, John Beekman Conover, who says that if he lives until Election Day, he will cast his fiftieth consecutive Democratic ballot in his district, and Abner S. Corieil in New Market, who will place in the ballot box as the coming election his sixty-second Republican ticket in that election district. Both have always voted in their election district, it is doubtful whether the record can be beaten.

EAGLES HAVE A BIG TIME

Institution of Plainfield Aerie, F. O. E., Largest Fraternal Gathering in Years.

500 MEN IN PARADE

Programme Concludes With Banquet and Speeches—New Organization Starts With 110 Members—The Various Committees.

Amid a blaze of oratory, music and red fire, Plainfield Aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, became a reality last Tuesday and started on its career with a membership of 110. The programme as announced was carried out to the letter but it was 5 o'clock this morning before the last speech was made and the birds from other climes flew back to their nests. The public side of the institution was one of the most spectacular that has yet taken place in the city and thousands of people viewed the fireworks and parade. In every way it was a decided success and it is doubtful if any local fraternal order started off more auspiciously.

Eagles began gathering in the city early in the day and at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the work of institution and installation of officers began at Eagle Hall on West Second street. State Deputy John Fury and staff, of Camden, were in charge and their duties were discharged in a commendable manner. It was after 9 o'clock before this part of the affair was concluded and it was immediately followed by the street parade.

In all 500 men were in line, the delegations present representing aeries at New York, Newark, Jersey City, Elizabeth, Bayonne, Paterson, Brooklyn and Carlstadt. Patrick J. Neville, chairman of the reception committee, of Plainfield Aerie, acted as marshal and led the procession. Music was furnished by James' full band, of Elizabeth, and the Independent Fife and Drum Corps, of this city. Two automobiles were in the front division, carrying Lewis Coombs, of Garwood, and a party of friends, and Charles E. Burtis, of Westfield, with well known Westfield and Elizabeth Eagles. "Georgie" Carroll, of Elizabeth, smiled beamingly on the crowds from his seat in a small cart, hauled by his trick donkey, "Maude." He made good progress despite interference of small boys until an enthusiast set "Maude's" coat afire with a skyrocket and she laid down on Liberty street. The parade went on leaving Carroll behind but both he and "Maude" showed up at the finish. Another feature of the procession was the military team of the Elizabeth aerie in full uniform, escorting their trained goat, "Nanny deHarison," on which the new members had to ride their way to the pinnacle of Eagledom.

Owing to the lateness of the hour at which the parade was concluded, only a small number of the new aerie were initiated, the remainder taking the obligation in unison. At 1 o'clock the banquet began in Eagle Hall and while it was in progress, speeches and toasts were given. Among those who spoke were Worthy President Burke, of Elizabeth aerie, Worthy Physician Burnett, of Elizabeth aerie and the other officers of the local aerie. Songs were contributed by "Georgie" Carroll, Hugo Mann and James Kermode, the latter two of Plainfield, and oberines by the entire gathering. A brief history of Eagledom was related by Edwin Galbraith, of this city, who is a member of Hoboken aerie and who is the pioneer Eagle in Union County.

John W. Fitzgerald, private secretary to State Deputy Furey, was also present and made an address.

The committees which had charge of the entire programme were subservient to the reception committee composed as follows: Patrick J. Neville, chairman; John Butler, David Angerbauer and Daniel Shea. Rudolph Schempf, who is practically the father of Plainfield aerie, was active everywhere and assistance was had by all his fellow members. The decorations throughout the business district were elaborate and many floats had displays of fireworks in addition to those provided by the aerie.

Receipts for Twelve Months $2,167.26—The New Officers.

Officers were elected and reports presented at the annual meeting of the Plainfield Relief Association, held at the rooms this morning. Mrs. Charles E. Brooks, who has served the association as secretary for several years, resigned, and Miss Grace Pierson, of Watchung avenue, was elected in her place. Mrs. Francis DeLacey Hyde was added to the Board of Managers. These officers were chosen for the coming year:

President, Mrs. J. K. Myers; vice president, Mrs. C. E. Ryder; treasurer, Mrs. Henry Lapsley; secretary, Miss Grace Pierson; executive committee—Miss Mary Eleanor Tweedy, Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Mrs. Leander N. Lovell, Mrs. Robert Lowry, Mrs. Lindsey Best, Mrs. H. M. Maxson; advisory board—E. B. Clark, H. P. Reynolds, E. B. Ackerman, Mason W. Tyler, C. W. McCutchen, J. M. Whiton; auditors—Mason W. Tyler and D. H. Rowland. The Board of Managers, comprising twenty-five women, is the same as last year, with the addition of Mrs. Francis DeLacey Hyde.

In the reports presented it was shown that seventy-nine families received aid during the year, including the following nationalities: Americans, twenty-eight; colored, twenty-seven; Irish, nineteen; German, two; Pole, two; Italian, one. The report of the employment bureau shows that twenty-eight persons were helped gratuitously. There were 526 garments cut and eighty-four hats trimmed. Forty men were employed in the wood-yard. The sewing class met every Friday afternoon from January to April, with an average attendance of seven. The treasurer's report shows receipts of $2,167.30 and the disbursements to be $2,123.56.

An appeal is made for additional assistance in the maintenance of the wood-yard. This has been found an excellent means of keeping certain men employed and the association ask for increased patronage so that a new shed can be built.

MRS. LEE'S STEPSON DROWNED IN NEW MEXICO

SECOND COUSIN TO FAMOUS GENERAL LOSES HIS LIFE.

Mrs. Bessie Lee, of East Ninth street, daughter of Rev. William H. Neilson, received a telegram yesterday informing her of the death by drowning of her stepson, A. N. Lee, at Carlsbad, New Mexico. Mr. Lee, who is about twenty-two years of age, had been at Carlsbad since last May and he was formulating plans for locating in that part of the country permanently. No particulars have as yet been received as to how the accident occurred or in what waters the young man drowned. In speaking of the affair today, Mr. Neilson remarked that the accident is quite a mystery to the family as Mr. Lee was an expert swimmer.

Mr. Lee was the son of Edmund J. Lee, of West Virginia, and a second cousin to Robert E. Lee, of the Confederacy. Prior to going to Carlsbad, he spent some time in this city.

Rescues Club's Topic.

Personal reminiscences of vacation experiences was the topic of an interesting discussion at the first fall meeting of the Rescues Club, held at the home of Mrs. Josephine Lapsley, on First place, yesterday. The time was spent in a profitable manner. Mrs. Samuel Milliken, of Central avenue, will entertain the club on Tuesday, October 18.

Local Insurance Man a Guest.

William V. Mundy, of this city, was a guest at the quarterly conference and dinner of the Insurance Association of the State at Newark, Monday. The affair was largely attended and one of the most successful that has yet been held.

Infant Daughter Dead.

Helen Strong, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Strong, died Monday night at the home of the parents, on Webster place.

HUNT CLUB ORGANIZED

George P. Mellick Presided at Meeting Last Night.

OFFICERS CHOSEN

L. E. Waring Selected as President—Encouraging Outlook for the Club.

The Watchung Hunt Club effected permanent organization at the meeting in the Casino last evening, electing officers and adopted the by-laws of the club. George P. Mellick presided and S. A. Cruikshank acted as secretary. The first business of the meeting was the adoption of by-laws presented to the club by a committee consisting of G. P. Mellick, S. A. Cruikshank, and Dr. Knott. The laws were read by the secretary and approved.

At the meeting of the stewards the following officers were elected: President, L. E. Waring; vice president, Charles M. Freeman; secretary, S. A. Cruikshank; treasurer, G. S. Ring; master of hounds, Dr. M. O'M. Knott. After a general outline of the plans for the future was drawn up, the stewards adjourned.

Following the adoption of the by-laws, a Board of seven stewards was appointed to meet at the close of the meeting, and elect the officers of the club. The following were chosen on the Board of Stewards: L. E. Waring, Charles M. Freeman, S. A. Cruikshank, George S. Ring, George P. Mellick, H. A. Bourand and Dr. Knott. A general discussion followed the appointment of the stewards at which the time and place for the various hunts was considered.

The next hunt will take place Saturday, starting from New Market. The dues set by the temporary organization were enforced by the stewards, a charge of $15 being made for yearly membership. The dues of juveniles will be $10. After the membership has reached one hundred, an initiation fee of $15 will be charged.

There are at present forty regular members of the club, and about twenty-five applications await the consideration of the Board. There are ten women in the organization. In accordance with the custom of regularly organized hunt clubs, the Watchung Club will claim Middlesex County as their hunts. A committee of which C. M. S. Bellows is chairman was appointed to solicit the good will of the farmers, and to pay for all damage done to property. Before the regular meeting adjourned, C. E. S. Bellows and H. A. Shebbeare were appointed whips.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY COMMITTEE IN SESSION

CHALLENGERS NAMED AND MASS-MEETINGS ARRANGED.

The list of challengers from various parts of Union county was presented at the meeting of the Republican County Committee, held in Elizabeth, last night, and the list of the various mass meetings to be held in the county before election was completed, as far as possible. It was announced that there would be a monster mass meeting in Elizabeth on Saturday night, November 5, for the colored voters. Speakers of prominence will be present on that occasion.

Plainfields list of challengers will be presented later, those at the meeting from here not being prepared to report. It was the opinion of the committee that the prospects for a large Republican vote in the county on election day are bright and declared that it is believed that the whole ticket would be elected.

Those present at the meeting from Plainfield were Frank H. Smith, William Newsom, James Morrison and Jame F. Buckle.

Plainfield Golfers' Showing.

The Atlantic City Daily Press, of Saturday, has the following item of interest to Plainfielders: "Arthur Peterson and Roger F. Murray came in 1 up in the first 18 holes of a foursome with B. C. Tillinghast and Walter Peterson, on the Northfield Golf Club course on Friday, but the latter pair retaliated in the last 18 holes, making the match all even.

Funeral of Mrs. Wittman.

The funeral of Mrs. Emelia Wittman, of Mt. Bethel, who died Saturday, was held from her late residence, Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The service was in charge of Rev. Mr. Bowers, of Mt. Bethel. Interment was made in the Mt. Bethel cemetery.

FRACTURED HIS SKULL; RELATIVES CAN'T EXPLAIN

DANIEL F. DUGAN MYSTERIOUSLY MEETS WITH SERIOUS MISHAP.

Daniel F. Dugan, the well-known real estate dealer, lies at his home on East Seventh street, with a fractured skull and other injuries received some time early this morning in a manner not yet known to his relatives. He was brought to his residence by two men, then in an unconscious condition, both of whom went away as soon as he was in the house. Dr. Boone was called and on examination the physician found that his condition was serious but it has since improved.

Mrs. Dugan said that her husband had been in New York last evening and returned on the 1:17 train. She declared that he had not been hurt while in the metropolis as no one seen to get off the train and was then all right. She decried knowing who the two men were who had brought him home or in what way he met with the severe injury. Dugan remained unconscious before noon but as yet is in no condition to relate what happened to him.

No official report of the accident was made at police headquarters, but when word of it came late in the morning Acting Chief Frederickson ordered an investigation to be made. As yet nothing definite has been learned but in the estimation of the police Dugan fell and struck a flag sidewalk or some projection.

BIG MASS MEETING FOR TOMORROW NIGHT

FORMER MAYOR ALEXANDER GILBERT TO PRESIDE AT RALLY.

Arrangements are complete for the first Republican mass meeting to be held tomorrow night at Reform Hall. It will mark the opening of the campaign in this city and plans have been perfected to make the meeting a rousing one. Former Mayor Alexander Gilbert has been chosen to act as chairman of the meeting.

Hon. Oscar F. Huntley, of Alabama, and Hon. Clark E. Carr will be the speakers. The meeting will begin at 8 o'clock and seats will be reserved for women until 8:15.

These are the vice presidents selected:

First ward—James T. Closson, L. V. F. Randolph, W. R. Codington, Fred W. Dunn, Isaac B. Hill, B. I. Tolles, Joseph B. Coward, U. B. Crane, William Gloak, Dr. J. B. Probasco, William J. Douglass, Ed. UNION'S SUNDAY-SCHOOLS

County Association of Teachers' Meet Here Tomorrow.

THREE SESSIONS

Meeting in First Baptist Church—The Complete Programme.

Many Sunday-school superintendents, teachers and other persons interested in this work in all parts of Union county, will gather at the First Baptist church, tomorrow, to attend the twenty-fourth annual convention of the Union County Sunday-school Association. Sessions will be held at 10, 2 and 7:30, and judging by the programme, they will be profitable to everyone who is at all interested in Sunday-school.

A special feature of the convention will be the music, which will be in charge of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Wilcox, of Providence, R. I. Every department of Sunday-school work will be touched by those experienced in it and those prominent as leaders.

This is the detailed programme of the convention:

The morning session will begin at 10 o'clock and the programme is as follows:

Opening service and greeting, Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, of this city; response, Rev. W. B. Hamilton; meetings of the year, J. W. Philp; the work of the year, R. P. Greaves; elementary grades in the county, Miss Edith Cairns, of this city; tested value of the home department, W. S. Webb; appointment of committees; our debt to the little school, Rev. E. Morris Ferguson; offering; devotional service, led by Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, of this city.

In the afternoon the session will begin at 2 and this is the programme:

Prayer service, led by Rev. L. R. Howard, of this city; report of nominating committee; election of officers; notice of State convention; words from State officers present; presentation of certificates to schools contributing three cents per member to the State and county work; general business; music as a factor in Sunday-school work, Miss J. L. Baldwin; good citizenship and the Sunday-school, the Rev. R. D. Morgan, Summit; offering for State and county work; the complete Sunday-school considered in parts.

Elementary division—A cradle roll, Mrs. J. M. Dudley, Elizabeth; beginners, Miss Helen Beebe, Westfield; primary, Miss Elizabeth Chandler, Summit; junior, Miss Edith Cairns, of this city; Secondary division—Intermediate, Rev. E. M. Fergusson; senior and teacher training, Mrs. Alonzo Pettit, Elizabeth; Adult division—Bible classes, Stephen Osborne, of this city; home department, W. S. Webb, Westfield; the complete Sunday-school; considered as a whole, Miss J. L. Baldwin, Newark; teacher training, the Rev. Dr. J. L. Cease, Keyport; five minute talks. Results of Institute work; open parliament by township secretaries.

The evening session begins at 7:30 and this is the programme:

Song service, led by Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox, Providence, R. I.; resume of conferences; offering; address from Jerusalem, W. B. Wilcox, general S. S. secretary of Rhode Island; adjournment.

These conferences will be held during the day:

Elementary grades, led by Miss Edith Cairns, of this city; superintendent's council, led by a member; teacher's Graded Union, led by Miss J. L. Baldwin.

Large Classes at Y. M. C. A.

The classes in the local Y. M. C. A. gymnasium this year are the largest which have been on the floor for many years. This fact is gratifying to the board of directors as well as the new physical director, Mr. Henckel. The increase in membership will enable the board to make many important improvements which have been needed for some time. The business men's class is especially large, while in the boys' and intermediate departments, the enrollment is an increase on former years.

Driver Pitched Out.

Turning the corner too sharply at Sixth and Division streets, yesterday, Richard Edmondson, driver for J. C. Storm, was pitched from his seat in the wagon. He landed on his head and for the time being was rendered unconscious. Onlookers picked him up and he recovered in a short time. The horse was caught after going a block.

"WEE WILLIE" KEELER WILL CAPTAIN THE P. A. C.'S

THE FAVORITE PLAYER OF CRESCENT DAYS TO SHINE IN BIG GAME.

"Wee Willie" Keeler, the brilliant fielder and batter of the New York Americans, will captain the team that is to meet the New York Nationals on Crescent Oval on Saturday. His many friends here who remember his performances in 1892 when he was commencing a baseball career destined to be a remarkable one, will be glad of the opportunity to see this popular player on a local diamond again. There was never a more popular player than Keeler in the old days.

It was Manager Johnston's idea to have an American League battery in the points, and this may be accomplished yet, but the chances are that Louis Witte and Farmer will be on the firing line. Many argue that the Baltimorean is as strong as his brother, George, who is with the New York Nationals, and that he can hold the Nationals down. With such work as Farmer performed last Saturday, he should be able to handle the receiving and all right.

With Robertson on first, Williams on second, Elberfield at short and Conroy on third, and Keeler, Dougherty and Cregan in the field, there should be a team easily capable of doing themselves credit against the Nationals.

The contest will be called at 3:15 and those wanting good seats should arrange to be at the oval early. There will be special trolley car service, the Public Service Corporation having promised to take care of the crowd wanting to attend the game.

J. P. KIRCH TO WED.

Miss Messler to be His Bride Tuesday, Oct. 25.

Miss Emma Sprague Messler, of Whitehouse, and John Phillip Kirch, of this city, will be married at the home of the bride's brother in Herbich, Conn., Tuesday afternoon, October 25. Miss Messler is a graduate of the Muhlenberg Hospital Training School for Nurses, and at one time was matron of the institution. Mr. Kirch is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George Kirch and is a cigar dealer.

Octogenarian Dies Suddenly.

Mrs. Evelina Hall Pierce, aged eighty-one years, died suddenly at her home in Grove street, this morning. She is survived by her husband, George V. Pierce, and one son, John B. Pierce, who resides in Nevada. Mrs. Pierce's maiden name was Evelina Hall.

SUPPORTING A. B. PARKER

Independent Republicans and Independent Democrats Join Forces Here.

G. S. CLAY, PRESIDENT

Organization Meeting Takes Place at the Casino—The Officers Selected—The Club Starts With a Membership of Twenty-Five.

Influential citizens, mostly New York commuters, many of whom are life-long Republicans, met at the Casino Tuesday and organized the Parker Independent Club. The club has a membership of twenty-five but the character of the men speak more than numbers, for they are of a type of Plainfield's best citizens. A permanent organization was formed and an energetic campaign will be waged in this city solely for the Democratic National ticket.

George S. Clay, of Watchung avenue, a New York lawyer and private secretary to Judge Dillon, called the meeting to order. He is known as a Republican. After Mr. Clay, who is a vestryman of Grace Episcopal church, had stated the object of the meeting, Judd Stewart, of Willow avenue, auditor of the American Smelting Company, of New York, was chosen temporary secretary. Mr. Clay told of the movement in New York and other large cities to organize Parker Constitutional Clubs among lawyers and Parker Independent Clubs among professional and business men generally. He declared that Mr. Parker stood upon a platform pledged to constitutional government and that the man himself represented the best type of American citizenship.

These officers were chosen: President, George S. Clay; vice presidents, Isaac L. Miller and Samuel Huntington; secretary, Deunsa M. VanVleet; treasurer, John O. Stevens. Both Mr. Miller and Mr. Huntington are New York lawyers. The former is classed as an independent Republican and the latter is also an independent Republican. Mr. Stevens is secretary of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company, of New York. Mr. VanVleet is a retired member of the New York Produce Exchange. He is said to be an independent Republican. As members of a general committee these were appointed: R. B. Strong, Hugh F. Fox, George S. Whitlock and D. M. VanVleet. Mr. Strong is a New York lawyer and Mr. Fox a New York merchant. Mr. Strong and Judd Stewart, the temporary secretary, are Republicans, as is also W. T. Pollister, who was among the assemblage.

Meetings will be held at the Casino every Tuesday night and the members have pledged themselves to use their influence in increasing the numerical strength of the organization. It is said that one of the plans of their campaign is to spread broadcast throughout the city political literature bearing on the present issue, which they take to be the preservation of the Constitution. The membership consists of Republicans, independent Republicans, independents and independent Democrats.

WARM WEATHER.

Thermometer Twenty-Six Degrees Higher Yesterday Than October 11 a Year Ago.

Tuesday, October 11, 1904, will pass into local history as quite a warm day. Early in the morning there was a rainbow, during the continuance of a light rain, but this had nothing to do with the warmth. The rainbow was as much of a surprise as the heat.

At noon the thermometer registered 83 degrees above zero, which is unusually high for this season. Many people who had been spending the summer at Ocean Grove or other resorts, were anxious to put on summer clothing again and make a bee line for the sea shore. Wiser counsel prevailed, however, as the local weather prophet said the warm spell would not last long, and that overcoats would be needed before many hours. A year ago the thermometer reached 55 degrees above zero.

In Justice Hand's Court.

The landlord and tenant case of J. Burke against M. Harris was settled Monday in favor of the complainant at Justice Hand's court. Fred Hoff was the lawyer for Mrs. Burke.

The New Woman

Featherweight Brains and Tissue Paper Trifles

SOME woman who evidently writes on space and wants something to pad it out has made a list of the things a girl can do to "work" her way through college. This list is as "amoosin'" as Artemus Ward's kangaroo. One of the things is to "make tissue paper trifles for college festivities." Heaven save us! Imagine a girl paying her way through a college course with tissue paper trifles! The suggestion is about as sane and sensible as the tissue paper brain that conceived it. Another suggestion for the girl who would work her way through college is to take an agency for visiting cards. No doubt college girls spend most of their time calling and distributing their visiting cards. Again, the girl is told she can make pincushions and lamp and candle shades. Once more imagine going through a college course on pincushions and candle shades! Is this the age of the tissue paper trifle mind among women? A woman at the head of an employment agency for her own sex has recently written concerning the difficulty she finds in securing persons willing to do honest, steady, real work. The first requirement of each of the women is that she shall do "nothing menial." They are willing to do the decorative part of the housekeeping, which the woman of the house always does for herself, but solid, wholesome work, the kind that sweetens food and sleep and makes the muscles of the human body strong, skillful and rosy—no! No scrubbing, washing, ironing or window cleaning for these half and half ladies. They will accept the tissue paper trifle part of housework—nothing more. Apparently they put up their own high order of varied and socially ornamental qualities as offset to the wage they demand. The writer of the article is careful to say that the intelligent and well bred woman, the real lady, never makes the stipulation that she shall do "nothing menial." She knows that her ladyhood is in herself and cannot be injured by any work she does, even though she scrubbed stairs for a living. The woman sex will not make much progress until it walks away from the tissue paper trifle idea of work.

Women writers used to adopt masculine pen names to get their work on the market. The aspect appears to have changed. In newspaper offices is now not uncommon for some young man, over a feminine signature, to compile for the woman page sloppy advice to readers on every subject from removing wrinkles to directions on how to keep or catch a lover. The flapdoodle they would be ashamed to print over a man's signature they slip through over a woman's.

A writer suggests, "Try doing unto others as you would they should do unto you for one whole day." Is there any objection to trying it for one whole life?

In the nineteenth century women talked and wrote. In the twentieth century women do things.

What right is more pathetic than a little bit of a man staggering along under the weight of two heavy traveling bags while beside him walks his great big strapping wife, twice his size, carrying a little white leather purse?

Would you be happy? Then make yourself happy in your present surroundings. But if these are not satisfactory look continually forward to better ones. The art of happiness is to be learned as we go along and depends not at all on our surroundings. Unless we find happiness in ourselves, above and beyond all people and things, we shall never find it anywhere.

A New York woman who went to Philadelphia recently received a great shock to her nervous system. The contrast between the courtesy and humane conduct of Philadelphia men to women in the streets and public conveyances and the brutality of New York men to the sex, to which she was accustomed, was so great it nearly knocked her over.

Not long ago a woman who is known to three continents—that, too, in a way not flattering to her—landed in New York from a steamer and was obliged to wait with other passengers while her luggage was inspected. She protested vociferously against waiting till those ahead of her had been attended to. "Have I got to stand in that line?" she asked. "Why, they are all second class passengers!" She was a woman entirely reckless as to her own conduct, yet it enraged her sense of fitness to be obliged to stand alongside mere "common" people who work for their living.

A bank cashier lately told me of a woman who for five years did not know enough to cut off the coupons from a bond she possessed. When told that these coupons as they became due were as good as so much money she began to cut them off at the wrong end of the certificate. What a "woman-by" cousin she was, we can't stop to

ELIZA ARCHARD CONNER.

EXPERT AT CHESS.

Miss Rose Jefferson, Champion Woman Chess Player of the World.

When the list of expert players was made out for the chess congress at St. Louis in October the name of only one woman was included. It was that of Miss Rose Jefferson of Memphis.

In the great game, which it is popularly believed can be played successfully only by people with plenty of gray matter in their skulls, Rose Jefferson comes off winner at least nine times out of ten. This young American woman of twenty-two is beyond doubt the champion woman chess player of the world. Few of the men champions have ever defeated her.

Miss Jefferson earns her living by teaching music in Memphis. Chess is her recreation; teaching music is the serious business of her life. It is not the first time a chess expert has been also a skilful musician.

The young lady's father was a noted chess player. So far as she can remember, she learned the royal game at the age of six. She had abundance of gray matter in her female brain pan even then. At any rate, she and a brother who was older seem to have been born chess players. The older brother became an expert. He kindly taught his little sister the adroit moves of the great game and delighted in her growing power till one unlucky day came. Rose played better and better all the time. When she was seventeen she played a match game with this expert brother who had taught her the clever moves. She beat him. That gray matter was bulging up still further in the feminine brain.

If there is anything a man dislikes worse than another it is to be beaten by a woman at chess. It somehow shivers the timbers of his hereditary sense of masculine superiority. Once a youth and a maid, two romantic students, formed an attachment to each other. It was considered by their chums, equally romantic, an ideal falling in love, he being dark and manly, she blond and feminine. All went lovely and the days passed full of sweet commune till the sad day when the absorbing game of chess made its advent among the students. The youth and maid, then betrothed, learned it. The young man called one evening and told his best girl how he had beaten ever so many other girls who had ventured to hustle pawns and knights against him on a chessboard.

Plushed with victory, the young man proposed to try the great game with his best girl. She felt that the gray matter of the whole feminine sex was to rise or fall with the results of that game. She played and beat the young man. He was discomfited down to his toes. It hurt his feelings. He was even angry at the girl. The upshot was that the game of life they two were presenting to play together was declared off. They never played chess or anything else together again.

In like manner Miss Jefferson's brother, after she had beaten him, refused ever afterward to play chess with her. But from the result of that game Rose Jefferson gained confidence in herself as opponents in the noble game the most skilled experts of the time. Memphis has a chess club, and Miss Jefferson is an honorary member of it. At the club appear from time to time the world's famous chess players. One of these was F. N. Pillsbury. Miss Jefferson defeated him twice. He told her she was one of the best chess players he had even seen, and he did not add "for a woman" either.

Next came a game with Dr. Emanuel Lasker, champion chess player of the world. It was a tremendous game, like a battle between two great armies. It lasted two hours and a half. It looked as though the girl was about to win when Dr. Lasker quit the game and said he could not play a minute longer, as he had an engagement. That seemed hardly fair toward the American girl. Some time afterward, however, at the Manhattan Chess club in New York city, Dr. Lasker defeated Miss Jefferson in a lengthy, hotly contested game. But she had then only just arrived in New York and was weary and new to the surroundings. She says it makes a great difference if the women have been able to play in a strange place. The longest game the girl ever played was with B. H. Harrison, whom she defeated after a contest of twelve hours.

Miss Jefferson is especially skilful in the use of her pawns, which is the mark of an expert in chess. She has the keen, rather close set eyes and the strong, well developed nose that physiognomists say mark the successful detective and news reporter.

There are those who declare that Miss Jefferson, if she were able to devote more time to practice, might easily be developed into a world's champion chess player.

MARCIA W. CAMPBELL.

THE AUTUMN HAT.

Hints For Purchasing—Sunset Orange a Leading Color.

When choosing a hat it is well to be guided as much in the selection by the shape of the shoulders as by the face, head, complexion and hair. Many millinery mistakes are made by the small woman wearing the large picture hats that are so becoming to tall girls with good shoulders. A girl of five feet two in a hat of this sort looks several inches shorter than she really is.

Burnt orange will figure prominently in the winter millinery schemes. It will be employed as a high light to touch up otherwise somber creations.

In velvet burnt orange is an exquisite shade, and the woman whose coloring will not stand this fashionable tint is to be pitied. On gowns the orange will make delightful glints of contrast in the guise of tiny waistcoats or as touches on cuff, collar and neck.

A dainty whim of fashion is to catch up the fullness on sleeves with fancy buttons.

Neck chains of all kinds are as popular as ever, and to be really up to date a golden, enameled or jeweled butterfly or bird is the dangle to be suspended from them.

The charming hat illustrated is made with a soft crown of black tulle. From under the tulle glint pale yellow roses. The drooping brim at the back makes this hat becoming to any mode of hairdressing. A full rosette of tulle and another of yellow roses conceal the bandeau which lifts the hat off the left side of the hair.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

FROM FASHION'S WORLD.

Some New Materials—Dress Skirts Lined Once More.

Frou Paris comes the edict that hats must match the costume this season. This means a good deal to the woman with a moderate dress allowance. An artful way of serving fashion and economy at the same time is to select a certain shade as the basis tone of the entire wardrobe and have a hat developed in many shades of the same color, one of them matching each gown.

There will be a decided fancy this winter for smooth faced cloths. Chiffon broadcloth is promised a great vogue for afternoon costumes, while for walking and shopping frocks rough cheviots and homespuns are the choice. Zibelines for fall wear have a panne finish.

Scorched onion is a new autumn color, but it is too daring for an entire costume. Hints of this are very pretty and are a smart relish to black, blue, gray and brown toilets.

Skirts are to be lined. It is claimed by dressmakers that the action in walking is much more free than when the skirts are separate. Another old feature to be revived is the use of binding on skirts, and a very sensible one it is in every respect.

The gown illustrated is an autumn promenade toilet of old green satin cloth. The blouse jacket has an attached undulating basque and wide gathered shoulders. A silk braid trims the smart little jacket, and revers of the velvet in the same shade as the cloth show buttons of passementerie and bottombole imitations. The full red belt is of old green satin. The skirt is laid in opposite plaits, falling out free, and is trimmed with two bias folds of velvet.

CAMPAIGN MANAGERS

MEN WHO ARE DIRECTING THE POLITICAL CONTESTS.

WELL KNOWN IN CAPITAL

Washington Has a New Interest in the Battle for the Presidency —Senator Gorman as a Leader.

Washington.—President Roosevelt is back in Washington to stay. He will spend a week at Oyster Bay before election in November, cast his vote the straight republican ticket, early in the morning and return to Washington election day afternoon in order to be in the executive offices when the returns come in at night. The president's presence in Washington has a stimulating effect on the life of the capital. What has been a country village in point of energy and life has now been transformed into a capital city. Strangers are visiting Washington in larger numbers and the white house is again the Mecca for politicians and statesmen.

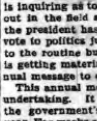
While the president takes a deep interest in the campaign it cannot be said that he is in any way directing it. That work has been turned over to other hands and Mr. Roosevelt is surveying the field from the viewpoint of an ordinary citizen. This is the impression he gives visitors who see him. He is ready to discuss the outlook, but, like most citizens, is inquiring as to what the real workers out in the field are doing. The fact is the president has very little time to devote to politics just now, as, in addition to the routine business of his office, he is getting material together for his annual message to congress.

This annual message is a formidable undertaking. It is a compendium of the government's record for the past year. For weeks and months past bureau chiefs have been busy collecting the data of their offices for submission to the heads of their departments, and the cabinet officers in turn have been collecting these bureau reports, studying them, and soon will complete their digest of what has been going on in their departments and submit them to the president. The president goes over all these department and bureau reports, gets a comprehensive view of all that has been done and then advises congress in a set message of the progress that has been made, the problems that have been solved, the difficulties that have arisen, the policies that have been followed during the past year and suggests what the fourth congress may *provide useful legislation for future gov*ernment.

Cortelyou as Manager.

While the president is not running the campaign there are other men taking care of his interests. When he selected Secretary of Commerce and Labor Cortelyou to be chairman of the national committee and thus be his personal representative in the political contest, there was no end of criticism, murmuring and prediction of disaster and blunder on the part of politicians who believed that no man, not trained in the practical school of politics, should be selected to direct the campaign. Mr. Cortelyou's experience had been in the line of routine government work and later of executive experience, but he was not believed to have any knowledge or appreciation of what is known as "practical politics."



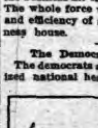
Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

President Roosevelt had his own idea, however, of the kind of man he wanted to run the campaign. He believes thoroughly in political organization and knowing Cortelyou's genius for organization in government work he concluded the same quality would be valuable in a political campaign.

Chairman Cortelyou has not disappointed the president, but he has disappointed his critics within his own party. The old line politicians take their hats off to this young general who has brought into politics the genius and ability that proved so effective in conducting a government department. Even his political opponents express admiration for Mr. Cortelyou's quiet and effective method of managing a campaign. The visitors at the republican headquarters in New York and Chicago are all struck with the business air that characterizes them. The whole force works with the system and efficiency of a well organized business house.

The Democratic Managers.

The democrats also have a well organized national headquarters, but it required a longer time to get them into smooth running order. To aid in this they secured the services of Senator Arthur Pue Gorman of Maryland, a past master of politics and statesmanship.



Senator Gorman.

Washington is particularly interested in the campaign now that the issues are joined against each other in directing the republican and democratic campaigns. Mr. Cortelyou has been a resident of the District for some 12 years, while Senator Gorman is looked on as one of the old inhabitants. He has had a home in Washington for a generation and spends his winters here with his family and his summers at his farm at Laurel, Maryland, only an hour's run out of the city.

Few public men are better known at the capital than Mr. Gorman and it is safe to say few are more respected. He has thousands of acquaintances here now who are particularly interested in the campaign because they believe that Mr. Gorman is one of the actual, if not not the titular, head of the national democratic committee. He is as imperturbable as Mr. Cortelyou, is diplomatic and tactful and back of all this has a life time's experience of the ins and outs of politics. He is expected to turn many a trick that will keep the other side guessing, but he is too shrewd to advance any opinion or make any prediction beyond the general statement that with harmony and hard work there is a chance to win the election.

Cupid in the Army.

It is a serious question with the military authorities whether there should be any modification of the rules regarding enlistments in the regular army. The rule regarding the admission of married men into the ranks, it is contended by some of the authorities, might well be abrogated, or at least modified. There is now severe punishment meted out to a man who conceals the fact that he is married when he enlists in the army. It has been suggested that the punishment under these circumstances is out of proportion to the infraction of army rules and it is proposed to reduce the punishment so as to retain desirable men in the service, notwithstanding the fact that they have married. Many army officers contend that the best soldiers are often those who have wives to look after them or to provide for.

The principal objection to married soldiers is that in the transfer of troops involving travel beyond the seas and long periods of absence from home stations the soldier with a wife becomes somewhat of an impediment. The wives sometimes give trouble and if husband and wife are separated there is dissatisfaction and occasionally a desertion. This objection, however, is believed to be offset by the better character of the men who are married. They are apt to be steadier and more attentive to their duties.

The authorities have encountered some difficulty in getting the best material into the ranks of the army. Just now the navy seems to have the call, as the life there is more attractive and the opportunity greater for seeing more of the world. Army life in time of peace is rather monotonous and young men after the present short enlistment of three years do not care to reinlist. There is a suggestion that the term of enlistment be extended to what it formerly was, that is, five years. It was thought that the privilege of rising from the ranks and receiving commissions would be an inducement to intelligent young men to enter the army. This is not found to be the case, however, and the only explanation that seems to offer is that there are better opportunities in the labor and business world for strong, healthy and intelligent young men.

Negroes of Washington.

The sociologist who wants to study the race question might camp down here in Washington and have at easy range all types and classes of the colored race for his investigation. There is represented in the 90,000 colored population of the capital city every degree of excellence and evil in the negro from the millionaire, educated colored man down to the most brutal type of the negro degenerate. The colored population of this city is to a great extent a barometer that reflects the sentiment of the race throughout the country. The aspiration of the better classes as typified in the Booker Washington movement is reflected in the upper crust of colored society in Washington. The brutal instincts that lead to the horrible crimes whose retribution usually comes in the form of lynching are observable through the lower strata of the negro population here. Major Sylvester, chief of police of the district, is of the opinion evil negro were eliminated from Washington this city would be the most peaceful in the world.

Just now the colored people in this city are very much worked up over the Jim Crow Car question. Several adjoining states of Virginia and Maryland have laws in operation that compel the segregation of the negroes and put them into cars that are known by that more or less offensive term, "Jim Crow Cars." The Washington negro is as a rule very assertive, and as there are no federal laws regarding his place on street cars and railroad cars he does not hesitate to push himself, sometimes offensively, among the whites. As soon as he gets out of the district he is unceremoniously chucked into a car by himself. This is very humiliating and the colored people of the district have held meetings with the purpose of forming some sort of an organization to contest the constitutionality of these Jim Crow laws. So far the meetings have resulted in nothing but talk.

FASHION'S LATEST DICTA.

All That Is Novel In Skirts, Street Attire and Fabrics.

The recent convention of dressmakers from everywhere and Paris has decided for us what we are to wear for the next year or longer, and, after all, the change is for the better for all except for the one who pays the bills.

There *has been much talk in the pa*pers about the skirts, which, they say, will measure thirty feet around—nine yards. That is a story got up to fill out in round numbers and to give weight to the rest of their assertions, something in the way of ballast. There are skirts which measure ten yards around, but they are the accordion plaited ones, and the material for these is always thin and, generally speaking, inexpensive. But skirts are certainly to be larger around, and some of them show decided indications of drapery. The rest are large around the hips and gathered, shirred or laid in folds or gauged deeply in the back in the very old fashioned way. This makes the back of the skirt full at the waist line but not altogether unlike a bustle. The skirt is ample and the breadths are gored so that the whole sweeps backward in a very stately manner.

Skirts for ordinary street wear are not to be as long as before, scarcely one out of a hundred quite touching the ground. There is a slight dip at the back, but not enough to be remarkable.

The new styles will make richer goods a necessity, and we may expect to see the rich silks of other days—brocades, heavy black grosgrains, peau de soies and all the list so well known of old. Waists will be fashioned, but without the horrible straight fronts which distort the figure to real deformity and with the drooping shoulder to give apparent breadth to the upper part of the body. Sleeves will be large at the top and taper down to the wrist, much like the old leg of mutton, but somewhat modified, for the last ones we had about fifteen years ago took from four to five yards of material.

For street attire there will be many tight bodices made with postillion backs and regular habit fronts. The white vest front made of satin or white ribbed velvets is handsome and particularly fetching on a pretty figure. The tight waist is the blessing of women with pretty figures. Those whose figures were—well, such as leave something to be desired—have had it all their own way since the blouse waists have been in vogue. Now the woman who wishes to be considered very smart stands straight as a reed, with her broad shoulders braced back and her eyes level and straight ahead.

Street gowns for ordinary walking requirement are made of cloth, mohair, vicuna and a long line of sibelines, some of them with but occasional hairs, while the others are thickly covered and are called panne sibelines. Cheviots, cravenettes and many other things in colors, with broadcloth, eudors, silk warp henriettas and other all black materials, are plentiful. Irish poplin is also seen; but, beautiful as all poplin is, it does not wear very well, especially if it gets wet.

In the illustration may be seen the style of the new evening gowns, which have pointed bodices with the skirts gathered and even draped. Lace will be used as garniture, but in a manner new to this generation. Flowers will hold the festoons. The plain silks are rich and heavy, and there are a few "shot" ones, which means changeable. The black silks are in full evidence and will be the favorite weave of the season. One might even say that for the street silk will be worn to an almost unprecedented extent. The skirts are ample and fall in the lines. The black chene taffetas in the new heavyweight make elegant and durable gowns. One such on exhibition has the skirt in demitrain, with no trimming, but bias folds about three inches from the edge, and small ones set in loose plaits at the top, and these are brought down to a point in front under a crushed belt of the same. A richer and more elegant gown could scarcely be imagined. It was exhibited on a young woman with fair hair and a beautiful complexion. This last must have cost much time and money—the pink was so very pink and the white so very white. The evidence of the pompadour style is clearly before us in the evening gowns, while those for more ordinary wear may be summed up as being pretty nearly what one wants, provided the skirt is wide and ample.

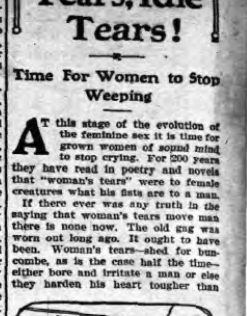
OLIVE HARPER.

Tears, Idle Tears!

Time For Women to Stop Weeping

AT this stage of the evolution of the feminine sex it is time for grown women of sound mind to stop crying. For 2200 years they have read in poetry and novels that "woman's tears" were to female creatures what his farts are to a man.

If there ever was any truth in the saying that woman's tears move man there is none now. The old gag was worn out long ago. It ought to have been. Woman's tears—shed for humbombe, as is the case half the time—either bore and irritate a man or else they harden his heart tougher than



"BEAUTIFULLY," REPLIED THE MONSTER.

Pharaoh's when he would not let the children of Israel go. It is like this:

A certain man had made up his mind to do something his wife opposed. It was his own affair—if married folk ever can have any private affair—but madame set herself against it because she would be left alone for a time. Not being a baby or a lunatic, or yet bedridden, she was considered by the husband able to amuse herself awhile. Not so looked she upon the case, and she adopted a ruse to make him give in. In the dead watches of the night, when all was darkness and all the world was asleep, supposedly, the husband was suddenly awakened by the sound of hysterical weeping, "convulsive sobbing," the feminine novelist has called it time out of mind. The sound came from his wife.

The husband, fully awake during the performance, smiled grimly to himself and made not a sound. He had become used to female tears, for he had been ten years married. Next morning at breakfast the wife, anxious to know whether her ruse had succeeded, asked him how he had slept last night, and that unfeeling monster of a man was mean enough to answer, "Beautifully; never better."

As this was the result of all that feminine "hysterical weeping," madam had reddened and swollen her nose, had made her eyes sunken and red, her face sallow and wretched looking, had shivered the timbers of her nerves and kept herself awake half the night, all for nothing.

The husband knew it was posing, all posing, and even if he had not the senses would only have served to turn him further away from the woman.

It is true the penny dreadful still says, "She turned her tear bedimmed eyes full upon him," but it is so good. Tear bedimmed eyes and all the other woes which must accompany them are not pretty or pleasant to look at.

Recently men writers have been devoting considerable space to the question of what makes women weep. Evidently they are of opinion that the convulsive sobbing gag looks queer alongside the college training and athletic development of the new woman. The new woman, by the way, is not the tear shedding woman.

A gentleman of science asserts that two-thirds of the weeping of women is posing, mere posing for effect. They have their tear glands under ready control, *so they can pour out the accom*modating drops whenever and wherever these women apparently do the most good. Perhaps this is so to some extent. Another man, a noted literary man, thinks women sometimes cry so that they may be petted. Perhaps this is true or was in old times, when childish and dumb animals in bondage instinctively crave petting.

Note, O my sisters, what one man writes:

"A deeply rooted tradition this, the efficacy of tears over the hard heart of man, and small wonder that women nourished on novels should have come to accept it as an article of faith. And it is only by her bitter and frequent failures that she learns—if she ever does learn—the truth. This is the truth: Tears are an unmitigated and disastrous bore to the average man."

On general principles every manifestation of unpleasant emotion is ugly and works evil to the manifestor. Weeping destroys a woman's good looks and her nervous system and makes her an object to be avoided. Besides and more than all, it is becoming unfashionable. Cut it out!

SYMBOLIC OF STATES

STATUES REPRESENTATIVE OF THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE.

FOURTEEN TYPICAL FIGURES

They Are Seated on Pedestals in the Colonnade of States at the St. Louis Fair—Masterpieces of Statuary.

St. Louis.—The panorama that is spread out before the multitude in the Plaza of St. Louis at the world's fair is so magnificent, so satisfying as a unit, in fact so complete, that it seems almost sacrilege even to attempt to separate it into its integral parts and examine them in detail.

We feel, as we feast our eyes on its ravishing beauty, whether by daylight when all the splendor of the rainbow gardens may be seen, or by night when the changing hues of red and amber and green supply the color that the flowers are wont to provide, that there is not one superfluous touch, not one discordant note. The picture is composed along lines of symmetry, with the climax, the great white Festival Hall, in the center, and the beautiful facades of the palaces of Education and Electricity acting as essential accessories to lead the eye up to that climax. Thus the artist composes his picture, and thus only can the picture be a success.

Yet the picture, as one sees it from the main launch landing, is not all there is or life itself. In this instance it is the source of the Louisiana Purchase, the stream of paramount importance in the Louisiana territory. The wheat, the logs and the coal source would not be applicable to any other state of the 14.

Two of the states, Indian Territory and South Dakota, have made use of the figure of an Indian squaw; but how different are the two! The southern squaw her head bowed and her eyes downcast, is a type of patient resignation that cannot but appeal to those who know the story of the Indian women and in fact the Indian tribes of the southwest. Mr. Heber has added the wheat and other suggestive accessories, most significant among which is the water jar of quaint Indian pottery. In the South Dakota goddess, Mr. L. O. Lawrie, one of the most daring of the younger generation of American sculptors, has given us altogether different type of Indian woman. She is erect and haughty, her head turned to one side, as if in scorn. She is of the race of men who may be killed without being crushed. Her only suggestive accessories are the scythe and the logs on which she rests.

The statue of Kansas, by A. A. Weinmann, is highly suggestive in that the figure is seated upon a fatted steer and holds in her hand an ear of corn, one of the chief resources of Kansas wealth. North Dakota, by B. L. Zimm, is associated with the implements of mining and also with wheat, wood and the buffalo's skull, the last reminiscence of the days when civilization had not yet invaded the Dakotas.

Wyoming, Nebraska, Colorado and Missouri are differentiated by the shield bearing the great seal of the state. The first of these, by C. F. Hamann, has a ledge of rock for a throne. The drapery to it. There are details that reveal themselves only to the pedestrian who climbs the pink granitoid steps, wanders about among the fountains and cascades and follows the curves of the Colonnade of States. By no means the least interesting of these details are the heroic statues that represent the 14 states acquired by the Louisiana purchase treaty.

The colonnade, that spreads like great white wings to the right and the left of Festival Hall, is composed of seven hemicycles on each side. The entire composition is a great architectural screen, formed of stately Ionic columns and massive pylons that are surmounted by bronze eagles. Each hemicycle constitutes a little shrine in which is enthroned the deity of one of the Louisiana purchase states.

The sculptors who modeled these deities sought to impart to the plastic clay the characteristics of the various states.

THE MINNESOTA STATUE.

Only one of these figures is so characteristic that it could not by any possibility be mistaken for the goddess of any other than its own state, yet all are accompanied by accessories that give the requisite "local color."

The one hot to be mistaken is that of Minnesota, modeled by that brilliant and resourceful sculptor, Gustav Gerlach. Like all the others, it is the partially draped figure of a woman. On the head is a crown of wheat. Wheat figures in the representation of many of the states, for the northern part of the Louisiana purchase territory is essentially a heat-producing country. For this reason the discarded hand reaper might serve as an accessory for many another figure in the adjoining hemicycles. The artist did not stop with the crown and sheaf of wheat. He seated his goddess on a log of wood from the northern forests, and at her side he placed an overturned Greek urn. The never-failing stream of water from the mouth of the Greek vase has always been symbolic of the "source" whether of the river, the soul, poetic inspiration is especially rich in swinging curves, and the face is tremendously strong. The second, the conception of Carl C. Pratt, has the scythe and the oak tree at the back, and there are suggestions of both wheat and corn. The goddess of Nebraska is essentially an agricultural deity. Had her face been a little more severe and dignified she might have passed for Ceres herself. Yet it is evident that such was not Mr. Packer's idea. He has placed his figure on a classic settee that would have been a fitting seat for the goddess of the harvest; but he has associated her with the anvil, the eagle and the ardium of Nebraska, "Equality before the Law." The Colorado statute, by A. Zeller, suggests chiefly the precious product of the mine. On the head of the goddess is a helmet surmounted by an eagle, proud bird of the lofty mountain peaks. Missouri's deity, by A. S. Calder, holds the winged, serpent-entwined staff of Mercury, the patron of commerce, in her right hand. At her back is the horn-of-plenty, pouring out fruit and grain.

Louisiana's goddess is rather a goddess than a representation of a state. Mr. Schwarz has given her no device except a sprig of agave, that is somewhat typical of the southern states. The statue is so strong in modeling and so splendid in pose that one does not feel the need of suggestive accessories.

Mr. Jaegers has given his Arkansas deity the cotton boll and the bear for symbols; but he is a comfortable, sensible bear on which she can rest her arm with impunity. Oklahoma, as she is pictured by Mr. Conway, is a classic figure that reminds one of the portraits of Roman matrons. At her side is a highly decorated plow and the ornaments in her hair is of wheat. Montana, by A. C. Skodik, is another strongly classic figure in voluminous draperies. Her device is the miner's shovel. At her back grows the sturdy oak, and in her hair she has placed a spray of northern laurel.

Near enough to interest even to the state homes on the Plateau of the States and the Trail, are these shrines at which the citizen from whatever section of the great Louisiana purchase territory may bow in gratitude and love. These are the altars on which the patriotic resident of the middle west may lay his offering of incense. They are something more than artistic and essential decorations. Like almost every feature of the great world's fair, they are full of meaning that is not for the eye alone. They are not merely parts of a great and glorious architectural scheme. They represent the tangible spirit of 14 of the greatest states in the union.

OUR STRAWBERRIES

HISTORY OF THIS DELICIOUS AMERICAN GARDEN FRUIT.

It Has Been in Cultivation for Nearly Two Hundred Years — Originally It Was a Native of Chili.

The story of the origin and evolution of the garden strawberry forms a chapter in the history of economic plants which is of more than ordinary interest to American horticulturists. Although this fruit has been in cultivation nearly 250 years, its origin and history were obscure until within the last decade. Botanists passed the garden strawberry and left it without a name. Horticulturists contented themselves with giving the plant its generic name, Fragaria. During the early '90's Bailey interested himself in the history and development of many of the garden plants, among which he included the strawberry, and as a result of his studies the cultivated strawberry has been assigned to a well-recognized botanical species, Fragaria chiloensis.

This plant reached Europe about the year 1712, but attracted little attention and made little progress until about 1750 or 1760, when another berry, having a pleasant, pinesapple-like aroma, found its way into Europe under the name of Pine or Pine Strawberry. This strain produced cultural varieties rapidly and soon gained a wide distribution, gradually replacing sorts previously in cultivation which had come from the scarlet class of North America, the parents of which were Fragaria virginiana and the ever-bearing type, Fragaria vesca, which is native in Europe.

During early colonial days the wild strawberries of the field were abundant and furnished a much-prized article of diet. The plants were transplanted to the garden and gave fruits of increased size, but only a few commercial varieties resulted. Hovey, who may be considered the father of the American strawberry industry, used these native plants along with imported plants of the pine type as the foundation of a number of crosses, which resulted in the production of two varieties, the Hovey and the Boston pine. Owing to the loss of records the true parentage of these could never be determined. It was Mr. Hovey's opinion that the Hovey sprang from a cross of mulberry and Keen's seedling, both of the pine type. The Hovey did for the strawberry what the Cape grape did for viticulture. It formed the main nucleus for the development of commercial sorts, although the scarlet type was long held in high esteem.

The garden strawberries of this country have come chiefly from the so-called pine type of berries, which has been proved beyond question to have sprung from Fragaria chiloensis, a plant originally brought to Europe from Chili, but which is now known to be native to the western mountain regions of both North and South America. The first plants to rise to prominence under cultivation, however, were those of eastern North America, which belong to the scarlet class, the species being known to botanists as Fragaria virginiana. This class, as has been stated, has contributed only sparingly to our present variety list. The wild berry of Europe, which has always been held in more or less esteem because of its ever-bearing tendencies, has contributed comparatively only meagerly to the garden sorts of its native countries and none whatever to the American list. The burden of the industry rests upon the Chilian plant.

The garden strawberry is an American product. It adapts itself to a wider range of latitude and to greater extremes in environment than any other cultivated fruit. It is universally liked and is cosmopolitan in its adaptations.

Tree with a Bad Temper.

In Australia is a species of acacia known as the "angry tree." It reaches the height of 90 feet, after a rapid growth, and in outward appearance somewhat resembles a gigantic century plant. When the sun sets the leaves fold up and the tender twigs coil tightly, and if the shoots are handled the leaves rustle and move uneasily for a time. If this queer plant is removed from one soil to another, it seems angry, and the leaves refuse to act in all directions for an hour or two.

Honeymoon Trip in Balloon.

A young lady eager to rise in the world may find an opportunity by answering the following advertisement, which recently appeared in the Zurich Gazette: "An Austrain officer of the balloon corps wishes to marry a lady who will have the courage to make her honeymoon voyage with him in a balloon." Then followed an address in Vienna.

HIS WEDDING BOOTS.

THEY HAVE BROUGHT GOOD LUCK TO FARMER ARNOLD.

For Fifty-Two Years He Has Donned the Same Pair When Wooing Fortune and Has Always Won Out.

Zanesville (Wis.) Special.
Wedding boots should be kept in the house to bring and keep good luck.

At any rate, this is the opinion of George N. Arnold, of Delavan Lake, who is still wearing the pair that he bought 52 years ago, and he says they are likely to last him the balance of his lifetime.

As to the good luck that surrounds the caring for and making use of the footgear, Mr. Arnold puts up his own experience in affirming the proposition, and this in itself is unique beyond degree.

No other pair of boots has a like record. Mr Arnold lives only a short distance back from the shores of beautiful and popular Delavan lake, where the gay, fashionable people have brought from may states all kinds of boots, shoes, pumps and slippers. They came in calf, cow and kid skins. There are tans and patent leathers. There are cutting shoes of duck and canvas, but there are none like the top boots owned and worn for more than a half century by this Walworth county farmer.

Talk about style in boots! The Delavan summer people think they have the newest wrinkle and toe, but Mr. Arnold holds up his pair of wedding boots and tells the crowd "they have gone out and come back in style six or eight times since I have owned them."

It was the work of the little god of love that caused Mr. Arnold to buy the boots. Away over in Cayuga county, N. Y., Mr. Arnold was working on a farm when he was invited by his friend, George Fox, to stand as his best man at his wedding. He was in need of a pair of boots, so he went to a shoemaker in Moravia and asked him to fit him out by a certain time. The cobbler said he had a pair that he had made for another man, but they didn't fit. He believed they would fit Mr. Arnold. He might have them for 50 cents less than the price if they would do. "And," says the Wisconsin pioneer, "I paid him three dollars and took them along."

ARNOLD'S WEDDING BOOTS.
(They Have Been Worn by Their Owner for 52 Years.)

That was in November, 1852. On March 19, 1854, Mr. Arnold wore the same boots on the happy occasion when he led to the altar Miss Philena Cranson. On September 12 of the same year he came to Wisconsin, landing at Janesville. On March 23, 1858, he and his bride took up their abode in the little frame house in which they are still living. It was his hands that felled the trees to get room for a house. The forest was dense, the roads were rocky, but the love that was sheltered in the little 14x28 cottage, as well as the wedding boots, is there yet.

Good fortune took up its abode and lingered continually with the pair who had been a home in the woods. Fields of the 238 acres were cleared, other buildings were put up, and some of the apple trees in the little orchard that were planted nearly a half century ago are still bearing delicious fruit. While love and the boots have lasted Mr. Arnold and his good wife have moved along laying up store until no one knows what they have safely invested for their old age. This little farm itself is worth $50,000, but the price of a whole acre wouldn't buy the boots.

A Chicago Tribune correspondent says it must not be inferred that the owner has not taken extra good care of his favorite footwear. He has always done that, oiling them up at intervals and removing anything of a deleterious character. He explains that he wasn't accustomed to plow up the virgin sod while wearing them, and when chasing over the hills for the cows he wore felts. But when he goes to town, or any time when he wants dame fortune to stand him well in hand, he takes hold of the old straps that have never once given away and pulls on his calfskins, in which he has trodden the path of prosperity.

Mr. Arnold thinks it is a mistake for young people to throw away the belongings with which they commenced married life. However much or how little there should be given place to the things that carry the mind away back and bring up pleasant memories, back as far, at least, as the time when Cupid set them going in a life of happiness.

OUR PUBLIC PARKS

MANY NEW DEPARTURES TO BE FOUND IN THEM.

Present Magnificent Urban Pleasure Grounds Are the Product of About Forty Years of Effort—Some Examples.

In 14 new small parks on the South side, in Chicago, it is proposed to build "club houses for the masses," social centers for the congested districts. This is a decided departure in the way of municipal effort, a city considering its duty done in providing summer recreation places. But, not so very long ago, parks themselves were new departures.

It may be of interest to learn that when public parks were first projected there was much opposition to them:

A NOOK IN UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK.

one argument employed against them, that they would increase taxation; another, that they would become the resort of the vicious and that respectable people would have to hold aloof from them.

It is about 40 years America has displayed interest in the development of city parks, and that period is marked by much splendid work in the extension and beautifying of urban pleasure grounds. Widely-known Central park has cost New York $15,000,000, to-day has a real estate value of $200,000,000, but its value to the people is infinite. Some figures may indicate the scope of the benefit: It contains 400,000 acres of wooded grounds, has nine miles of carriage way, over 28 miles of walk, and bridle paths of five miles' length; there are 30 buildings on the grounds, and seats for 10,000 people. The whole, indeed, a boon to the city-doomed, who could better dispense with library and museum.

Central park established a noble precedent, and cities all over the country were inspired to follow after the good work here begun. To-day, a stranger in a large town counts as one of his first pleasures a visit to the park which has established a reputation; to be it known each city is now judged by its parks as well as by its numbers. Everyone has heard of certain of the parks of Greater New York—Central, Prospect, Morningside and Riverside, though not of the whole number constituting New York's ten square miles (6,766 acres) of park area. Chicago has a very fine system of parks and boulevards; the country is familiar with beautiful Lincoln, Washington and Jackson parks. Fairmount park is the pride of Philadelphia, a pleasaunce of 3,300 acres, and 21 small parks invite to outdoor loitering in the City of Brotherly Love. Over on the Pacific, San Francisco glories in Golden Gate park, and rejoices in numerous small parks. Belle Isle, the island park of Detroit, is a beautiful spot. Baltimore has so many parks she cannot look after them all; has nine large ones and 20 small. St. Louis' Forest park is very much to the fore at present, and the Shaw Gardens of that city are famous. The parks of Cincinnati, Cleveland, Buffalo, Minneapolis and St. Paul are justly famed, and Boston stands at the head of all our cities in the matter of park development, her city and suburban parks being illustrious examples of city beautifying.

City life, with its artificial conditions, certainly would be unbearable were it not for the breathing spaces here and there in the desert of buildings, were it not for the flower and woodland beauty so carefully planned and cherished by our city fathers; who to-day, influenced by the cry for hygienic outdoor life for both children and grown-ups, feel it incumbent to set apart park and boulevard where verdure, color and perfume may minister to the universal craving for natural beauty.

JOURNEY OF TERROR

CREW LITERALLY DEVOURED BY VICIOUS CENTIPEDES.

Italian Bark Has a Serious Time in Reaching Its Destination — Neither Work Nor Prayer Brought Relief.

Capt. L. Rubelli, Philadelphia agent of the Italian bark Annita-e-Menottie, has in receipt of a letter from Skipper Ferrara of the bark, telling how, on the ship's voyage to St. John, N. B., the crew were horribly bitten by hordes of bugs and centipedes. As a result of the sailors' battle with the pests part of the crew are in the hospital at St. John and it is feared that blood-poisoning may result.

On her last trip the bark brought a cargo of bones from Buenos Ayres. As always happens in this sort of a cargo there lurk thousands of nasty bugs and deadly crawling things. In discharging the bones the bug and centipede contingent took refuge in various parts of the ship, escaping the vigilance of the seamen.

The bark sailed from Philadelphia on June 16 and arrived at St. John on June 23. The Delaware breakwater had been left behind a few hundred miles when the bugs and centipedes swarmed out of hiding places and actually took possession of the vessel. The decks and masts became covered with them. They attacked the sailors; they made an onslaught upon the man at the wheel. He would have been driven from his post had not a seaman been ordered by the skipper to beat off the bugs.

The plight of the crew became serious. Nothing could conquer the terrible enemy. The bugs, Capt. Ferrara says in his letter to Capt. Rubelli, were of the pinching species. They flew about the vessel and lit upon the sailors, particularly their faces. The centipede added to the horror of the situation by crawling up the inside of the seamen's trousers. "What a position to be placed in," said Capt. Ferrara in his letter. "It was awful. The crew were almost at the mercy of the bug and centipede scourge. In their desperation they tore sails to pieces and with the bits about the length of towels tried to beat off their bloodthirsty assailants. It was useless. We killed hundreds of the tenacious pests, but as fast as we did so hundreds more swarmed up through the openings in the hatches. The decks became so thick with the smashed bodies of the enemy that it was with difficulty we kept our footing.

"The fight was a sorely unequal one. We soon saw that we could not conquer the bug and centipede horde, so I ordered all sail to be clapped on and this despite the fact that a three-fourths gale was blowing and the topmasts on fore and mainmasts were bending like reeds. With the masts and yards covered with centipedes it was no easy work to handle the sails. I felt that our only salvation was to reach our destination as quickly as we could. There was a time when I feared that the sailors would take to the boats and desert the bug-cursed ship. But I succeeded in persuading them to stick to the bark.

"Under the great spread of canvas that we carried we made the trip in seven days, beating all previous runs by three days. No matter how hard the wind blew we kept all sail on the ship. Meanwhile the bugs and centipedes fought us. The faces and arms and hands of the crew were in a frightful condition. Even the eyes of the sailors were affected.

"You have seen me jolly, Capt. Rubelli," concluded Skipper Ferrara. "You ought to have seen me and the crew when St. John came in sight. I became hysterical. I prayed. The anchor was no sooner let go in the harbor than, with a shout, the crew lowered the boats and were soon pulling frantically shoreward. Poor fellows, it will be a long time before some of them recover from their experience. Two are now confined to the hospital. I very much fear blood poisoning for not a few and I am a little nervous on the same score myself."

Birds Nest in Letter Box.

A letter box in the wall of a house at Leedham, England, has been converted into a receptacle for a nest by a pair of tomtits. At present it is occupied by 11 young birds. And they are quite friendly with the postman, who opens the box four or five times a day.

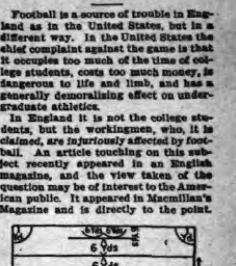
ENGLISH FOOTBALL

SOME PHASES OF THE SPORT AMONG BRITISH WORKMEN.

Game Is Largely Professional and the Workmen Is Always Ready to Quit His Job to Root for His Favorite Team.

Football is a source of trouble in England as in the United States, but in a different way. In the United States the chief complaint against the game is that it occupies too much of the time of college students, costs too much money, is dangerous to life and limb, and has a generally demoralizing effect on undergraduate athletics.

In England it is not the college students, but the workingmen, who, it is *claimed, are injuriously affected by foot*ball. An article touching on this subject recently appeared in an English magazine, and the view taken of the question may be of interest to the American public. It appeared in Macmillan's Magazine and is directly to the point.



THE ENGLISH FOOTBALL FIELD.

These extracts will be found interesting:

Large employers of labor in Yorkshire, in Lancashire, in Durham, and in Northumberland, as well as in the Midlands, have been obliged to yield to the rush of the tide and are powerless to command the interests of business against those of football. Momentous events, such as the launching of a ship or the completion of an important order within contract time, have frequently been delayed by the coincidence of a "cup tie." Large establishments are occasionally closed in midweek because the whole body of workmen take it into their heads that their pets on the football grounds require encouragement, if these men were ordinary hewers of wood and drawers of water a remedy might be found, but they are chiefly skilled laborers—earners of good wages—who need never be out of work, and who, if turned off, would be eagerly snapped up by a rival.

Persuasion is useless, for money is no object to men who can make their £3, £4 and £5 ($14.60, $19.47 and $24.33) for a week of five days; resistance is worse than useless; so the ay tranniza employers have, in their own interests, actually to encourage what in their hearts they detest. Thus, as I have been told, a large shipbuilding firm in one of the northern counties has been forced to find good berths for a couple of first-rate football players during the summer months, merely to retain their services for the local club and to prevent them from being tempted away by a rival. If a man or a boy does not get his consent from their posts on a Wednesday or a Saturday nobody asks where they are, or if they are ill or dead; it being taken for granted that football somewhere has attracted them away. To ask leave of absence is, of course, an archaic superfluity. Jamie or Georgie wants to be at a certain game; he goes, and there is no more to be said about it.

The objection to football in England, then, is that it interferes with business and not that it occupies the time and uses up the pocket money of college students.

It must be remembered that football in England is largely professional, as baseball is in the United States, and that it is played six or eight months in the year and not confined to two months in the autumn. There are International and interschool matches, but the chief interest in the game centers in the matches played by the professional teams. The interest felt in the game can be measured by the attention given it by the newspapers. Every day the announcement of games to come, and the reports of games played the previous day, occupy several columns in the leading newspapers, and the Saturday games demand a space of a half in Monday morning's newspapers.

From this it will be seen that football is a much more serious subject in England than in the United States.

Although the verdict has been set aside as excessive "in the eyes of the law," yet every decent man will commend the jury which returned a verdict of $7,182 in favor of the New Brunswick young mother who sued a Plainfield man for breach of promise. No punishment is too severe for such men.

Advertising makes more trade. More trade makes more advertising. What an advertisement suggests is frequently of more importance than what it says. The vital question that confronts the merchant of today is not, Will it pay to advertise? but, How can I make my advertising most effective? Some advertising is useful as object lessons to teach advertisers how not to do it. The merchant who appreciates good service should not forget to show his appreciation when occasion offers—Retailer and Advertiser.

QUICK-WITTED FIREMAN PREVENTS A FATALITY

PUSHES YOUNG MAN OUT OF ENGINE'S PATH IN THE NICK OF TIME.

Presence of mind on the part of Anson Henry, fireman on a Dunellen local passenger train, saved the life of Michael Eganey, a railroad employe, at Dunellen, Monday. The latter started across the tracks opposite the station to get the mail from the 6:30 east-bound express just as Henry's train swung in on another track. The fireman was standing on the cow-catcher and seeing the young man's peril, leaned over and knocked him backward out of harm's way. He escaped with a few bruises about the chest and a badly sprained ankle where a projection on the engine struck him.

Eganey is the son of Mrs. Mathias Eganey, who formerly resided on West Fourth street, this city. Henry's act was witnessed by a score of people and other craftsmen nearby applauded.

Business Men's Lunch.

E. H. Clavely, of North avenue, announces that he is now serving a business men's lunch from 12 to 2 o'clock for twenty-five cents and a regular dinner for thirty-five cents. A specialty is made of extra fine oysters. Mr. Clavely has a well-appointed dining room for women on the second floor at his restaurant. The menu and service at this restaurant are unsurpassed and a continuation of the liberal patronage is asked for.

AMUSEMENTS.

Frohman's attractions include the best that can be seen in New York at any time and what he offers at his various houses at present furnish a wide range for selection from the best on the boards. William H. Crane appears in "Business Is Business" at the Criterion and the critics give him nothing but favorable comment; William Faversham appears in "Lesly" at the Hudson Theatre. The Herald says it is "a great success;" "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" is still the drawing card at the Savoy; Edna May, fresh from English conquests, is starring in "The School Girl" at Daly's; John Drew is playing "The Duke of Killicrankie" at the Empire; Lulu Glaser in "A Madcap Princess" is at the Knickerbocker; Ogelia Loftus in the "Serio Comic Governess" is at the Lyceum; Clara Bloodgood is in "The Governor of the Dardanelles" at the Garrick. Next week Henry Miller will appear in "Joseph Entangled" at the Garrick.

Weber Music Hall was formally opened last Tuesday night for inspection by friends and patrons. In many respects the reception resembled an opening night at the famous abode of mirth and music. Throughout the evening carriages drew up to the doors in a steady procession and the cosy little playhouse was soon crowded to the doors with fashionably dressed women and men in evening clothes who flocked to get a look at the rejuvenated place of amusement in its new dress. Managers Weber and Zeigfeld were kept busy responding to the congratulations showered upon them and Miss Anna Held and other members of the Weber & Ziegfeld all-star stock company received their friends in flower-bedecked boxes. Fairies from Philadelphia, Boston and other adjacent cities came over specially to attend the reception. During the evening some of the seats and boxes for the opening performance of "Higgledy-Piggledy" on Oct. 13 were sold by a method which, it is hoped, will effectually prevent tickets from falling into the hands of speculators.

Julian Edwards, the composer, has launched Mme. Schumann-Heink well in the comic opera swim with his new "Love's Lottery," at the Broadway Theatre. It Stanilius Stange's plot was not of sturdy oak, his lyrics were of willowy grace. There was the air of romance and the smell of English heather in his story, though his heroine was a washer woman of many more years than twenty. Manager Fred C. Whitney, too, builded well for his new star's debut. The cast was exceptionally good, its voices were exceptionally true. It was backed by the best singing chorus which has been seen on Broadway since musical comedy gnawed at the roots of comic opera and stunted it to the level of the variety stage. Among all these necessities of a very refreshing and diverting comic opera Mme. Schumann-Heink was the giant of strength. She gave it nerve, she supplied almost all the humor, she was all over the stage. Musically, she was not affected by the frivolous surroundings, for she sang with purity of tone and mastery of technique. She was the former Schumann-Heink of grand opera, plus vivacity, buoyancy, activity.

"Checkers" is apparently in for a sensationally successful engagement at the Academy of Music. The big play house was filled nightly last week And on Saturday night the entire house was sold out long before the opening and nearly one thousand people were turned away. Theatre parties from the suburbs are nightly affairs at the Academy and it is not surprising for "Checkers" is an excellent play and well worth seeing. The company were carefully selected and show, in the smoothness of the acting, the value of long association and frequent rehearsals. Thomas W. Ross deepens the strong impression he *made last season, by his telling inter*pretation of the title roll, and the beauty of the young women who support him is quite worthy of their reputation.

The fiftieth performance of the "Isle of Spice" at the Majestic Theatre, New York, takes place tonight, and by a strange coincidence the five hundredth performance of the piece falls on the same night. The occasion will be made a noteworthy one. The house will be handsomely decorated, and costly souvenirs will be given away to every woman who attends the performance on that night. W. H. Kohnle, who has succeeded Alfred Landes Clarke, resigned, in the part of the King, has made a big hit in the part. It is Mr. Kohnle's first appearance in New York, although he has been a most popular comedian in the West for a number of years. His methods are quiet and his humor is most unctuous. One of the most testimonial tendered the Champion Giants on Tuesday night was the presence of almost all of the veteran pennant winners of 1894.

W. H. Rogers, of Highland Farm, left Sunday for St. Louis, to see the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

WATSON'S WORK.

REPUBLICAN MONEY BACK OF THE POPULIST CAMPAIGN?

Though Thomas E. Watson in his speech accepting the Populist nomination for President at Cooper Union, New York, on August 18, said that Roosevelt "stands for those governmental principles which, in my judgment, are hurting this Republic into a sordid despotism of wealth," the full speech is being sent broadcast as a Republican document.

The New York World states that the Republicans are hoping by this means to estrange "the voters of the Bryan Democrats from the National Democratic ticket."

"A Populist campaign in this state," continues the World, "is to be made with a plentiful supply of funds, and a state organization, it is said. It is openly intimated that there are not a few Republicans who would subscribe liberally to the Populist cause, for the purpose of defecting Bryan votes from Parker."

"In this connection it is announced that Thomas E. Watson is to deliver forty speeches in doubtful states, and, strangely enough, at the precise points where they might be expected to do most harm to the Democratic ticket. Mr. Watson has been in frequent consultation with a number of men here about his plans. Some of these men were formerly closely identified with Bryan."

In connection with the efforts of Populists to aid Mr. Roosevelt, Democrats are citing this trenchant paragraph from Mr. Roosevelt's pamphlet on the campaign of 1896:

"Thrift, industry, and business energy are qualities which are quite incompatible with true Populistic feeling. Payment of debt, like the suppression of riots, is abhorrent to the Populistic mind. Such conduct strikes the Populist as immoral."

WOOL, COTTON AND SHODDY.

When the American farmer pays one-third more for farm machinery, barbed wire, nails, binding twine and a good many other things that he buys than the same products are sold for to the farmer in Europe, he discovers that high trust prices have their drawbacks as well as their advantages. As long as high prices were confined to wheat, cotton and corn, the farmer had the best of it, but now the trusts have forced up the cost of living, which includes nearly everything the farmer does not produce, the profit made off the farm is less than when prices, all around, were much lower. The quality of clothing is not nearly so good as it was some years ago; the "all wool and a yard wide" cloth is a thing of the past; it is now nearly all cotton and 33 inches wide, as anyone can discover by measuring it and picking even what is called fine goods to pieces and closely examining it. The high protective duty on wool has led the manufacturer to imitate wool with cotton, so that only an expert can discover the difference. This wonderful apparent transformation of cotton is called the mercerising process, and the combine that is producing it is realising vast profits. There is no protective duty on cotton, so the difference in price between cotton and wool is wide apart; the first named being worth seven cents a pound, and wool about twenty-five cents. Thus, although the protective tariff on wool is the highest on record, 11 cents a pound on unscoured and 22 cents on scoured, since 1897, the price of wool has been much lower than under any other high tariff. Yet, the farmers have not made money on their sheep, to judge by the great decrease in the number raised, reported by the Agricultural Department. The enormous duty on wool has induced the manufacturers to find a substitute, the mercerized cotton and shoddy. The shoddy mills of Cleveland and elsewhere were never more prosperous than under the present tariff. So the farmers have been selling their wool at a low price and buying mercerized cotton and shoddy at a high price, when they bought a suit of clothes or any fabric supposed to be manufactured of wool.

These are some of the beauties of the high protective tariff, and how it protects the farmer.

Since the beginning of the fiscal year July 1, the deficit of receipts of the government from all sources has been $24,000,000 less than the expenditures. If the same ratio of loss is continued for the next ten months the deficit will amount to $144,000,000 for the full fiscal year. It will not amount to more than half that sum, but whatever it proves to be shows the wasteful extravagance of the present administration.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, the Roosevelt administration expended $177,000,000 more than the last year of the Democratic administration, and this was only counting the amounts in three appropriation bills out of seven, namely, the Army, Navy, and Civil and Miscellaneous. That extraordinary extravagance will be exceeded this year, for the appropriations made by Congress exceed last year's expenditures by nearly $130,000,000.

WANTS $50,000 DAMAGES

Middlekauf Sues Mrs. Opdyke for Malicious Prosecution.

HER CASE DISMISSED

Grand Jury Refuses to Indict Plainfielder on Charge of False Pretence.

Within an hour after a complaint against him of obtaining money under false pretenses, had been dismissed by the Cumberland County Grand Jury, Friday, E. D. Middlekauf, of Watchung avenue, this city, began suit for $50,000 against Mrs. Ella VanEvra Opdyke, of Vineland. He alleges malicious prosecution and the summons was sent to Bridgeton by special messenger at 5 o'clock this morning. The papers were prepared by his local attorneys, Messrs. Codington & Swackhamer, and his interests will further be looked after by Lawyer W. A. Logue, of Bridgeton, who wired him of the jury's action.

Middlekauf was placed under arrest in this city on September 7 on complaint of Mrs. Opdyke, who asserted that he defrauded her father, Theodore VanEvra, of $11,882. He was taken to police headquarters and turned over to Chief of Police Bullock, of Millville, who came to Plainfield with the warrant. Mr. Middlekauf readily accompanied him, telegraphing in advance for $10,000 bail.

According to the plaintiff's testimony when her suit was brought, Mrs. Opdyke's father died four months ago as a result, she alleged, of worrying over investments made by Middlekauf for him. A month later Middlekauf removed to this city from Millville where he has since resided with his wife and three children. When placed under arrest he denied any wrongdoing. It was said that he succeeded in getting VanEvra to buy 100,000 shares of stock in the National Oil and Development Company upon false representations of dividends, and this was followed by other alleged poor investments, with the results that the greater part of his money was swept away.

Middlekauf is interested in oil companies and has an office for the transaction of his business in New York city.

GREAT GAME A-COMING

Plainfield A. C. to Have a Try at New York Nationals.

ALL STAR PLAYERS

Local Lineup Will Closely Resemble the New York Americans.

The local baseball season will close on Saturday when the New York Nationals, champions of the National League, will meet the Plainfield A. C.'s on Crescent Oval. According to the terms of agreement the regular big league team is to appear here and "Christy" Mathewson and Warner will form the battery. There will be Dan. McGann on first base, Billy Gilbert at second, "Bad Bill" Dahlen at short and Devlin on third, while in the field will be "Sandow" Merles, Jack Dunn and Brown, with George Wiltse on the bench as extra pitcher.

There many be some surprises in the local lineup and it so a record-breaking crowd is likely to be on Crescent Oval. Efforts are being made to secure several New York American League players and if the plan is consummated a battle royal will result, such as the New York baseball fans have been clamoring for. Manager Johnston is especially desirous of securing "Willie" Keeler on his team for the game. Keeler began his baseball career here several years ago when Manager Keller was in charge of the Crescents, and his many friends would like to see him on the local diamond. It is also possible that Gansel, Williams, Elberfield, Conroy and Anderson, of the Americans, may be seen here.

Arrangements are being made to wind up the season by giving the fans one of the best exhibitions ever seen here and if these players oppose each other there is no doubt but what a fast exhibition will be on. As yet it has not been decided who will pitch, but it is likely to be either Louis Wiltse, Putnam or "Rube" Waddell.

In view of the expense attached to the arrangements for the game, the management is obliged to increase the price of admission to fifty cents. This was done a year ago when the New Yorks played the Westfields.

Miss Cutter's Wedding Day.

Invitations have been issued for the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Edna Cutter and Oliver Barbour Hill, of this city, which will be celebrated Tuesday evening, Oct. 25, at 7 o'clock, at the home of the bride's brother, F. S Cutter, 26 Sandford avenue.

EQUINE DISCOVERS FIRE

Saves House From Destruction by Arousing Coachman.

INCENDIARY ORIGIN

Mysterious Blaze Damages Central Avenue Residence Belonging to Mrs. West.

Fire of an evident incendiary origin which broke out in an unoccupied residence on Central avenue, between Seventh and Eighth streets, at 5 Saturday morning, would undoubtedly have destroyed the building but for its discovery by a horse. An intelligent animal in the stable of William T. Gough, of West Eighth street, situated just back of the burning house, saw the flames through its stall window and began a loud whinnying and jumping about until it aroused the coachman, Charles Kosead, sleeping upstairs.

Alarmed by the equine's movements he hurried to it but the window is so situated that he did not notice the reflection. Thinking the animal was hungry he placed some hay near it and went back to bed, but not to sleep. He had barely gotten in his room when the racket again began and a second time he went down to investigate. He then perceived that the horse was gazing intently out of the window and following its gaze he saw the flames creeping up the kitchen extension on the Central avenue house.

He turned in an alarm from box 33 at Seventh street and Central avenue at 5:15. The department was quickly on the scene, but owing to the nature of the blaze, the men had a stubborn fight. To Chief Doane there was every appearance of the structure having been set on fire from the outside and the flames had crept in beneath the walls, spreading slowly about. It was 6:15 before the last spark was extinguished, with only the kitchen affected.

The house is owned by Mrs. C. S. West, of Troy, N. Y., formerly of Plainfield, and although fully furnished, no one lived in it. The loss is placed at $300, covered by insurance. A further investigation is being conducted in order to learn if possible just what started the conflagration.

MISS ALICE JENKINS WEDS CHAS. SCHEUERMAN

CEREMONY WITNESSED BY RELATIVES AND FRIENDS FROM MANY PLACES.

Miss Alice Jenkins, daughter of Mrs. Mary Jenkins, and Charles Scheuerman were married Saturday afternoon at the bride's home on East Sixth street. Rev. Mr. Young, of Garfield, officiated, assisted by Rev. Dr. Snedgrass, of this city. There was no best man or bridesmaid, though the bride was attended by two flower girls, Miss Mary Jenkins, a sister, and Miss Florence Ludwig, both of Garfield. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, H. S. Jenkins, also of Garfield.

The decorations were of autumn leaves, tastefully set against banks of smilax and potted plants. The bride and groom stood beneath a canopy of greens, artistically arranged at the end of the parlor. Miss Jenkins was gowned in white mousseline de soie and carried white bride roses. She wore no veil.

Both young people were handsomely remembered with gifts from their friends and relatives, many of whom were present from New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, Elizabeth, Passaic, Garfield, Flemington, Bethlehem, and this city. At the conclusion of a delightful reception following the wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Scheuerman left for a short wedding trip, after which they will make their home in this city. Miss Jenkins is the daughter of the late J. N. Jenkins, and the niece of Mayor Otis L. Jenkins.

Reception to Church Worker.

In honor of Miss Judith Johnson, who leaves soon for Sweden to visit her old home, an entertainment was given in the Swedish Pilgrim church, Saturday night. Miss Johnson has been an active worker in the church and her departure is a source of much regret. Rev. L. T. Lundholm, the pastor, made a few remarks in which he spoke of Miss Johnson's work and in behalf of her many friends a purse of money, "large enough," as the pastor expressed it, "to take her over and back," was presented to her. Refreshments and a social hour followed.

Borough Firemen to Parade Again.

P. A. C. DEFEATS STARS

Elizabeth Aggregation Loses Saturday's Game by 6 to 1.

WILTSE'S GOOD WORK

The Baltimore American's Pitcher Holds Visitors Down to a Total of Four Hits.

The Plainfield A. C. had sweet revenge on Saturday when it defeated the Elizabeth Stars by a score of six to one on Crescent Oval. A week ago, Manager Burke's aggregation "put it all over" the locals by a score of 12 to 1 and they were determined to reverse the order, if possible. In doing this the home team was assisted largely by Louis Wiltse, of the Baltimore Eastern League team, who stood on the firing line. With clock-work precision he held the visitors down, allowing them but four hits and striking out ten men. His performance was of the highest order and he was ably supported by Farmer, who played gilt-edged ball at the receiving end.

In the absence of Daly, Oregan covered third base, and with one exception, when he made an error on a low throw so first which was responsible for the only run the visitor's got, he was up to his usual game. Joe Alberts covered right field in faultless style, while Bassford was in centre and Dietrich in left. The playing of Jones at short was brilliant, his stops of hard-hit grounders and his throwing to first, arousing great enthusiasm. He also led the team in batting, landing on the leather sphere three times safely. Oregan, Bradley and Wiltse also did good work with the stick, securing two hits each, Bradley getting a three-bagger. Jones also got a three timer.

"Warry" MacLaughlin was not in quite the good form of a week ago, for he was touched for a total of twelve hits. Quinlan and Soffel were credited with the only errors, while Noyes got two hits and Soffel and Foster one each. This makes the series stand one victory for each team and it is possible the third contest will be played at Elizabeth on Saturday, October 23. The detailed score:

SAMUEL A. WALLACE DEAD

Boroughite Passes Away After Three Weeks Illness.

A RESIDENT 35 YEARS

Married Miss Mary Estil Thirty-One Years Ago—A Mason—Funeral Arrangements.

After lingering in a semi-conscious condition for ten days, Samuel A. Wallace passed away at the home of his brother-in-law, Mulford Estil, of Grove street, Sunday afternoon. Stricken ill at Asbury Park on September 17, where had had been sojourning, he was brought home three weeks ago and for a time seemed to improve. A relapse came on September 30 and he was left speechless. blind and partly sensible, remaining in that condition until the end. The original illness was due to Bright's disease.

Samuel A. Wallace was born in Salesbury township, Pa., in 1831. He removed to Plainfield thirty-five years ago and had resided here ever since. For a long time he was a carpenter but later engaged in business as a ship chandler with warehouses at Baltimore, the firm name being Wallace & Gale. It prospered until at the present time the concern is one of the best known in that section. In the big Baltimore fire recently, the warehouses were destroyed but new and more commodious ones are now being erected. For the past six years he has not been actively engaged in managing his affairs in the business but always maintained representatives at Baltimore.

Thirty-one years ago he married Miss Mary Estil, who survives him. He was a member of Amity lodge, F. and A. M., of Lambertville, and of the Park Avenue Baptist church, of this city. Also surviving him are a brother who resides in Trenton and two sisters, one in Philadelphia and the other in Baltimore.

Funeral services over the body will be held from his late home Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'cock.

Last Sunday Excursion to Manch Chunk.

There is no more popular resort for a Sunday than Manch Chunk, and to reach it entails a delightful rail journey, and at Manch Chunk there is a diversity of amusement, the chief of which is a ride over the Switchback. This journey occupies more than one hour, and leads over and around the mountains with widely changing scenes at every turn. The Switchback is a gravity road, and the speed attained is close to a mile per minute. Another feature is Pidgeaff, the summit of which is reached by trolley, and from its pinnacle point there is a view extending over miles and miles of beautiful county. An interesting spot close at hand is Glen Onoko, a short distance above Manch Chunk, and, as its name implies, is a beautiful glen, with falls, cataracts, mountain paths leading to cool and delightful places. On October 16, 1904, the New Jersey Central is to run a popular excursion to Manch Chunk from Plainfield by special train, leaving at 9:30 a. m. Returning train will leave Manch Chunk at 5:40 p. m., and the round trip will cost but $1.50. Prepaid train service will be in effect between Manch Chunk and Glen Onoko, and the trains on the Switchback run every few minutes. 10 11 5 o

VANQUISHED WORKMEN

Mrs. Glaser's Battle With 50 Telephone Co. Employes.

OVER RIGHT OF WAY

Alton Woman Tries to Prevent Telephone Polls Being Erected.

Alone and unaided, Mrs. Theodore Glaser, of Alton, Friday successfully fought off fifty workmen in the employ of the Northeastern Telephone Company who sought to erect four poles in front of her property. They succeeded in getting one in position but she so hampered them that they could not get holes dug for the others. While she was jumping in front of their shovels and the earth was being removed from all around her, a neighbor summoned her counsel, Walter L. Heitfield, Jr., and he served notice on the foreman of the job to desist. He reluctantly called the men away. Notice has been served on the company to take down the pole.

The telephone people in seeking to get their trunk line through Fanwood township met with all manner of opposition and in order to get the good will of the residents have been paying various amounts for each pole put up in front of their property. The Glaser place is owned by Mrs. Glaser, but the officials made the agreement with her husband. Mrs. Glaser informed Adjuste. Stephenson, who was with them, that she did not want poles on it. Stephenson refused to stop.

Not daunted by the formidable array of men who stood around with picks and shovels, Mrs. Glaser jumped among them whenever they started to dig and by running from one point to the other they found it hard work to get the holes to the proper depth. One was finally completed and the big pole was placed in it while she was standing off another gang further down the road. The earth was removed from all about her but only once was any violence offered when one man grasped her by the shoulders and forced her to one side.

Unless the one pole is removed, suit will be entered against the company.

Refusing to recognize Mrs. Theodore Glaser's ownership of the property Glaser and her husband occupy at Alton, officials of the Northeastern Telephone Company together with fifty picked men, erected three poles in front of the place Monday after an exciting battle which lasted an hour. Headed by her counsel, Walter L. Heitfield, Jr., and aided by neighbors who rallied around her, Mrs. Glaser fought in every way to frustrate the work and in the end was carried to her home with a crushed foot due to one of the poles being rolled on it. The opposition was immediately called off by the lawyer and the company is to be made defendant in a suit for damages, the plucky woman being in a serious condition. Notice has also been served on the officials to remove the poles within twenty-four hours or be made defendants in an action for trespass.

Today's disturbance made the second that has occurred since the company began stringing wires past the Glaser place. The permit under which the men worked was signed by Theodore Glaser, who admitted that he had no right to do so as the property is solely his wife's and she had no knowledge of his action. When the gang arrived on Friday morning she telephoned Attorney Heitfield and after a struggle Mrs. Glaser won her point and the men were withdrawn for the time being.

Saturday the officials consulted Counsellor H. C. Runyon, of this city, and on his advice it was decided to get ahead with the work, accepting the husband's written consent as legal. The material and tools were on the ground from Friday and Monday morning the men arrived and took up the work where they had left off, one pole having been placed in position. Again Heitfield was notified and jumping in a wagon was hurriedly driven to the scene where Counsellor Runyon was taking care of the legal end for the telephone people. Neighbors of the Glasers hurried up and in a few minutes Alton was treated to one of the most novel sights it has ever witnessed.

When the workmen started to dig a hole, either Heitfield, Scott Terry, or a sympathizer, would jump into it and the shovelling would cease at that point only to commence a short distance away. The Glaser force overcame this by dropping Mrs. Glaser's children in the holes that had been abandoned, thus preventing the invaders returning, but allowing the adults to continue the struggling. At one time the lawyer, Terry and the sympathizer were all in excavations, while a row of children's heads marked where an effort had been been given up. The supply of children was running low when one hole was completed and Mrs. Glaser's foot was crushed as a pole was about to be put in it. It marked the first assault that had occurred during the struggling and it was all that was necessary to bugle legal action on that charge. Previous to that time the only violence offered was when men reached down and hauled up the children who had been placed to block them. The divisions that succeeded in gaining holes dug, did so by forming a cordon with diggers in the middle and preventing them being molested by presenting a solid phalanx.

When the Glaser forces were called off, the work was continued and the poles are now in position. Writs are to be strung. There is opposition to the telephone company all through the district and the outcome of the present struggle is being watched closely by all the neighboring property owners.

ENDEAVORERS MARK NINETEENTH ANNIVERSARY

SPECIAL EXERCISES IN TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.

Interesting exercises, including special music by the choir, a report by the recording secretary, Miss Harries G. Randall, and addresses by Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of the church, and Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, comprised the programme at the celebration of the nineteenth anniversary of the Christian Endeavor Society, of Trinity Reformed church, held in the church, Sunday. There was a large attendance of Endeavorers and friends who joined in congratulating the society on its excellent record.

The service opened with a song service, led by Horace J. Martin, Sr., after which there was an anthem by the choir. The Scripture reading was conducted by Harry F. Crawford, president of the society, after which Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck offered prayer. Preceding a cornet solo by Edward Young, accompanied on the organ by Arthur Titsworth, Dr. Schenck offered a few words of welcome.

The pastor expressed the welcome in the Dutch fashion—"well-oems." He said that he was glad to see as many present and he hoped all would come again. He said that the Dutch may be slow in some things, but they are not slow in knowing that the Christian Endeavor Society is a good thing. "Here in Trinity church," said Mr. Schenck, "the society is thoroughly at home and our prayer is that God's blessing may rest upon it."

The report of the recording secretary, Miss Randall, was then presented. This showed that a year ago there were 120 active members and no associates. There have been added eleven new members to the roll this year, seven active and four associate. One member received into the church membership and two have died. There are now ninety-nine active members and four associates. Forty-eight meetings were held with a total attendance of 1,896 and an average attendance of forty. Two members have attended every meeting. To the Arabian Mission $10 was given. Miss Curry received $5 for her fresh air work and the King's Daughters' Circle in the church also received $5. During the year one hundred birthday bags were made and eighteen gingham aprons for mission purposes.

Following the report there was an excellent vocal solo by Miss Florence Bennett and Edward Young, entitled "Love Divine, All Love Excelling."

The speaker of the evening, Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, was then introduced. He referred to organization as the great law of life and that of the Endeavor Society as one of those organizations with so many methods of action. He said that it would be a good thing if every member of the society called the church could be made chairman of some committee whereby he or she could feel a responsibility.

Dr. Lewis also referred to the individuality of character in organization. "How shall we develop ourselves into useful service is the important question," said Dr. Lewis. You owe more than I can tell to Trinity church and the church owes a great deal to your society."

Dr. Lewis then spoke of the value of individual culture for individual service and said that the highest conception of Christian service is when everyone is doing his or her share of the work. "In military life every man has his place in the ranks and so it should be in the Christian Endeavor Society and the society is like a chain, scarcely stronger as a whole than its weakest part. This society has the reputation of being a working body and I congratulate you. God loves these organizations only as he loves the individual and I ask you not to forget that grand individuality of service."

The service was concluded with the singing of a hymn and the benediction by Dr. Lewis.

SITUATION IN SOMERSET

Frank Rose is Picked as a Winner for Sheriff.

BOROUGH'S POSITION

Question Whether North Plainfield's Warning Element Will Hold County Ticket.

In forecasting the result in Somerset County, much depends on North Plainfield borough where harmony is not so thick that it can be cut with a knife. Mayor Smalley and his friends of the administration forces did not attend the Republican county convention and they do not seem to be over enthusiastic so far as the county ticket is concerned. Twice have North Plainfield Republicans under the leadership of Mayor Smalley, former Councilman Emmens, former Senator Reed and others, defeated the regular county ticket. Senator Reed does not seem to be entirely interested in the campaign, but Mayor

Frank Rose,
Somerset Democrats' Nominee for Sheriff.

Smalley is still on the firing line. Should the warring forces again attack the tickets to rub it in harder on Somerville, it will have much effect on the vote.

Frank Rose, of Somerville, the Democratic nominee for sheriff, is very strong in Bridgewater township and is popular throughout the county, particularly so in North Plainfield. Daniel H. Beekman, of Branchburg, the Democratic nominee for Assembly, is considered a good man but he is not so well known as his colleague on the ticket. Political wise men say that Rose will be the next sheriff, but Edward Cooper, of Warren township, his opponent, is making no active canvas throughout the county. He has many friends in the country districts, particularly. Friends of Irving Hoagland, of Franklin township, the Republican nominee, says he will succeed S. S. Swackhamer in the Legislature.

Friends of Frank Rose, who was nominated for sheriff by Somerset county Democrats Saturday, are jubilant over his selection.

Mr. Rose is tax assessor of Bridgewater township, is a son of former

Daniel H. Beekman,
Somerset Democrats' Nominee for Assembly.

Sheriff William Rose, and is one of the firm of James Rose & Co., brick manufacturers, who have conducted a brickyard near Somerville for many years. He secured the nomination for assessor over Charles L. Voorhees, and was elected by a large majority two years ago.

Daniel H. Beakman, nominated for member of Assembly on the Democratic ticket for Somerset county, is the young and able law partner of former Judge J. D. Bartine, of Somerville. Mr Beekman is a graduate of the Somerville Classical School. After graduating there he entered the New York Law School and for two years pursued a course of study, completing his legal education with former Congressman Alvah A. Clark. He was admitted as an attorney at law in 1898 and as a counsellor at law in 1903. In 1901 the well-known partnership of the firm of Bartine & Beekman was formed. Mr. Beekman is a native of Somerset county. He was born and has always lived on the farm where he now resides, near North Branch, which place has been in the Beekman family for over a century.

DEMOCRATS NAME TICKET

Union Co. Convention Harmonious and Enthusiastic.

COX, GUNN AND HAGUE

Three Assemblymen Nominated—Baldwin for Clerk and Higgins for Registrar.

For county clerk, George W. Baldwin, of Summit; for registrar of deeds, Bernard J. Higgins, of Elizabeth; for members of the Assembly, Joseph H. Gunn, of Springfield; Joseph Hague, of Elizabeth, and Stephen Cox, of Cranford. For coroner, Dr. Rufus Dearborn, of Elizabeth. This was the ticket that the Democrats placed in nomination at the Union county convention held in Turn Hall, Elizabeth, Friday afternoon. The convention was an enthusiastic one and harmonious.

As chairman of the county committee, John L. Moody, of Cranford, called the convention to order, after which Judge Louis H. Hyer, of Rahway, was chosen temporary and permanent chairman. E. M. Meek, of Elizabeth, was the secretary.

These committees were appointed:

Credential—William L. Hetfield, Sr., of Plainfield; W. J. Wood, of Elizabeth; Alfred Cook, of Rahway. Permanent organization—Noah Woodruff, of Roselle Park; Robert H. McAdams, of Elizabeth; Clarence Teel, of Plainfield. Rules—G. H. Schlotter, of Elizabeth; Robert Gordon, of Elizabeth; W. H. Swain, of Summit. Resolutions — Mulford Sondder, of Westfield; Richard A. Harry, of Elizabeth; John Halliday, of Clark Township. Vacancies — Alford Cook, of Rahway; John L. Moody, of Cranford; Patrick Murphy, of Elizabeth; John J. Lane, of Summit; D. Hobart Sayre, of Union.

W. D. Gibby, of Summit, nominated George W. Baldwn, of that place, for county clerk, after Clark Township had nominated John L. Crowell. When it was seen that Mr. Baldwin had a majority of the votes, Mr. Crowell withdrew and moved that the nomination of the Summit man be made unanimous.

In nominating a candidate for registrar of deeds, Clark Township gave way to Rahway, and Alford Cook, of that place, nominated John L. Crowell. The First ward, of Elizabeth, gave way to the Second ward, and W. D. Wolfskell in an enthusiastic speech nominated Bernard J. Higgins, who has served for twelve years in the county clerk's office. He had a majority of the delegates and Mr. Crowell withdrew in favor of Mr. Higgins and the nomination was made unanimous, amid great applause.

In placing an Assembly ticket in nomination, John L. Moody presented the name of Assemblyman Joseph Gunn, of Springfield; Edward Doyle named Stephen Cox, of Cranford, and Joseph Firman named Joseph T. Hague, of Elizabeth. The names of Alford Cook and Frank C. Hyer, of Rahway, were mentioned, but they declined, and the first three nominated received the unanimous vote of the convention.

G. H. Schlotter nominated Dr. Rufus Dearborn, of Elizabeth, for coroner, after Thomas Higgins, of Elizabeth, had declined to accept. There were no other nominations and the convention made the choice unanimous.

On motion of Edward Nugent the work of Assemblymen Gunn, Hague and Moffett in the last Legislature was endorsed by the convention.

After the nominations were completed, a committee consisting of Edward Nugent and John Moody escorted the candidates to the platform, where they were introduced and made short speeches.

Frank Ingraham, of Liberty street, has gone to Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to spend two weeks with relatives.

Mrs. Clark, wife of Rev. G. W. Clark, of Hightstown, is visiting her friend, Mrs. Dayton, of Sixth street.

Superintendent Billing, of the Jersey City High Schools, was the guest of George Sanders, of Orchard place, Sunday.

Mrs. Salkeld, nee Miss Daisy Snyder, formerly of this city, but now of Jersey City, is visiting friends here for a short time.

YOUNG WOMAN HURT IN R. R. WRECK SUCCUMBS

MISS EVELYN SIMONSON INJURED IN WESTFIELD DISASTER IS DEAD.

Miss Evelyn Simonson, who has been ill for a long time, died Thursday at 1:30 a. m. at her home on Dorr street. She formerly held a position in New York, but was obliged to relinquish it after the wreck on the New Jersey Central at Westfield on January 27, 1908. She was a passenger on the Easton express into which the Philadelphia and Reading "flyer" crashed and she sustained injuries and a severe nervous shock to her system from which she never seemed to recover.

She brought suit against the New Jersey Central and on the second trial she recovered damages.

Miss Simonson was twenty-one years of age and had lived in the borough for several years. She leaves a mother and sister, with whom she lived, and two brothers, Ellis Simonson, of Elizabeth, and John Simonson, of New Haven, Conn.

CHARLES HERRMANN WEDS SOMERVILLE GIRL

MISS BERTHA BANNER THE BRIDE OF BOROUGHITE.

Miss Bertha Banner, of Somerville, and Charles Herrmann, of North Plainfield, were quietly married at the bride's home Wednesday afternoon. Rev. Dr. Reed, pastor of the Second Reformed church at that place, officiated. There was no bridesmaid or best man. The wedding march was played by Miss Catherine Banner, of Newark, a cousin of the bride.

The bride was gowned in white net over white silk, and carried white bridal roses. She wore no veil. There were about thirty guests present, including friends and relatives from Plainfield, Somerville, Newark, New York and Bound Brook. Mr. and Mrs. Herrmann will not go on a wedding tour at present, but will hereby make their home on Johnson's drive, North Plainfield.

LITERARY.

Collier's for October is a harvest number. It contains a striking article by Arthur Ruhl on "The Drama of the Harvest." The writer pictures the marvels of the great American harvest and shows how little our own people realize the real source and reason of our national supremacy.

Charles Belmont Davis, the brother of Richard Harding Davis, contributes to the October Red Book a short story with a fascinating title, "Mr. Hinchbeard of Bellsquarde." It is a tale of American art students in Italy, with a peculiar romance to lend additional interest. John Oliverce Gilbert makes the illustrations.

The six men who control the amusements of the American public are Daniel Frohman, Al Hayman, Marc Klaw, Abraham L. Erlanger, Samuel F. Nixon and F. Zimmerman, Jr. They are the men, according to an article in Leslie's Monthly Magazine for October, who make the star stars, playwrights, theatre managers and producers, and who determine what the public shall laugh at or weep over.

The picturesque personality of Thomas W. Lawson is well to the fore in the October issue of Everybody's Magazine. Not satisfied with the allowance of space given to his "Frenzied Finance" in the body of the magazine, he has burst the bonds of editorial convension and appropriated several pages in the advertising section, part of which he uses to reply to the scores of letters and inquiries which his remarkable articles have brought him. He deals with his critics in much the same spirit he handles the financiers—without gloves. Incidentally, the October issue of Everybody's is 550,000; the issue of September was 485,000, and a second edition had to be printed.

The first instalment of David Graham Phillips's new novel, "The Plum Tree Tree, or the Confessions of a Politician," appears in the October Success. It starts out in a strong, vigorous, epigrammatic manner, and dips well into the "inside" of things. Sydney Brooks, the noted English journalist, contributes a somewhat startling article on "Foreign Ignorance of American Affairs." Mr. Brooks declares that there are living British statesmen like Lansdowne and Balfour who do not even know where some of our principal cities are located, and tells about a certain Britisher who recently asked Justin McCarthy if the Mississippi River flows East and West.

The October number of The Popular Science Monthly contains the following articles: "A Traveler's View of the British Association Meeting," by Professor Henry S. Pritchett; "Reflections Suggested by the New Theory of Matter," by the Right Honorable Arthur James Balfour; "The Mathematical Physics of the Nineteenth Century," by Professor Horace Lamb; "Heredity and Evolution," by William Bateson; "On the Perception of the Force of Gravity by Plants," Professor Francis Darwin; "The Biological Work of Louis Pasteur," by Henry Balfour; "Our Ancestors and Man kind," by Douglas W. Freshfield; "Correlation of Reflexes and the Principle of the Common Path," by Professor C. S. Sherrington; "Invention and Discovery," by The Hon. Charles A. Parsons.

"The last shall be first" in the October Atlantic, which vindicates its historic leadership in political affairs by two important articles for which it reserves its closing pages: "The Democratic Appeal" written by Edward M. Shepard, and "The Republican Point of View," stated by Representative S. W. McCall, in which the writers explain and defend the principles of their respective parties.

The October-December number of The Forum contains six reviews of the quarter's progress and four special articles. H. Litchfield West's survey of "American Politics" is of unusual importance this quarter, as it discusses the issues and prospects of the Presidential campaign. The war in the East naturally absorbs the greater part of A. Maurice Low's account of "Foreign Affairs." In his papers on "Finance," Alexander D. Noyes deals with the effect of the same conflict upon the money market as well as with the harvest outlook, and the course of the Stock Exchange. "Applied Science" is in the hands of Henry Harrison Suplee, who considers mainly recent advances in engineering, but takes note also of the commercial value of chemical and other discoveries.

The illustrated magazine number of The Outlook for October is a woman's number, and presents a long list of articles relating to woman's interests, to the varied occupations of women, and to striking and interesting personalities among women. Among the articles will be found: "Some Women Writers," by Miss Jeannette L. Gilder, of the "Critic;" "Women Illustrators of Child Life," by Elizabeth Lore Norsh; "Settlement Workers and Their Work," by Mary B. Sayles; "Queen Alexandra and Her Gardens," by Mrs. E. Douglas Shields; "The Social Ideals of American Women," by Elizabeth Mc-Cracken; "One Woman on a School Board," by Anna C. Woodruff, and "Men Maid and the Mistress," a discussion on domestic problems, by Mrs. Florence M. Kingsley (author of "The Singular Miss Smith"), and many others.

The actual cash receipts of The Metropolitan Magazine, during the last month, showed an increase (over the same month last year) of: 1st, cash increase in subscriptions, 206 per cent.; 2d, cash increase in advertising, 187 per cent.; 3d, cash increase in news-stand sale, 24 per cent. The Metropolitan Magazine, 3 West Twenty-ninth street, New York.

ALFRED SPEER,

THE ORIGINAL

Port Grape Wine Producer in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had

The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while these grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. The New Jersey apples, for instance, make a cider that was always popular the world over. If you want a wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards. Sold by Druggists.

THE OLDEST LIVING THING.

Said to Be a Huge Cypress Tree in Chapultepec 6,260 Years Old.

"The statement recently made that there are yews in England which are the oldest living things on this earth," Mr. Thomas C. Ireland said to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, "is not correct.

"These yews are old, very, very old; there is no doubt about that; some of them were stalwart trees even before the Romans set foot on our shores. There is one now standing in the churchyard at Fortingal, in Perthshire, which Decandole, nearly a century ago, proved to the satisfaction of botanists to be over 25 centuries old, and another at Hedsor, in Bucks, which is 2,240 years old. How Decandole arrived at an apparently correct estimate of the enormous age of these living trees is a simple thing, and the principle is doubtless well known to-day to all. The yew, like most other trees, adds each year but the tenth of an inch, to its circumference each year. He proved this after an investigation extending over several years, and we now, a hundred years later, that his deductions were correct. The old yew at Hedsor has a trunk 27 feet in diameter, proving its great age, and it is in a flourishing, healthy condition now, like its brother at Fortingal.

"Their years are few, though, compared with those of the trees I had in mind when I made my first assertion that the statement printed about them in a scientific journal was incorrect. In one chapter of his writings Humboldt refers to a gigantic boabab tree in central Africa as the oldest organic monument in the world. This tree has a trunk 29 feet in diameter, and Adanson, by a series of careful measurements, demonstrated conclusively that it had lived for not less than 5,150 years.

"Still it is not the oldest organic monument in the world, as Humboldt declared, for now Mexican scientists have proved that a huge cypress tree, standing in Chapultepec, with a trunk 118 feet and ten inches in circumference, is older than it—older, too, by more than 1,000 years—for it has been shown, as conclusively as these things can be shown, that its age is about 6,260 years. To become impressed with wonder over this, one has only to dwell on that duration for a little while in thought.

"Yet it is not so remarkable when one stops for a moment to remember that, given favorable conditions for its growth and sustenance, the average tree will never die of old age—its death is when accident. Other younger and more vigorous trees may spring up near it, and perhaps rob its roots of their proper nourishment; insects may kill it, floods or winds may sweep it away, or its roots may come in contact with rock and become so gnarled and twisted because they have not room to expand in their growth, that they literally throttle the avenues of its sustenance; but these are accidents. It such things do not happen a tree may live on for century after century, still robust, still flourishing, sheltering with its widespreading branches the men and women of age after age.

WOLF LARSEN'S LUCIFER.

He Led a Lost Cause and Was Not Afraid of Heaven's Thunderbolts.

If ever Wolf Larsen attained the summit of living, he attained it then. From time to time I forsook my own thoughts to follow him; and I followed in amaze, mastered for the moment by his remarkable intellect, under the spell of his passion, for he was preaching the passion of revolt, writes Jack London, "The Sea Wolf," in Century. It was inevitable that Milton's Lucifer should be instanced, and the keenness with which Wolf Larsen analyzed and depicted the character was a revelation of his stirring genius. It reminded me of Taine, yet I knew the man had never heard of that brilliant though dangerous thinker.

"He led a lost cause, and he was not afraid of God's thunderbolts," Wolf Larsen was saying. "Hurled into Hell, he was unbeaten. A third of God's angels he had led with him, and straightway he incited men to rebel against God and gained for himself and hell the major portion of the generation of man. Why was he beaten out of heaven? Because he was less brave than God? Less proud? Less aspiring? No! A thousand times no! God was more powerful, as he said, whom thunder hath made greater. But Lucifer was a free spirit. To serve was to suffocate. He preferred suffering in freedom to all the happiness of a comfortable servility. He did not care to serve God. He cared to serve nothing. He was no figurehead. He stood on his own legs. He was an individual."

New Treaty Port of China.

Kongmoon, the new treaty port of China, is on the West river, Sam-Ui district, in the province of Kwangtung, and by the river route is upward of 60 miles distant from Canton. Its population within the walled city is about 30,000. Including the suburbs its population reaches 200,000. There are no foreign residences either in Kongmoon or its immediate vicinity.—London Mail.

BOOK NEWS.

It is planned to issue on Thursday of each week the list of library notes. This will frequently take the place of book lists, such as lists of books recently added, lists on special subjects and like topics. Frequently the lists will be annotated, the aim being to make them an assistance of some service to the reader, by giving him the opinion of a trustworthy critic as to the value of the books or a few words as to their scope. Borrowers should keep these lists. The Plainfield Public Library will furnish to anyone making application a list of its books on a given subject.

HOW NERVES ARE SPLICED.

Latest Wonder in the Line of Surgical Accomplishment in the Medical World.

Among the many remarkable operations which have lately been attracting universal attention throughout the medical world, that of restoring dead nerves to life is, perhaps, one of the most daring. Though still in its infancy, at least three cases are said to have resulted in absolute success, and it is believed in surgical circles that in the near future nerve-splicing, as it is called, will become as ordinary as trepanning or any other delicate operation.

The object of the operation, of course, is the curing of paralysis and palsy, and it is due to the daring of Drs. Alfred S. Taylor and L. Pierce Clark, of New York, and Dr. James E. Young, of Philadelphia, that these experiments have been carried to a successful issue. In the case of young children palsy is generally due to some accident at birth which compresses the nerves that radiate from the upper part of the spinal cord and produces paralysis in the arms. This terrible complaint is known in the medical profession as "birth-palsy."

In the case of old people or those who are getting on in years paralysis may also be due to accident, though it is more usually attributable to decay of the principal nerve. So far no experiments on the living subject have been made. Clark and Young have been made with adult patients, but it is firmly believed that, if a continuance of success is met with in the cases of children, there is no reason why the operation should not be equally successful when performed on the old.

For a year or more Drs. Taylor and Clark have been conducting experiments on two children who were victims of birth-palsy, and so successful have they been that the little patients are now as active and healthy as their more anxious mothers could wish. How this remarkable operation is performed was recently explained by Dr. Clark before an audience of medical men in New York. The nerves, he stated, which supply motion to the affected limbs were severed as close to the spinal cord as possible and then grafted on to the nearest trunk line. So successful was the operation that no complications arose, and in every case the officials thereof united and the paralyzed parts took on fresh life.

The nerves which radiate from the upper part of the spinal cord are so great in number, and they cross and recross each other in such a manner, that in the operation of grafting one nerve on to another is an extremely delicate one. Another thing which adds considerably to the difficulty of the operation is the fact that anaesthetics must be used very sparingly, for the longer the patient remains under their influence the harder it is to follow the nerve threads.

Of the five children who have, up to the present, been operated on for palsy and paralysis all are said to have been successful, and the last child freed from childish ailments after use of their limbs had been restored. The other three children, who have also regained the free play of their limbs and are otherwise robust and strong, will shortly appear before a meeting of the New York Medical society, when they will be used to illustrate a lecture on the successful results of these experiments in nerve-grafting.

BIRDS WITHOUT VOICES.

The Greeting of Storks Consists of Clapping Their Long Bills Together Noisily.

Storks are not often seen on the American continent, but are commonly found in nearly all the countries of Europe. In Holland, says a London paper, where they are particularly numerous and are protected by law, their nests are generally on the roofs of a tall post, put up on purpose for them, on which is fixed an old cart wheel. A Dutch gentleman has one such post on his grounds within sight of his library window, but he improves on the cart wheel by fixing an iron framework for the reception of the nest. The first year it was put up, toward the end of June, a solitary young stork used to come daily to inspect this framework. He was seen there one day standing in an empty receptacle, exactly like a would-be benedict inspecting an empty house, contemplating the view and wondering if the drains are all right.

The verdict was apparently favorable, for the next season saw the nest occupied by the newly-wedded wair. Their power of wing is very fine, and on hot days they ascend spiral circles, hardly moving their broad, black wings, till they look no bigger than flies. After the young are hatched they appear to be suspicious of one another, and unwilling to leave the nest unguarded.

Storks have no voice. The only noise they make is "klappering" (snapping their red mandibles rapidly and loudly). Thus they greet one another, generally by throwing back the head until the upper mandible rests on the back, but occasionally "klappering" is performed with the head and bill in the former position.

An Awful Threat.

"News from the war!" queried the managing editor in the tone of a forlorn hope as he entered the telegraph room at midnight.

"Many rumors, but nothing doing," returned the boss of the wires with resignation. "The Yalu still seperates them."

The managing editor's face grew grim with determination. "Cable this," he cried. "Cable it in duplicate to the czar and the mikado: 'If you fellows don't get together and mix it up by a week from to-night the "Universe" will take you both off the front page.'"—N. Y. Tribune.

Celebrated Her Birthday.

Miss Helen Woodruff, of Dorr street, entertained a number of her young friends Wednesday afternoon on the occasion of her eighth birthday. The afternoon was very pleasantly spent with games, and the young folks had a thoroughly enjoyable time. Refreshments were served. There were about twelve little ones present.

Mrs. W. B. Manning has gone with her sister, Mrs. Howell, to her home in Philadelphia, for a visit.

MISS MADALENE BIRD IS NOW MRS. MUMFORD

PLAINFIELDER GOES TO NORTH PLAINFIELD FOR A BRIDE.

Miss Madalene Bird, daughter of Mrs. Rosanna Bird, of Somerset place, and Charles Stillman Mumford, son of Benjamin A. Mumford, of Arlington avenue, were married at 8 p. m. Wednesday at the home of the bride's mother in the presence of many guests from Brooklyn, New York, Philadelphia, Long Island, Hoboken, Newark, Gallia, and this city.

The home was attractively decorated, the parlor being arranged with palms and cut flowers. There were also palms and red and white decorations in the dining room. An effective arrangement in the parlor was a bell made of white roses and it was beneath this that the couple was married.

The bride, attended by her sister, Miss Margaret Bird, as maid-of-honor, was gowned in white organdie over white taffeta, trimmed with white lace, chiffon roses and white satin ribbons. She also wore a veil caught up with a spray of lilies-of-the-valley and she carried a bouquet of bride roses. The maid-of-honor wore a gown of pink silk batiste and she carried pink roses.

The bridal party entered the parlor while Eugene O'Reilly's orchestra rendered the Mendelssohn wedding march. The bride was accompanied by her uncle, Sylvester Shanley, who gave her away. The groom's best man was Arthur W. Lederer, of this city.

Beneath the floral bell, the party met the officiating clergyman, Rev. Joseph O. McKelvey, of Warren chapel. During the ceremony, which was performed with a ring, the orchestra rendered a selection of music.

After the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Mumford received the congratulations of the guests and then supper was served. Later the couple left the city to spend their honeymoon at Atlantic City. They will be absent about ten days. Upon their return they will reside on Arlington avenue.

Both the bride and groom are well-known in this city, where they have a host of friends. The groom is engaged with his father in business on East Third street. The bride received many gifts, including silverware, china, cut-glass, table linen and furniture.

At the reception which followed the marriage, the couple was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Bird, mother of the bride, and Miss Mary Stanbury Mumford, sister of the groom. Mrs. Bird was gowned in grey crepe, trimmed with white lace and chiffon roses, while Miss Mumford's gown was of black lace. The bride's traveling gown was of grey voile.

MISS EDNA DILTS, HEAD OF TRINITY'S C. E.

PASTOR ADDRESSES SOCIETY AT ITS FIRST FALL MEETING.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society of Trinity Reformed church held its first fall meeting Wednesday afternoon in the church, under favorable circumstances for a successful season's work. New officers and the chairman of the various committees were chosen and Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of the church, made a few congratulatory remarks, in which he complimented the society in having such a large attendance at the first meeting. There were fifty-six members present. Mrs. J. M. Tier, superintendent of the society, was in charge.

The officers and the chairman of the committees were chosen:

President, Miss Edna Dilts; vice president, Miss Edna Force; secretary, Miss Helen Smith; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Cornelius Schenck; treasurer, Harold Schenck; superintendent, Mrs. J. M. Tier; assistant superintendent, Miss Mary Berkaw; chairman prayer-meeting committee, Miss Edna Coles; lookout, Miss Cora Gano; flower, Miss Amy Todd; missionary, Miss Myra Donavan; music, Miss Elsie Donavan.

On Wednesday, October 21, the society will meet to complete the work of re-organization for the year, by selecting the members for the various committees and transacting such other business as may come before the society.

Realty Transfer.

John E. Stewart, for many years a resident of West Seventh street, has sold his property to Walter Longman, of the well-known paint firm of Longman & Martinez. Mr. Longman who is very much attached to Plainfield, having spent his summers here for sometime, will take up his residence here permanently. Mr. Stewart now expects to leave the city and live in New York, where he is engaged in the stationery business.

G. O. P. BURIES HATCHET

Mr. Fowler Makes Harmony Speech at Union Convention.

SUMMIT IS CONTENTED

No Factional Fights This Year—

The Ticket Selected—

The Committees.

Perfect harmony and great enthusiasm were marked features of the Union County Republican convention held Thursday afternoon in Lyceum Theatre, Elizabeth. Not in several years has the party in this county shown such unanimity and in the convention there was not even a trace of dissension. While United States Senator John Kean was unable to be present, Congressman Charles N. Fowler was there and in a short speech was he made at the close of the session, he declared that every one present was for the re-election of Mr. Kean, and so was he. This brought forth the wildest enthusiasm and applause.

Mr. Fowler received a flattering reception upon his entrance to the platform. Briefly, the Congressman said that he was for the Republican platform adopted at Chicago, the candidates on the National ticket, the candidate for Governor, M. C. Stokes, and every candidate nominated at the county convention. He assured all that he would work just as hard for every man nominated, from the top of the ticket to the bottom, as he worked for himself. Mr. Fowler aroused the greatest enthusiasm by his impressive and earnest manner.

The county ticket as published in yesterday's issue, went through according to the regular programme, there being not the slightest hitch or contest. After the nominations were made unanimous, the candidates were escorted to the platform by a committee of seven, of which Former Mayor Charles J. Fisk was the chairman. Ernest R. Ackerman, chairman of the convention, introduced each one and the reception was cordial. Each nominee, with the exception of Edward Coyne who is ill, made a few remarks, thanking the delegates for the honor conferred and promising to do all in their power toward the success of the ticket. Interspersing the business of the convention, Dutter's band played popular selections, enlivening the occasion.

W. R. Littell, of the Eighth ward, Elizabeth, nominated James O. Calver for county clerk; Charles J. Fisk nominated Frank H. Smith for register of deeds and mortgages; A. B. Woodruff, of Rahway, nominated Peter H. Tillman, of that place, for the Assembly; J. B. Turner nominated Edward Coyne, of Elizabeth, for the Assembly, and J. O. Clark nominated George Embree, of Westfield, for the Assembly, while Mayor Howe, of Roselle, nominated Dr. P. M. Pierson, of that place, for coroner.

It was expected that Summit might make a fight for the county clerk nomination, but the happy remarks of Rutherford Franklin, of that place, took the convention by storm, when after a lengthy address in which he told how Summit had been promised everything during the past ten years and each year was told to "just come down next year," he presented the votes of the delegates for James O. Calvert, and afterward for the other nominees. In doing so he said that next year a sheriff will be nominated and "Summit will come down expecting something."

The good nature of Mr. Franklin and his original wit won friends for him and his town and if Summit fails to capture something another year it will not be the fault of the convention, as said the delegates. In presenting the name of Dr. Pierson for the nomination of coroner, Mayor Howe said it was the first time Roselle had ever asked for anything, whereupon Mr. Franklin congratulated Roselle upon her first appearance, at the same time seconding the nomination for his delegates.

As there was but one nominee for each office, the secretary cast the ballot, after which the nominations were made unanimous.

As stated yesterday, Hamilton F. Kean called the convention to order, and upon his recommendation Ernest R. Ackerman, of this city, was made temporary and permanent chairman. The secretaries were Robert L. Patterson, of Elizabeth; William Cook, of Linden; Asa F. Randolph, of Plainfield, and the vice presidents, Henry Jardine, of Rahway; Everard K. Tucker, of Elizabeth; Augustus L. Alpers, of Westfield.

Charles J. Fisk then moved the appointment of the various committees and these were made:

Credential—J. P. Arnold, of Elizabeth; James F. Buckle, of Plainfield; R. M. Lillibridge, of Roselle Park; C. D. Johnston, of Fanwood; Albion Buckle, of Summit.

Rules—J. Harvey Doane, of Plainfield; Henry Clemm, of Elizabeth; George Wilcox, of New Providence; Harry Bradford, of Rahway; F. S. Smith, of Westfield.

Permanent organization — Peter Meisel, of Union; D. H. Potter, of Rahway; William Schoonover, of Mountainside; Herbert Buxton, of Plainfield; Harry H. Staples, of Elizabeth.

Resolutions—R. J. Kirkland, of Elizabeth; W. F. Hall, of Cranford; Motherford Franklin, of Summit; E. C. Taylor, of Elizabeth; A. E. Woodruff, of Rahway.

Vacancies — Charles J. Fisk, of Plainfield; Charles C. McBride, of Elizabeth; Otto Gray, of Rahway.

After the nominations, Mr. Fisk took occasion to second all the nominations made and predicted that Plainfield would come to the county seat with a majority of 1,500. This announcement called forth hearty cheers. After the speech of Congressman Fowler, the convention adjourned and some time was spent in shaking hands with all of the candidates.

FARMER AND POLITICIAN

Career of Plainfielder Who Wants to Go to Congress.

JAMES E. MARTINE

Man of Pronounced Political Views Who Is Beloved by His Fellow Citizens.

James E. Martine, the Democratic candidate for Congress in the Fifth Congressional District, was born in the city of New York, but moved to Plainfield, New Jersey, with his parents at the age of twelve years. In Plainfield he attended the public schools, but owing to the death of his father he left school at the age of fourteen to take charge of his father's farm known as Cedar Brook, and also to look after various other interests of the family. Although having left school so early he does not lack in education, and he has been a student all his life and is a man of culture and great intelligence. He is well informed on all subjects and is equally at home in discussing any subject of politics, religion, science or literature. At the age of sixteen years he was induced by the Honorable Theodore F. Randolph, formerly Governor of New Jersey, to take the stump for the Democratic ticket, and from that time he has been active as a speaker and worker in every political contest, both State and National. His fame as an orator is not limited to New Jersey, but he is well known in the State of New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and has also addressed many audiences as far West as Nebraska, Kansas and Colorado. As an political orator he has few equals in this country and certainly none in the State of New Jersey. He is familiarly known throughout this entire section of the State as the "Farmer Orator."

Mr. Martine has never held public office, though often a candidate. He has never put his claims forward in any way, but on the contrary has always been ready to make sacrifices when the party has been in search of a candidate willing to face an almost certain defeat. In 1896 Mr. Martine ran for Mayor of Plainfield and although the balance of the Republican ticket carried the city by nearly 3,000, Mr. Martine was beaten by only about 200. At other times he has run for the Assembly, the State Senate, etc., and has invariably run ahead of his ticket, particularly in his own town. He is a man of strong views with the full ability to express them, but he has practically no enemies and has hundreds of personal admirers.

Mr. Martine's occupation has always been that of a farmer. Cedar Brook Farm, where he resides, is in the easterly section of Plainfield and during recent years the town has practically grown up around it and a portion of the farm has been developed into a building section. The farm originally embraced over one hundred acres and the original house which is still standing was erected 160 years ago. Some years ago Mr. Martine presented the congregation of the Park Avenue Baptist church the plot of ground on which the church now stands. He also presented a plot of three acres to the Plainfield hospital.

Frank Schoonmaker Engaged.

Society will be interested in the announcement of the engagement of Miss Grace L. Eaton, of 40 West Seventy-third street, New York, and Frank L. Schoonmaker, son of S. L. Schoonmaker, formerly of this city, but now of 13 East Thirty-fifth street, New York.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Oct. 16; "The Power of Personal Influence."—John 1, 35-39.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES.

So much has been said on this matter of personal influence that the topic seems at first glance to be worn and whatever can be said on it to be trite and uninteresting. But that is a mistake, because each person has to discover his own place and power and develop his own individual personality. Rules which have helped others will be likely to continue to be helpful. The study of the doings of other people will suggest things to do and ways to do them and will also show some things that it were better should be left undone.

So we need to go over this lesson once more and with more care than ever before. Let us first of all emphasize the fact that each one is exerting an influence on others, direct and positive, and that it is often more harmful to them and has reflex influence on ourselves.

In the second place, others with whom we meet are shaping our opinions and influencing our actions more strongly than we usually are aware.

It is important, then, that we be alert to make the outgoing forces beneficial. It is no less important that we put ourselves in such position as to receive from others as little as possible that is harmful and as much as possible that is uplifting. These considerations will largely determine our choice of companionship and associates. Our intimate friends are the ones who have most effect upon us and who receive most from us; therefore we must be careful in the selection of our comrades.

We need two rules in this matter—first, for intimate acquaintance select only the best; second, be such that your influence will better all it touches.

Not only should we adopt these principles of action at the very beginning, *but we should occasionally stop our*selves and see if we are keeping them as closely as we ought to. It would be well to keep on the walls of memory, if not the heart, the motto, "In the halls of our rooms, the motto, "Evil communications corrupt good manners."

All this is based on unchanging principles which govern in human character. We impart what we are; we partake of what surrounds us, or, putting it in other language, "like begets like," and "environment affects constitution."

In the study of the Scripture lesson, of the work it is necessary to call attention to the influence of the first two disciples in leading others to Jesus. This is a valuable and interesting application of this passage, but by no means the only one nor perhaps the most helpful one we can draw.

After the ordinary lessons have been properly considered it will be found of benefit to make a special study of the influence of John Baptist and the other disciples mentioned. Getting that impulse which he imparted to the religion of his times. In doing this it will be helpful to read as fully as may be in Josephus and the books of Maccabees the patriotic attempts of the Jews to secure independence and establish a nation on the principles of the Mosaic law. Account should be taken of the various uprisings which took place in John's time. The aspirations and intentions of these agitators deserve to be well weighed.

Now go back to the Old Testament and make a rapid survey of the messages of the prophets from Elijah to Jonah, giving special attention to the ethical lessons made and the moral conditions prevailing among the people. Note the nature of the dominant religion; note also the mechanical and external character of all the attempts made by those in authority to enforce the divine religiously. Then study the teaching of John Baptist, and the truth will come to you in what Jesus said of John, "There hath not a greater one risen."

Spirituality and practical living were united by John as by no one before him.

Jesus alone ranks him. Let us abide with the Master ourselves and learn of Him and become like Him.

Stand Together.

In other ways we see the failure of the disciples to go forth together. How often we have seen men with large intellectual powers go out alone to *study and comprehend and execute, yet so ab*solutely lacking in the trained and disciplined force of will as to render the great mind comparatively useless and of little force and weight where it might otherwise as a power! As we look at the men about us or as we examine into our own inner experiences we shall find that the expression or the consciousness of power comes only as these two forces have been trained to act together and support each the other as these two divinely appointed disciples go forth together. "In union there is strength."—Helper.

IN THE WRONG BUSINESS.

The Parson Had a Critic Who Spoke Right from the Shoulder of Conviction.

The late Bishop Dudley, of Kentucky, was on a hunting expedition near Louisville during the last few years of his life, and happened to fall in with a local nimrod whose unconcealed admiration for the city man's marksmanship paved the way for further conversation, relates the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"What's your name?" the countryman finally inquired.

"Dudley," was the reply.

After some change of incident and experience, the bishop's interlocutor hazarded,

"Say, Dudley, what business do you follow?"

"I'm a preacher."

"O, get out. What are you giving me?"

"But I am. I preach every Sunday."

"Where?"

"In Louisville."

"Well, well, I never would ha' thought it. You ain't much up a bit like most of the preachers down this way."

An invitation to hear this new made acquaintance preach, was accompanied by a scribbled card, and the next Sabbath saw the rustic, in his "Sunday best," ushered into the bishop's own pew, where he listened intently to both service and sermon.

He was manifestly amazed, afterward, to have the orator of the morning come down to greet him as cordially and familiarly as in the woods.

He managed to stammer his thanks, and added: "I ain't much of a judge of that kind of thing, parson, but I rix with you and sot with you, and the thing through the best I knew how; but all the same, if my opinion is worth anything to you, the Lord meant you for a shooter!"

NOTES OF THE FASHIONS.

Striking Embellishments of the Costumes Now Attracting Feminine Attention.

For tailored suits glace silk is a favored material, says the Brooklyn Eagle.

A return to black for evening wear is predicted.

The vogue for chestnut and onion shades is increasing.

Linen suits are inset with bands of button embroidery.

Pompadour effects are observable in the new trimmings.

Pastel shades will retain their popularity for evening wear.

Jet will be much worn during the coming fall and winter.

Pompadour effects and colorings will be conspicuous next season.

Coats on the directoire and Louis XV. order are in prominence for fall wear.

Scarf of guipure or chantilly take the place of the old-time boa.

The vogue of fringe for skirt and waist trimmings is on the increase.

White Venise lace is extensively used for the ornamentation of wash stocks.

Java linen in white and blue shades is a favored material for morning gowns.

High crowns and paradise plume trimming will be characteristics of fall headgear.

Grape color is described as a "red tone like wine when seen in the electric light."

Vanity fair pocketbooks are popular in Paris and are expected to prove equally so here.

A novelty in braid used for edging the seams of a gown gives the appearance of piping.

Allover net, black, white or ecru, is utilized for shoulder scarfs by Parisian dressmakers.

THE VALUE OF ETIQUETTE.

Those Who Ignore the Little Courtesies May Have Cause to Regret the Neglect.

Very homely and apparently coarse is the saying that "honey catches more flies than vinegar." It is, nevertheless, a self-evident truth, and when it is applied as a metaphor to our daily intercourse with our fellow creatures, it proves a marvel of understanding, says a household authority.

The man or woman who goes through life with scornful lip and tilted chin, casting derisive glances, or worse, none at all, upon near and far, is likely to find himself or herself at a loss for a helping hand when it is most needed.

The pleasant salutation; the few moments interchange of remarks anent the weather, or equally general topics, with the passing stranger, hurts no one, not even the most exclusive. And sometimes, many times, it becomes a case of the angel entertained unawares and an acquaintance that is very much "worth while" results.

Quite true is the old courtesy may find itself defeated by the brazen impudence of some detrimental; but, as it is better to be cheated a thousand times when bestowing charity than to let one deserving case suffer, so it is better to be considered disagreeable, polite than rude; and one always feels so much the better for the interchange of well-bred greetings than when one has met a well-meant advance with the haughty stare of superiority.

Black Chocolate Cake.

Three-quarters of a cake of unsweetened chocolate, melted and mixed in one cupful of boiling water; one cupful of butter, four cupfuls of sugar, four eggs, one cupful of sour milk, three and one-half cupfuls of sifted flour. Add one teaspoonful of soda to a little of the sour milk and add this last. Flavor with one good teaspoonful of vanilla extract. This will make one large cake or two of medium size.—N. Y. Post.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 16.

Topic—The power of personal influence.—John 1, 35-42.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

The power of personal influence has always been a great factor in the history of the world, and especially in the history of religion and of Christianity in particular. In fact, it was Christianity that brought the individual person into most active play in life, and the individual has repaid the institution that discovered and developed him.

Personal influence has played a great part in the leading of souls to Christ. Jesus Himself considered it worth while to spend a night with Nicodemus alone in conversation concerning the new birth and three years later was rewarded by the open, bold confession of the member of the sanhedrin in his favor. He also brought His personal influence to bear upon a poor degraded Samaritan woman and thus saved her and her people. When Andrew found the Christ, he led Simon Peter, his brother, to Him, and when Philip found Him he led Nathaniel to Him. The Holy Spirit during a revival in Samaria called Philip away that he might bring his influence to bear upon the Ethiopian official and bring about his conversion. This has been a method of God's during all the ages, but today it seems to be His special method of winning souls to the cross. The great mass meetings in which hundreds are converted in one night are largely a thing of the past, *and the work is being done by "indi*vidual efforts for the individual." Are you doing your share of this personal work?

Personal influence upon another person may seem an insignificant work, but history does not prove it to be so. The Samaritan woman led her whole village to Christ. Simon Peter, on the sermon led 3,000 to accept Christ. Philip the evangelist was a power in soul winning. All were the fruits of personal effort, yet how tremendous the accumulated results of their labors. In this true history, with great regularity, repeats itself. The individual won by personal effort feels that he must win others, and a soul once fired with a zeal for souls never pauses when one has been led into the kingdom.

Moreover, personal work is always more effective. Apples picked one by one will be preserved much longer than those that are taken from the tree. Men won to Christ through earnest personal work will endure with a greater certainty than those brought into the kingdom en masse. Therefore, following the example of Christ and the apostles in all the years, personal work we can. Let us take advantage of every opportunity to seek the Simons and the Nathaniels and to lead them to the Messiah, who is indeed the Christ.

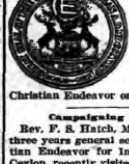
The Michigan State Seal.

On the stationery and public documents issued by the State Executive office of Michigan is to be found this very appropriate seal. The emblem that has been adopted by the Union is an expressive Christian Endeavor one.



Campaigning In China.

Rev. F. Haich, M. A., for the last three years general secretary of Christian Endeavor for India, Burma and Ceylon, recently visited some of the societies of Christian Endeavor in the southern coast ports. Mr. Hitman, the general secretary for China, met him in Hongkong, where large meetings were held in the Basel, American Board and London Mission churches. At Canton two large meetings were held, and both secretaries spoke to thousands of people in the school. At Amoy, Fuchau and Shanghai there were also large mass meetings; at Fuchau six meetings in five of the largest assembly rooms in the city. Mr. Haich was frequently asked to speak to the missionaries on the general condition of the mission work in India, which he has seen perhaps more widely than any other man, and his review of the elements of progress in Indian missions proved of absorbing interest to all who heard it.

Pen Points.

If we have read the spirit of it right Christian Endeavor means "constantly employed."

Any Christian Endeavor society that temporarily suspends during the summer months "because it is too warm" is usually too cold during the rest of the year to do very effective work.

There is nothing dull or self centered in the Christian Endeavor idea. The person who reads this into it has been looking through a magnifying glass.—John R. Clements.

Printed Junior Paragraphs.

Give me the boys and the girls, and I'll give you the men and the women by and by.

We are there that we emphasized this matter of leading the boys and girls definitely into the way which God would have them go.

I thank God for a mother who was wise enough to take a boy with her to the prayer meeting.

My father have a child go to sleep in a church that have it awake in some other place.

Make room for the children! That's my plea today, and that's what Christian Endeavor stands for.—William Shaw on "Junior Endeavor" in New York State Convention at Buffalo.

FIRE LADDIES ENTERTAIN

North Plainfield Department Inaugurates Social Series.

HAVE MANY GUESTS

Mayor Smalley and Members of the Common Council Among Those in Attendance.

For the purpose of formally expressing appreciation for what has been done for them and to bring all together on a more familiar footing, the North Plainfield fire department entertained Mayor Newton R. Smalley, members of the Common Council, and many other well known boroughites at headquarters Wednesday night. It marked the first of a series of similar events which are to be given during the coming winter and by all who participated it was voted a distinct success in every way. An entertainment, supper and speeches were features of the gathering and it was well on toward midnight before it terminated.

In the early part of the evening the guests assembled in the main dormitory on the second floor where a musical programme held their attention. Quartette selections were rendered by Edward Terry, Harry Zimmerman, Edward P. T. Smith and William Campbell; guitar solos by William Mc Cullough and phonograph selections by Frank Schenck. A clog dance was also contributed by William Campbell that was greeted with long applause.

Afterward adjournment was made to the rear store room, which had been cleared and neatly fitted up with tables on which a splendid supper was served. It began with a course of Jerry Foss' clam chowder, famous in three states, and concluded with watermelon, any number of good things all prepared by the firemen themselves, interspersing. The seventeen members of the department acted as waiters and they saw to it that no one was neglected.

On returning to the dormitory, cigars were lighted and speech-making was in order, with Chief Howard Woolston acting as toastmaster. The principal address was made by Mayor Smalley and he was frequently interrupted by generous applause. He spoke of the conditions and circumstances that led to the paid department being established and expressed satisfaction at the success it has attained. "Contrary to statements made by those who opposed the movement, he said, the taxes had not increased and in system is giving the best of satisfaction. As for returning to the volunteer days, he declared there was no danger of that as the department is getting better every day and giving better service than many others throughout New Jersey. Similar remarks were made by Recorder Dond and in the midst of his address in which he was telling of the prompt hess with which the men answered alarms, either real or false, the house gong sounded a nearby box. Instantly the men leaped to their stations and were ready to go out before the full sound had struck on. To this assembly guest is paid their words were more than words could. Only one man knew that the alarm was to sound and it was he who did it.

Other addresses were given by Councilmen Van Arsdale, Humble and Arnold, former Councilman Peter Emmons, F. A. Dunham and others. For the firemen, Chief Woolston replied and Lieutenant Campbell also spoke. Afterward a social period of conversation followed during which many of those present made a thorough inspection of the house.

The committee which arranged the affair consisted of William Campbell, Jerry Foss, Walter Kettenring and William McCullough. Another is to be held next month and a different committee will act.

An Election Eve Hall.

The members of St. Patrick's Alliance are making preparations to conduct a ball in the former Crescent clubhouse on East Second street, election eve. A committee composed of James Enale, Patrick Nugent and Patrick Connelly has the matter in charge.

FRED KANEN GIVEN $15,000

Story of Westfield Wreck Retold in Court at Elizabeth. Before Sympathetic Jury.

HELPLESS INVALID

Led Will be in Present Terrible Condition for the Rest of His Life—Jury is Out Only a Half Hour.

The story of the terrible railroad wreck which occurred near Westfield on the night of January 27, 1903, was retold in the Supreme Court at Elizabeth on Thursday before Justice Fort, in the re-trial of the case of Frederick E. Kanen, of this city, against the P. and H. Railroad Company.

After the counsel for both sides had summed up and the court delivered its charge, the jury retired this morning and returned in half an hour, awarding young Kanen a verdict of $15,000.

At the former trial, which took place several months ago, a verdict in the sum of $18,000 was awarded the plaintiff. The company at once appealed the case and the verdict was set aside as being excessive. Craig A. Marsh represents the Plaintellder. When removed from beneath the wreckage Kanen was found to be so badly injured that he was taken to the Muhlenberg Hospital. The most serious injury sustained was to his back and spinal column, and from the effects of that injury he will undoubtedly be a helpless invalid the remainder of his days. He has completely lost the sense of feeling from his neck down.

Yesterday he was unable to move hand or feet and in giving his testimony, he lay on stretcher. His testimony, however, was given in a strong, clear voice.

In January Kanen was taken to a hospital in New York, where a thor*ough examination was made by means* of X-rays by Dr. Gibney. It was discovered that one of the bones of the spinal column had had been fractured, and a surgical operation was performed and the bone removed. The operation, while successfully performed, failed to give the relief hoped for, and Dr. Gibney and other experts unite in giving as their opinion that the boy will be a helpless invalid the remainder of his days.

His employers on being sworn, testified that the short time he was in their employ he showed remarkable brightness, was quick to learn, punctual in the minute and entirely satisfactory. He began work at $3 per week and shortly after had his salary raised to $4.

BROTHERS MEET FOR THE FIRST TIME IN THEIR LIVES

DR. P. J. ZEGLIO AND DAVID ZEGLIO NOW GETTING ACQUAINTED.

Separated all their lives by the entire width of the continent, Dr. P. J. Zeglio, of Somerset street, and his brother, David Zeglio, of California, saw each other for the first time Wednesday night. The latter came to the city unexpectedly and though they knew nothing of each other's appearance, the recognition was made without any introductory remarks.

David Zeglio, who is now past the half century mark, went West when a young lad and before his brother Peter was born. He settled in California and becoming involved in business interests never found time to make a trip to his former home in New Jersey. He maintained a regular correspondence and letters have been passing between he and his brother regularly. Some years ago they exchanged photographs but their features at this time have changed so that they could not be told by them.

The visitor is a typical Westerner and his ideas differ greatly from those of his brother. Up to the present time he has refused to take a ride in the physician's auto, being fearful that it might blow up.

Fresh-Air Association Anniversary.

Exercises of an interesting character are being arranged for the third anniversary of the Neiberwood Fresh Air Association to be held at the Y. M. C. A., on Tuesday night, October 18. There will be reports of the work, together with instrumental music by Leonard Waldo and City Judge William H. Runyon has promised to sing Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar." Rev E. M. Hodman, rector emeritus of Grace church, is in charge of the programme.

FREEHOLDERS CRITICIZED

Borough Council Says They Ignore Property Owners.

MAYOR'S REMARKS

Other Matters of Business at Last Evenings Regular Meeting—Storm Sewer for Rockview Avenue.

Severe criticism of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders for its insistention to demands of property owners for improvements, marked last Friday's meeting of the Borough Council. Mayor Smalley and the members were unanimous in their disapproval, the former especially being exhuberant in his remarks. The course of several small streams in the borough is adjacent to property which comes under the Board's jurisdiction and by reason of floods and other causes great damage has at times been caused. Bridges have also been left in a bad condition but to petitions for a betterment of conditions the county officials have lent a deaf ear.

The trouble has long been manifest in the borough and it was brought to a head last evening through a communication from Cornra Ayres and other residents near Somerset street and Codington avenue. They asked the Council to take steps to prevent the continual overflow of the small stream which crosses at that point and free them from continual annoyance and expense. The petition stated that the Board of Freeholders had been asked to do something but had declined, saying it was the place of some other body to attend to the matter. Mayor Smalley declared is did not come under the borough's jurisdiction and the clerk was directed to notify the petitioners that redress should be sought of the freeholders or of Lewis Coddington, of Somerville, who owns the land where the flooding is most frequent. Some years ago he caused the course of the brook to be changed and the overflowing is said to be largely due to this.

In his remarks on the subject, Mayor Smalley said the borough has constantly been ignored when it asked for any improvement or repairs, despite the fact that its annual share of the county tax is $15,000. The question is to be taken up at the next Council meeting and Tax Collector Brown was instructed to prepare a statement showing the amount of monies paid each year to the county.

Maps were presented to the Council by Mayor Smalley showing the need of a storm sewer in Rockview avenue. Its cost, he said, would be about $1,300 and the property owners had signified their willingness to bear one-half of that amount, if the improvement was made. The matter was discussed informally and though the councilmen were in favor of it, they decided to reserve formal action until the subscription list has been completed.

George F. Brown, Percy F. Brown and John Kiroh, in a petition, asked the Council to accept a portion of Jefferson avenue from Green brook to the intersection of Walnut street, which has recently been macadamized and curbed. It was voted on favorably. In the payment of claims, a bill from the electric light company for $6.25 was held up. Councilman Arnold declaring that it should not be paid as it was for light furnished the new station house.

On motion of Councilman VanArsdale, $160 was appropriated to buy winter police uniforms and an ordinance to take possession of the new station house was passed on its second reading. According to Chairman Arnold, of the street committee, $694.40 was expended on street work during the month, while Councilman Van Arsdale reported twenty arrests by the police department and $50 in fines collected.

Interesting Wedding in Adirondacks.

A notable wedding at St. Huberts, in the Adirondacks, took place in Felsenheim chapel, on Thursday, when Miss Natalie Coffin, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sturgis Coffin, was married to Johnston DeForest, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. DeForest, of New York, and a grandson of the late John Taylor Johnson. Mr. DeForest is a nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Mali, whose summer home on Mont Front street, is an inheritance from Mrs. Mali's father, John Taylor Johnston.

CORNER-STONE LAYING OF GRACE PARISH HOUSE

CEREMONY TO TAKE PLACE WITHIN TEN DAYS.

The rector and vestry of Grace church are arranging for the formal laying of the new parish house cornerstone. No date for the ceremony has yet been set, but it will take place, in all likelihood, within the next ten days. Rt. Rev. Dr. John Scarborough, bishop of New Jersey, will be present on the occasion, provided he returns from the General Convention at Boston in time for the ceremony.

Participating in the service in addition to the rector, Rev. R. Vicars Stevenson, the rector-emeritus, Rev. Erskine M. Bodman, and the vestry will be clergymen from parishes in the vicinity and prominent laymen. It is likely that the corner-stone of the present parish building will be used.

NO TROLLEY FRANCHISE.

Freeholders Refuse Petition for Springfield-Elizabeth Route.

The Union County Board of Freeholders Thursday afternoon, at a regular meeting, refused by a vote of 13 to 5 to grant the application of the Morris County Traction Company for a franchise to construct a trolley line from Springfield to Elizabeth. The reason for the board's action was that a majority of its members did not think the concessions offered by the company were sufficient for such an important and valuable privilege.

The antagonism of these two freeholders from Summit, Messrs. Swain and Cady, was aroused against the application, because in its amended form Summit was left out in the proposed route of the new line, and the Summit men conceded, therefore, it would be of no benefit to that city. This, likewise, had the effect of getting Elizabeth freeholders to vote against granting the franchise.

A Pleasant Reception.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Limberger, of West Front street, gave a reception at their home Thursday evening. The evening was spent with games and music, and a pleasant time was enjoyed by all the guest. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Willard, Miss Lettie Willard, Miss Alice DeMott, Mrs. J. P. Gibson, Louis Subermerborn and Benjamin LaVere.

FRED W. GODDARD WINS TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP

NOW PERMANENT OWNER OF HILLSIDE'S SILVER CUP.

Fred W. Goddard is the champion tennis player of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club this year. He won the title Saturday afternoon by defeating last year's winner, T. M. Day, Jr., in the final match of the annual tournament. The concluding match was played on the club courts, and in spite of the fact that it was late in the season, a good attendance was present to view the deciding contest. The score of the sets were 6-4, 9-7, 9 6, and as the results would indicate each match was hard fought throughout.

In the opening set neither player was warmed up to the game to any great extent, and the victory went to Goddard at the score of 6-4. Day missed one point of making it a deuce set. The other two sets were much harder won, and the gallery applauded both players many times for their excellent strokes. Each point was won after a long rally, and nearly every game ran to deuce. This fact made the sets decidedly interesting ones to watch, and the spectators were delighted with the exhibition of good tennis on the part of both winner and loser. The second set was at one time practically Mr. Day's, when with a single point he might have taken it by the score of 6-4. Goddard braced up however, made the score five all, and eventually pulled out ahead by the score of 9-7. The final set was a repetition of the second one, both players struggling hard for the advantage. It was finally captured by Goddard after fourteen games had been played, the score being 9-6.

By winning this tournament Mr. Goddard becomes the permanent owner of a handsome silver cup, which is offered annually by the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club. He also wins the title of tennis champion for the year 1904.

Small Verdict.

A verdict of $1.25 for the defendant was given by the jury in the suit against George B. Steats brought by Fred Yates at Justice Hand's court yesterday afternoon. The case has been dragging along for over a year, having first been brought up at Justice Nash's court. The jury was composed of the following members: Cornelius VanHerwerden, foreman; W. VanCleff, F. Stanlite, E. H. Willis, W. H. Forristel, Jeremiah Cash, A. H. Evander, J. D. Brokaw, J. Geer, J. Vermeule, John Tier, Jr., and Frank Watson.

AGED MAN STRUCK BY A CENTRAL TRAIN

HENRY VROOM HAS MIRACULOUS ESCAPE FROM DEATH.

While walking the New Jersey Central tracks on his way from Weston, Somerset county, to this city, where he intended to visit his son-in-law, C. M. Young, of Clinton avenue, Henry Vroom, aged seventy two years, a farmer by occupation, was struck by a westbound train at a point about a mile from the city.

The aged man was found by a passerby and later moved to Muhlenberg Hospital in the ambulance. An examination disclosed a large lacerated wound on the right leg. His condition is not serious and he will be detained at the hospital but a short time.

AMICABLE SETTLEMENT IN THE PANGBORN CASE

MRS. LOUISA N. PERRINE TO RECEIVE SUBSTANTIAL AMOUNT.

It is not expected that there will be any trial of the celebrated Pangborn case in the Lycoming County Court at Williamsport, Pa., as scheduled, for the various cases are now in process of settlement on a satisfactory basis. According to the terms of the settlement, which are being arranged by Mrs. Louisa M. Perrine's counsel, Isaac F. Runyon, Esq., she will receive a substantial sum of money.

It is understood that all of the parties interested have agreed to the terms of settlement and it now remains to complete the arrangement. Mr. Runyon announced today that the cases would not be tried, inasmuch as the settlement is progressing. He refuses to state the amount to be received by Mrs. Perrine, who is the daughter of the late Stephen Pangborn.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Thorne are entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Winship, of North Long Branch.

FIVE HUNDRED CYCLISTS TO RIDE IN CENTURY RUN

PLAINFIELD WILL BE TURNING POINT IN WHEELMEN'S BIG EVENT.

Plainfield will be a mecca for wheelmen Sunday, when the fall century run of the New Jersey division of the Century Road Club of America, takes place. It is expected that 500 riders will participate and this city will be made one of the turning points and the stopping place for dinner.

The start is to be made from Jersey City at 7 a. m. and Newark will be the first stop, thence via Waverly and Elizabeth to Rahway. After a short interval for refreshments another start will be made through Westfield, Scotch Plains, Springfield to Milburn, back to Elizabeth and along the county road through Roselle, Cranford, Westfield and Netherwood to this city, arriving here at noon with fifty-four miles completed.

The return journey will be made out Park avenue to Metuchen, to Rahway, to Boynton Beach, to Perth Amboy; then by ferry to Tottenville, S. I. From Tottenville the riders will journey to Port Richmond, where they will again be ferried to Bergen Point and then ride into Jersey City. The New York State division in charge of Captain Henry Volz, State Centurion Charles L. Thomart, S. Belle and many other well known metropolitan riders will take part.

JERSEY'S PREMIUMS.

Gold Medals for School and Road Exhibits at St. Louis Exposition.

The New Jersey School exhibits at the St. Louis Exposition have been awarded fourteen gold medals, eight silver medals and a grand prize given for the fine exhibit.

The State has also received a gold medal for the exhibition of a model road, which was built under the direction of State Supervisor of Roads R. A. Meeker, of this city. The only other competitor in the good roads exhibit was the Government, but New Jersey's model was considered superior.

LODGE'S ANNIVERSARY

Jr. O. U. A. M. Celebrate Natal Day.

FRANKLIN COUNCIL

Enjoyable Evening Spent by Visiting Councils From Nearby Places as Franklin's Guests.

The rooms of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., in Washington Hall were crowded Thursday on the occasion of the organization's seventeenth anniversary.

Somerset and Benevolent Councils, of this city; Fairview, of Mt. Bethel; William G. Holton Council, of Dunellen and Twilight, of Scotch Plains were well represented. A business meeting preceded the entertainment at which all the councils were represented, and in which all the members had a part. There were speeches by several of the prominent men in the various councils, and the reports of the several committees were heard.

Following the business meeting, the formal entertainment was began with an address of welcome by Past Councilor Harvey R. Thorn. In addition to extending a hearty welcome to the visitors on the part of the entertaining lodge, the speaker outlined at some length the history of Franklin Council, and spoke of their advance in the last seventeen years, and the progress made by the other councils.

Following his speech, Mr. Thorn introduced Mr. Hoch, of New York, a magician, who entertained the audience for half an hour with sleight of hand tricks. His performance was much enjoyed, as he is one of the cleverest in his profession.

A feature of the programme which brought much applause was a violin solo by B. A. Paraubek. A trio, composed of Mr. Paraubek, J. S. Hewitt, flute, and Herbert Harold, piano, rendered several selections in a highly creditable manner. An enthusiastic and stirring speech followed by F. E. Latourette, of Somerset Council. In his speech, Mr. Latourette congratulated Franklin Council upon their excellent showing during their seventeen years of benevolent work, and commented upon the spirit of loyalty which existed in the order as a whole.

The programme was concluded with another fifteen minutes of magic, and an instrumental selection by the trio. Mr. Thorn was master of ceremonies for the evening and the committee on arrangements consisted of the following: Chairman, William J. Harpence; George M. Townley, Frank Plaste, C. J. Newman, T. E. Currin, Jr., and Randolph Marsh.

The council met for the first time on October 6, 1887, there being at that time forty charter members. The meeting, at which the council was founded, was held in the Sons of Temperance Hall, corner Front street and Park avenue, and for the last seventeen years the growth of the council has been steady. The work which the council has done in recent years has been widespread and of far reaching effects. Those assistance in time of illness and trouble has been invaluable to their members. During the last year alone, twenty-three were initiated into the fraternity, while a number of applications lie on the table at the present time. The total membership of the council is 260, two deaths having occurred in the past year, and three members having been suspended. The council has expended $568 in sick benefit during the year.

Prominent Speakers at Conference.

Boys' Secretary Kenneth Robbie, of the Y. M. C. A., has secured a number of excellent speakers for the Boys' Conference which will take place in this city on October 28, 29, 30. Among them are the following. F. S. Brockman, a missionary of Shanghai, China, Lieutenant Hearne, of Newark, Chaplain Leslie R. Groves, of the U. S. Army, Charles R. Scott, State secretary of boys' work, and Rev. James A. Francis, of Westfield.

More Trouble for Baldwin.

George Baldwin, of this city, against whom Mary Bertha Shine, of New Brunswick, secured a verdict of $7,125 for breach of promise, is now to defend himself in another action from the same family. The girl's father, William Guise, has commenced a criminal action against him and it will be heard as soon as Judge Fort fixes the date for trial. Baldwin is now under $2,000 bail pending settlement of the damage suit.

Pulpit Supplies.

While Rev. L. T. Lindholm, pastor of the Swedish Pilgrim church, is visiting in Massachusetts, his pulpit will be supplied by Rev. Fred Bloom, of Staten Island; Rev. A. A. Jacobsen, of Hoboken; Rev. Theodore England, of Ferth Amboy, and Kenneth Robbie, of the Y. M. C. A.

ELEVENTH REGT. REUNION

Men Who Faced Shot and Shell Gather at Morristown.

SEVENTY SURVIVORS

Some Plainfielders Among the Number—War Record of Gallant 11th.

Morristown, replete with reminiscences of Revolutionary days, added to its reputation of old-time generosity Thursday by entertaining under the auspices of General A. T. A. Torbert Post, G. A. R., the surviving members of the Eleventh Regiment New Jersey Veteran Association. In the State House at Trenton are five sets of colors, pierced by shot and shell, which were carried by this command to victory.

Seventy members of this old fighting regiment were present, including Thos. Titsworth, William Hand and John Goodwin, T. O. Doane, Isaac Randolph, Henry Mollison and W. H. Paine could not attend.

The members of Torbert Post escorted them to the post rooms, on Washington street, carriages being provided for the women. There the annual business meeting of the regiment association was held. During its session the wives of the members were given carriage drives about Morristown.

The meeting was presided over by Colonel John Schoonover, the president, of Trenton; Bishop W. Maines, of the Soldiers' Home at Kearny, the secretary, also being present. Mr. Schoonover was re-elected president and Mr. Maines secretary.

Dinner was served by the women of Hope League in the county hall. Among the decorations of the room were two banners, bearing a long list of the battles in which the regiment was engaged. There are only two survivors of the Eleventh Regiment living in Morristown, Joseph H. Berry and Gilbert D. Younger.

During the war but few, if any regiment in the Union army lost a greater percentage in a single day's battle. Their brave conduct upon that battlefield was the cause of their name being recorded by Colonel Fox, the government historian, upon the official roll of honor.

Recruiting for this regiment was commenced in May, 1862, under the first call of President Lincoln for 300,000 volunteers to serve for three years. Three days after leaving Trenton the regiment received its first lesson in actual warfare at the second battle of Bull Run, where from August 28 to August 30, it was held in reserve, guarding Chain Bridge, across the Potomac River. The first loss was at Fredericksburg, Va. Then followed the battle of Chancellorsville in May, 1863, where the regiment lost 193 men. The Eleventh Regiment with the army started on the long march which terminated in the battle of Gettysburg. The scene at Hyatstown, Md., when the regiment was formed in a hollow square, was memorable.

The regiment crossed the Rappahannock River to Culpepper and fought at Kelly's Ford. Then the regiment fought in the battle of Locust Grove, where Chaplain E. Clark Cline, now a Presbyterian minister at Phillipsburg, was efficient in caring for the wounded. At the battle of Mine Run the Hapsian was recrossed. After passing into camp in May, 1864, the Eleventh Regiment with the main army went over the river on pontoon bridges and fought for several days in the wilderness, participating in the charges at Spottsylvania. At North Anne River and Tolapotomy Creek the regiment fought its way to Cold Harbor, where 10,000 men were killed or wounded in about thirty minutes. The regiment passed to Petersburg, where it lay for months in the trenches. On Sunday, February 5, 1865, at the battle of Hatcher's Run, the regiment repelled three desperate charges by a superior force.

The Eleventh Regiment was present at the surrender of General Lee's army at Appomattox, where some divided their rations with the boys in gray. It marched from there through Richmond and Fredericksburg to a camp on Arlington Heights, where the corps was reviewed by Generals Meade, Hancock, Humphrey, Mott, Admiral Farragut, President Johnson, Secretary Stanton and many others. On May 23, 1865, the regiment participated in the grand review of the Army of the Potomac in Washington, and on June 8 returned to Trenton. There the command was escorted to the Capitol, where Governor Parker made a speech of welcome. On June 15, 1865, the regiment was formed in line for the last time, and the day afterward the comrades who had fought and suffered together for so long a time bade each other farewell.

Coverly's Application Refused.

Fred Coverly's application for a license to conduct a hotel on Jerusalem road, has been refused by Judge Vail. This is the second time an attempt to locate one in that section has met with failure, the first attempt having been made last year by John Brewer.

MARTINE TELLS OF TALK WITH PARKER

Congressional Nominee Enthusiastic Over Reception Given Him.

PARKER IS SANGUINE

He Two Exchange Opinions Regarding Outlook—Message to Parker Independent Club of Plainfield.

"As a result of our conference Mr. Parker disabused his mind of any idea that men who voted the straight ticket during the last two campaigns would be disloyal to the party this time and I learned that the Democratic Presidential candidate is a wonderful man," said James E. Martine with enthusiasm last night over his conference with the Democratic Presidential candidate yesterday. In response to a summons, Mr. Martine, the Democratic congressional candidate in this district, was closeted with Mr. Parker in the latter's apartments at the Hotel Seville in New York yesterday for half an hour.

Mr. Martine said today: "We talked at length over the situation in New Jersey and in fact of other so-called doubtful states. Why do you know Mr. Parker was perfectly familiar with the factional fight in this district and dwelt upon its importance in the present campaign. I assured him that Democracy in New Jersey is united and that I believed we could carry the State by 17,000 majority. I showed him a letter which I had received from Mr. Bryan soon after the Presidential convention in which the Nebraskan said: 'I feel that we have a good candidate and a good platform and that we are going to win.' Mr. Parker is a good man. I told him that I wanted to let him see the letter that I might know for that the party is no longer divided against himself and that factional strife has been forgotten.

"Mr. Parker told me that he was confident that the party would carry New York and felt quite sure of Indiana. Things in Connecticut are looking much better he said and he expressed the opinion that the Nutmeg State would go Democratic. When he asked about Jersey I told him that I had a reputation as an optimist but that our state could be depended upon for Parker and for Black. He displayed wonderful knowledge of conditions in New Jersey and the situations in the various districts. He's a wonderful man; no mistake about it."

Before leaving Mr. Martine told Mr. Parker that he was scheduled to speak in Springfield last night and asked what message he had to convey. "Tell our friends in Springfield that this is a battle for civil Constitutional government and that their standard bearer feels that that ought to appeal to every American citizen." "I carried that message to Springfield last night and the people received it enthusiastically. I assured Mr. Parker that I would meet him again next week."

Mr. Parker also asked Mr. Martine to convey his respects to the Parker Independent Club, of this city.

RYAN RENOMINATED.

Elizabeth Democrats Hold Their Municipal Convention in Turn Hall Last Night.

Peter J. Ryan was renominated for another term at the Democratic City Convention, held in Turn Hall, Elizabeth, last night, and Emil Klee, Thomas J. Pierson, J. McCandless and Fred Schlichter were nominated as Freeholders. Mr. Schlichter was the only new nominee.

Former Judge P. H. Gilhooly, who has not taken an active part in politics for some time, was chairman of the convention, and during the evening enthusiastic speeches were made by prominent Democrats.

The Republican City Convention will be held at Elizabeth tomorrow night in G. A. R. Hall.

Entries for P. H. S. Meet.

All entries for the annual fall field meet of the Plainfield High School Athletic Association must be in the hands of the president of the association, Howard H. Craig, before 12 o'clock tomorrow. No entries will be received later than that as the meet takes place on Friday afternoon.

Y. M. C. A. BOYS' MEETING

Programme Arranged for State Conference.

THREE DAYS' SESSION

List of Speakers and Their Subjects —Arrangements for Entertainment.

The annual conference of the boys' departments of the Young Men's Christian Association of New Jersey will be held here on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, October 28 to 30. Arrangements for the gathering have been made by a State committee, headed by H. S. Park, of Paterson, while the local committees have provided for the entertainment and comfort of the visitors.

The theme will be "The Christian Soldier," and the papers and addresses will be given on military subjects. The boys will assemble Friday afternoon, October 28, in the Babcock building, where a supper will be served by the women's auxiliary of the local association. Mr. Park will act as toastmaster: Harold S. Robins, of the local association, will deliver the address of welcome and it is expected that Mayor Jenkins will also be present and extend the hospitality of the city to the delegates. Edwin S. Ford, of Morristown, will respond in behalf of the New Jersey boys.

At 7:30 o'clock the delegates will go to the Trinity Reformed church, where the first session of the conference will be held. Martin B. Stutsman, of this city, will preside. The State Boys' orchestra, under the directorship of James Philipson, of Newark, will lead the song service. Addresses will be delivered by Chaplain Leslie R. Groves, of the United States Army, and F. S. Brockman, of Shanghai, China.

Saturday morning, in the association auditorium, J. Wheaton Chambers, of Freehold, will preside. The opening devotional exercises will be conducted by Lieutenant Edward W. Hearne, the State secretary, of New Jersey. Mr. Hearne went to the Philippines from Iowa during the Spanish-American War and later went as a secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association. Bugle call will be given by Bugler James Fortney, of Fort Hancock. Papers will be read by Randolph S. Merrill, of Paterson; Joseph H. Axe, of Newark, and Frank F. Johnson, of Trenton. Each paper will be followed by a discussion, under the leadership of W. Harold Burger, of Paterson. Forty minutes will be devoted to brief reports on "the best things" in the departments, conducted by C. C. Robinson, of Trenton.

In the afternoon the conference will divide into twelve groups. Five groups for High School students, four for grammar school boys and three for business boys. The local problems of the different departments will be discussed. Elmer F. Wais, of Camden, will be the presiding officer of the afternoon session. Saturday evening the boys will assemble at the Seventh-Day Baptist church, and Edward H. Austin, of Orange, will preside. An address will be delivered by E. T. Colton, the student secretary of the International Committee.

Sunday afternoon the delegates will again meet at the same church, where a preparatory service and conference will be conducted by Charles R. Scott, State Secretary Boys' Work. This will precede the Boys' rally, which will be given in charge of Rev. James A. Francis, of Boston. In the First Presbyterian church Sunday evening all the boys and leaders will meet for the closing meeting, when Charles T. Kilborne, chairman of the State executive committee of New Jersey, will deliver an address.

The first State conference was held in this city, in November, 1891, and on that occasion only forty-five delegates were present.

A "Shower" Social.

On Friday the Ladies' Christian Work Society, of Trinity Reformed church, expect to pack a barrel filled with clothing, canned goods, etc., for a minister's family in the West. Tomorrow night the society will hold a "shower" session," in the lecture room of the church, during those who go to the sociable to take something for this minister's barrel. They have prepared a musical programme and will also serve light refreshments.

"Rat 'Em Alive."

"Farmer Oraice" James E. Martine is going to make a complete canvass of the Fifth district, and the Republican newspapers which referred to the Democratic Congressional candidate as a blusherkite and a person of no weight will soon wish that they had kept still.—Newark Evening News.

DISCUSSED HAPPINESS

Young Woman Gave Lecture on New Thought Subject.

MISS ANITA TRUEMAN

When Mind and Thought Are in Harmony With Outside World There Is Happiness.

Students of the New Thought to the number of about twenty assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Pray, on West Seventh street, last night, and listened to a lucid explanation of this movement by Miss Anita Trueman, known as "the girl philosopher." That the new movement is rapidly gaining converts is apparent and as one result of last night's meeting it is quite possible that a class will be formed here and regular sessions held.

The supreme desire to know and manifest God was one of the chief thoughts expressed by Miss Trueman. In a general way she described the New Thought movement, explaining that it means the giving up of selfish thoughts and the giving to mankind the best one has. She said that while the physical side of one's self has received constant attention, little attention has been paid to the spiritual side, and that it is only when the thought and mind is in entire harmony with the outside world that happiness is attained.

Miss Trueman's talk was on the subject of "Happiness," and she told in an interesting manner how such a thing is possible in the lives of all persons. She explained that persons as a rule are so blinded by their physical environments that they are happy only when their own particular desires are gratified. This, she said, seemed to be the limitations of persons in their pursuits for happiness. They think that the much desired satisfaction is something to be sought after, forgetting that it is to be found within their own possibilities, that through the mastery of the physical and the attainment of the spiritual it is possible for them to secure the greatest happiness.

Miss Trueman dwelt at some length on the importance of a person's mind being in perfect harmony with God and of cultivating the divine nature. She spoke of the different classes of people, the superficial, the intellectual and the spiritual and noted certain characteristics in each.

At the conclusion of Miss Trueman's talk, a pleasing violin solo was given by the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Pray, after which there was an open participation on the subject of the evening. Several of those present questioned Miss Trueman on some particular line of thought. The questions were readily answered in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. Pray expressed the opinion that he had found the Scriptural text "Seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all things shall be added unto you," to be absolutely true, adding that only during the past few months he had had a wonderful demonstration of the text.

Several remained after the meeting and had a personal talk with Miss Trueman, taking the opportunity to thank her for her lecture.

Candy That is Pure.

Physicians all agree that confection made from pure sugar and other ingredients is harmless, and all lovers of this kind will be interested in the announcement that Reynolds & Co. have opened a confectionery store in the Babcock building. The firm advertises to sell pure candy made from good sugar, and as the firm is considered one of the largest in that kind of business, the public is assured of having fresh goods at all times. At present the firm is operating confectionery stores in the following places: Washington, D. C.; Chester, Pa.; Trenton, N. J.; Reading, Pa.; Elizabeth, N. J.; Norristown, Pa.; Pottstown, Pa.; Easton, Pa.; Bethlehem, Pa.; Allentown, Pa.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.

Trolley Building Delayed.

The Public Service Corporation has decided nothing of late on the proposed extension of the trolley to Metuchen and it is now almost a foregone conclusion that nothing will be done this winter toward building the line. Many interested persons, including a majority of the property-owners, would live to have the line built, but the company cannot see the wisdom of such action at present. It is possible that something may be done next summer.

A Park Club Governor.

Dr. B. VanDyke Hedges has been elected a governor of the Park Club, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Samuel Townsend.

FATAL FALL FROM TRAIN

Philadelphian Stealing Ride on Fast Freight Met Death.

HIS LEG WAS CUT OFF

Harry Lenahan, Aged Twenty, Died After Being Removed to Hospital.

Injured by falling from a fast freight near Fanwood last night, Harry Lenahan, of Wharton street, Philadelphia, was brought to this city on the New York train due here at 12:59, only to die shortly after arriving at Muhlenberg Hospital. At the time of the fatal accident the unfortunate man was with three companions, James Fay, John Boyd and Joseph Hogan, all of Philadelphia, who left their homes last night to ride to New York on the fast freight, leaving Fairmount Park at 6:16. The young men were warned repeatedly by the conductor to get off the train, being cautioned at Bound Brook, Plainfield and again at Netherwood, but persisted in remaining on the car.

As the result of a mis-step near Fanwood, Lenahan fell between the cars. His companions immediately jumped after him, and dragged the injured man from beneath the train. His left leg had been crushed by the wheels, while the right ankle was badly broken.

The young men made Lenahan as comfortable as possible and telephoned to this city. The ambulance met the train here and the victim was taken to the hospital. He lived for about twenty minutes, during which time Father Delaney administered extreme unction. The body was subsequently removed to Cole's undertaking establishment.

The young man was about twenty years old. His parents were notified immediately and left Philadelphia for this city at once. In all probability the body will be removed to Philadelphia today. The three companions, Fay, Boyd and Hogan, are held in the local police court as witnesses.

PLAYED WITH MATCHES AND SET HOUSE AFIRE

FEARING PUNISHMENT LAD KEPT THE FACT A SECRET.

Playing with matches in an upper room at his home on Craig place, shortly after 2 o'clock yesterday p. m. Alfred Willett, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Willett, started a fire that caused $40 damage. The boy fled in alarm when he saw the flames but fearing punishment did not say anything to his mother who was downstairs. Smoke was pouring from a window and the fire was under good headway when it was discovered by William L. Smalley, seated on his porch next door.

He called to two men passing on A. M. Griffin's wagon and rushing in the house they threw the blazing articles out. A window curtain, shades, carpet and a table filled with clothing and work were destroyed. A still alarm was sent to fire headquarters and with the arrival of the department the blaze was entirely extinguished. The loss is covered by insurance.

Sagamore Club Affair.

Under the auspices of the Ladies' Guild, of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, an entertainment will be given by the Sagamore Club in the Parish House on Clinton avenue tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock. The Sagamore Club consists of four mandolins, two banjos, and two violins. Chester H. Briggs, of the High School Glee Club, is the leader, the other members being Monroe Long, Theodore Gavett, William Briggs, Garth Williams, Herbert Smith and Charles Hoff. The club will be assisted by Miss Almeda Louise Emmons, elocutionist; Mr. Simpson, pianist, and Miss Florence Bennett, soprano.

Council to Receive Hazadous Bids.

Bids for macadamizing certain streets in the city will be received at the adjourned meeting of the Common Council tomorrow night. It will be remembered that earlier in the year an effort was made to have this ordinance adopted, but it failed. Later it was introduced again and adopted. The affected property-owners will have nearly a year in which to pay their assessments for the work. It was with this understanding that the Common Council put the ordinance through.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Thompson, of Belvidere avenue, are at Atlantic City.

COLORED MEN APATHETIC

Incensed Over Dr. Anderson's "Turn-Down" Last Fall.

LIKELY TO EFFECT VOTE

Some Are Apt to Vote for James E. Martine, Says Rev. Mr. Jackson.

Plainfield's colored voters are indifferent to Republican success at the coming election according to rumors that have gained credence. The condition here is similar to that throughout the county, it is said, and it is reported to be due to two causes. The one is that Dr. Jefferson Anderson as the Republican candidate for coroner last fall was overwhelmingly defeated, his own party knifing him right and left. Another cause is that the Republican campaign managers have not supplied funds for the colored workers.

Rev. E. E. Jackson, a leading colored Republican, told a reporter for The Daily Press today that so far as he is concerned personally he will vote the straight Republican ticket and will work hard for the party's success, but he admitted that many of the Republicans of his race declare that they will not vote at all, preferring to take that method of revenge rather than to vote for Democrats. He admitted that not a few colored men here would cast their votes for James E. Martine, of this city, the Democratic candidate for Congress. "The colored people like Mr. Martine and some of them are apt to place friendship ahead of politics," said he.

A dispatch from Elizabeth in the Newark Evening News said last night:

"There is still dissatisfaction among some of the colored voters because, as they put it, the campaign managers are conducting the election arrangements, in Union County, by refusing to assist the colored Republican clubs, financially, in carrying on the campaign. Some of the officers in Plainfield, Westfield and Roselle threaten to retaliate by doing some cutting as the polls open."

"A leader in church and political circles in Plainfield was seen yesterday and said to the reporter: 'A meeting was held here last week and another, of a private nature, will be held this week, for the purpose of reaching, if possible, some understanding to try to keep the vote in the county Republican.'

"Charles R. H. Hawkins, a leader among the colored voters in this city, believes that Elizabeth is not done shortly there will be cutting at the polls in November. He expressed this in a recent interview when he said that the situation, so far as the colored voters were concerned, was critical.

"Rev. W. H. Taylor, pastor of the Shiloh Baptist church, and also a leader in political matters among the members of his race in Elizabeth, who has stated on several occasions that he believed that there was great dissatisfaction in this city over the action of the Republican campaign managers, has changed his views. In his sermon Sunday evening he took occasion to dwell at some length on his belief in the principles of the Republican party. With regard to the rumor that many colored voters were thinking of casting a vote for James E. Martine, a Democrat, he said:

"'Why should the negro vote for a Democratic Congressman a Republican President? If he were to vote for a Democratic Congressman, why not for a Democratic President? You might as well have the devil as his brother.'

"The minister denounced the vote sellers and declared that they should be tied to a post and whipped. He said that if he knew of any members of his congregation who would sell their vote he would turn them out of his church, and that he would advise their wives to leave them."

Held for Grand Jury.

On the charge brought by Morris Deutsch, of obtaining money under false pretenses, Louis Singer, a former merchant in this city, gave a bond for $400 yesterday before Justice Stillwell, of Morristown, to await trial of the Grand Jury at Elizabeth. Both men were formerly in business in this city, and Deutsch claims that Singer obtained $300 from him under the pretence that he would give him a first mortgage on his property, which was at that time on East Front street. As the Grand Jury adjourns next week the case will probably be brought up in the near future.

Harvest Social.

Under the auspices of the Loyal Temperance Legion a harvest social will be held in the W. C. T. U. rooms tomorrow night at 8 o'clock.

AN ANNIVERSARY MEETING

Netherwood Fresh Air Association Completes 3d Year.

DR. RODMAN PRESIDES

Pleasing Programme Blended With the Transaction of Routine Business and Reading of Reports.

Combining an entertaining programme with the transaction of the regular routine business, the third anniversary of the Netherwood Fresh Air Association was held at the Y. M. C. A. Hall last evening before a large and interested audience. Dr. E. M. Rodman presided at the meeting which was opened by a service of song in which E. C. Martin led. He was assisted by E. D. Young, cornet, and a quartette composed of Miss Grace J. Carroll, contralto; Miss Rita Rayburt, soprano; Louis Tallamy, bass, and William Tallamy, tenor.

Following the prayer and scripture reading, Dr. Leonard Waldo rendered two violin selections, accompanied by Miss Jessie Utter. The reports of the various committees followed, interspersed with musical selections by Miss Carroll and Judge William M. Runyon.

Mrs. David M. Runyon read the secretary's report, in which she told in detail of the work conducted at the Netherwood home during the summer. The report of the devotional committee was read by Miss Florence Hawkins, and covered completely the outline of the religious meetings which have been held at the camp. About forty-five local societies have assisted in the work at these meetings, and several of the local churches have aided the association by special meetings for their benefit.

At the conclusion of the report read by the chairman of the entertainment committee, Phillip Suffern, Miss Frances Underhill Weir played two piano selections which completely captivated the audience. She was obliged to respond to an encore to "On the Wings of Song," from Mendelssohn. Miss Weir's rendition of these classical selections was perfect in every detail, her touch and expression being splendid.

Addresses by Dr. Rodman and Miss Curry followed the piano selections. Miss Curry's remarks were short, and in general covered the facts which had been brought out by the reports. The superintendent expressed her gratitude to all those who have aided the work during the summer, and closed with the hope that all may receive their just reward for their kindness.

A piano solo from Chopin was well played by Miss Roxana B. Love, a pupil of Ward Stephens. The pianist richly deserved the applause with which she was received.

At the conclusion of Miss Curry's address, the following officers were re-elected to serve for the coming year by a unanimous vote: President, Rev. E. M. Rodman, of Plainfield; vice presidents, Clarence A. Titus, of Elizabeth; secretary, Mrs. D. M. Runyon, of Plainfield. Committees: House committee, Mrs. J. U. Pierce, chairman; finance committee, G. H. Chapman, chairman; entertainments committee, Phillip Suffern, chairman; devotional committee, Miss Florence G. Hawkins, chairman; building and grounds committee, David Hand, chairman, all of Plainfield.

The following will constitute the executive committee: G. E. Hall, James F. Parker, Harry Gee, H. P. Leire, Joseph Titsworth, all of this city, and Miss Sara Curry, of New York and Netherwood; Grant Hugh Browne, of New York; D. M. Torrey, of Westfield; Mrs. Brundage, of Cranford; L. H. Bigiow, Jr., of Montclair, and Alexander C. Morgan, of New York.

The treasurer's report read by David M. Runyon was as follows: Balance from 1903, $264 09; subscriptions for 1904, $856.33; proceeds from church societies, $108.53; proceeds from special meetings, $260.57; collections at camp on Sundays, $110.33; donations, $12 50; lawn party and sundries, $90.05; total receipts, $1,812.47; total expenses, $1,074 58; balance, $108 62; outstanding debts, $128. The making a deficiency in the treasury, which was wiped out last night by the collections taken.

Her Seventy-Fifth Birthday.

Mrs. Sarah Ann Rose, of Somerville, widow of the late Wm. Rose, Jr., and mother of Frank C. Rose, the Democratic candidate for Sheriff of Somerset county, celebrated her seventy-fifth birthday yesterday by entertaining her nine children and two grandchildren. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Rose, of this city.

TELEPHONE WAR IS NOW IN THE COURTS

Charges on All Sides Follow the Strife at Alton Last Week.

TWO HEARINGS FRIDAY

Company After the Glaser Guards, Which It Alleges, Cut Down Three of Its Poles.

With the clearing away of broken timbers and chips in the telephone war at Alton, charges and counter-charges are being preferred in the courts at a rate that will call for a Sherlock Holmes to unravel them if they continue at the present rate. The Glaser Guards, which are comprised of the male population of Alton, are now being arrested as fast as names can be learned, on charges of cutting down the Northeastern poles; Scott Terry, township constable, is accused of making arrests of telephone men illegally and the telephone men are being gathered in on charges of assault preferred by Mrs. Glaser. The scene of action is now divided between Justice Huff's court in this city and Justice Clark's court at Scotch Plains.

Yesterday Superintendent Hallett, of the telephone company, swore out the warrant against Terry, declaring that he had unlawfully arrested Hugh McMahon and Longhlin McDonald, two of his employes, and had them arraigned before Justice Huff in this city. The charge against them was disorderly conduct and accordingly should have gone before Justice Clark. Terry was arrested by Constable Walpole and taken before Justice Clark yesterday afternoon but the hearing was put over until Friday at 1:30.

With Terry were arraigned William Terry, John Terry, Elmer Terry, Daniel Terry, Amst Hetfield, Hugh McDonald and John Wilson, all members of the Glaser Guards who Superintendent Hallett alleges were the men who cut down three of the Northeastern company's poles that had been erected in front of the Glaser property. The specific charge against them is malicious mischief and they will also be tried Friday afternoon. On the other hand, the Alton contingent is seeking to prefer charges of a various nature against the 'phone employes but their progress has been hampered by the inability to get names. "John Doe" and "Richard Roe" have been overworked and there is no other way of substituting. McMahon and McDonald, who were arrested on Mrs. Glaser's complaint of assault and disorderly conduct, were arraigned before Justice Huff this morning. A certificate from Dr. Westcott showed that Mrs. Glaser is confined to her bed from injuries received in the pole fight and the matter was laid over until November 9.

The company has made no further attempt to replace the poles cut down and the matters in that direction are at a standstill. It is said the officials learned who had comprised the chopping brigade through Edward Hawkins, a young man who was sent to Alton as a farm hand and who, while pretending to work, watched developments.

Two Companies of P. H. S. Cadets.

Assembling for the second time since their reorganization, the Plainfield High School Battalion met for drill yesterday afternoon in Co. K's armory. Two full companies were in attendance, and the drill was confined to the facings and company marching without arms. The cadets are still struggling with the new regulations which survive many changes. By a vote of the battalion it was decided to hold the drill in the future on Monday afternoons. If a sufficient number of applications for membership are received a hospital, signal, and bicycle corps will be organized. There are many cadets interested in these special features of the drill, and in all probability they will be successful.

Mrs. Stephen Coleman Buried.

The funeral of Mrs. Elizabeth Coleman, of Somerville, wife of Stephen Coleman, formerly of this city, was held yesterday. She died after a long illness. Three children survive her. She was a sister of the late George Gulick. She was thirty-eight years of age.

Improving Store Property.

Patterson Brothers are making extensive improvements to their business property on West Front street, making the one store into two good-sized ones. Charles Patterson, who is now supervising the work, expects to return to California soon.

IS AN ACCOMPLISHED LADY

Mrs. Metcalf, Wife of New Secretary of Commerce, a Favorite of Capital Society.

Washington (D. C.) Special.

When President Roosevelt's cabinet follow him downstairs next New Year's day and take their places in the receiving line in the blue room, the handsomest and most distinguished looking couple will be found at the end of the procession in the persons of the new secretary of commerce and labor and his wife. The secretary, who is just 50 years old, looks less, notwithstanding the touch of gray in his hair and mustache. He has a clear, healthy skin, and somewhat penetrating blue-gray eyes, and he carries himself well. So also does Mrs. Metcalf, who has a fine presence and dresses in good taste.

They are well known in Washington's official society. Mr. Metcalf having represented his district in congress for three terms, which means six Washington seasons for Mrs. Metcalf, who always makes the long journey across the continent with him, whether the session be long or short. "Indeed," says the secretary, gallantly, "I would not come without her."

When the president, however, invited him to Washington to take the place in his cabinet about to be vacated by Mr. Cortelyou, there was but short notice, in view of the many steps that must be taken in closing up one's home and one's affairs generally. Mrs. Metcalf, therefore, remained at her home in Oakland and will join the secretary in the early fall. They will live at the Arlington hotel, where they have been accustomed to spending their winters. Mrs. Metcalf is one of the most popular of the many women to be quite life to figure in the weekly receptions here.

As a cabinet hostess it is easy to predict success for her. She is fond of society, and enjoys perfect health, which prevents its duties from becoming a burden. When one knows that she will have to make in the neighborhood of 100 "first calls" each season, to say nothing of those she will be expected to return, one begins to realize vaguely what the social duties of a cabinet woman mean.

Mrs. Metcalf, who was Miss Corinne Nicholson, is a native of California, her father having gone there from Alexandria, Va. She was one of the belles of the state when she met the young New York lawyer, who had gone to the Pacific coast to make a name for himself. She could ride horseback, swim and do well many things that made her exceptionally attractive. She was married to the young lawyer shortly after he closed his Utica office and made California permanently his home.

The Metcalfs have two sons, Victor N., who is a midshipman at Annapolis, and W. Howard, who has recently begun his business career in California.

GOVERNMENT IS PLEASED.

Colombia Resumes Diplomatic Relations and Appoints Dr. Thomas Herran Minister.

Washington (D. C.) Special.

It was feared by some of the attaches of the department of state that the action taken by the American government at the time the republic of Panama seceded from Colombia would lead to lasting diplomatic differences between the latter country and the United States. For this reason the recent resumption of diplomatic relations between the United States and the republic of Colombia by the appointment of Dr. Thomas Herran as Colombian minister at Washington gives general satisfaction in administration circles. Dr. Herran acted as charge d'affaires of his legation after the withdrawal of Minister Concha. He negotiated with Secretary Hay the Hay-Herran Panama canal treaty which was rejected by the Colombian government, which act resulted in the formation of the republic of Panama.

HAS HAD STORMY HISTORY

Amalgamated Association of Street Railway Employes Has Been in Many Strikes.

Detroit (Mich.) Special.

The Amalgamated Association of Street and Electrical Railway Employes of America was organized in September, 1892, at a convention called by President Gompers, of the A. F. of L., which was held in Indianapolis. At that time there were but a few local unions of street car men in the country, and hardly any established scales of wages or regulation of working hours. Probably few organizations in the country has had a stormier career and few have made more substantial progress in the way of bettering conditions for their members. In almost every city of the country there is now an established scale of wages and a maximum working day of ten hours. Largely through the agitation of the union, closed vestibules to protect motormen and gripmen have been adopted in nearly all cities.

In the 12 years since the union was organized wages have increased from an average of 14 cents an hour to 22 cents, while a higher rate than that is paid in all the large cities. In Chicago the wages are from 23 to 25 cents an hour, most of the men being paid 24 cents. This is an increase of from three to five cents an hour in the past two years, brought about since the men organized here. The history of the Amalgamated association is so identified with that of the national president, W. D. Mahon, that one cannot be written without the other. Mahon represented the Columbus union at the convention where the national organization was formed, and a year afterward became the fullest power. He is a powerful speaker and a splendid organizer, and has done much in the labor movement of the country, not only for his own organization, but for others. During the memorable struggle of the coal miners in 1897 Mahon, with other labor leaders, left the work of his own organization and went into West Virginia, on the firing line. Injunctions were immediately procured to land him in jail, but "Bill" eluded the deputies and carried on the work of organization.

The strike proved to be the starting point of the United Mine Workers, now the greatest labor union in the world. Mahon has piloted his organization through many stormy struggles, but he has learned to avoid strikes wherever possible and resort to arbitration. It is under that policy, adopted a few years ago, that the organization has prospered until it now has over 50,000 members.

citizens from the sublime porte, but the real aim is more important. Turkey is not giving American schools and missions within her dominions as liberal treatment as she accords to similar institutions and interests of France or Germany. The American demand has long been for equality of rights and opportunities with the most favored nation in this and several other respects. It is now proposed to put the demand through to a successful issue.

Tea first became a general beverage among the wealthy in England in the year 1657. At that time it cost about $50 a pound.

UP TO DATE MODES.

The New Autumn Petticoat—Some Smart Walking Suits.

The underskirt worn with a toilet has much to do with its general good effect. To be a success it must be faultlessly fitted, quite flat at the top and closely adjusted about the hips. A flare at the bottom is absolutely necessary to give the desired sweep to the outside skirt, so the deep ruffle at the edge is elaborately trimmed with plaitings, quilling and tiny flounces. Plaitings are edged with lace on the dressy skirts, and on very elegant examples motifs of lace are applied with silk cut away to give an airy appearance.

Green and blue changeable taffeta silk underskirts will be very popular, elaborately trimmed with either blue or green velvet ribbon put on in several rows of different widths.

Very smart are the walking suits made of covert cloth, with skirt cut perfectly plain and the close fitting three-quarter coat strapped.

Boots in all styles, but particularly with very pointed toes and Cuban heels, are made of the new and popular shiny leather.

A novelty in gloves is of the gauntlet variety, worn with the gauntlet thrown down and lined with a contrasting colored kid—for instance, white if the body of the glove is black, and vice versa.

Shown in the cut is a stunning gown of black taffeta. Over the silk bloused corsage is a bertha effect carried out by means of alternate rows of cream cluny lace and puffings of taffeta. The lace forms the collar, and a strip goes down the front of the plaited yoke and also trims the puffed elbow sleeves. Above the full gathered skirt is a girdle of the silk fastened with looped bows of taffeta.

NEW STYLES IN BLOUSES.

Dainty Blouses For the Home—The Winter Evening Gown.

Blouses are constructed of Russian lace insertion and bands of ribbon about two inches wide. The former is handmade and very strong and, while possessing certain distinctive features of its own, resembles both cluny and guipure.

These lace waists are mounted over a colored silk lining made full like the blouse itself. A dainty waist of this kind is worn over a slip of burnt orange, the girdle of soft taffeta combining several shades of yellow toning into the orange.

Among the newest examples of evening gowns is one carried out in a delicate shade of mauve taffeta with a little detached floral pattern in pale pink and green. It has a short train and a triangle panel front, adorned at intervals with knots of almond green velvet ribbon. The bodice is long and pointed, with two wide flounces of oriental lace at the decolletage, and the sleeves are composed of three full puffs to the elbow, while the whole is completed by watteau streamers of almond green velvet falling from the center of the back.

The blouse shown in the cut is created from a very soft cream cloth The emplecement and high cuffs are made of embroidered tulle over white silk. The band of stitched cloth about the yoke and over the shoulders terminates in pendants of passementerie, which are ornamented with gold buttons. A trimming of white and green cord on the collar makes a pretty finish.

THE MILLINERY OUTLOOK.

The Toreador Hat Is High in Favor. The Floral Tricorne.

A question of immediate and vital interest is millinery. "When in material doubt buy a new hat" has come to be a creed with most women and one to which they are pleased to conform.

High in favor at present are the toreador hats of more or less modified shape. There are also a little Henry

The left side of the boat shaped hat is literally swept by two handsome ostrich feathers adjusted to curl over the hair. The novelty of this hat lies in this arrangement of plumes, as the boat shape has hitherto been untrimmed.

The tricorne floral hat is a dainty little affair for evening wear through the autumn.

The smart hat pictured is of the fashionable elephant gray felt trimmed with three large black ostrich plumes. The somewhat "pottie" crown has a black silk band tightly folded about it as a completing note.

FASHION'S WHIMS.

Skirts With Embroidered Flounces. Taffeta Gowns Still the Vogue.

Taffeta silk as a dress material seems to have taken a new lease of life. Dressmakers predicted that its career in this capacity would end with the summer—another case of dressmakers proposing and patrons disposing.

The latest taffeta street frocks are in three pieces—skirt, waist and a smart little jacket. A new color in this silk is a peacock blue.

Skirts with embroidered flounces, often three in number, are to be very much worn. The embroidery is on the order of English punched work, buttonholed on the edge.

The separate waist is in the fashion field again, and for evening wear white taffeta of an exceedingly soft quality is to be employed.

White taffeta skirts to accompany the taffeta blouse waist is an economical turn of la mode, as a skirt of this description will do duty with a number of dainty waists.

A charming white gown for a young girl is of white, silky henrietta trimmed with heavy lace. The skirt has a deep gathered flounce of henrietta formed of groups of tucks and lace insertion. It gathers slightly about the waist. The bodice has a yoke of lace and a stole formed of broad stitched bands trimmed with buttons. A band of the lace insertion is applied in the sleeve near the lace cuff.

The smart figure represented in the cut wears a toilet of orchid taffeta, a shade which is much in favor. The skirt has a panel in front and a gathered emplecement about the back and hips. At the bottom are festoons of guipure lace and a ruffle of silk.

The Louis XV. corsage is draped around the body and fastened a little at the side of the pointed waist effect with butterfly bows. A fichu of lace edged mull is arranged about the lace yoke. The elbow sleeves are formed of a series of graduated puffs.

White Surah Silk Is Very Chic—New Leather Trimmings.

A delightful new evening wrap for smart occasions has just made its appearance in the sartorial world. It is of white tussore silk embroidered all over in the style known as English and lined with the palest shade of pink, mauve or blue, but seldom with white, which color is not effective with this kind of garment. This wrap is a loose three-quarter length, and pretty examples are made with triple capes and triple cuffs. As a further trimming handsome lace or a knotted silk fringe is used.

Surah silk, and more particularly white surah, is returning to favor for evening and theater capes and coats.

Soft leather, in several pastel shades, lines some of the new jackets and gives a stunning effect when the coats are thrown back.

A narrow insertion of colored leather in the collar of a dark cloth coat is a pretty touch, especially when the small revers are made of the material proper, plainly stitched.

The picture displays a mantle of pale biscuit cloth. The long wing sleeves are cut toward the back, and the fronts are loose. Cream lace and wide silk fringe matching in color form the trimming. The passementerie bordering the mantle is of green velvet embroidered with gold spots.

CHANGES OF FASHION.

What Mme. La Mode Decrees Shall Be Worn This Season.

In Paris the sleeve fullness has been transferred to the top at one bound, but American women adopt their modes in a more gradual fashion; consequently the fullness at the wrist is still seen. Before the winter is over the leg of mutton sleeve will attain favor, and a novelty is a leg of mutton model quite large above the elbow, with the lower fullness formed into tucks or stitched plaits.

Gowns with long trains look old fashioned now, and during the winter the ankle length skirt will be in decided evidence.

Many of the new skirts are made with deep flounces, but the models most liked have long lines produced by plaits, tucks or folds. Tiny flounces hardly more than ruches put close together and forming a band six or seven inches deep are favorite trimmings for taffeta and velvet frocks.

Closely fitted waists have taken the place of comfortable bloused effects, and the smartest bodices are close fitting, made over a tight lining. The material is put on in folds or gathers across the figure. The bodices usually finish in a point below the waist with tiny yokes of lace and embroidery or are merely gathered in corselet effect.

Very full blouses are no longer worn by women who affect the latest style, but the waist that blouses all around over a deep girdle is quite the thing.

The present straight front corselet will have to be remodeled to meet the requirements of the new mode, which demands the round waist lines, a point the straight front entirely ignores.

The picture represents a shirt waist of the latest cut, which may be carried out successfully in any of the challies, voiles or soft silks of the season. The model pictured is made from peau de soie of the new peacock blue shade and hangs in plaits from a round yoke trimmed with stitched straps of silk and small bronze buttons.

MILLINERY MATTERS.

Shaded Velvet Is One of the Late Parisian Novelties.

Some of the most stunning of the new hats are made of a combination of braid and velvet ribbon cunningly woven, and when of the turban or boat shaped toque a flat plaque formed of velvet ribbon or an owl's head is the only adornment.

Shaded velvet and shaded ostrich feathers are often used on the same hat in Paris.

Panne finished belts and beavers come in all the new fashionable shades, and they make much more comfortable headgear than a hat constructed of cloth matching the gown, which is apt to be very heavy.

White yedda braid makes a natty little boat shaped model. The brim is slashed and turned up in an original manner immediately in front and trimmed with narrow kilted black velvet ribbon. On one side is a black wing.

Tricorne toques in all the short haired pelts are to be popular, especially in chinchilla and ermine, which latter promises to be more in evidence for day wear than it was last season. The pretty little tricorne illustrated is an up to date chinchilla example.

FASHION'S FANCIES.

New Trimmings and Fabrics—The Continued Vogue of Silk.

The rage for silk and for exquisite woolen materials, velvets and satins will continue through the winter.

The old fashioned peau de soie and moire antique silks will be revived, and old rose of the most vivid shade is to be a favorite color for evening wear.

Many of the imported gowns show the short shoulder and tight sleeves, with full graceful skirts. The Louis XVI. modes are daily gaining favor, and whether la mode will take kindly to this nipped in appearance of the short shoulder remains to be seen.

When the short shouldered effects are carried out by an artist who is able to make the modifications suited to the individual woman without apparent alterations they are without doubt extremely effective.

Pipings of velvet are very much used as trimming in conjunction with velvet buttons.

Another charming fabric included among the season's novelties is a corduroy embroidery in different spots and figures.

Crochet passementerie is a fashionable trimming just now. It is made of buttonhole silk or gold thread generally fashioned into large wheel motifs. Crochet buttons, too, are included in the modistic scheme.

A dainty little autumn gown is seen in the picture. It is carried out in cheviot of a bronze green shade. The skirt is particularly novel with its wealth of small gores fitted with a plaited panel effect. The blouse jacket is gathered into epaulets on the shoulders and trimmed with embroidered soutache and narrow braid formed into a design. The girdle is of braid, and the buttons are tiny examples of "nouveau art." The attractive toque is a creation of shaded red velvet flowers.

FOIBLES OF FASHION.

Hand Painted Belts Are Now Considered Very Smart.

A pretty fashion is that of wearing cockades of colored velvet or ribbon, one on the left side of the corsage, rather high up, and the other on the right side of the waist line. The cockades are large and generally of a contrasting color from that of the gown with which they are worn. Rosettes of burnt orange velvet make an exceedingly pretty accompaniment to a smart afternoon gown of brown sun plaited chiffon.

Hand painted belts in different colored leathers will represent a very important item among the dress schemes. A charming example is in deep cream, with a leather buckle to correspond painted in the palest greens, mauves and pinks in a design of Louis XV. bows, mingled with sprays of flowers. A brown leather belt, with a dull gold buckle, is stunning with embroidered sprays of mauve lilac, the leaves and stems being hand painted.

The dainty gown pictured is a Paris fancy evolved from dark tan broadcloth. The skirt is finely plaited and trimmed at the hem with a flat embroidery in different shades of tan. The tight fitting jacket is finished with the same embroidery and opens in front to display a wide black satin corselet and neckband. Dull gold buttons are dotted about the neck. The hat is of tan, and the necessary note of color is furnished by the white linen collar and black satin stock and girdle.

WHAT WILL BE WORN.

The New Housemaid Skirt—Trimmings of the Moment.

In many of the new autumn frocks the decorations begin at the knee and are applied in a series of puffings of the material used for the gown or of silk and even velvet of the soft chiffon variety. These trimmings are usually banded in effect, although a waved design is much in favor to simulate an overskirt.

On the winter gowns the collar has not the prominent place it occupied last year, and in most instances it is merely a continuation of the yoke.

The last cry of Mme. La Mode in coloring is gray. This exquisite shade is becoming alike to both fair and dark haired women and promises to be the first favorite for late autumn frocks.

A beautiful dress of elephant gray has been designed for Mrs. Brown-Potter to wear on the vaudeville stage. It is a frock of simple elegance of this greeny gray tint in cashmere. The skirt falls full all round, but defines the hips and has a deep machine stitched hem as the only decoration. This is the new housemaid skirt. The waist is quite early English, and the very long shoulders continue in a peleriene effect right down to the waist, where a black silk swathed belt confines the bodice tightly to the figure in most becoming lines. An old fashioned tucker of val lace is stitched into the neck and finished with a tiny jabot of black silk.

The sketch shows a charming blouse of white crepe de chine, with a wide Irish lace collar, the scalloped edge of which is finished with hstich embroidery. Beneath this is set a waved ruffle, ending in front in a jabot. A shaped collar of gold yellow silk run with brown cord trims the neck. The elbow sleeves end with ruffles of crape and lace.

GOSSIP OF CHICAGO

THE LAKE METROPOLIS WANTS A NEW CHARTER.

NEEDS CIVIC IMPROVEMENTS

City Is Badly Handicapped with Antiquated Laws—Suffering from Reign of Crime and Police Laxity.

Chicago.—Nothing has awakened even this breezy, bustling city so much within the last ten years as the fight for a new charter that is to be determined by the voters, not of the city alone, but of the entire state, at the coming election. Politicians of both parties are working hand in hand with the business and professional interests of the city to arouse the necessary enthusiasm in the subject throughout the state to get the voters outside the city to vote on the subject at the November election, for without these votes, or at least some 200,000 of them, the city will fail to achieve a cherished ambition; without them it must remain simply an overgrown village instead of that which it aspires to—a world metropolis.

Above all things else, a new charter means the means of raising money for permanent improvements, and Chicago needs them. The "pay as you go" principal under which the city is operated under present state laws is a handicap which keeps Chicago out of the metropolis class. Large sections of the city are without drainage, for the city has not the money to build the sewer systems that are required, and the people of the southern portion of the city, at least, must continue to make rafts out of their sidewalks to get to and from their water-surrounded homes until such time as the city has authority to issue improvement bonds.

Among other things for which Chicago needs money are new bridges if she is to maintain her supremacy as a lake port. Money for subways is needed, if she is to satisfactorily solve the traction problem. Money for a permanent lighting plant for the city streets. These things Chicago must have if she is to become a metropolitan city such as will be a credit to the state. These things she cannot have without the new charter which she is now asking for, and which the voters of the state can give her without expense to the state by voting "yes" on the November ballot.

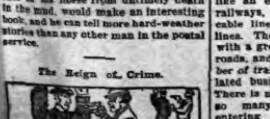
Some Postal Routes.

Among the many classes that suffer from Chicago's lack of civic improvements are the city postmen. The rural free delivery carriers of the suburban districts have no need to envy their city coworkers, or at least that portion of them that serve the outlying districts of Chicago.

In the spring and winter the heat gray uniforms so familiar in the business section of the city give place to hip boots and slickers in the southern sections that is as yet but little more than a prairie. Here it is that the postman, like the householder, must utilize the floating sidewalks as a means of making his rounds in the spring, and in the winter must plow through great drifts of snow and slush on unbroken roadways.

Equally as bad conditions exist on the North side, though not to so large an extent. One carrier there, with an eight mile route to cover, has been supplied with a motor cycle. Darnell, the carrier, is one of the oldest men in the service and is extremely popular with the people whom he serves. His experiences, including numerous rescues of his horses from untimely death in the mud, would make an interesting book, and he can tell more hard-weather stories than any other man in the postal service.

The Reign of Crime.



King Highwayman has held court in Chicago since early in the summer, and has ruled the city with a rod of iron, spurning the efforts of the police to oust him from a lucrative field, and locking horns in his operations with the passing of each day.

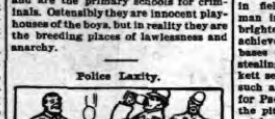
The reign of terror with which Chicago has been cursed for several weeks, rising to a climax in the holding a little over a week ago of no less than 10 persons in one night, is attributed by many to the fact that within a period of three weeks the newspapers reported 70 hold-ups, 14 people wounded and one murder in addition to more than 50 burglaries.

Chief of Police O'Neil gave two reasons for the reign of crime. He attributed a part of it to the West side street fair, which attracted great crowds to Madison street every evening and gave the thugs an opportunity for successful operations. His other reason was the packing house strike, which he said not only drew the criminal classes to the city, but necessitated the detailing of nearly one-third of the city police force to the stockyards, and so leaving the city at the mercy of the thugs.

But the street fair and the strike both passed into history and the hold-ups and robberies continued with unabated vigor until the business and professional interests of the city organized for public protection and forced action on the part of the police, and now Chicago is gradually recovering from its reign of terror.

The remarkable feature of the history of Chicago's criminal classes is the number of boy bandits the city has produced. Some of the most desperate thugs the police have brought to bay, as for example the car barn bandits and the slayers of Hans Peterson, were mere boys. They are the product of the caves and shanties constructed by boys as loafing places in the vast stretches of open territory within the city. These caves and shanties serve as rendezvous rooms for yellow back literature; as drinking places, and are the primary schools for criminals. Ostensibly they are innocent playhouses of the boys, but in reality they are the breeding places of lawlessness and anarchy.

Police Laxity.

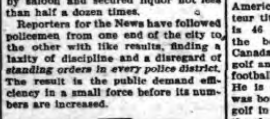


Police officials are prone to place the blame for lawlessness in the city to a lack of numbers in the police force, and it is undoubtedly true that Chicago needs a much larger police force if the public are to be given a metropolitan service. But it is doubtful of the tax-paying public will willingly stand for greater taxation in order that the police force be increased in numbers until those now in the city service show what can be done under proper and efficient police discipline.

The unbiased report of Capt. Piper, of New York, made to the City club a few months ago, showed much laxity in police discipline. It was pooh-poohed by the police officials, but the public at large and the newspapers accepted it at face value, and demanded a change which they did not get. Since that time the Daily News has never dropped the subject for a day. It has kept its newspaper sleuths continually on the track of the police department, and has day after day pointed out breaches of discipline and negligence in individual police officers. Taking, for example, an officer stationed at one of the downtown street intersections—a crossing policeman—whose duties called for his presence on that one street crossing all day. A News reporter watched him for eight hours and gave time and circumstances to account for his absence from his post of duty for nearly half of that time. During that time that particular officer patronized the back door of a nearby saloon and secured liquor not less than half a dozen times.

Reporters for the News have followed policemen from one end of the city to the other with like results, finding a laxity of discipline and a disregard of standing orders in every police district. The result is the public demand efficiency in a small force before its numbers are increased.

Nerve Wrecking Noises.



Experts have pronounced Chicago a city of nerve-wrecked people. A city commission that has investigated the subject among the children especially say that at least one in three are suffering from nervous disorders of one form or another, and noise is given as the greatest cause.

There is no other city in America, and probably none in the world, where noise is such a predominating feature of city life as in Chicago. There is no other city in the world with anything like an equal mileage of elevated railroads, and none where so great a number of trains invade the heart of a populated business district as in Chicago. There is no other city in the world with so many trunk lines of railway entering it as Chicago, and these railways invade almost every section of the city, and the rumble of trains, the screech of the whistle and the clanging of bells are never stilled. There is no other city in the world with a greater number of manufacturing establishments in it than Chicago, and each of these contribute their full quota of noise.

When one has lived with the noises of Chicago for a few years, and has felt their effect upon the nerves, one can readily realize the truth of the commissioner's statement that the city is populated by a nerve wrecked people.

WILLIAM A. PATTERSON.

SPORTS AND ATHLETICS

A trick that has not been turned many times in the history of baseball was turned by three veterans the other day in a game between the St. Louis and Washington teams in the American League. This was a triple steal, engineered by Padden, captain of the former team, Bodie and Sugden. Padden was on third, and by stealing home he scored the run that tied up the game, saving the Browns from defeat by the Senators. The contest stretched over 11 innings, and was finally called on account of darkness. For daring base running the Browns have some of the best and brainiest ball players in the country. High among these is that old-timer, Dick Padden. The tricks he can turn in a ball game to the advantage of the team he is playing with are innumerable. He is a source of constant worry when on base to the opposing nine, and especially the pitcher and catcher. Not only is base running is this wily old leader a terror to opposing teams, for he can turn just a few more tricks in fielding than is usual for any other man in the game to-day. Padden's brightest effort was probably the achievement in which three men stole bases at the same time, he himself stealing home, Sugden third, and Burkett second. Practically the only way such a feat could be engineered was for Padden to slide to the plate when the pitcher delivered the ball to the catcher, the other base-runners stealing while the backstop was muddled at all the plate with the Brown's captain. One of Padden's greatest plays, and one that might be developed to a greater degree than is generally seen in games of to-day, is stealing third base. In the art of purloining that bag he is a past master. As soon as he reaches second he leads far off the base in an effort to draw the throw of the catcher in an effort to nip him when he tries to slide back. Such a throw is just what he is looking for in order that the pole may be the catcher cuts loose, away he goes for third. With the lead he has acquired he nearly always gets away with the play. If, on the other hand, the backstop skips the ball to third to get him sliding in there, the wise old ball player slips back to second. Instead, and the throw has been useless, except in so far as it prevented his getting a notch nearer the home plate than he would otherwise.

The first Olympic golf tournament has been held, and Canada has the honor of capturing the first championship, George S. Lyon, the veteran Toronto cricketer and representative of the Lambton Golf and Country club, won the title on the Glen Echo links, at Philadelphia, by defeating H. Chandler Egan, of the Exmoor Country club, of Chicago, holder of the American national and western amateur titles, by 3 up, 2 to play. Lyon is 46 years of age, and probably the best all-around sportsman in Canada. Not only does he excel in golf and cricket, but he is also a good football, hockey and tennis player. He is of Scotch-Irish parentage, and was born near Ottawa. He first played golf in 1896, and two years later won the championship of Canada. This title he won also in 1900 and 1903. He holds the all-Canadian bowling record at cricket, 241 runs, not out, and he also is regarded as the best at bowling on the green in Canada. He has played in innumerable international matches, as well as the Toronto Golf club championship and the championship of Canada. He was defeated this year by T. Percy Taylor, of Montreal, by one hole, but he was not at his best at that time, suffering severe discomfort from hay fever. His victory of the Olympic championship was enthusiastically received at Toronto.

PLENTY OF TIME LEFT.

End of the World, Predicted Many Times, Said to Be 3,000,000,000 Years Off.

One of the earliest recorded failures to bring all creation to an ending was that of the old bishop of Hippo. When his scheme of annihilation did not connect in 395 A. D., the bishop went over his figures once more, and declared that he had been a century out of the way. This restored his standing as a prophet, and made it sure that he, at least, would not live for a second disappointment. His courage in readjusting dates has some down the ages without his discretion in setting the end far enough ahead to dodge the issue, says the New York World.

In the year 1000 all Christendom went into terror, and many persons died of fright because that year had been set as "the little apprehension" by a Scripture-crazed seer. In 1212 great populations crowded the Italian shores of the Mediterranean waiting for the sea to dry up, as had been promised by some crank. But they might wait to Jerusalem for the general perishing. In 1233 an Italian priest scared half of Europe out its wits by issuing a general warning to put on the last bridal robes. And so the direful foretellings went on until there came the plunge of Steiffel in the sixteenth century.

Steiffel was a mathematician and a friend of Luther. For 20 years, or some such matter, correspondents had listened to him, believing him to be "the seventh angel named in the Apocalypse," when he fixed upon Monday, October 3, 1533, as the day and eight o'clock in the morning as the hour, for the earth to go out of business. He was able to set a great crowd of people to pounding and groaning. Previously, at his urging, these people had separated themselves from most of their worldly goods. As the hour passed and destruction came not, the lamentations turned to denunciations. Herr Steiffel then got such a reputation as has not yet come even to a fashionable wedding party in a New York church.

It would take a tremendous book to follow up the later prophets of the world's end. There are few decades which have not contained one or more dates for the catastrophe. The Adventists have learned caution. They wait now hopefully, ready for the finish at "any old time." Yet in July 1830, Mr. Henry A. Chittenden, a former New York dry goods merchant, one of the believers of '42-44, sent out bulletins of belief that the very year was then upon us.

An Indiana farmer-prophet says the years 2000 is to be that of fate. Rev. A. B Simpson, noted for his ability to life church debts, favor 1934 A. D.. Other choice dates are 1915 and 1941. The prophets have a large variety of calculations on hand, and their motto is "We try to please."

As a rule predictions of a final catastrophe in matter are based on individual readings of the Scriptures. Real scientists first occasionally—and usually by request—with the possibilities of planetary collisions, consuming solar fires and exhaustion of atmosphere. M. Flammarion waves awful contingencies into delightfully silvery romances. But there are always waiting groups of unfortunates ready to take everything seriously. Even the new North Abingdon circular writer may catch some of these.

Pending other arrangements for their personal comfort in the premises, all who have an uncertain faith in the stability of the earth are urged to consider the view presented not long ago to the American Association for the Advancement *of Science, that it is 3,000,000,-*000 of years before the end. So may we all have time to eat drink and be merry, and yet preserve a proper diligence.

OLD BELIEFS ABOUT HONEY

It Was Supposed to Be of Celestial Origin and a Specific for Human Ills.

Many quaint delusions prevailed in olden times about everything relating to the bee and honey. The source and composition of honey were subjects for many ingenuous speculations.

Belief in the celestial origin of honey runs through all the old treatises on apiculture, from Virgil down. It was supposed to be a kind of manna from Heaven, and its quality depended greatly on the favorable or unfavorable juxtaposition of the stars at the time of its descent.

The existence in each hive of one bee much larger than all the others was generally recognized, but it was believed to be merely a ruler or king over the rest. That this large bee was actually the queen of the whole colony never seemed to have occurred to any one until recent times.

The situation of the bee hive was in old times a matter of importance. It was placed always on the south side of a stream of water and never in a place where there was a echo, for an echo was held to be injurious to bees.

Honey appears to have been held in extraordinary favor as a universal specific for human ills. It was largely re*commended as a* remedy for

If dead bees were dried, pounded and worked up into a thick paste with the honey, its hair producing capabilities were much enhanced. For weak eyes it was recommended to take a handful of the heads of bees, burn them and mingle with the honey gathered in the dog days.

The eyes were anointed liberally with the mixture, and clearness of vision was the supposed reward.

QUEER ROYAL VISITOR

ENGLAND ENTERTAINS A DUSKY AFRICAN MONARCH.

The Alake of Abeokuta Is an Interesting Personage from the West Coast—Has Proven Himself a Progressive Ruler.

England is called upon to entertain many queer guests because of the wide range of her colonial possessions and subjects, but none have been more interesting that the Alake of Abeokuta, and his wives, who recently visited King Edward.

The territory of which the alake is the principal ruling chief is comprised within the Protectorate of Lagos, on the west coast of Africa. It is spoken of as the province of Abeokuta, or as the territory of the Egbas, the most enterprising, active and energetic division of the Yoruba race. In number they exceed a quarter of a million. The capital of the province is the town of Abeokuta, which is situated on the river Ogun, some 60 miles from Lagos by railway. The alake's capital has thus both water and rail communication with the port of Lagos. A large number of the 60,000 or 70,000 people that live in Abeokuta are engaged in trade.

The alake and his people possess some 6,000 or 8,000 square miles of the most fertile and productive soil in West Africa. From several of the higher points on the undulating districts traversed by the railway, acres of square miles of forest, composed chiefly of palm trees, may be seen stretching away to the horizon on each side. The palm tree is indigenous, and flourishes here in splendid luxuriance, yielding a perennial never-failing crop, from which the palm kernal and palm oil of commerce are obtained through the toil and industry of the natives.

The whole of this rich and valuable country belongs exclusively to the alake and his people. The king's government recognizes the absolute proprietary rights to the soil of the native owners, and the laws and customs of Egba prohibit the alienation of land. The province possesses no minerals, unless, perhaps, some apparently unimportant deposits of lignite. No gold-bearing stratum has been proved to exist. It is not one of the great timber-producing districts. The farmers of Abeokuta are, however, both enterprising and intelligent, and they have entered into the cultivation of cotton with remarkable spirit, so that at present there is good reason to expect that this industry will become one of great importance in this province.

The alake came to England to do homage to his royal protector, whom he claims as his king and sovereign. The king's protection is to the alake and his people no empty form. Up to only a few years ago the town of Abeokuta was surrounded by the works of defence, the making and the maintenance of which must have cost much in time and labor. The wealth of the district was an irresistible temptation to strong neighbors, such as Dahomey, for example, which endeavored to overcome Abeokuta. The Egbas showed that they could fight well. But what the ultimate issue would have been but for European intervention, it is impossible to say.

The alake is a man of middle age, of strictly temperate habits, strong in mind and body. He has completely set aside the usage of his country, which required that a great and crowned chief should not proceed beyond the precincts of his own backyard. He visits all parts of his province to direct and encourage the making of roads, the extension and improvements of agriculture, and to see personally to matters of administration. He has a duly appointed council, in which the chief men of the Egbas have seats. Of this council the alake himself is the president and moving spirit.

The alake is a reformer, and therefore he has many difficulties to face among people by very conservative as the Yorubas. Naturally some of his beliefs and people think he goes too fast; whilst others, especially the younger men, think he proceeds too slowly. His devotion to his country and people are, however, so apparent to all, that this gives him great power, combined with his superior intelligence and strength of purpose. Recently the alake has had the finances of his province put on a sound basis. Regular estimates of revenue and expenditure have been prepared and passed by his council, and have been approved by the secretary of state.

BIRDS IN THE WINTER

The Cold Weather Traits of Our Feathered Friends.

Hunger Forces Them to Forget Much of Their Summer Shyness—Interesting Habits of the Ruffed Grouse in the Snow.

Those of us who had established bird restaurants on our premises, were well patronized during the cold weather of last week. The deep snow had covered not only the ground, but the low-growing weeds, shutting off the food supply of many species, while zero weather made all appetites more keen than usual. Most of us served free meals to juncos, chickadees and house sparrows, and some of us had more distinguished guests. Some had tree sparrows and nuthatches, and a number were visited by downy and a few by hairy woodpeckers. Even the blue jays controlled their suspicions long enough to allow them to get a share of the suet, and they got a large share.

My own favorite guest has been a little chickadee with one leg—at least he uses only one leg; he keeps the other so well tucked up under his feathers that it is seldom seen. Probably the frail member has been injured in some way, and its wise little owner is giving it every chance to get well. But the bird seems to suffer no inconvenience; he flies well, feeds, up and down, picks vigorously at the suet tied to a branch or nailed to a tray, or takes it in tiny bits on the wing as a hummingbird takes nectar from a flower. He can also cling to a twig upside down, as can nearly all his kind, and was our first customer, and perhaps it is this fact which leads him to believe that he has certain rights to maintain. At any rate, he seems to consider it his privilege to feed precisely as he chooses, and alone. If he is pecking at a certain lump of suet, no other chickadee is allowed on the same branch until he has finished, but if he arrives at the restaurant when another bird happens to be feeding, the first comer is made to retire and wait, until the one-legged chickadee has dined. In attending to the wants of to-day, these birds do not lose sight of to-morrow. After eating a few bits of suet, they usually whip off a larger piece, which they fly away with and store in the cracks of some apple trees which grow nearby.

But the birds which occupied most of my attention last week were the ruffed grouse. These hardy game birds do not seem to mind the severity of the weather, their snug, tight-fitting plumage protects them from the cold, and the horny fringes which grow on their toes at this season, enable them to walk with reasonable comfort in the snow when it is not too deep. It is interesting to follow the grouse trails, leading in and out of the undergrowth. If the snow is shallow, the footprints remind one of those made by a bantam hen, but if it is deeper the bird sinks in and its body makes a furrow as it walks along, while only a general idea of the shape and position of the individual footprints is to be obtained from the trail. But it may always be distinguished from the trail of any quadruped by its termination, if in no other way. No matter how far a grouse may walk, it will take wing at last, and usually the observer may see on the snow the imprints of the wing feathers, made at the first downward stroke of the wings. Moreover, at the end of the trail, there is usually a somewhat depressed place made by the body of the grouse as it stoops down before the upward spring.

But even more than in the trails was I interested in the sleeping quarters of the grouse during the very cold weather. As a rule, *these places may be lo*cated by the presence in the otherwise unbroken snow of two holes, a foot or more apart; one made by the bird as he plunged downward from the wing, and the other as he sprang upward and broke through the snow from beneath. Between the two holes there is a tunnel, and it is here that a grouse has passed the night.

He does not always plunge in from the wing, for I found a few places where he had walked in through the side of a drift. One evening I lay in a snow bank in a pine wood from sundown until dark, in the hope of seeing a grouse drop into the snow, but I did not see one, although I think I heard several. Next morning I went back to the wood, and while examining the snow, I found a single hole, indicating that a grouse had entered but had not yet come out. I approached cautiously and had almost reached the depression when with a mighty whirr a great brown grouse burst through the level surface of the snow by front of me and sped away through the pine woods, cleverly dodging the tree trunks. And looking down I saw two holes, nearly two feet apart, and on either side of the farther one was the clear impression of a grouse's wing.

A LEGAL VIEW OF POUTING.

Missouri Judge Holds That a Husband Who Sulks Gives Good Ground for Divorce.

In deciding for the woman plaintiff in a divorce case recently, Judge Shelton, of Lancaster, Mo., held that pouting on the part of a husband was ground for separation.

Mrs. Mary M. Smith, aged 30, testified that she was married to Evan A. Smith in Scotland county, Mo., June 14, 1900, and that after her husband failed to establish a law practice at St. Louis they returned to Scotland county, where they lived with her parents.

"During the past 18 months," said the plaintiff, "Mr. Smith spent nearly all the time pouting. He would get in a corner and sulk and speak to nobody.

"It became unendurable. I tried to be kind to him, but received no encouragement. Once he brightened up enough to tell me I had no sense. I couldn't love an iceberg, Judge, and just had to leave him."

Smith said he was quiet by nature, and not given to much talk. He added that he loved his wife, and never abused her.

The judge said the wife had a right to expect love making and caresses from her husband, and if she didn't receive them, she was justified in seeking a separation.

"A pouting woman is bad enough," the court said, aside, after leaving the bench, "but a pouting man is the limit of intolerance, and I don't believe the good Lord ever expected any woman to put up with such a creature. If she can, her wings are due."

PULLED GIRL FROM TRAIN.

"Why, Dick, You Love Me," Exclaimed Miss Chicago as She Regained Her Feet.

There was a remarkable scene at the St. Lazarre railway station, at Paris, the other day, that ended in a rapturous hug and kiss on the part of a young man and an American girl.

Just as the train for Cherbourg was pulling out the young man ran up to the last car, at the door of a compartment of which a pretty blond girl, stylishly gowned, her face wreathed in smiles.

"Won't you say good-by to me?" cried the young man.

"Gladly, my boy," replied the girl, in a shrill tenor.

She held her hand out of the open window and the man grasped it as he ran alongside of the moving train. With a powerful grip he pulled her out on the platform, and they rolled over two or three times. The girl got up in tears and indignation. Then she got a look at the swain and saw something in his eyes.

"Why, Dick, you love me!" she exclaimed, gleefully, and she tumbled into his arms with all the emphasis in her. That ended the episode as far as the public was concerned, for the twain disappeared in a waiting carriage, and there is reason to believe that there will soon be work for a parson in their behalf. According to the New York World, the girl is said to be one of Chicago's fairest.

Stories in Oriental Rugs.

Real Turkish and Persian rugs have interwoven in their meshes characters that are not only legible, but are capable of translation by those familiar with the Arabic tongue. These inscriptions are usually worked round the borders of the rugs in such a manner as to make them easily distinguishable by the expert.

GEORGE B. SMITH'S LECTURE ON INDIA

TELLS OF THE PEOPLE AND OF THE WORK IN THAT COUNTRY.

George Benton Smith, who has been supported by the Y. M. C. A. at Madras, India, for the last year, delivered an interesting lecture on the subject of his work in India, at the Y. M. C. A. Hall Saturday evening. The lecture was illustrated by stereopticon views taken by the speaker, in and around Madras.

Mr. Smith spoke more of the people of India, than of the country, referring to the caste system of the Indabitants, and citing incidents of the work done by the Y. M. C. A. in India. Being the largest Christian organization in India, the Y. M. C. A. does the greatest amount of good among the heathen there, and the work though involving peril, is decidedly gratifying on account of the splendid results.

Talked on Insecticides.

North Plainfield sent a good-sized delegation to the meeting of the Somerset County Board of Agriculture, held Saturday afternoon at Somerville. The gathering was addressed by Professor John C. Smith, State entomologist, who spoke on insecticides, dwelling on the methods used for killing off the San Jose scale. Afterwards he answered many queries relating to the subject.

Democratic Club's Trip.

The North Plainfield Democratic Club will make a trip to Somerville on the 25th inst., where the gubernatorial candidate, Charles C. Black, is to speak. Those who desire to visit the county seat on that evening, must leave their names at headquarters, or with Robert Trewin, next door to the club rooms, any evening this week. Teams will be issued to all those who desire to attend.

No Game Saturday.

Owing to the fact that only three Westfield players showed up for the game with the Orange Field Club, Saturday afternoon, the local eleven claimed the game by default.

Committee on Class Pins.

Miss Anna Runyon, Miss Iona Totten and Howard Lapsley have been appointed as the committee to choose the class pins for the class of 1905 at the Plainfield High School.

AMUSEMENTS.

The fourth week of George Ade's pictorial comedy, "The College Widow," began Monday night. Since the opening, the capacity of the Garden Theatre has been tested at every performance and Henry W. Savage's tenancy of the house has opened under the most auspicious circumstances. In the quaint characters of interest—types that we all know—Mr. Ade has struck the keynote of popular approval and "The College Widow" will probably continue her uninterrupted sway all season. Dorothy Tennant as the "widow", Frederick Truesdell as Billy, Gertrude Quinlan as the "popular waitress," Edwin Holt as Hiram Bolton and Frederick Burton as "Bob" Hicks and others have scored individual hits.

At the American Theatre Monday evening M. F. Caselles' company of French actors opened an engagement, previous to a winter season in New Orleans, in Aniest Bourgois' and Paul Feval's drama "LeBoeuf," well known to old theatregoers as "The Duke's Motto," and in which the late Charles Fechter, as Lagadere, and Charlotte Leclerq scored great triumphs years ago. The production since was like a voice of the past. It was a well pleased audience, and one warm in its welcome, that greeted the players. The applause was frequent. The most interest centred in the performance of M. Jean Dulac, who comes to America with the reputation of a success in prominent Paris theatres. He played Lagadere. Interest attached, too, to Mme. Delphine Renot, who was chosen by Sardou to play in "Thermidor," and who took the leading feminine role last evening, that of Blanche Gaytan. Mme. Renot gave an excellent, strong and dignified portrayal of Blanche and won deserved plaudits. Of the remaining players, MM. Breant, Cosses and Raymond, and especially M. Darban, were the best. The company is a capable and a great one. It is so well trained as to make the performance a smooth and finished one.

A well constructed and delightful study of human nature close to the soil is "The Harvester," in which Otis Skinner made his first appearance as the Lyric Theatre Monday evening. It is a play that will give much pleasure to other thankful and educated theatregoers. Whether it has the elements necessary for what is known as a popular success is a question. The play was adapted by Charles M. Skinner for his brother's use from the successful French play, "Le Chemineau," by Jean Richepin. The adaptation has been cleverly made. Mr. Skinner has admirably preserved the atmosphere of the harvest time and the farm. The dialogue is remarkable for its crispness and forcibleness. As the gypsy "Harvester," Mr. Skinner, finished actor that he is, added still another laurel to his already well filled wreath. He caught the spirit of the part perfectly, was debonair, care free, reckless and big hearted, without once striking a false note. Fortunately, Mr. Skinner was supported by a company uniformly excellent. Miss Lizzie Hudson Collier was an effective and capable Toinette, and J. M. Colville gave a remarkably good impersonation of the difficult role of the painted Francois—not a pleasant character to watch on the stage, by the way, but still necessary to the story. Barring an inclination to drawl, Miss Maud Darbin made a charming love-sick girl.

MISS LILLIAN HOPE THE BRIDE OF A. F. OSMUN

PLAINFIELD GIRL BECOMES THE WIFE OF A DUNELLENITE.

Mrs. C. B. Hope, of this city, announces the marriage of her daughter, Miss Lillian Catherine Hope, to Alfred F. Osmun, of Dunellen. The ceremony was performed Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the home of the groom's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Nelson, of Dunellen.

The couple was unattended and only the immediate relatives were present. The groom is an employe of Smith, Watkins & Co., a wholesale harness and saddlery firm of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Osmun will shortly make their home in New York.

The bride was employed for some time as bookkeeper and cashier at F. W. Dunn's grocery store, corner of Park and North avenues, and both she and her husband are well-known here.

Seven Days for Traynor.

For his participation in a disturbance which took place a week ago, John Traynor, of this city, was fined $10 or seven days in Recorder Doud's court Saturday night. He took the seven days as the guest of Chief Marshal Weiss.

Mr. Clay at Scopus.

George H. Clay, of this city, president of the Parker Independent Club, was a member of a delegation which visited Judge Alton B. Parker at his home in Scopus, N. Y., Saturday.

OURS IS A "WORLD POWER."

The United States Has Not Recently Attained That Distinction.

"Ours is a world power, and as such it must be maintained, but I deny that it is at all recently that the United States has attained that eminence. Our country became a world power over a century ago, when, having thrown off foreign domination, the people established a free government, the source of whose authority sprung, and was continuously to proceed, from the will of the people themselves. It grew as a world power as its sturdy citizens, to whose natural increase were added immigrants from the old world seeking to obtain here the liberty and prosperity denied them in their own countries, spread over the face of the land, reduced the prairies and forests to cultivation, built cities, constructed highways and railroads, till now a nation which at the formation of the government numbered only three millions in population, has become eighty millions, and from ocean to ocean and the lakes to the gulf, the country is the abode of a free and prosperous people, advanced in the highest degree in the learning and arts of civilization. It is the liberty, the advancement and the prosperity of its citizens, not any career of conquest, that make the country a world power. This condition we owe to the bounty of Providence, unfolded in the great natural resources of the country, to the wisdom of our fathers, manifested in the form of government established by them, to the energy, industry, moral character and law-abiding spirit of the people themselves." [From Judge Parker's speech of acceptance.]

REPUBLICAN EXTRAVAGANCE.

The extravagance of the present administration is a difficult matter for its apologists to explain. First, there is the deficit for the fiscal year 1893-'4 of over $41,000,000 staring them in the face, which has reduced the available cash balance in the United States Treasury to the zero point, so that Secretary Shaw will probably have to again call on the banks for another installment of the cash they hold and on which they pay no interest. It is all very well to call the payments for the Panama Canal an "extraordinary" expenditure and so excuse present conditions. There are other expenses that this administration has piled up that are equally extraordinary that no excuses can palliate or gloss over.

Take the expenditures for the year before the war with Spain, when the Democrats were in power and the appropriations made by the Republicans for the present year, and the extravagance of the present administration is at once apparent.

	1896-'7.	1903-'4.
Civil and miscellaneous.	$90,000,000	$132,000,000
War Department.....	40,000,000	110,000,000
Navy Department.....	34,000,000	103,000,000
Total.....	$172,000,000	$345,000,000

This makes $177,000,000 more this year than in 1896—more than double as much. What excuse can the Republican apologists offer for such a vast increase, and how do they propose to further tax the people to support such extravagance?

HEROISM AND LOVE OF COUNTRY.

"The Government of the United States was organized solely for the people of the United States. While it was contemplated that this country should become a refuge for the oppressed of every land, who might be fit to discharge the duties of our citizenship, and while we have always sympathized with the people of every nation in their struggles for self-government, the government was not created for a career of political or civilizing evangelization in foreign countries or among alien races. The most efficient work we can do in uplifting the people of other countries is by the presentation of a happy, prosperous, self-governing nation as an ideal to be emulated, a model to be followed. The general occupation of our citizens in the arts of peace, or the absence of large military armaments, tends to impair neither patriotism nor physical courage, and for the truth of this I refer the young men of to-day to the history of the Civil War. For fifty years, with the exception of the war with Mexico, this country had been at peace, with a standing army most of the time of less than ten thousand men. He who thinks that the nation had grown effeminate during that period should read the casualty rolls of the armies on either side at Shiloh, Antietam, Fredericksburg and Gettysburg, at Stone River and Chickamauga. I would be the last man to pluck a single laurel from the crown of any one of the military heroes to whom this country owes so much, but I insist that their most heroic deeds proceeded infinitely more from devotion to the country than from martial spirit." [From Judge Parker's speech of acceptance.]

POLICE PURSUE TRAMPS

First Have An Encounter With Detective Laverett.

FUSILADE OF SHOTS

New Jersey Central Officer Narrowly Escapes Being Felled by a Bullet.

In a fusilade of bullets exchanged between himself and a gang of seven tramps which he came upon in the swamp between Fanwood and Gracelland, early Friday afternoon, Michael Laverati, a New Jersey Central detective, was all but felled by one of the shots. It came from a pistol in the hands of Frank Ides, of Elizabeth, lately released from the State Reformatory, and skipped across his chest, then passed through his coat sleeve, barely grazing the skin. Although two of the gang continued to fire at him his narrow escape had no deterrent effect upon Laverati and he continued pursuing the men until his own supply of cartridges gave out.

He then hurried to Fanwood and telephoned to this city and Westfield for assistance. Acting Chief Fredericksen hurriedly responded and Patrolmen O'Keefe and Saffron, the reserves, quickly followed. Although they were on the scene in a very short time, the gang had scattered and escaped separately, evidently getting on passing trains. Four west bound freights were stopped at the North Avenue station but the tramps upon them were not the ones wanted. The local police were joined by Chief O'Neil, of Westfield, and Constables Charles and Augustus Sheelen, of Scotch Plains, and they scoured the woods in the vicinity all the afternoon but without success.

Laverati is an Italian who wandered up and down the New Jersey Central line and by mingling with tramps learns the plans of different gangs. He has been at it so long that most of them can recognize him at great distance and did so when the case yesterday when he noticed a crowd about a fire in the Gracelland swamp. He sauntered toward them when a man he saw was Ides, jumped up suddenly and with a oath discharged it at him point blank. The bullet went wide of its mark but another which followed was the one which all but laid him low. Laverati drew his own weapon and charged the crowd but though they all fled, Ides and a companion continued shooting at him over their shoulders. He noticed this last pair on to a new drove and in case that seemed to be heavy and at once realized that he had committed a robbery.

Finding that pursuit was useless, he retraced his steps to the abandoned camp and there found a quantity of new clothing, evidently taken recently from a store. Inferentially the gang had been dividing it between them when they were surprised by Laverati and the fact that they had stolen goods in their possession led to their hurrying away. The leader Ides is well known to police throughout the county and is said to be a desperate character.

MIANTONOMOH TRIBE HAS AN ANNIVERSARY

LOCAL RED MEN COMPLETE THE FIFTEENTH YEAR OF ORGANIZATION.

Miantonomoh tribe, I. O. R. M., celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of its organization, Friday night, by giving an entertainment and dance in its rooms. The programme in the former part was as follows: Music by Eugene O'Reilly's orchestra, speeches by members of the Great Council, piano selections by Miss May Ardern, recitations by Miss Josephine Murphy; soprano solos by Mrs. A. J. Stiglitz and violin selections by David Dreier.

A sketch of the tribe's career was given and Past Sachem Rowcorn in which he stated that it began with 44 members and now has 196. Its first great sachem was the late Norman C. Magee and at present the office is held by Samuel Montross. Two years ago it absorbed Panghoanghnanginque tribe, of this city, which brought thirty members.

Candidate Ineligible.

Shortly after the Somerset County Republican county convention was held at Somerville, it was learned that, under the constitution, Dr. C. R. P. Fisher was ineligible to a renomination for coroner, and accordingly the committee on vacancies has selected Dr. William H. Long, Jr., of Somerville, in his stead for the ticket.

Taking Time by the Forelock.

Preparatory to laying the permanent brick pavement on Watchung avenue, Street Commission A. G. Gavett is having the water and gas connections made to the curb in front of the unoccupied property. This will prevent tearing up the street at some future time.

LITERARY.

There is no season of the American year which is not beautiful, yet were it put to the vote of all manner of men, perhaps October would be called the most beautiful month of the entire year, even more beautiful in its ripeness than is the vernal month of May, clad on as it may be with tender greens. The flame of the maples, the yellow and brown of soberer leaves, the touch of high-colored berries or wild fruits of the woods—all these things the sportsman knows, just as he knows the melancholy but fascinating monotony of the frost-struck marshes where the wild fowl come. He knows October as a month beautiful and delectable. — "Field and Stream" for October.

Men whose lives have been spent in the care of domestic birds tell me that there are none more nervous than the duck. Although it is apparently the easy-going, dull and ponderous creature, the duck is said to be the most easily excited of all the feathered ones which comprised so much of our food supply. And this is accounted for by the fact that a duck is a light sleeper. It never retires for rest until midnight, and by 4 o'clock or 5 it is out again ready to begin another day. If you enter a chicken-coop between midnight and morning the occupants, huddled together on their roosts, will be steeped in slumber. But invade a duck-coop at the same hour and there will arise as soon a jargon of protestations. And none of the domestic birds is as easily disturbed as the duck. The appearance of anything unusual will set it and its comrades all a-flutter and interfere seriously with their egg-laying. Unlike chickens or pigeons, the duck does not require a nest, but is satisfied to lay its eggs on the flat ground.—The Era Magazine for October.

A striking feature of the Sunset Magazine for October is a three-page color insert. It is from a drawing by Edward Cucuel, and represents a scene on the veranda of the hotel at Paso Robles, Hot Springs, during the army manoeuvres at Camp Atascadero, California. Among the well-known men represented are Major-General MacArthur, Governor George C. Pardee, of California, General T. H. Goodman, Colonel S. F. Jocelyn, Colonel W. S. Patten, Major W. P. Duvall and Major C. E. Gillette. It is a notable and attractive feature of a rapidly growing magazine.

LAUNCH BATTLESHIP NEW JERSEY NOV. 10

GOVERNOR'S DAUGHTER TO CHRISTEN THE BIG VESSEL.

Plans for launching the battle-ship New Jersey, which has been constructed at the yards of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, at Quincy, Mass., have been made. The vessel will be sent into the water Thursday, Nov. 10.

The Navy Department, to which the matter was referred by the company, has selected Mrs. William B. Kinney, of Newark, N. Y., daughter of Gov. Murphy, to do the christening.

Arrangements for the launch are being made by the officials of the Navy Department, and these include the participation in the exercises of a large number of Jerseymen, including the Governor and other officials.

It is likely the Governor-elect, who will have been chosen the Tuesday before, be H. Stokes or Black, will be in the party.

The Governor knew nothing of the choice of Mrs. Kinney until the arrangements had been decided on.

Birthday Party.

On the occasion of his sixteenth birthday, a delightful party was given to William Briggs, of Albert street, Saturday evening. About twenty of his friends were present, and a pleasant evening was spent with games and music. Among those present were Josephine Berrell, Gladys Burk, Mary Dunham, Marian Pierson, Irine Dunham, Lillian Cronkite, Harriet Bryan, Katherine Bryan and Jerry Manning, Ralph Manning, Martin, Roy Woodhull, Harold Underhill, Gerrit Williams, Monroe Long, Ralph Taylor and Chester Briggs.

A November Wedding.

Williiam De La Anderson, of New York, whose summer home is near Washington Rock, will be married to Miss Amy Gordon Olyphant, November 19. His brother, Alfred Fliszoy Anderson, will be one of the seven ushers.

George H. Utter.

The native of New Jersey who has been nominated for Governor by the Republicans of Rhode Island is also its editor. That's a combination that ought to insure his election in such a "right little, right little" State.—Newark News.

Engagement Announced.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Mrs. Lucy Dunham-Tomlinson, of East Sixth street, and Philip S. Sutfen, of Sycamore avenue, North Plainfield.

LITERARY.

The leading chapters of the Architectural Record Magazine for October are devoted to descriptions and illustrations of the various rooms in a modern American house. The October number is, therefore, called "The Household Number." The general subject is treated under the head of "American Residences of Today," and, first, the dwellings of the Middle West are considered, and a very appreciative and competent chapter is assigned to them. Next, the hall and stairs are discussed. The growth and development of the hall in an American house has been one of the curious things. Previous to 1800 it was in nearly every case an entry merely, but it has since become in many cases a recognized sitting-room. Illustrations of some beautiful halls are given, examples being taken from the houses of Clarence W. Bowen at New York, Henry H. Rogers at Fairhaven, Mass., Clarence Mackay at Roslyn, L. I., A. F. Holden at Cleveland, O., and others.

Belmont Restaurant Sold.

The Belmont restaurant on North avenue, formerly McVey's, which has been conducted lately by Henry Hoffman, has been sold to John H. McVey. It has been closed temporarily, but is to be reopened within a short time. It is understood that Mrs. F. A. Van Nest is negotiating for the lease.

Political Joker.

Some wag of a politician has had cards printed and distributed about the streets which have caused no little amusement. On one side it reads:

"If James F. Buckle is elected—" and on the other:

"Pat Kiely will be Mayor."

So far the identity of the joker has remained concealed.

GIANTS, 7; PLAINFIELD, 5

New York Nationals Win Out by a Close Score.

"MATTY'S" GREAT WORK

Though Lacking American Leaguers P. A. C. Makes a Good Showing.

Despite the fact that the New York American League players failed to appear with the Plainfield A. C. team on Saturday against the New York Nationals, as they promised to do, the locals gave the Giants one of the best contests in the exhibition series, although losing by a score of seven to five. There are many fans who say that the champions did not half try and that they just fooled with the Plainfield team. However, a good single in the ninth inning, when Plainfield had two men on base, would have tied the score.

Louis Wiltse pitched a clever game for the locals, allowing but one hit up to the fifth inning, and shutting the Giants out until the seventh. In the latter inning, the New Yorks made six hits, including two two baggers. Plainfield had a couple of chances to shut off this hitting, but errors spoiled them.

Several changes were necessary on the Plainfield team. Quick fatigued below par, and Maloy after arriving in town, never put in an appearance until after the game was started and then he did not come prepared to play. Alberts played right field and "Pop" Dietrich covered second base, while Bamford was in center field. Donovon, drafted this year by the Cleveland Americans, played third. All things considered the team played creditably.

Mathewson gave a good exhibition of pitching, although at times he simply tossed the ball up. He was touched for fourteen hits, but struck out fourteen men. His opponents had little trouble hitting him, yet at critical times, when it looked like runs, he quickly retired the side.

Wiltse and Robinson led in batting, each making three hits, while Alberts, Oregan and Farmer each made two hits. Dietrich and Hartman were the only two who failed to get a hit. Dietrich and Hartman were the only two who failed to get a hit. The home team made two pretty double plays, one in the second and one in the ninth inning.

It was the first appearance of the Giants here and the large crowd enjoyed the exhibition, even though there was a feeling that the home team could not win from the big leaguers. A notable feature of the contest was the presence of many old-time cranks who were active in 1892, when Somerville and Plainfield were great rivals. With Saturday's contest the local baseball season closed.

Hunt Club's Run.

The regular weekly hunt of the Watchung Hunt Club was held Saturday afternoon, the party starting from the old golf course. The course covered several miles and was in every way a success. There were about twenty who attended the hunt.

DINNER IN HONOR OF MR. AND MRS. HAWKINS

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM E. LOWE, OF PARK AVENUE, AS HOSTS.

Mr. and Mrs. William Ebbet Lowe, of Park avenue, gave a dinner at their home, Saturday evening, for the purpose of introducing Mr. and Mrs. G. Frederick Hawkins, of East Front street. Eighteen guests were in attendance. Mrs. Hawkins was formerly Miss Ely, of New York, and is a niece of Mrs. Lowe.

During the dinner, Henry Lowe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lowe, formally announced the engagement of his sister, Miss Charlotte Frances, to Frederick E. Shepard, of New York, nephew of E. F. Shepard. Mr. Shepard is connected with the New York offices of the General Electric Company.

Those who were present at the dinner were Mr. and Mrs. Lowe, Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Waring, the Misses May and Florence Waring, Charles Dupee, Thomas Van-Boskerck, Miss Lulu Holly, Miss Laura Post, of Summit; Harold Woodruff and Miss Woodruff, of New York; Augustus D. Shepard, Jr., Henry Lowe, Miss Charlotte Frances Lowe and Frederick E. Shepard.

CHURCH WOMEN AID IN SECURING EDUCATION

TEA AND SALE AT SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST CHURCH.

For the purpose of raising funds with which to assist Miss Wilson, of Alabama, while she is securing an education at Alfred University, a tea and sale of fancy articles were held in the parlors of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, Sunday afternoon, from 3 to 6 o'clock.

The affair was in charge of Dr. Martha Stillman, Miss Lucie Dunham, Miss Ida Randolph and Mrs. Ira N. West. During the afternoon a number were present and liberal patronage was accorded, making the affair a success. There were several fancy tables, in charge of the members of the committee, and the useful and fancy articles were readily purchased in support of such a worthy cause.

DUNELLEN DEFEATED.

Elizabeth Eleven Won by the Score of Six to Nothing Saturday.

The Edward Clark Club football team, of Elizabeth, played its first game on its grounds Saturday afternoon and defeated the Dunellen A. C. 6 to 0. The home team was considerably the heavier and made repeated gains through the line for 5 to 7 yards at a time, but lost its hold on the ball at critical points.

The lineup:

Score at end of first half—6 to 0. Final score—6 to 0. Touchdown—Chesney. Goal from touchdown—Woodey. Time of halves—20m. and 15m. Referee—Mat MacAdams. Umpire—L. T. Churchill. Linesman—A. F. Shaffer and A. H. Springer.

One Month for Robbery.

In the Somerset County Criminal Courts at Somerville, Saturday, Judge Schenck sentenced Walter P. Galloway, formerly of Union county, to one month in the county jail. Galloway was arrested for robbing a young man at Bernardsville while he slept, but as he had been in jail a long time awaiting a chance to be arraigned, and pleaded guilty the court let him off with a light sentence for his first offense.

Chapel Fund Collections.

The second collection for the chapel fund will be received at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church on Sunday. At the offering in May for the support of the chapels there was received $5,800. To carry on this work in the chapels there will be needed about $1,700 additional, which will be asked for, either by gift or pledge.

B. and L. Stock Sold.

Ninety-one shares of stock was sold at the semi-annual meeting of the Home Building and Loan Association, held Monday, and $5,000 was lent in new loans. The association is very prosperous, much to the gratification of the members.

ESCAPE FROM CO. JAIL

Three Prisoners Walk Out of Somerset County's Lockup.

TWO ARE RECAPTURED

"Geese" Niles and His Two Pals Leave the County "Boarding House" Without Permission.

Three prisoners ran away from the Somerset County Jail at Somerville at 7:20 o'clock Sunday morning while waiting for their breakfast. Two of them were captured half an hour later by a posse of citizens and farmers, but the third is still free. He is "Geese" Niles, an ex-convict who, it is charged, tried to hold up a Jersey Central freight train all by himself last week.

The Somerset Jail is like a family boarding-house, save that all the guests have their meals served in their rooms. John Anderson, the Deputy Sheriff, is the waiter, and he carries two loaded revolvers on each tray of his wife's cooking.

Mrs. Anderson prepared a Sunday breakfast in the morning and John, with an unusual number of boarders to feed, had to make two trips, because he couldn't carry enough for all on one tray.

"Geese" Niles, Sylvanus Carkhuff and William Ashton were the three he selected for the second table. The Deputy Sheriff walter didn't know that the savor of his wife's cooking, half an hour before, had soared the three away from a hole they were trying to dig through the wall at the end of the corridor, or he wouldn't have left the outer gate open. There was a lock on the inner one, and John disappeared into the kitchen.

It didn't take "Geese" Niles a minute to pick the old-fashioned lock with a button-hook, and he and his two "pals" just walked out. When they got to the yard they ran, and Mrs. Anderson, from the kitchen window, saw them. Anderson made a flying leap for the open door, slammed it shut, and started after the three. But they had gained a lead of three blocks and were making for the railroad cut.

The people on the street followed the bare-headed, yelling Deputy Sheriff, and when they heard what the trouble was they formed themselves into a posse and took up the cry like a pack of hounds.

Away off in the distance appeared Policeman Henry Koch on an early morning spin on his bicycle. When he saw the howling posse chasing the three men, he joined in. The fugitives ran across the fields, but Koch made a detour and caught up with Niles and Ashton at the foot of Bertine street, in East Somerville. He cornered them at an embankment and shouted:

"I've got you; might as well stop and be good."

"Not yet," answered Niles, and he made a flying leap over the twenty-five foot embankment and sank to his knees in the mud of the creek.

"Stop or you are a dead man!" cried Koch from the top of the embankment, not daring to follow. Niles laughed and made off across the lowlands to the mountains. Koch was off duty and didn't have his revolver. Ashton surrendered to Koch without a word. Carpbuff made off across the fields, and the Deputy Sheriff and his posse chased him two miles and finally cornered him in a cornfield. Only a few men and boys stayed to the finish and the fugitive was too blown to give them a fight.

"I guess I'll go back and get my breakfast," said the fugitive with a grin, and the posse said they "reckoned" he would.

An inspection of the jail showed that the men had very nearly succeeded in cutting a hole through the corridor wall.

CLINTON RANDOLPH'S FUNERAL SUNDAY

TWO LOCAL MINISTERS TOOK PART IN THE OBSEQUIES.

Funeral services over the remains of Clinton F. Randolph were held in the First Baptist church Sunday afternoon, with a large gathering of relatives and friends in attendance. The services were in charge of Rev. Dr. J. Yorker, assisted by Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss.

Solos were rendered by Mrs. F. M. Ward and Miss Louella Harris, of the church choir. A profusion of floral tributes included many set pieces.

The interment was afterward made in Hillside cemetery.

Miss Charlotte Lowe to Wed.

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Charlotte F. Lowe, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Lowe, of Park avenue, and Fred M. Shepard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus D. Shepard, of "The Gables," Scotch Plains, was made Saturday.

CHIEF WEISS PLAYS HOST

Entertains Borough Officials at New Station Dedication.

AN ELABORATE SUPPER

Many Prominent Visitors Inspect the Reconstructed Building and Enjoy the Hospitality.

North Plainfield's mayor and councilmen, together with prominent residents and guests from this side of the brook, were entertained by Chief Marshal George Weiss last Monday, in honor of the police department's entrance to the new headquarters. The affair took place in the upper part of the station and though informal, marked the dedication of the borough's newest municipal building. The attendance was close to the 100 mark and every member was thoroughly pleased with the aspect and the treatment accorded them by the head of the bluecoated force.

The guests entered the building at the conclusion of the Good Government Club meeting across the street and were first shown about by Recorder Doud, Chief Weiss and members of the department. Every part of the structure was visited and as one delegation concluded the inspection, it was entertained with phonograph selections by Frank Schenck until the others were through. Adjournment to the upper part followed, where supper was in waiting, placed on long tables in the room which is to be used later as a dormitory. Chief Weiss had prepared an excellent array of eatables and a corps of competent waiters was in attendance to take care that no one was slighted.

Mayor Smalley and Recorder Doud were at the heads while others in the long rows were Councilmen Arnold, VanArsdale and Rumble, former Councilmen Emmons and Northorp, Chief Woolston and Lieutenant Campbell, of the fire department, former Mayor B. A. Hegeman, and many other prominent borough residents. From Plainfield there were President Tolles, of the Common Council, former President James F. Buckle, Councilman Frank Randolph, of the police board, City Judge William N. Runyon, George O. Stevens and others. Impromptu addresses were made by Mayor Smalley, Recorder Doud, Judge Runyon and Councilman VanArsdale. Chief Weiss was warmly complimented for his well planned preparation of the supper and the success with which the entire affair was attended.

From the station house, adjournment was made to the new engine house and the guests from the Plainfield side were shown through it. For many of them it was their first visit and they were greatly surprised with the completeness of the equipment and details. A pleasing feature of the occasion was the "ringing up" of the horses by Lieutenant Campbell and an exhibition of their intelligence broughs about by his training. In the end further adjournment was made to the rooms of the Good Government Club where the programme consisted with music and speeches under Mayor Smalley's supervision.

MANGANESE SAFE AWARDED GOLD MEDAL

HIGHEST PRIZE AT EXPOSITION FOR PLAINFIELD CONCERN.

For the excellence of its exhibits at the St. Louis Exposition, the Manganese Steel Safe Company, of this city, has been awarded a gold medal by the judges. Word of the decision has recently been made known to the officers, to whom it came as a surprise. Safe manufacturers from all over the world were in competition for the honor and the Plainfield firm had no suspicion that its display was being considered.

The Manganese company has two exhibits at the fair, one in the manufacturers' building and the other in the miners' building. The latter is the more extensive and includes some of the big vaults for which the firm enjoys a wide reputation.

Contesting Eccentric Woman's Will.

In the Somerset County Orphans' Court at Somerville, Saturday, the matter of caveat filed against the will of the late Miss Alleine Lord, the eccentric woman who pleaded poverty when alive and left a fortune aggregating $50,000, was taken up. D. Perry Lord, her only near relative, who claims she was of unsound mind when she made the document leaving all her property to the town, churches and charitable institutions, is represented by Major Dungan. H. E. Gaston, the executor, is the proponent. James L. Griggs appears for the Somerville Board of Commissioners, which is interested to the extent of the $1,000 left for the public drinking fountain. Judge Schenck took a little unimportant evidence and adjourned the hearing until November 15.

LOCAL GOLFERS BUSY

Hillside Course Thronged With Enthusiasts Saturday.

SEVERAL CONTESTS

Foregone Conclusion That Gus Faber Will Take Both Park Trophies—Detailed Scores.

The beautiful October weather on Saturday attracted a large number of golfers to the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club, and although the entries in the various events were comparatively small, the course was crowded through the afternoon. In the morning there was the final play for the Women's Handicap cup between Miss Margaret Goddard and Miss Edith Tracy. This was one of the best matches of the season and although Miss Goddard won, it was not until twenty holes were played that the match was decided. She won by a score of 1 up.

In the afternoon the clock golf contest for women attracted many players. Miss Margaret Holly was first with a score of twenty-four, and Miss Uhler, of Fanwood, finished second with a score of twenty-seven.

For the Golf Committee cup S. H. Patterson won first honors with a net score of 74, while D. H. Rowland with a net score of 76 and J. A. Tompkins with one of 77 finished second and third. These scores were posted: S. H. Patterson, 96, 22—74; D. H. Rowland, 88, 12—76; J. A. Tompkins, 88, 11—77; H. D. Hibbard, 86, 7—79; Dr. B. VanD. Hedges, 87, 8—79; W. L. Gleaney, 88, plus 3—84.

The point-winners for the Gaston cup were Henry L. Hall, 98, plus 1—94; S. H. Patterson, 96, 2—94; Harold Robert, 97, 0—97.

At there were put a limited number of contestants at the Park Golf Club, no scores were posted for the President's and Park Golf Club cups. It seems to be a foregone conclusion that Gus. W. Faber is the winner of both trophies. He has twenty-three points for the Park Golf Club cup and twenty points for the President's cup.

At the Westfield Golf Club on Saturday there was the first round match play for the club championship and good scores were the rule. The second round will be played on Saturday.

This was the result of Saturday's play.

R. I. Townley beat H. M. Knight, 5 up and 4 to go; Joseph Sherman, Jr., beat S. A. Trevvett, by default; J. A. Worth beat J. R. Edwards, 3 up and 2 to go; H. R. Davis beat R. H. Stern, 6 up and 4 to go; W. J. Bogert, Jr., beat H. W. Gladwin, 1 up; J. A. Woodward beat A. E. Keller, 6 up and 5 to go; Marshall Whitlock beat E. D. Floyd, 6 up and 4 to go; C. E. Halsted beat G. E. Crane, 8 up and 7 to go.

THREE TRACK EVENTS AT THE DRIVING PARK

A. C. BLAIR, J. H. GREEN AND N. B. SMALLEY THE LUCKY ONES.

The second of the matinee races under the management of Thomas Brantingham, took place at the driving park Saturday afternoon, and aside from the fact that many were attracted by the ball game was largely attended. Generally speaking the time was slow, all of the races falling below the standard.

There were three classes for trotters or pacers, in the first two of which there were but the starters. Five horses went out for the 2:35 class, this being the only race in which the three prizes were awarded. The prizes were a blanket for the winner, cooler and whip for the second and third places.

The affair was arranged by members of the Gentlemen's Club in charge of Mr. Wood, and was under the direct management of Mr. Brantingham. The judges were Edward Allen, W. A. Codington and J. W. Johnson. The following is the results of the races:

2:30 class—Won by A. C. Blair's "Rex;" second, "Glitters Lad," owned by J. H. Green. Time, 2:24 and 2:29.

2:35 class—Won by J. H. Green's "Fancy Spot;" second, D. C. Smalley's "Ned Davis." Time, 2:29½.

2:35 class—Won by N. B. Smalley's "Aiyuis;" second, Douglas Darby's "Sunday;" third, L. J. Wood's "Sadie Smith." Time, 2:28 and 2:28.

Valuable Pearl in a Clam.

In one of fifteen cents worth of clams which Edward L. Smith, of Park avenue, purchased from Fred Ivamy's market, Saturday, he found a pearl of unusual size and brilliancy. He took it to a local jeweler's and quickly exchange it for a twenty dollar bill. Pearls are frequently found in oysters but it is only at rare intervals that clams yield such treasure.

AUTO PARADE ROUTE

To Consume One Hour and a Half in Covering Course.

TO BE IN TWO DIVISIONS

Touring Cars to be Separated From the Runabouts—Saturday the Day.

Further plans for Plainfield's initial automobile parade were considered and made at a committee meeting last evening. The details are now practically in shape and but little remains to bring the automobile owners of the city and borough out in force to demonstrate the strength the sport has attained locally.

A committee composed of Dorsey Hyde, Dr. P. J. Zeglio and F. L. C. Martin, submitted the line of march The original route selected proved too long and it was amended to the satisfaction of all. Running at a pace from eight to ten miles an hour, it is expected that it will require an hour and a half to cover the route selected. It is as follows: Start from the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church out Crescent avenue to West Eighth street, to Grant avenue, to West Seventh street, to East Seventh street, countermarching at the intersection of Franklin place, to West Seventh street, to Plainfield avenue, to Stelle avenue, to Central avenue, to West Ninth street, to Park avenue, to North avenue, to Watchung avenue, to East Sixth street, to Central avenue, to West Front street, to East Front street, to Farragut road, to Mountain avenue, to Watchung avenue, to Jackson avenue, to Somerset street, to Craig place, to Grove street, to Prospect place, to Rockview avenue, countermarching at the start of Rockview terrace to Washington avenue, to Myrtle avenue, to Sycamore avenue, to Willow avenue, to Magnolia avenue, to Rockview avenue, to Mercer avenue, to Grove street and disband.

The cars will be divided into two divisions, one for touring cars and one for runabouts. These will be preceded by an auto-truck bearing the band. F. L. C. Martin, who has had long experience in conducting bicycle parades, was appointed marshal.

Personal invitations will be sent out to all the automobile owners in Plainfield and Plainfield those who are registered with the Secretary of State at Trenton. It does not mean, however, that other automobilists will not be welcome. The committee has tried to impress the fact that every car will be taken care of and gladly welcomed.

In speaking of the parade and its objects a member of the committee, said last evening at the close of the meeting:

"There seems to be a mistaken idea on the part of a number of Plainfield people that it will be necessary to decorate in order to parade. On the contrary, there will be no attempt at decoration. It is simply a gathering of all the automobiles of Plainfield and vicinity to promote more friendly relations and to give the people of this section of New Jersey some idea of the magnitude of the sport. It's going to be a good thing for the automobilists and for the town and every man who has an automobile make a special effort to be on hand Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. If the automobilists will stand together on this occasion it will be the means of arranging a similar affair on a more elaborate scale next season. Besides that it is going to mark Plainfield as the most progressive city in the automobiling circles of northern New Jersey."

Another meeting of the committee will be held this evening when final details will be arranged.

Teacher Finds Gallplayer's Watch.

Louis Wiltse, the baseball pitcher, who lost his gold watch a week ago Saturday when he played here for Plainfield A. C. against Hilasbeth, had the timepiece returned to him on Saturday. It was found by Miss Angell, the kindergarten teacher, and given to R. A. Mumford for Mr. Wiltse. She refused to take any reward.

"Christy" Mathewson, of the New York Nationals, will spend most of the winter with his wife in Plainfield.

READY TO PAVE STREET

Street Commissioner Prepared to Improve Watchung Ave.

AWAIT P. S. C.'S ACTION

Not to Interrupt Traffic—One Side of Thoroughfare to be Paved at a Time.

Street Commissioner A. J. Gavett received last week four carloads of vitrified brick to be used in paving Watchung avenues, between North avenue and Second street, and the brick is being placed on the avenue. The Public Service Corporation has been notified that the brick is here and it will be expected to commence its repair work at once. Before Mr. Gavett can commence the general work of paving the avenue, the trolley company will put new tracks and ties in to replace the old ones and after this work is done, then the paving will begin.

It is Mr. Gavett's idea to pave one side of the avenue at a time, so that traffic will not be interfered with. It will require some little time for the bricks to set before the pavement can be used for regular traffic and in doing one side at a time, the necessary time will be secured.

It will probably be some little time before Mr. Gavett can start the paving, as the work of changing the tracks and ties of putting in the concrete will require at least a couple of weeks. Mr. Gavett hopes that the trolley company will start its work at once so that the paving may be completed before real cold weather arrives.

The vitrified brick is considered one of the best pavements now in use and after much discussion of the subject, the street committee as well as the Common Council as a body decided in favor of it as against the wood pavement which is now being used with much success in several large cities.

There was some opposition here to the wood pavement, owing to the experience of the city several years ago when this kind of pavement was used in Park avenue. That was not a success and everyone was glad when the present macadam was substituted for it. However, the present style of wood pavement is much different from that used years ago. A different kind of wood is used and it is prepared specially for very hard wear, while one strong advantage in the wood over other kinds of pavement is that it is noiseless, and is easy on the feet of horses.

There is much to commend the brick, however, and those who have had experience with all kinds of pavement claim that it not only wears better than wood, but is easier to repair.

There is a sentiment among the Councilmen that after this pavement is laid in Watchung avenue, an effort should be made to extend the work a little at a time and thus give, at least the business section, a permanent pavement of this kind. It is believed that while it would be expensive at the start, it would more than pay for itself in the long run, besides it would do away with the constant repair work now necessary on macadam roads. For a place the size of Plainfield the macadam is considered one of the most expensive pavements known, it requiring a considerable sum to keep it in constant repair.

LAST RESPECTS PAID TO SAMUEL A. WALLACE

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD AT HOME OF HIS BROTHER-IN-LAW.

Many friends gained by long personal contact as a resident and others made in the business world, gathered at the home of H. Mulford Estil on Grove street, Wednesday afternoon, when funeral services were heldover the remains of his brother-in-law, Samuel A. Wallace. They were in charge of Rev. A. R. Fine, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, and were very simple in character. The floral tributes were profuse and included many large set pieces, one of them being from Amity lodge, F. and A. M., of Lambertville, which he joined in November, 1854.

The body was afterward interred in Hillside cemetery, the pall bearers being Theodore Runyon, M. C. Debbins, Fred Pope and J. Hervey Dunne, of this city; Judson Voorhees, of Cranford, and Robert Gale, of Baltimore, the latter having been his business partner for many years.

SMALLEY GETS VERDICT AGAINST THE PENNSYLVANIA

RAILROAD MUST PAY HIM $700 FOR INJURIES RECEIVED AT A CROSSING.

For the shock and general shaking-up which he received in a grade crossing accident at Rahway two years ago, Walter G. Smalley, of the borough, was awarded $700 in his suit against the Pennsylvania Railroad, Oct. 13. The verdict was arrived at by the jury after it had been out but twenty minutes. The amount asked for when suit was instituted was $1,000 and the award was satisfactory to his counsel, Assemblyman Swackhamer. It is understood the railroad will let it stand.

Smalley was driving across the Pennsylvania tracks on Park avenue, Rahway, when an engine suddenly bore down upon him. The rig was partially demolished and Smalley was pitched out upon his head, the shock disabling him for several weeks. In his suit he testified that the gates were up when he drove upon the tracks and that he was given no warning of any kind. His escape from death was considered miraculous as the train which struck the rig was a fast express.

SHE SECURES DIVORCE.

Mrs. Grace M. Tomlinson, of North Plainfield, Granted Final Decree.

Mrs. Grace M. Tomlinson, of North Plainfield, has been granted a decree of divorce from her husband, Henry S. Tomlinson on the ground of desertion. Mrs. Tomlinson's case was conducted by Fred G. Hyer, Esq., of Rahway. The testimony which was very voluminous was taken before John H. VanWinkle, Esq., special master in chancery of this city, to whom the matter was referred by the Chancellor.

The Special Master advised a decree and Chancellor Magie granted the divorce prayed for in the petition.

CENTRAL'S COAL STATION.

Road Spending Big Sum at Elizabeth on Docks.

The Central Railroad Company of New Jersey has just started to reconstruct its entire docking system along the Staten Island Sound at Elizabeth. The New Jersey Dry Dock and Navigation Company, which was awarded the $300,000 contract, including the necessary dredging, which alone will cost $50,000, has but its employes to work on the job, which will not be completed in less than a year, at the expiration of which the Central's docking facilities in Elizabeth will be doubled.

It is the intention of the Central Railroad Company, when the improvements have been completed, to do all of its coal transferring in Elizabeth, and it is probable, also, that much of the unloading of general freight for American and foreign boats will be done on the docks in that city.

—The Sunday train on the New Jersey Central to Lake Hopatcong has been discontinued.

ALFRED SPEER,

THE ORIGINAL

Port Grape Wine Producer in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had

The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while those grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. The New Jersey apples, for instance, make a cider that was always popular the world over. If you want a wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards. Sold by Druggists.

NOTED FOR CONSERVATISM.

Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen Believes in Upholding Laws of the Country.

Cleveland (O.) Special.

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen is the strongest numerically and the most aggressive of the various railway labor organizations. Although it has always worked along conservative lines, and endeavored to avoid strikes, on several occasions it has shown itself ready to fight if that became necessary. In that respect it may be said to be more of a trade union than any of the other railroad brotherhoods.

It was organized at Oneonta, N. Y., September 23, 1883, and in the 21 years of its existence it has probably as much to its credit as any organization of labor in the country. On a conservative estimate, when the reduction of hours of labor is taken into account, it may be said that the wages of men in the train and yard service controlled by this organization have been increased 50 per cent. since the organization was formed. It has agreements with every railroad in the country with the exception of four, with an aggregate mileage of 7,000 miles. Although the organization has insurance features which protect its members, it also maintains a defense fund of $300,000, to be used in case a strike becomes necessary.

P. H. MORRISEY,

The name is broad enough to include in membership any person connected with the running or handling of railroad trains, and there are those who look forward to the time when some of the other railroad organizations will be absorbed by the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. No such step is contemplated by the officers themselves, as they work in perfect harmony with the other brotherhoods, but it may come about, nevertheless, with the more thorough organization of labor.

P. H. Morrisey, grand master of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, is admittedly one of the greatest labor leaders in the country. His orders to the men on the Wabash road last year, when a federal injunction was issued restraining them from going on strike, brought forth the approval of the whole country. "The law must be obeyed," was the substance of his orders, and the men remained at work until the injunction was dissolved, and by that time the management of the road decided the trainmen meant business and granted the demands. His speech at the Denver convention last year was much commented on, when he said he hoped the day was not far distant when the contract breaker would be looked on with as much disfavor as the strike breaker.

The headquarters of the organization are in Cleveland. It has 705 local unions, with a membership of something over 70,000. The amount paid out in death and disability claims during the month of April last was $101,783.95. Since the formation of the organization it has paid out in benefits, $9,460,118. The amount of insurance carried by the members in the organization is approximately $75,000,000.

BOOK NEWS.

It is planned to issue on Thursday of each week lists of library news. This will frequently take the form of book lists, such as lists of books recently added, lists on special subjects and like topics. Frequently the lists will be annotated, the aim being to make them annotations of real service to the reader, by giving him the opinion of a trustworthy critic as to the value of the books or a few words as to their contents. Borrowers may keep these lists. The Plainfield Public Library will furnish to anyone making application a list of its books on a given subject.

Public Library Notes.

During the past summer extensive improvements have been made at the Public Library. Trees which darkened the reading room, and made the building damp were removed, fences have been taken away, grounds put in order, much needed bicycle racks supplied, and the whole exterior of the building painted a rich red. A large sign giving the library hours has been placed on the Eighth street side, and inside the hall a handsome brass tablet has been placed. The large number of periodicals added to the subscription list have made necessary a new periodical rack. This is soon to be placed in the reading room. Little has been done to the interior beyond the much needed improvements in the librarian's office.

A complaint and suggestion book is shortly to be placed at the delivery desk. Users of the library who are willing to co-operate with the library in extending its benefits by criticism or suggestions tending toward increased usefulness, are invited to make use of this book. All criticisms are to be signed.

By the summer extension privilege plan a large number of borrowers have taken away books with them for a few weeks in the summer, among those being many teachers, who are thus enabled to read in their vacation the books that the busy school life prevents their reading at other times.

One change in the staff has been made, Miss Clara T. Hill, having been appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss Thayer.

The busy other summer work has been the assorting of an accumulation of hundreds of miscellaneous periodicals, which have been presented from time to time; the taking of the inventory, no small task with over 9,900 volumes to be accounted for; and the preparation of a list of the Library's serial publications, which is shortly to be published. This list shows Plainfield to be among the first of public libraries in the State in the extent and value of its collection of periodical sets.

The Thursday notes have been published in this paper. Library notes planned for in the near future are: List of books in the Public Library by Plainfield authors: Lord Avebury's (Sir John Lubbock) revised list of 100 of the best books; local history material and its preservation in the Public Library.

In view of last year's large increase, a re-organization of work has been effected, making provision for a similar increase for the coming year of which there are already indications.

Among new plans, is the formation of a small apprentice class, designed to meet the need for trained workers in this library. Only those applicants will be considered who have at least a high school education, or its equivalent. The class will be formed in November.

Following the example of previous years, it is probable that one popular exhibit will be given during the year, the subject of which will be announced later.

A valuable collection of pamphlets on municipal engineering, sewerage, water supply, etc., chiefly in the shape of reports, has been presented by George H. Frost, together with a number of scientific and miscellaneous books. This collection of pamphlets forms a valuable addition to the library's already generous supply of the literature of municipal engineering. Its questions dealing with lighting, paving, municipal ownership, and the many other problems which the municipal officer has to solve, these results of the experiments made in other cities should be of great value.

The library was recently visited by State Library Commissioner Everett T. Tomlinson, well known among boy users of the library as the author of many interesting stories of Revolutionary and Colonial times. Mr. Tomlinson expressed himself as much pleased with the extent and with the arrangement of the library.

COLD in HEAD

A STORY FROM LIFE.

DEVOID OF ROMANCE BUT ABOUNDING IN REALITY.

Told by the Wise Young Woman Who Presides Over the "Answers to Correspondents" Corner of a Newspaper.

One of her duties was to answer the letters from damsels whose complexions were not what they desired, whose sweethearts did not behave as they wished, who had doubts as to their religious belief and wanted cure for souls as well as freckles.

Eve was used to being asked the fashionable color of hair and the way to remove hair if superfluous. She gave her opinion as to the propriety of kissing games, gave advice as to dressing the bride and the graduate, but she did get desperately tired with the girl who would write 16 pages about "the gentleman who is keeping company with me."

In a burst of confidence she told this story. Said she to a New York Sun reporter:

"A letter came for me early last spring, written in the usual fashion, in which a girl said she had been keeping company with a young man for two years; that he hadn't much money, and did I advise her to marry him then or to wait a few months and collect enough furniture to make a little home for themselves?

"I was immensely interested. I wrote to that girl and advised her to wait three months and have a home to start with, and gave her a lot of advice and a few suggestions that I thought might help her along.

"I never heard from her again, but one day last week I was in a Twenty-third street store shopping, when a young woman tapped me on the shoulder and asked me very modestly:

"'Are you Mrs. Blank?'

"She wore a picture hat trimmed with roses and very long, wide, pale blue streamers down her back, a coat of tan, with enormous pearl buttons upon it, and white gloves. Upon her face was the most delighted expression possible. She looked so happy that it positively rested me. Then she explained herself.

"'I suppose I ought to be ashamed of myself, one lady speaking to another in this way without an introduction, but I am Mrs. Drongol—Mrs. John Drongol. Of course, you don't know me by that name, but last spring I wrote you a letter asking you whether I had better marry a young man with whom I was keeping company then or whether I had better wait until we had enough to set up housekeeping.

"'You wrote me a beautiful letter. You told me how to be noble and honorable with my husband, and to be affectionate and always glad to see him, and then you told me to wait for the home.

"'It was a mighty lucky thing you said that, for I had made up my mind to do exactly what you told me. I got the home, and you can see how I am dressed.

"'I am in here now buying some stuff for a new silk dressing sack. I think red would be pretty, don't you? Oh, you have done more for me than any woman in the world.'

"'I can't tell you how this affected me. I felt the tears come into my eyes as I thought of it. After all, here is at least one case where my letters have done some good.' I took Mrs Drongol's hand in mine with a real genuine happy clasp as I said:

"'I can't tell you how glad I am! And how happy you and the young man must be!'

"'Good gracious!' she said. 'Why, I didn't marry him! That's just it. While I was waiting I did a heap better. I married his boss.'"

Her tone was sad, but there was a twinkle in the eye the narrator as she completed her story.

Naughty Cat Was Forgiven.

To punish a cat for having stolen a flounder, John M. West, of Salt Lake, put the animal in a bag and secreted him under a seat of a car on the San Pedro & Los Angeles railroad. At Caliente, Nev., the cat was discovered, and released. Tom, the animal is called, made his way back to Salt Lake, a distance of 337 miles, and begged for food at his old home. Tom was forgiven.

A Gypsy Test of Honesty.

Gypsies are rogues, and steal even from one another. When one of them is deputed by the chief to take up a collection from visitors to their camp, a simple method is employed to check dishonesty. The collector is given a plate to hold in his right hand, and a live fly, which he has to keep imprisoned in his left.

ARCANUMNITES BANQUET

Plainfield Council Gives Feast in Honor of Grand Regent.

A JOLLY GOOD TIME

One Hundred and Twenty Members of the Order Gather at Trusil Inn.

James M. Washburne, of Jersey City, Grand Regent of the Royal Arcanum of New Jersey, in honor of whom the affair was arranged, and other State Council officers, were dined, wined and toasted at a banquet given by the members of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, at Trusil Inn, Park avenue, Oct. 12, while the objects of the great fraternal order were spoken of in high praise.

The event served the purpose of bringing together the members of Plainfield Council, some of whom have not met in years. Socially the gathering was a fine one. It was the first one of the kind given under Mrs. J. R. Trusil's management at this hostelry. Nothing but praise was heard of the elaborate menu and fine service given.

It was 9:30 when the members of Plainfield Council and their guests sat down to the tables and from that time until nearly 11 o'clock a feast of good things was enjoyed. At the conclusion of the banquet, Rev. Edward Love was introduced as the toast-master and he in turn called upon various members of the Grand Council to speak. It was regretted that Grand State Regent Washburne could not remain for this part of the affair, but illness in his family called him home as an early hour. However, his excellent work as the head of the State's Grand Council, was referred to in flattering words by his fellow-officers, the first one to speak being Grand Vice Regent Rogers, of Cranford. He congratulated the local Council for the honors given and then sounded the praises of the Royal Arcanum. He was followed by Deputy Grand Regent Charles A. Collier, of Bayonne, who also took occasion to congratulate Plainfield Council for its fine showing and he paid deserving compliment to its regent, Clarence Goss, as well as Grand Regent Washburne. Grand Secretary Robert H. Alberts, of Jersey City, was the next speaker and he told of the many advantages of being a member of the Royal Arcanum and his earnest words proved a strong incentive to the members to continue their good work.

Grand Trustee Daniel S. Horton, of Somerville, who joined Plainfield Council in 1885, afterwards transferring to Bridgewater Council, of Somerville, made a few pleasant remarks. Rev. Erskine M. Rodman concluded the speech-making, in which his made a suggestion that received cordial approbation. He spoke of the efforts of the Metuchen Council to boom the order by giving instructive lectures during the season and in other ways adopting measures to increase the membership. He suggested that such things be done here and Regent Goss in speaking for the Council, said that it would be.

After a brief social time, during which there was a general handshaking, the affair terminated.

Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, was instituted October 4, 1883, and has ever since been successful. It started with a charter membership of twenty-eight, W. H. Lyon, Jr., being the first regent. During its existence it has had all told a membership of 365, the present membership being 265. In the twenty-two years one hundred members have died, withdrawn and joined other Councils. The present regent, Clarence Goss, is concluding his second term. For many years the Council met in Exempt Firemen's Hall, but a year or so ago handsome new rooms were obtained in the Babcock building. To beneficiaries of deceased members, $100,000 has been paid out in twenty-two years. It is now the purpose of the Council to increase its membership to 300 by December 31.

The committee in charge of last night's affair comprised Clarence Goss, regent; Robert H. Lowry, vice regent and Fred'k J. Pope, secretary, and each one received the commendation of all for excellent work performed.

Basket Ball Dates Fixed.

The management of the North Plainfield High School has closed two dates with the team of the Hasbrouck School at Jersey City Heights. The games will be played on November 9 at the local Y. M. C. A., and on December 23, at the Jersey City gymnasium.

Commissioners of Appeal Meeting.

The Commissioners of Appeal in cases of taxation will meet in the Common Council rooms on Tuesday afternoon, October 25, at 2 o'clock, to hear and determine all appeals that may be presented to them in writing by taxpayers.

HAS 1,202 SUBSCRIBERS

Many Improvements Recently Made and Others Now in Contemplation.

One can scarcely realize the growth of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company since the introduction of the telephone here twenty-two years ago, when Percy Ohl was the first manager. During the first year there were 124 subscribers in the city. Today there are 1,202 subscribers and there is only one other city of Plainfield's class that exceeds it in this respect and that is Montclair. This is due to the fact that Montclair's territory is more extensive, there being an upper and lower Montclair.

It has been a source of gratification to Manager Charles W. Runyon, and his corps of able assistants, that the growth here has been so steady. Mr. Runyon has been manager of the local exchange sixteen of the twenty-two years and it is in no small measure due to his efforts that the company has had such success.

It has been the custom of the company to change its rates every few years and effect a reduction in some. During the first few years of business here the cheapest telephone was what was known as the "ground instrument." This could be rented for $60 a year, but the best 'phone cost $75. Today one can rent a telephone for private use, other than business houses, for $30 a year, while direct wires can be secured for a slight additional sum. The selective system in use here permits three or four parties being on [one wire and yet in many respects the subscriber has the advantages of the direct wire, especially in that one's bell only rings when that party is wanted. Previously the bell of every subscriber would ring to the annoyance of those not wanted.

Recently, the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company decided to redistrict its territory in New Jersey, and in this respect Plainfield is affected. Manager Charles Root, of the Elizabeth exchange, has been made general manager of what is known as the Elizabeth, Plainfield, New Brunswick and Somerville district, and Charles W. Runyon, manager of the local exchange, is the assistant in looking after the company's business in this section.

Other changes and improvements looking toward an improvement in the company's service are in contemplation. Recently, announcement was made of a reduction in the toll rates. In this Plainfield is interested and effected. The local rate has been made 15 cents instead of ten, and there has been a general reduction throughout this section to subscribers. The rate to Westfield is ten cents instead of fifteen, to New York thirty instead of thirty-five to non-subscribers, and twenty-five, the same as before for subscribers; to Morristown it is twenty cents instead of forty-five to subscribers and twenty-five to non-subscribers; to Elizabeth it is the same, fifteen cents to subscribers and twenty, instead of twenty-five cents, to non-subscribers; to Somerville the rate for subscribers is fifteen cents and twenty for non-subscribers and the same rate applies to Dunellen. The changes noted are those effecting Plainfield and vicinity.

STATE SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION NEXT MONTH

ANNUAL SESSIONS TO BE HELD AT BURLINGTON NOV. 15 TO 17.

The annual State Sunday-school convention will be held in the Broad Street M. E. church, Burlington, N. J., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 15 to 17. The executive committee of the New Jersey Sunday-school Association hereby invites all Sunday-schools and all county associations to elect and send representative delegates to the convention.

No pains have been spared to arrange a series of meetings without parallel for interest, scope, and prospect of practical and spiritual power. Among the speakers are Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner, of Illinois, the brilliant and versatile field worker of the International Sunday-school convention; the Rev. Dr. John T. McFarland, the new corresponding secretary of the Sunday-school Union of the Methodist Episcopal church; Dr. C. H. Blackall, Dr. George W. Bailey and D. C. Trumbull, of the Pennsylvania workers; the Rev. Frederick H. Jacobs, of Brooklyn, the world-famous leader in Christian song; and others from New Jersey equally noted and helpful, including Mrs. J. Woodbridge Barnes, International Primary and Junior Secretary.

PROF. GRIGGS' LECTURE

Audience Captivated by His Talk on Shakespeare.

AUTHOR'S HUMANITY

First of a Series of Six Talks to be Given in This City.

Beginning a series of six lectures on Shakespeare, Professor Edward Howard Griggs opened the course Wednesday afternoon at Vincent chapel with a talk on "The Humanity of Shakespeare." It is this phase of the subject that Professor Griggs intends to bring out in the entire series, and throughout the complete course, he will show the real personality of the author as evidenced in the Shakespearian dramas.

In introducing his lecture the speaker stated that the relation between humanity and genius is often intistinct in the minds of readers, and that most of them draw a definite line between the two qualities. By several illustrations from Shakespeare's life and from his works, the lecturer showed the undeniable proofs of the dramatist's great personality and humanity.

Professor Griggs first mentioned the political condition of England, and the Elizabethan Age of English Literature as a natural stepping stone to the development of such a literary genius as Shakespeare. Comparing the Elizabethan Age of England with the Renaissance of Italy, the latter expressing itself in the perfection of painting, Professor Griggs said that the natural turn of the English people, considering their different environment, was toward the drama. That Shakespeare with his wide reaching knowledge of human nature, and his breadth of personal experience should become the center of this new literary period, the speaker said is not at all surprising.

Turning from the influence of the period which introduced Shakespeare to the world, Professor Griggs spoke of the many ways in which the author's life is shown in his writings. He referred to the noticable change in the theme of the plays, those written in the author's early life in London differing greatly from the more stern plays which marked the middle period, and the two last plays which show the effect of a real life, and one which has been varied in experience. The lecturer pointed out how the changes in the style of the plays showed clearly the different periods of humanity, through which the author must have passed to enable him to write the light comedies of the first period followed by the mystery of Hamlet, the fatal ambition of Macbeth, and still later succeeded by "The Tempest" evidently the work of one who has learned from all the lessons of life, a firm faith in the goodness of human character.

The lecture yesterday afternoon was practically an introduction to the course which will follow, the five subjects being as follows: "The Ethical Awakening: The Merchant of Venice, Facing the Mystery: Hamlet, The Tragedy of Ambition: Macbeth, World Forces and the Individual: Antony and Cleopatra and The final Attitude: The Tempest.

WEDDED QUIETLY IN ST. MARY'S CHURCH

MICHAEL J. HIGGINS AND MRS. CARRIE CARBONE MADE MAN AND WIFE.

In the presence of only relatives and near friends, Mrs. Carrie Carbone, of Park avenue, and Michael J. Higgins, of Plainfield avenue, were married in St. Mary's church Thursday afternoon at 5 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Egan. Mr. and Mrs. David Ramesetti, of Park avenue, the former a brother to the bride, were the only attendants.

Following the ceremony a reception took place at the home of the groom's sister, Mrs. Thomas Roddy, of Plainfield avenue. It was attended by a large number of guests and Mr. and Mrs. Higgins were continually in receipt of congratulations. They left today for Portland to spend a short time and will afterward make their home on Park avenue. Both bride and groom are widely known throughout the city.

Nasal Catarrh quickly yields to treatment by Ely's Cream Balm, which is agreeably aromatic. It is received through the nostrils, cleanses and heals the whole surface over which it diffuses itself. A remedy for Nasal Catarrh which is drying or shifting to the diseased membrane should not be used. Cream Balm is recognized as a specific. Price 50 cents at druggists or by mail. A cold in the head immediately disappears when Cream Balm is used. Ely Brothers, 56 Warren street, New York.

CONGRESS OF MOTHERS TO MEET IN TRENTON

PLAINFIELD WOMEN INTERESTED IN THE ORGANIZATION.

The New Jersey Congress of Mothers will meet in the High School building, at Trenton, October 28 and 29. Many women of this city are taking an active interest in the work and the congress will be largely attended from all over the State.

The congress will convene Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The Friday evening meeting will convene at 8 o'clock, of which the following is the programme: Invocation by the Rev. Dr. Henry Collin Minton; music, by the Trenton High School orchestra; greeting, Professor Ebenezer Mackay, supervising principal of the Trenton schools: "Save Thou the Child, on May We All be Saved," is the subject of an address which will be delivered by Hugh F. Fox, president of the Children's Protective Alliance. Saturday morning at 10 o'colck the report of the delegates will be heard. The remainder of the morning will be devoted to a conference of parents and teachers, at which it is expected the Hon. Charles R. Skinner, of New York, Dr. Henry C. Baxter, of New Jersey, and Dr. James M. Green, of Trenton, will deliver addresses and offer suggestions which will prove helpful to the organization.

Election of delegates to the National Congress of 1905, election of officers and reports of the various officers will take place Saturday afternoon.

The present officers of the Congress are: President, Mrs. E. C. Grice, Riverton; vice president, Mrs. E. M. Thatcher, Florence; Mrs. Howard Sharp; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. L. English, Haddonfield; recording secretary, Mrs. H. G. Phillips, Plainfield; treasurer, Mrs. A. J. Collins, Moorestown.

Board of managers: Mrs. Alexander Marcy, Jr., Riverton; Mrs. J. P. Bryan, Beverly; Mrs. J. Lawrence Lippincott, Riverton; Mrs. Emma Bourne, Newark; Miss Lillie A. Williams, Trenton; Mrs. William Abbey, Mt. Holly; Mrs. P. A. Neale, Jersey City; Mrs. W. H. Scott, Princeton; differing greatly from the more stern plays which marked the middle period, and the two last plays which show the effect of a real life, and one which has been varied in experience. MAYOR'S FATHER CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY

WILLIAM L. SMALLEY IS NOW IN HIS EIGHTY-SEVENTH YEAR.

William L. Smalley, one of the most respected citizens of the borough, observed the eighty-sixth anniversary of his birthday on Wednesday and throughout the day he received many callers who congratulated him. Despite Mr. Smalley's advanced age he is enjoying excellent health. Being born on the Smalley farm in Watchung Ridge, Mr. Smalley has spent all his life in Somerset county. He has lived in Craig place for a great many years.

Several years ago he was one of the best known butchers in this part of the State. He has always been active and greatly interested in current events. In politics he is a strong Republican. Mr. Smalley's family consists of his wife, who like himself enjoys good health for one of her years, and seven children. Mayor Newton B. Smalley, David C. Smalley, William L. Smalley, Jr., Jedediah Smalley, Miss Lizzie Smalley, Albert Smalley and Mrs. David King.

LITTLE GIRL'S FUNERAL.

Marguerite Bennett's Obsequies Held Yesterday.

In the sorrowing home of the parents on Duer st., Thursday p. m., funeral services were held over the remains of Marguerite Bennett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Bennett. They were in charge of Rev. Dr. Cornelius Brett. A large number attended by many relatives and friends, including the members of her class in the public school and also Miss Mabel Leek's class in Trinity Reformed church Sunday-school. The pastor spoke sympathetically and tenderly to those gathered about. A solo, "Nearer My God to Thee," was rendered feelingly by Mrs. F. E. Woodruff, accompanied by Miss VanFleet. The floral tributes were very numerous and included set pieces from the classes.

The body was placed in a receiving vault at Hillside cemetery, Friday morning.

Fowler's Alleged Record.

During all of last year's session of Congress, Mr. Fowler was present but four times. His salary is $5,000 per annum, so that received $1,250 for each day's attendance to his duties. Excellent returns, it seems to us, even for a politician.—Elizabeth Times.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Oct. 23: "How Can We Enlarge and Improve Our Work?"—Matt. xxi, 17-21; Isa. liv, 2.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES.

That's an easy question to answer in words, but not so easy to answer in deeds.

To accomplish the work three things are necessary, and only three.

We must wish, think, perform.

Not much is ever actually done in this world without a lot of wishing. Now, wishing is downright hard work when it is done as it ought to be. It is entirely different from dreaming. Imagination has a part in it, to be sure, but not the most important part. Wishing is hunger of spirit. It is not merely recognizing that we lack something we would like to have; it is wanting. That is the secret of feeling; that is where we have the sense of hurt. Wishing may be painful. If of any good, it usually is uncomfortable, and that is why so many do not do much wishing and why so our work does not improve and enlarge. We do not like to be disturbed. We shall never get ahead until we prize something more than our comfort and are willing to suffer a little.

We must get to wishing and wishing hard; wanting the things of the kingdom in real earnest; thirsty, until it pains, for right things; heartachy to get out among men and help on things; interested so intensely that the eyes get wet with desire and lumps come up into the throat and you can't help it.

This sort of longing rarely comes from talking with others, but only from talking with God and finding out what He wants. When a true soul comes to understand that God actually wants things different from what they are and wants some one to help him get them as they should be, that one begins to feel as never before. He gets sorry, and really wants to be good. He sees that things are in such shape, but we'll get to work and fix them right. He can help God. He feels as God feels about it.

If we are to come to this place we will need to spend some time alone with God, perhaps much time. Not because God cannot talk fast and give us wonderful feeling, but because we must get away from other influences which distract us. We must become insulated and get connected up and avoid all short circuiting entanglements. Call it prayer or anything you please, only get alone with the Lord where you have time to get into the feeling and not be interrupted, and where you will not be ashamed to cry a little as the flood tides of feeling come up.

That is not all. Many stop here, and the result is dead failure. All evaporates in just feeling.

We need now to do some close thinking, some hard thinking. Most folks dislike to think—that is, if thinking costs any effort. The man who would be loyal beings and would be insulted did any one cast doubt on it, but the fact is the larger part of our doing is anything but reasonable. We must think, and that soberly and honestly. We must look at things as they are. This will tear the mask off some pleasant hypocrisies and will silence some pious cant and offend some good-ish folk who like those things and frighten some others who unite to be good, but are benighted or timid. Oh, it will not be all easy if once you begin to think how things ought to be and what you ought to do about it. You will get wiser, but at the same time sadder. But there is no improvement except by this road.

Then comes the performance. That is as difficult as either wishing or thinking, perhaps rather harder to some. Perform—that is, shape matter into certain form. I happy if you don't have to unshape it first before you can reshape it as you wish and think it should be.

That word "perform" has come to have a bad meaning as well as a good meaning. Ill performing and performances that are only imitations of real living. Be real inside and outside, and you will see great improvement and enlargement in yourself and in all the work.

Delays Are Not Denials.

They have preserved in Bedford, England, the door of the jail which was locked upon John Bunyan. Locked at it long and earnestly. I thought of the many prayers which Bunyan must have pleaded behind it-that that jail door might swing open for him. Yet for twelve years the bolts of that door stood undrawn.

But the delay was how adinently fruitful! Dreams were going on behind that door, and the world needed them. When "The Pilgrim's Progress" of which Bunyan dreamed had taken shape and tangibility, Bunyan's Lord, who had never for an instant forgotten him while the slow years passed, swung that jail door wide.

Let us give God time. Let us trust His wisdom. Sometimes quick answer would be a curse, not a favor. Let us learn Adam Slowman's so needed lesson for our impatient hearts—that "delays are not denials."—Wayland Hoyt, D. D.

Trust.

He holds the key of all unknown,
And I am glad.
If other hands could hold the key
Or if He trusted it to me
I might be sad.

What if tomorrow's cares were here
To-day? I'm glad
I'd rather He unlocked the day
And as its hours swung open say,
"My will is best."

I cannot read His future plans,
But this I know:
I have the smiling of His face
And all the refuge of His grace
While here below.

Enough, this covers all my needs,
And so I rest.
For what I cannot He can see,
And in His love I s'ee shall be Forever blest.

CLIMBS POLE TO SAVE CAT

Plucky Philadelphia Girl Rescues Animal That Had Taken Refuge from a Dog.

When a black and white fox terrier chased a Maltese cat up a telegraph pole at Germantown and Stenton avenues, at Philadelphia, and kept her there for nearly an hour the street became as dense with people as if the United States mint had begun to distribute samples of gold coinage. More than 1,000 persons stood in the street and on the sidewalks, craned their necks watching the trembling pussy look down from the top of the pole to the excited crowd below.

Nobody seemed to know how to bring the cat down. One man suggested that the feline be lassoed with a long rope and then hauled down, but this suggestion didn't meet with favor. Somebody else suggested that the pole be chopped down, another declared that the fire department ought to be called out to dislodge the cat with a good, heavy stream from a hose. An elderly woman wanted to 'phone to the S. P. C. A. Matters were in this strait when Miss Ethel Sibler, a pretty young girl of 417 Woodlawn avenue, arrived.

"Why, what's the trouble?" she asked in a surprised voice. "Pussy up a telegraph pole? Well, I'll get him."

She began to scramble up the pole while the crowd looked on in amazement. Straight toward the top she went.

"Here, pussy, pussy, here, puss," she said in a soothing voice, as she reached the frightened animal. The young woman kept up her gentle purring, and the cat stopped trembling. As she reached the top of the pole the cat made a spring and landed on Miss Sibler's shoulder. Then the young woman slowly descended while the crowd looked on. When she reached the ground the cat sprung from her shoulder and scurried off. And the crowd that had been watching for nearly an hour walked foolishly away.

GIRL RESCUED BY PORKER.

After a Hard Battle Hog Kills Rattler Which Was Just About to Strike at Child.

Mattie Dodson is a Red Rock (Pa.) girl, aged 12, and on Thursday she was sent to the spring-house for a pan of milk. She got the pan and on her way home set it in the grass to pick some berries. When she turned again she saw a rattlesnake six feet away, drinking the milk. The snake saw her, too, and coiled as if to strike. The little girl was paralyzed with fear and had not the power even to call for help. She simply clasped her hands and gazed at the reptile in helpless terror.

A fat hog, sauntering around in search of food, came in sight, and in a moment made for the snake, and Mattie, now at a safe distance, watched the battle with wonder. The snake more than once bit the hog, but each time the beast received the bite in the jaw, where the great layers of fat made the poison harmless. When the snake had exhausted the venom it decided to retreat, but the hog then took the instigator. Jumping on his captive, he pinned it to the earth, and with his teeth tore it to pieces and ate it. Mattie carried home the milk and told her story to sympathetic ears.

Oven Heated by Electricity.

A baker's oven heated by electricity is a novelty at Montabaun, France. The heat is quickly applied, and may be cut off at once, with a considerable saving in time. No heat is lost up the chimney, as the only opening in the oven through which the bread is passed.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 23.

Topic.—How can we enlarge and improve our work?—Matt. xxi, 17-21; Isa. liv, 2.

By REV. A. H. DOYLE.

The topic emphasizes the fact that we have a work. We could not enlarge and improve it unless we had. And for every Christian there is a work. "To every man his work." We have not only the personal work of life essential to our existence in a world like the one in which we live, but a much larger life and work—a work for God, for the church of Christ and for humanity.

In what now well we may have done our religious work or in what improved condition it may be, it may be enlarged. No human effort ever reaches a point so near perfection that it is impossible of improvement. Therefore the commands of God have ever been, "Go forward." To the ancient children of Israel He said, "Go forward!" In the time of Solomon the proverb was given, "Let thine eyes look right on." The church in Isaiah's day was commanded: "Enlarge the place of thy tent and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations. Spare not, lengthen thy cords and strengthen thy stakes." The last command of Christ to His disciples was, "Go ye into all the world." * * * And, lo, I am with you always." Under these repeated inspiring commands we should make every effort to enlarge and improve our work. It is the opening of the busy season of Christ's church. Now our church and society should begin a well thought out campaign and, "trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength," pursue it until success crowns the labors put forth.

What we have is not to be lightly esteemed or cast aside. No new site for the tent was to be selected, but that space enlarged. The same curtains were to be used, only enlarged and stretched over the wider space. Cords were to be lengthened and stakes strengthened. On the basis of what we have, if it be the true foundation, which is Christ Himself, we should all strive to enlarge and improve.

1. Enlargement. What Christian Endeavor society is there that cannot enlarge? In every place of meeting there must be some space that could be occupied by additional numbers, or, if not, there must be room for space that can be added to that already in use. Who will make this increased space necessary by bringing new members into the society? In this work every one should have a part.

2. Improvement. Enlargement without improvement is of no avail. Numbers without spiritual graces and qualifications are in vain in God's work. "Not by might nor by power, but by My spirit, saith the Lord." "Paul may plant, Apollos water, but God only can give the increase." The Endeavor tent at the Denver convention blew down. The tent was too large and heavy for the poles that were to be supported it. Let it not be so in our societies. Let us enlarge in personal piety, in numbers, in labor, but let us also improve. Let us prove our professions by our lives. Christ, the fig tree puts forth its fruit before its leaves. A tree with leaves upon it should therefore have had fruit. The one in the topic had no leaves, but not the fruit. It was a false professor and hence its spiritual significance to the Jesus and to us. Let us be workers, not idlers, in the vineyard of the Lord. Let us bring forth fruit and not simply leaves. By faith and prayer and fasting let us enlarge and improve ourselves, our society, our church and the church universal.

BIBLE READINGS.

Neh. iv, 1-9; Eccl. ix, 10; Zech. iv, 1-6; Mal. iii, 8-12; Matt. x, 1-8; xxvii, 16-20; I Cor. x, 31; xv, 58; Gal. vi, 1-10; Rev. xxii, 17.

The Ends of the Earth.

A contribution of $5 for the World's Christian Endeavor fund from the Christian Endeavor society in Douglas, Alaska, shows how the ends of the earth are brought together in one blessed fellowship. During the past few weeks contributions for the advancement of world-wide Christian Endeavor have also been received from Australia and China as well as from many parts of our own land. Have you had a part in this great work? If not, why not send an offering to the World's Christian Endeavor union, Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., and so have a share in the blessing?—Christian Endeavor World.

Endeavor In West Africa.

Among the native Christians in missionary lands Christian Endeavor is doing a noble work. It is proving a splendid means of educating new converts for service. One example of the practical results comes from Shaingay, West Africa. The young men of that society set out, two by two, to preach the gospel through the whole of their district, a region 40 by 70 miles in extent, with a total of 238 scholars and reached 4,572 hearers, and all without a cent of expense.—Roll Call (Australia).

Amid Turkish Oppression.

Turkey has seventy-five societies, in spite of Turkish oppression, which will not allow constitutions to be signed, badges to be worn, or even the word "society" to be used. The Christians there are obliged at one time to burn its records.

An Invalid's Thought.

God's rainbows show no lovelier tints
Than those on bud and bloom
That came to me one gracious day
And glorified my room.

All day I thought, and smiled to think,
How sweet the soul must be
That looked out through the donor's eyes
And chose those tints for me.

CLINTON RANDOLPH DEAD

New York Business Man Passes Away at Home Here.

SIXTY YEARS OLD

Wife Survives Him—Sketch of His Career—The Funeral Services.

The many friends of Clinton F. Randolph were shocked to learn of his death which occurred at 220 Central avenue, Tenth Court, Friday morning, after an illness of less than three days. He was in his sixty-first year and is survived by his wife.

Mr. Randolph was the son of the late Isaac F. and Isabella Randolph, and was born in Piscataway township on his father's farm. The family moved to this city in the early sixties, to the homestead at 514 Madison avenue, where Mr. and Mrs. Randolph lived until three years ago. Mr. Randolph had two sisters Mrs. Louise F. S. Gilbert (wife of former Mayor Gilbert) who died four years ago last March, and Miss Alice F. Randolph, of 170 Crescent avenue. In July, 1876, he married Miss Emma Huyler, of North Plainfield, who survives him.

Mr. Randolph had been for many years New York manager for C. Rogers & Bro., and was widely known as one of the best posted and most successful men in his line of business. He had secured a large clientele by his honest, straightforward business methods. In social life he had a large circle of friends, whom he had won by his kindly ways and genial disposition.

The funeral was held Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the First Baptist church.

JERSEY A WINNER.

Prizes Taken by State at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

New Jersey has won many honors in her exhibits at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, the school exhibit as a whole being awarded a grand prize, the highest honor. In addition to the grand prize, fourteen gold medals have been awarded for school exhibits. A number of schools will also receive bronze medals.

The school for the deaf at Trenton gets a gold medal for an exhibit of manual and industrial arts. Another grand prize has been awarded to the New Jersey exhibit of salt water fish. This is one of the most popular exhibits of the fair. It is located in a tank in the center of the forestry, fish and game building, and is filled with salt water brought in tanks and taken from the Atlantic off the New Jersey coast. In it are live specimens of salt water fish from New Jersey waters and around it all day is a crowd of sightseers, who seem to take great interest in the tank and its contents.

The exhibit of the experimental station, including the mosquitoes and means for their extermination, receives a grand prize. The exhibit of insects injurious to forestry receives a gold medal and another gold medal goes to the New Jersey State museum's exhibit of birds and animals. Another exhibit which attracts much attention is the New Jersey road exhibit and that has captured a gold medal, too. So has the exhibit of the State Board of Health. Another gold medal is awarded to the bureau of labor and statistics, while the exhibit of the school for feeble-minded children at Vineland receives a silver medal.

N. F. H. S. A. A. Entertainment.

An entertainment for the benefit of the North Plainfield High School Athletic Association will be held in the near future. The following committees have been appointed by the president of the association: Leo E. Keaney, Wilbur Dunning and Leslie Fewlison.

Dances at T. A. B. Hall.

The Plainfield Social Club will give a subscription dance in the T. A. B. Hall on Friday evening, October 21. A week later one will be given at the hall by the Alumni of St. Mary's. Since the building has been rebuilt, and the floor enlarged, it is one of the most popular dancing halls in the city.

F. S. C. Settles With Denckian.

A settlement has been made in the suit brought against the Public Service Corporation by Frank Denckian for injuries sustained by his running into a ditch on the corner of Watchung avenue and Front street. Mr. Denckian was riding his wheel on Front street after dark, and it was claimed that the lights about the repairs made by the P. S. C. were not properly located.

The exhibit of the experimental station, including the mosquitoes and means for their extermination, receives a grand prize. The exhibit of insects injurious to forestry receives a gold medal and another gold medal goes to the New Jersey State museum's exhibit of birds and animals. Another exhibit which attracts much attention is the New Jersey road exhibit and that has captured a gold medal, too. So has the exhibit of the State Board of Health. Another gold medal is awarded to the bureau of labor and statistics, while the exhibit of the school for feeble-minded children at Vineland receives a silver medal.

N. F. H. S. A. A. Entertainment.

An entertainment for the benefit of the North Plainfield High School Athletic Association will be held in the near future. The following committees have been appointed by the president of the association: Leo E. Keaney, Wilbur Dunning and Leslie Fewlison.

Dances at T. A. B. Hall.

The Plainfield Social Club will give a subscription dance in the T. A. B. Hall on Friday evening, October 21. A week later one will be given at the hall by the Alumni of St. Mary's. Since the building has been rebuilt, and the floor enlarged, it is one of the most popular dancing halls in the city.

F. S. C. Settles With Denckian.

A settlement has been made in the suit brought against the Public Service Corporation by Frank Denckian for injuries sustained by his running into a ditch on the corner of Watchung avenue and Front street. Mr. Denckian was riding his wheel on Front street after dark, and it was claimed that the lights about the repairs made by the P. S. C. were not properly located.

N. J. BAPTISTS' CONVENTION

Local Churches to be Represented at Diamond Jubilee.

OCTOBER 25, 26 AND 27

Big Meeting at Trenton Representing 57,000 Members of Denomination.

Representatives from the First and Park Avenue Baptist churches will attend the seventy-fifth annual session of the New Jersey Baptist convention to be held in the Central Baptist church, Trenton, October 25, 26 and 27. More than usual interest is attached to this convention because it will be the diamond jubilee of the association. "Enlargement" will be the keynote of the convention, and delegates, representing the 57,000 Baptists in the State, will listen to reports and addresses on the scope, as well as the methods employed, of the missionary work carried on by the denomination in New Jersey among the people of varying nationalities whom the society's workers reach.

On Monday, October 24, there will be a conference of the clergymen and that night there will be a mass meeting under the auspices of the Baptist Young People's Union, when Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters, of Baltimore, will make an address.

The business will be taken up Tuesday morning, when the secretaries, Edward Brockett, of East Orange, will deliver his ninth annual address. Then will follow reports of the various departments, including a detailed report of the board of governors. Several strong addresses are scheduled for the afternoon.

Rev. T. B. Thames, of Elizabeth, will preach the annual sermon and there will be time given for the consideration of the work of the state Educational Society. Judge E. A. Armstrong, of Camden, a relative of T. S. Armstrong, of the borough, will preside at the convention.

NOMINEES TO TOUR SOMERSET IN AN AUTO

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES TO MAKE A FLYING TRIP.

Charles C. Black, the Democratic candidate for Governor, with Congressional candidate Robert L. Stevens and the county nominees, Daniel H. Wilson, who is a candidate for the Assembly, and Frank Talmadge Ross, the shrievalty candidate will make a tour of Somerset County on Thursday, Oct. 25, in an automobile. The itinerary is as follows:

Bernardsville, 9 a. m.; Bedminister, 10 a. m.; North Branch, 11 a. m.; Neshanic, 12 noon; Harlingen, 1 p. m.; Millstone, 2 p. m.; Bound Brook, 3 p. m.; Raritan, 5 p. m. At Somerville in the evening a large mass meeting will be held.

The stopping places have been chosen as being the most populous sections in the county and their location is such that the voters may assemble with as little convenience as possible, thereby enabling Candidate Black to personally meet a large number of Somerset's citizens. Newspaper correspondents will also be among the party. Four automobiles will carry the party over the county. Senator Obrion will also accompany the leaders and everything is being done to have the party meet at the different points by large numbers of voters. This will be the first flying political tour that Somerset has been treated to. Mr. Black cannot devote more than one day to the county, so the leaders will adopt the autos to make the trip in.

The mass meeting to be held in Somerville will draw a large crowd. The North Plainfield Democratic Club will probably attend the meeting in the evening at Somerville. They will make the trip on special trolleys.

Receiver for Somerville Mills.

A bill for foreclosure has been in the Court of Chancery by Bacon & Co., of New York, against the Somerville Woolen Mills. The bills states that the company is enjoying the mortgaged premises in Somerville and asks that the company be enjoined from receiving the rents. A receiver also is asked for. The mortgage in question is for $75,000. The woolen mill company on April 21 last made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors. The concern was later declared to be bankrupt and George M. Sawhby was appointed trustee.

—Judson Voorhees, of Cranford, a brother-in-law, is named as executor of the estate of the late Samuel A. Wallace, who died recently at his home in Grove street.

—Marchant Brothers, of North avenue, have renewed their lease of the creamery at Annandale. They are now receiving about forty cans of milk daily at the plant.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION CLOSES

Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass is Chosen President of Union's Association.

LIST OF APPOINTMENTS

Reports and Addresses Made by Men and Women Prominent in Sunday-School Work.

The afternoon programme of the Union County Sunday-school Association, held Thursday in the First Baptist church, proved to be of peculiar interest and benefit to the large army of superintendents and teachers present. The election of officers was held over until the evening session, owing to the absence of the chairman of the nominating committee, George Hall, and after the notice of the New Jersey State Sunday-school Association convention, to be held at Huntington, November 15-17, had been given, there were brief remarks from the State officers present. These were of a congratulatory nature.

Then there was the presentation of diplomas by the president to all the schools contributing three cents per member to the State and county work. After a short session of general business, Miss J. L. Baldwin, of Newark, presented the many advantages of music as a factor in Sunday-school work. She gave many valuable hints as to the use of music at sessions of the school.

Perhaps one of the most interesting numbers on the afternoon programme was the address on "Good Citizenship and the Sunday-school," by Rev. Mines G. Morgan, of Summit. He gave a strong and forcible talk along the line of citizenship and what it should consist of to be of benefit to a community. He spoke of the multitude that do not live in Christian homes and of those who do, yet fail to profit thereby, and said that here is where the Sunday-school steps in. He referred to the great influx of foreign population and said that between 1890-1900 one tenth of those coming to this country as foreigners located in New Jersey. It is only through the church and Sunday-school that these people can be reached, said Mr. Morgan. He spoke of the many nationalities that are settling in New Jersey and he thought that it is especially the duty of the Sunday-school to look after the boys, who will some day become voters and the girls, who some day will become factors for good or evil. He believed that teachers and officers in Sunday-school work are engaged in a patriotic mission, when they labor with the children, and that one cannot measure the influence thus exerted.

The rest of the afternoon programme was devoted to a presentation of the various departments of Sunday-school work and then the school as a whole. Mrs. J. M. Dudley, of Elizabeth, spoke concerning the cradle roll, and told what a factor it has become in the Sunday-school, being the stepping-stone to the higher grades. Miss Helen Steele, of Westfield, told of the beginners' department for children from three to six years of age. She gave helpful hints as to the simple exercises used to interest the little ones.

The primary department was ably presented by Mrs. J. A. Powlison, superintendent of that department in the First Baptist church Sunday-school. She took the place of Miss Elizabeth Chandler, of Summit, who could not attend. She told of her successful methods in conducting the primary department. Miss Edith Cairns, also of the First Baptist church, being superintendent of the junior department, gave a helpful talk on her work among children between the ages of nine and thirteen years. The boys and girls are in separate classes, each one has his or her Bible and a systematic course is followed.

In the secondary division, Rev. E. M. Fergusson spoke for the intermediate department, for pupils between the ages of twelve and thirteen years. In this department there is a four years' course and teachers are allowed to remain there at the discretion of the officers of the school, thus a rivalry results among the teachers to stay in the department.

Mrs. Alonzo Pettit, of Elizabeth, held the close attention of all while she told of the senior department where the teacher is prepared for greater work. Her remarks were full of interest and deep thought.

Stephen Cahoone, of this city, spoke concerning the adult Bible class and urged the adoption of methods that would bring more young men into the Sunday-school. He said that in these days there is an indifference among many persons, even teachers to ignore a strict observance of Sunday. He spoke in favor of better quality among teachers, though admitting that in this respect there had been a decided improvement during the past ten years.

W. S. Webb, of Westfield, county superintendent of the Home Department, presented strong arguments in favor of a continuation of this work and the extension of it, claiming that the greatest need of the age is a closer study of the Bible.

Then Miss J. L. Baldwin spoke briefly of the work of the Sunday-school as a whole, touching on the various phases of it. This was followed with a short address on "Teacher Training," by Rev. J. L. Coote, of Keyport, who impressed on all the necessity of giving this matter closer attention.

The afternoon session closed with a few five minute talks on the excellent results of Institute work and an open parliament by township secretaries. Among those who spoke at the parliament were Charles M. Dolliver, of district number one, and A. V. Bearing, of district number two.

An adjournment was then taken until 7:30, in the meantime supper being served to the delegates.

After the song service, which opened the evening service and which was led by Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Wilson, of Providence, R. I., a short business session was held to receive the report of the nominating and other committees. In accordance with the recommendation of the nominating committee, of which C. L. C. Reeve, of Summit, was the chairman, it being impossible for George E. Hall to serve, these officers were chosen for the coming year:

President, Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, of Plainfield; first vice president, Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, of Plainfield; second vice president, E. L. Taylor, of Westfield; third vice president, Rev. J. B. J. Rhodes, of Cranford; secretary and treasurer, Richard P. Greaves, of Westfield; recording secretary, Rev. W. B. Hamilton, of Elizabeth; home department superintendent, William B. Webb, of Westfield; primary and junior superintendent, Miss Edith Cairns, of Plainfield; State executive committee, George E. Hall, of Plainfield; executive committee, Elias D. Smith, of Elizabeth; William Dodge Porter, of Summit; Mrs. Alonzo Pettit and Rev. H. H. Sleeper, of Elizabeth; George H. Krause, of Cranford; Miss Florence G. Hawkins, of Plainfield; Wellington Morehouse, of Westfield; O. B. Leonard, of Plainfield.

Township and district secretaries: Clark—Mrs. George W. Baker, of Westfield; Cranford—Frederick Hamilton, of Cranford; Elizabeth first district, Rev. W. B. Hamilton; Elizabeth second district, B. F. Midgley; Elizabeth third district, Rev. B. H. Rankin, of Elizabeth; Fanwood—Charles E. Wade, of Scotch Plains; New Providence—L. B. Coddington, of Murray Hill; Plainfield first district, Charles M. Dolliver; second district, A. V. Bearing, Jr., of Plainfield; Railway—George T. Rudgen, of Railway; Roselle—Miss Florence Bogart, Roselle Park; Springfield—Erdman Cain, of Springfield; Summit,—C. L. C. Reeve, of Summit; Union—George H. Headley, of Union; Westfield—W. O. Wheeler, of Westfield.

The committee on enrollment reported 351 delegates to the convention, including sixteen pastors, four-teen superintendents, thirty-eight primary workers, twelve junior workers, seventy-eight teachers, five secretaries and other officers, eight home department superintendents, thirty-six pupils, nine home department members and five undenominational persons.

A resolution was presented by Rev. G. M. Shott for the schools of Westfield and Mountainside, asking the association to adopt measures looking toward the lessening of the temptation toward the legalized liquor traffic especially for the young people of the county. Another resolution adopted by the convention extended a vote of thanks to the members of the First Baptist church, its pastor, Dr. Chambliss, and members of the other churches assisting in the entertainment of the association.

Dr. Snodgrass, the new president, made a short address in which he said that although his election was a total surprise to him, he would accept the honor and assured all that he would do the best he could this year.

The convention closed with an especially interesting illustrated lecture by W. B. Wilson, general Sunday-school secretary of Rhode Island, on the subject "Echoes from Jerusalem." Views taken by Mr. Wilson while on a trip to the Holy Land were shown and explained to an entertaining manner.

The women who had charge of the serving of the dinner and supper at the Union County Sunday-school Association convention held in the First Baptist church, yesterday, are as follows:

Mrs. Harold Sorrell, Miss Florence Sorrell, Mrs. Frederick Pierce, Miss Florence Marsh, Miss Ada Fountain, Mrs. J. B. Proseco, Mrs. Frank Jones, Mrs. Walter C. Debbins, Miss Whitney, Mrs. Hannah Flanders, Miss Laura J. Runyon, Miss Pauline Duncan, Mrs. George White, Mrs. Samuel Dunning, Mrs. Elvaine VanNamn, Mrs. L. L. Manning, Miss Anna Oosant, Miss Lawrence, Miss Helen Robins, Miss Moffett, of the First Baptist church; Miss Beckman, Miss Randolph and Miss Hall, Monroe Avenue M. E. church; Mrs. L. E. Howard, Mrs. A. B. Lewis, of Hope chapel; Mrs. Harry F. Crawford, Mrs. Cornelius Schenck, Miss Mabel Wilson, of Trinity Reformed church; Mrs. Nelson Runyon, Mrs. Charles VanWinkle, Mrs. W. S. Lowry, Mrs. H. C. Runyon and Mrs. DeLany, of the Park Avenue Baptist church; Miss Ella DeForest, the Misses Lounsbury, Miss Lucy Pound, of the First Presbyterian church; the Misses Winckler, Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux, of the Congregational church; Miss Stroupp, Miss Edward Mosher, Miss Millie Spicer, Miss Susie Jackson, of the First M. E. church; Mrs. J. F. Mosher, Miss Bertha Mitchell, Miss Cornelia Miller, of the Seventh-Day Baptist church.

Russians Enveloped Jap Column, Took Fourteen Guns.

ATTACK RENEWED BY CZAR'S TROOPS

New Concentrating In Front of Generals Kuroki and Nodzu For Another Great Battle—Kuropatkin In the Field.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—A special from Mukden says that Lone Tree hill, won by the Russians after a desperate struggle, has been the object of a gallant but unsuccessful attempt at recapture by the Japanese. In spite of the awful slaughter with which they had been driven from the hill the Japanese returned to the charge during the night, recognizing that the hill was the key to the position on the southwest front. Numerous columns quickly pated, creeping up through the darkness and delivering a furious assault at dawn. But the hill had been bought too dearly by the Russians to relinquish it, and the Japanese were driven back with terrible slaughter.

It is reported that General Mischtschenko's Cossacks, under command of Adjutant Gavrilloff, are engaged in a hot fight toward the southeast. A Cossack horse battery silenced the Japanese guns and several Japanese infantry battalions, but were unable to capture the guns, which the Japanese succeeded in carrying off.

Shakhe station, or what is left of it, has been recaptured by the Russians, who will shortly reopen it for railway traffic with Mukden.

The battlefield of Lone Tree hill presents the most awful spectacle that can be conceived, Russian and Japanese dead are mingled in heaps in ingrowing confusion. The ground is strewn with broken rifles that had been smashed in hand to hand fighting. Everything seems to have been utilized as weapons.

Tokyo advices say that the Russians have fiercely assailed General Oku and attacked Generals Nodzu and Kuroki, but were everywhere repulsed with heavy losses.

The Russians enveloped Colonel Yamada's column and captured fourteen guns.

The Russians are now concentrating in front of the left army under General Kuroki and the center army under General Nodzu. Another great battle is expected.

Mukden reports say that the fighting on Monday was confined to the Russian center at Shakhe river and was mostly artillery fire, the Japanese using big guns and high explosive shells.

During the nine days of continuous fighting the losses were never less than 2,000 a day.

The hospitals are hardly able to handle the wounded. Nevertheless they have performed wonders.

The country south is desolated. The Japanese still seem to be exerting themselves to force the Russians out of Mukden. A battle is assured in the positions surrounding the town.

General Kuropatkin remains with the troops, having abandoned his headquarters at Mukden.

A dispatch to the Japanese legation from Tokyo, giving details of the envelopment of General Yamada's column, says:

"The column was proceeding to reenforce a detachment of our left army which was attacking the enemy north of Shakhe. It defeated the enemy near Weichiakouts, captured two guns and two ammunition wagons and was returning to its original position when suddenly it was enveloped by about a division of the enemy.

"It succeeded in breaking through and regaining its original position. The enemy, however, was lost, with most of the horses and men. We were compelled to abandon nine field guns and five mountain guns.

"The enemy in front of our central position has been re-enforced.

"Our casualties on Sunday last were about 1,000."

A report from headquarters of General Oku's left army, via Fusan, says that since Sunday last the Japanese left army has buried 4,100 Russian dead. It is estimated that the Russian casualties are from 20,000 to 25,000. The Japanese report their casualties at about 8,000. The Japanese continue to advance, driving the Russians before them. They have captured two guns and many rifles and on the morning the Russians attempted to recapture Lamuting, but were repulsed with heavy loss.

A Mukden dispatch says that the fighting on Sunday last was most severe. Fifty wounded were counted in one hour passing a point on one country pathway. Already the casualties reported are so great as to confirm the declaration of the leaders that the present conflict would be the bloodiest in history. It is not possible to make any close estimate of the Russian casualties.

The Russians appear to hold positions in the plain along the Shakhe river, extending from the railway to Da Pass, beginning at the mountains.

After a threatening day the Japanese toward night rushed the village of Linchenpo, on the north bank of the Shakhe river and west of the railway, precipitating a thundering cannonade and fusillade, which continued until midnight, the rifle fire resuming with dawn. The Japanese now occupy the raised temple quadrangle near Linchenpo.

Death From Football Play.

CORRY, Pa., Oct. 19. — Charles Schreve, twelve years old, of Union City is dead here as the result of being kicked in the head while playing football.

ATTRACTIONS LISTED AT THE PARK CLUB

RECEPTION TO MR. AND MRS. M'CUTCHEN THE FIRST EVENT.

An attractive list of entertainments has been arranged by the entertainment committee of the Park Club, and approved by the Board of Governors. On Thursday night, October 27, there will be a reception in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. McCutchen, who have been absent during the past year. On Tuesday night, November 15, cards will be the attraction, and on Thursday night, November 24, there will be the Thanksgiving dance. The Christmas dance will be held Thursday night, December 29, and on Saturday night, December 31, there will be a junior dance. The Easter dance will be held on April 27.

On January 1, New Year's Day, there will be the usual afternoon reception from 3 to 6, when friends of members will be admitted without cards. In the evening there will be bridge whist and euchre.

The following has been adopted by the Board of Governors: Resolved, That it is the sense of this Board that for the Thanksgiving, Christmas and Easter dances, invitation for guests be limited to non-residents of Plainfield or North Plainfield, while for the informal dances the standing rules of the club relative to the introduction of guests be enforced. Invitations for non-resident guests may be had upon application to the chairman of the entertainment committee, Mrs. Charles A. Reed, 21 Myrtle avenue.

PLAINFIELD A. C. SUED BY BASEBALL PITCHER

GARVIN CLAIMS THAT THERE IS MONEY DUE HIM.

Virgil Garvin, formerly of the Brooklyn National and New York American League teams, and more recently pitching for the Plainfield A. C., has instituted a suit against the Plainfield Athletic Club, for the recovery of money which he claims is due him for pitching for the local team against the Elizabeth Stars on Crescent Oval on Saturday, October 1. Garvin brings the suit in Justice Mosher's court through his counsel, Louis Clamant, Esq., the papers being returnable Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The ball player claims that Manager Johnston gave him $35 for his services in that game, that he was to have received $66.50, therefore a balance of $32.50 is coming to him. The suit is brought for $50.

In the contest in question Mr. Garvin pitched a poor game, the Stars getting sixteen hits off him and winning from the local team by a score of 13 to 1. It is said that in view of the poor showing made, Mr. Garvin offered to take $35, but that he changed his mind afterward and said he wanted his full pay after Mr. Johnston had given him $35. When Mr. Johnston told him that that is all he would give him, Mr. Garvin then said that he would sue for the balance.

New Trolley Fare Registers.

The trolley cars operated by the Public Service Corporation have been equipped with a new style of registry for the collection of fares. The mechanical device is very complete, being similar to the cash register now so generally used. It records full and half fares, transfers and every time a fare is rung up the amount is indicated exactly as with a cash register. The work of installing the new device in the cars has been going on for some time.

LITERARY.

Collier's for October 8 discusses the possible outcome of the conflict in Wisconsin. The writer declares that the worst thing that could happen to the Republican National ticket in that State would be for the National Committee to send their speakers into Wisconsin.

The October "American Boy," with its football cover and ninety illustrations, ought to make a boy's heart jump with pleasure. This number is especially attractive. Its stories are: Part one of "Jimmyboy's Commission"—a war story; chapter eight of the editor's "Three Yankee Boys in Ireland"—a travel story; "A Boy Canvasser"—a business story; "The K. O. D.'s and the P. A. C.'s"—a football story; "Why the Flinn-Egan Stock Company Failed"—a humorous story; chapter two of "My Four Years in West Point," by a graduate; "Bob's Field Sacrifice"—a business story; and "How General Morgan Won His First Shoulder-Straps"—an Indian story.

All the magazines seem to be growing! We notice, for one thing, that a change is going on in the editorial policy of The Metropolitan Magazine. It has greatly increased in circulation; the older periodicals had best look to their laurels. Those who have watched it recently have noticed an improvement in its general character and tone, and, with the November number, two new department have been added. One of these, "The World at Large," dealing with noteworthy men, women and events of the day, will be conducted, in the future, by Alfred Henry Lewis, who is widely known as a writer of great strength and virility. Mr. Lewis' ability to see things clearly is manifested only by his knack of stating, in the most simple and most direction fashion, the conclusions he draws from them. This department is fully illustrated. Another department, to which added attention seems to have been paid, deals with things in theatrical and dramatic. In this part of the magazine the personality and opinions of James Huneker will predominate. There are also a great number of full-page and smaller pictures of players. It seems to be the editor's ambition to give The Metropolitan Magazine a stronger theatrical interest than that attached to any other high-class monthly. The other features and departments of The Metropolitan go on as before.

MARRIED IN MAY, SECRET JUST OUT

HARRY HANN TOOK UNTO HIMSELF A WIFE MONTHS AGO.

After keeping the fact a secret between themselves for five months, Miss Nettie Happaney, daughter of Phillip Happaney, of Pearl street, and Harry Hann, of the same place, have announced that they are man and wife. They were married in May last by Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass at his home. The only witnesses were the groom's mother, Mrs. Clara Hann, and her sister, Mrs. Juillard, both of the borough.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Hann are young people widely known in the city and borough. The groom was formerly in the employ of the Watchung Silk Company and is an expert weaver. They are now residing at the home of the groom's mother.

D. L. AND W. SETTLES SUIT FOR DAMAGES

ROLAND PARKER GIVEN GOOD SUM FOR INJURIES RECEIVED.

Preferring an amicable agreement to a trial, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad has settled with Roland D. V. Parker, former clerk of New Providence township, for injuries he received by being thrown from a train. Suit was instituted in Union county and it would have been heard this term. The settlement terms were brought about by Counselor Isaac P. Runyon, of this city, and it is said were for a substantial amount.

Parker was about to alight from a train at Berkley Heights on the night of December 29 last, when it suddenly started and threw him to the ground. He struck on his head and was rendered unconscious. A neighbor carried him home and was seriously ill for two weeks and since then has been unable to attend to his ordinary affairs.

Irving W. Clark to Wed.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Farr Nixin, of Moorestown, have sent out invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Elizabeth De La Cour Nixin, to Irving Wayne Clark, to take place Wednesday, November 2, at 5 o'clock, in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church. Mr. Clark is the son of Edward B. Clark, of Crescent avenue.

REV. G. M. SHOTT RESIGNS

"Fighting Parson" Asks Congregation to Relieve Him.

CAUSES MUCH SURPRISE

Gained Wide Prominence Through Relentless Crusade Against Village Saloons.

Greatly to the surprise of his congregation, Rev. Gideon M. Shott, pastor of the Scotch Plains Baptist church, tendered his resignation Sunday, expressing the belief that the time had come for him to sever connection with it. As his action had not been in the least anticipated the resignation was laid on the table for a week, during which an attempt will be made to have him stay. Rev. J. M. Lissenden, of Freehold, who has occupied the pulpit at various times, is talked of as his probable successor in the event of Mr. Shott adhering to his decision.

The present pastor succeeded Rev. J. S. Baker six years ago, coming from the North Baptist church, New York. At the time Scotch Plains was known far and wide as a place where the liquor selling element was in control and soon after becoming installed Mr. Shott devoted most of his time to investigating the conditions. The greater part of the stories he found to be true, especially with reference to Sunday violations, and he began waging a war against the traffic that gained him the sobriquet of the "fighting parson" and made his name prominent throughout the State. To better carry on his fight with the saloons he organized the Citizens' League which was still in existence though not particularly active. The Sunday selling received a decided setback, as several dealers were heavily fined after being convicted on charges preferred by the Citizens' League.

While the clergyman's fight was applauded by the temperance advocates in the village, others of the population were not pleased with the prominence given the place, many of the metropolitan papers referring to it as "the toughest town in Jersey."

HOPE BASKET BALL TEAM WINS A GAME

EDWARD CLARK CLUB OF ELIZABETH IS DEFEATED HERE.

Rough play characterized the game at the Hope chapel gymnasium last Thursday, between the Hope five and the Edward Clark Club, of Elizabeth, in which the local team won by the score of 26 to 9. A second game was played which was won by the visitors.

Dilts, of Hope chapel, played his usual game in shooting goals, and much of the score is due to his work. Duckworth was another strong point for the local team, his guarding being close, and his shooting very creditable. There was a decided tendency to rough-house during the entire game, and fouls were numerous, eleven being recorded for the Hope team, and nine for the visitors.

As the Elizabeth club brought down both a first and a second team, two games were played last night, a scrub team being composed of several of the regular players entering the lists with the Clark seconds. Only ten minute halves were played in this contest, the score being 7 to 4 in favor of the visiting team.

The line up for the games was as follows: First game, Hope—Blimm, center; Roseberry, Emmens and Porter, guards; Dilts and Duckworth, forwards. Edward Clark Club—Bonner, center; Bradford and Ilnes, forwards, Winchester and Husbands, guards.

Goals from field, Dilts, 6; Duckworth, 3; Porter; Bradford, 2; Dilts, 2; Bonner, 4; Bonner.

Second game, Hope—Porter and Dilts, forwards; Roseberry, center; Chamberlin and Fritz, guards. Edward Clark Club—Fisher and Samuels, forwards; Siebert, center; Holshauser and Smith, guards.

Referee, V. W. Nash, Jr.; umpire, Pender; timekeepers, Wilcox and Browning; time of halves, first game 10 minutes; second game—10 minutes.

Minister as Restaurant Proprietor.

Rev. J. W. Mitchell has purchased the restaurant business of Henry Kingdow on North avenue, and he and his wife are now in charge. Mrs. Mitchell will have charge of the culinary department. The place will be renovated and generally improved.

Miss Whiton Engaged.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Mary Whiton, daughter of John M. Whiton, of Central avenue, and James Hutchinson, of Lynn, Mass.

MISS E. E. CUTTER WEDS

Becomes Mrs. Oliver B. Hill at Largely Attended Ceremony.

DR. SCHENCK OFFICIATES

Bride a Member of Trinity Reformed Church—Many Handsome Gifts.

Miss Elizabeth Edna Cutter, sister of F. S. Cutter, and Oliver Barbour Hill, of Westervelt avenue, were married at 7 Tuesday evening at the home of the bride's brother, 36 Sandford avenue, in the presence of about one hundred guests from New York, Newark, Brooklyn, Rahway and this city. The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. Frank Pearson, as matron-of-honor, while the best man was Warren W. Wessman, who also assisted Frank W. Pearson as usher.

The home was unusually attractive in autumnal decorations. In one corner of the parlor here were beautiful palms, smilax, chrysanthemums and ferns in one solid bank, and it was here that the ceremony was performed. In the reception hall there were palms, smilax and chrysanthemums as arranged to hide from view the music room, where Westervelt's orchestra rendered the wedding marches and a programme of classical selections. In the dining room the same effect was carried out in floral decorations.

As the Lohengrin wedding march was being played, the bridal party descended the stairway passed through the dining room into the parlor, where the officiating clergyman, Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, stood waiting to receive them. After the ceremony, which was performed with a ring, the couple received congratulations and best wishes of the guests. This was followed with the serving of the wedding supper.

The bride, an attractive young woman, was gowned in white crepe de chine, over white taffeta silk, with pearl trimmings. She wore a veil and carried a shower bouquet of bride roses and lilies-of-the-valley. The matron of honor wore a white lace robe gown and carried a shower bouquet of pink roses.

After the reception which followed the wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Hill left the city for two weeks' trip. Upon their return they will reside in one of the apartments in the New Madison in Madison avenue.

The couple was substantially remembered in gifts of great value and use. The bride received gifts of silverware from the firm by which she was formerly employed in New York, while from fellow-employes in the Empire Trust Company and McVickar, Gaillard Realty Company, where the groom has been employed for over six years, a purse of $60 in gold was received. The Sunday-school class of Trinity Reformed church, of which the bride is a member, gave a handsome chair. Other gifts included furniture, carving sets, salad spoons, Haviland china, cut glass, linen, pictures. A great deal of the silver was of Tiffany make, and represented the latest styles in this ware. One room was entirely devoted to the show of gifts and during the evening the guests accepted the opportunity offered to admire them.

The bride is a member of Trinity Reformed church and Sunday-school, and both she and her husband are highly esteemed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

The bride and groom cleverly outwitted the guests in their departure. A coach stood in front of the house and everyone supposed that the couple would go away in it. The coach was decorated with ribbons and old shoes. At the proper time Mr. and Mrs. Hill came out of the house and hastily jumped into an automobile which had arrived but a few minutes before. Joseph Lockhard was in charge and under his direction the couple was able to make a quick escape from those who had planned to give them a send off. It is not known to which railroad station they went, but they were successful in eluding those who hope to give them a good time.

Home From South America.

George Fuller, son of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Fuller, of Arlington avenue, has returned home from Buenos Ayres, where he is engaged in business representing North American companies in various lines. He will be in Plainfield until December.

Exhibition Well Attended.

The exhibition of photographs at the studio of the Misses Edith and Margaret Tracy, yesterday afternoon, attended by even a larger number than on Monday.

BLACK INVADES SOMERSET

Gubernatorial Candidate Gets Rousing Receptions.

TIME AT SOMERVILLE

Clark and Swackhamer Also Speak—North Plainfield Democrats There.

Charles G. Black, the Democratic gubernatorial candidate, yesterday wound up his whirlwind campaign in Somerset County, which was one continuous ovation all along the route, with a monster mass meeting in Somerset Hall, Somerville, last night.

The meeting was one of the largest ever held in Somerset County. An overflow meeting of large proportions was also held outside in front of the hall which Mr. Black also addressed, as did Assemblyman Swackhamer and others. Former Congressman A. A. Clark, of Somerville, presided. The address of Candidate Black was attentively listened to and frequently applauded. J. B. Cleaver spoke upon National issues and held the large audience spell-bound. Mr. Bacon, a former Republican, of New York, who has stumped the United States in many former campaigns for the Republican party, made a deep impression with the gathering.

The meeting lasted until 11 o'clock. The North Plainfield Democratic Club attended and made the journey in a special trolley. President D. J. Carney headed that delegation which numbered ninety. The activity of the Somerset County Democracy has awakened the Republicans in Somerset and unless strenuous efforts are adopted that county will slip away from the Republicans two weeks hence.

No like assemblage has ever been gathered in Somerset as that of last evening. The Democracy of Somerset is jubilant today. Candidate Black returns confident of election and so expressed himself to friends last night.

A warm reception was accorded Congressional Candidate Robert L. Stevens. Mr. Stevens made a stirring address and his remarks were often applauded.

HIRING NON-UNION BAND MAY COST MANY VOTES

UNION MEN OBJECT TO REPUBLICAN COMMITTEE'S ACTION.

If the politicans continue to engage the Plainfield Cornet Band to furnish music at the various mass meetings, it is likely to cost the party many votes, according to a statement made last night by a union musician. He referred to the matter reported in The Daily Press yesterday regarding Whitney Frazee, the organizer of the band. Mr. Frazee is a member of the Elks—both union, while many of those in the band are non-union men. Last Saturday during the auto parade, the secretary of the Elizabeth Union spoke to Mr. Frazee, whose head was in the parade, about it, and the latter took exception to his remarks.

It appears that as some voters in the city, especially among the machinists, carpenters and other trades, all union men, are taking exception to the acts of the political party who are engaging a band composed of non-union musicians and they say that if the practice continues the party doing it will lose many votes on Election Day.

It is not known what action Whitney Frazee may take in the matter. He played with his band at Reform Hall, last night. Kenneth Stuart, another union musician, has also been playing with the band. Both are liable to a fine of $25 and in case of failure to pay it they may be suspended.

Driver Thrown From Wagon.

Thrown out by the sudden jolting of his wagon, Alfred Norwood, a driver for Grocer H. H. Keenan, fell on his head on Richmond street, yesterday afternoon, and received several bad cuts. He was left in a partly conscious condition and the patrol wagon was summoned to take him to his home on Belmont avenue. In the meantime friends took care of him and the services of the vehicle were not required.

Elks' Memorial Service.

According to the usual custom of the B. P. O. E., the members of Plainfield Lodge are beginning to prepare for a memorial service to be held early in December, probably in the First Presbyterian church. This service is held in memory of departed members. It is proposed to make music a feature of the programme.

PLAYED THE DEMOCRATS

W. Gaston and J. B. Barbour Speak at G. O. P. Meeting.

IN REFORM HALL.

Former Democrat Reminds the Audience of the Soup House—Barbour's Hot Shot.

Enlivened by the Plainfield Cornet Band, and attended by the largest audience during the campaign being conducted by the local Republicans, Hon. Joseph E. Barbour, of Connecticut, held the closest attention of everyone at the mass meeting held in Reform Hall, last night, while he presented strong arguments in favor of retaining the Republican party in power. Thoroughly posted on National affairs and the details of the Republican administration, he told in a convincing manner why Roosevelt and Fairbanks, as well as every Republican nominee should be elected on November 8.

There were a number of prominent Republicans on the platform, when Mayor O. L. Jenkins introduced Walter Gaston as chairman. Mr. Gaston made a few remarks in which he stated that since 1896 he had been a member of the Republican party. He deplored the condition of the country during the Democratic administration of Cleveland, when, he said, the soup house became a National institution, and aroused much enthusiasm in referring to the present standard bearers of the Republican party, the success of which will insure continued prosperity. He said that if Cleveland, surrounded by leaders of ability could not accomplish the best things for the country, it is surely not within the province of Parker and Davis with such men as Sheehan, Murphy, Hill and others who are conducting the present campaign for the Democrats.

Mr. Gaston then introduced the speaker of the evening, Mr. Barbour, who talked for an hour and a half. He sketched briefly the issues raised by Democrats during the past few years, referring to free silver, militarism, imperialism and telling how the Democrats have been trying to be successful at the polls by rallying around false doctrines. However, he said that the Democrats still have a few issues left upon which they are making a fight.

In referring to Secretary John Hay, he said that he is the greatest diplomat of modern times, and gave a few incidents to prove the statement. In his mention of the various issues of the Democratic party, Mr. Barbour said that strange enough very little is heard about free silver, militarism, imperialism or the trusts and not even the Democratic papers speak of them.

Mr. Barbour interspersed his arguments with amusing stories, all of which had a point, and concluded his talk with an urgent appeal to every voter to stand by the Republican party and vote the entire ticket from the top to the bottom because the candidates are Republicans and the party is one of progress.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK TRANSACTED BY TEACHERS

IMPORTANT MEETING AT TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH LAST NIGHT.

For the purpose of transacting all routine business from January 1 to October 23, a meeting of the teachers of Trinity Reformed church Sunday-school was held last night. F. E. Smith, the superintendent of the school, presided. Though there was no particular report from the primary department, Miss Barkaw announced that the beginners class had been increased by seven members since the last enrollment. There are at the present time seventy-three in this department.

The report of the treasurer was as follows: Balance on hand from last year, $149.59; total receipts, $630 70; total disbursements, $414.89; balance on hand, $215.91; sum raised for building fund, $21.55; total balance on hand, $237.46. In addition to the cash list of supplies, an organ will be purchased for the beginners' department. The subject of the addition to the building has been laid over till next spring, and no action will be taken in the matter until that time. E. H. Bird and W. O. Lock were appointed as a committee to assist the superintendent in making preparations for the pupils at graduation. The committee for the Christmas arrangements will be appointed by the superintendent.

ATTACHED HIS GOODS PACKED IN FREIGHT CAR

FOUR ATTACHMENTS ON ROBERT T. JOHNSTON'S FURNITURE.

Packed in a freight car, prepared to leave the State for Taunton, Mass., the personal property of Robert T. Johnston, of Central avenue, is held at the freight house on accounts of four writs of attachments sworn out by local merchants. Those who have the claims on the property for nonpayment of debts are Neuman Brothers, William Lindsey & Company, Fred Andress and Albert H. Smander.

The writs were issued yesterday by Justices Nash and Hand, and were delivered by Constables Manley and Gettelson. It is not known at present what action will be taken in the matter, though Mr. Johnston has been telegraphed at Taunton, and is expected in this city today. Whether he will contest the claims, or whether the goods will be seized is still an uncertainty. The merchants refused to give out the amounts of the claims.

DEDICATION OF TEMPLE BY SHRINERS NEXT MONTH

PLAINFIELD TEMPLARS TO ATTEND CEREMONY AT TRENTON.

The Taylor Opera House stage floor will be extended over all of the seats in the parquet to give ample room to the Mystic Shriners for the dedication of Crescent Temple in Trenton on November 17. Many Plainfielders will attend the ceremonies.

The institution of Crescent will be conducted by Potentate Widenmeyer, of Salaam temple, Newark. Dr. E. H. Glanelley will be the potentate of the host temple. It is expected that 1,000 Shriners will be present.

While not a regular Masonic body, Shrine membership is composed strictly of Masons who have attained the thirty-second degree. Scottish rite, or who are Knights Templar in good standing. There are about ninety-five temples in the United States, with a total membership of 90,000.

Crescent will be the second temple instituted in New Jersey, the first Salaam having been in Newark. The Philadelphia temple is known as Lulu and the New York temple is designated as Mecca.

John Ditts Recovering Slowly.

John Ditts, of Flanagan, employed in the repair gang by the Public Service Corporation, who fell off a car on East Front street last July, injuring the spinal column, causing paralysis, is slowly improving under the care of Dr. G. W. Endicott. It is believed that Ditts will eventually recover although it may require a couple of years' treatment. He now has feeling in the lower limbs as well as his toes. When first taken to the hospital he was unable to feel the point of a pin when inserted in the body.

Quietly Wedded.

Announcement has been made of the marriage of Miss Nellie Crevoling, of East Fifth street, to Thomas J. Mulcahy, of Westerly, R. I. The ceremony was performed in the rectory of St. Mary's church, this city, on October 19 by Rev. Father Egan. Only the necessary witnesses were in attendance.

Election Night at Park Club.

Among those arranging to receive election returns on the night of November 8, is the Park Club. The members have issued invitations to their friends, as well as the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club to be present. The Park Club will have a special wire.

In City Court.

Bridget Coleman, arrested by Patrolman Higgins, and Joseph Barrett, arrested by Patrolman McKean, were arraigned before Judge Runyon in the city court this morning, on charges of drunkenness. As there was no disorder in either case, sentence was suspended.

To Render Harvest Cantata.

At the praise service which will be given in the Crescent Avenue church Sunday evening, a choir of eighteen voices, under the direction of Rhys Thomas, will render John West's Harvest Cantata.

—The celebrated White Label canned goods are sold the world over and have always given satisfaction. Newman Brothers have received a new consignment of this season's pack which they guarantee to please the most fastidious.

HIGH SCHOOL FIELD MEET

Howard H. Craig Wins Title of Champion in the Contests.

DETAILED RESULTS

The Senior Class Captures First Place With the Freshmen Second.

Winning first place in six events out of eight entered, Howard H. Craig won the title of champion of the Plainfield High School for the season of 1904 in the athletic meet yesterday afternoon at the Plainfield Driving Park. Being an inter-class event as well, the class of 1905 captured the first place with a margin of twenty-one over the freshmen who were second in the class contest. They won forty-four points. The counts were on the scale of five for first, three for second, and one for third place. Craig made thirty-three of the points for his class. The other classes scored as following: points: Freshmen, twenty-three; juniors, thirteen; sophomores, ten.

The interest in the meet was not as great as that which has been evidenced on former occasions, there being fewer entries, and the class rivalry being almost extinct. Nearly fifteen of those entered dropped out. Three men tied for second place, though all were far below Craig's score. They were Collier, Vail and Thompson, all having eight points. The latter was the champion of last year, but only entered two events this season. He won first in the hammer throw, and second in the running broad jump.

The following is the complete list of the events and the winners: 100 yard dash—First, Craig; second, Vail; third, Stutsman; time, 11⅕ seconds. High jump—First, Freeman; second, Craig; third, Rockwell; height, 4 feet, 9 inches. 220 yard dash—First, Craig; second, Stutsman; third, Reid; time, 24 seconds. Shop put—First, Collier, 33 feet, 7 inches; second, Reid, 33 feet, 8½ inches; third, Strong, 32 feet, 2½ inches. 60 yard dash (under sixteen years)—First, Vail; second, Jones; third, Flanders; time, 7 seconds. 440 yard run—First, Craig; second, Rockwell; third, Stutsman; time, 1 minute, 14 seconds. Pole vault—First, Craig; second, Strong; third, Collier. Hammer throw—First, Thompson, 79 feet, 1 inch; second, Strong, 79 feet; third, Collier, 880 yard run—First, Craig; second, Gavett; third, Rockwell; time, 3 minutes, 7¾ seconds.

The total number of points received was as follows: Craig, 33; Vail, 8; Collier, 8; Thompson, 8; Strong, 7; Rockwell, 5; Stutsman, 5; Freeman, 5; Reid, 4; Gavett, 3; Jones, 2; Flanders, 1.

The judges in the affair were I. W. Travell and Lindsley Best, of the school faculty, and Archibald Bacquer, of the Courier-News. Francis K. Anderson, of The Daily Press, acted as starter, and Kenneth Robbie, of the Y. M. C. A., was timer. The committee in charge of the field meet was composed of Harold Robert, chairman, Theodore Gavett and William Douglass.

MISS EMMA MESSLER BRIDE OF J. PHILIP KIRCH

CEREMONY PERFORMED ON TUESDAY AFTERNOON AT NORWICH, CONN.

Miss Emma Sprague Messler, daughter of the late Justice Charles H. Messler, of Whitestone, and J. Philip Kirch, of this city, were married Tuesday afternoon at 5:30, at the home of the bride's brother, Harry W. Messler, of Norwich, Conn. The ceremony was witnessed by fifty guests, many of whom were from Plainfield. Miss Messler was gowned in peau de cine trimmed with chiffon and pearls, and carried white roses. The rooms were very prettily decorated with palms and chrysanthemums. Neither bride or groom were attended.

A reception was accorded Mr. and Mrs. Kirch after the wedding and at its conclusion they departed on a wedding trip which will be spent in the New England States. On returning they will make their home at 211 East Fifth street, this city.

The bride is a graduate of the nurses' training school connected with Muhlenberg Hospital and has been a resident of Plainfield for six years. At one time she was matron of the institution. Mr. Kirch has always resided here, being in business on North avenue. Both were remembered with numerous presents from their large circle of acquaintances.

TAX COMMISSIONERS MEET

Appeals Heard in Both City and Borough.

UNUSUAL CONTRAST

Number Loss in Plainfield and More in North Plainfield Than Last Year.

Commissioners of Appeal on both the city and borough sides of the brook, met yesterday afternoon for the purpose of hearing objections to tax assessments as fixed by the assessors. In the city, the number of cases considered was far below the average while in the borough it was more.

The Plainfield commissioners heard in all seventy-five petitions but none of them were of any great consequence. As a rule they applied to dogs, automobiles and personal assessments, which can easily be rectified. The assessors were in attendance and by referring those needing considerations, all who wanted attention rectified were disposed of in the afternoon so that another sitting will not be required. The commissioners will meet again tomorrow evening for the purpose of preparing their findings.

The commissioners who sat are Joseph E. Coward, A. H. Atterbury and William R. Craig.

In the borough thirty-nine persons were heard and as some of them were of importance another session will be held today. The most noteworthy case was the request of St. Joseph's parish, made through Counsellor Francis J. Blatz, for the withdrawal of the assessment on St. Gabriel's Academy and St. Joseph's home, on the ground that both are charitable institutions and as such should be exempt. Heretofore neither have been taxed, but to the commissioners Assessor Conley declared they should be taxed because a revenue was derived from the institutions. In his remarks Counsellor Blatz said that a revenue was derived but it was applied to the maintenance of the academy and that those attending received the benefit and not the parish. He cited instances of the Y. M. C. A.'s which receive money from young men attending the classes and yet the associations are not taxed. The matter was referred in connection with others.

The borough commissioners are William C. Smith, John T. Case and L. T. Barkalew.

EDWIN M. SHEPARD MAY MAKE SPEECH HERE

INDEPENDENTS WANT DISTINGUISHED LAWYER TO TALK FOR PARKER.

The Independent Parker Club met at the Casino last night and received considerable encouragement from reports presented as to the growth of the new movement. It was announced that arrangements are now being made for the holding of a large mass meeting at the Casino, when it is hoped to have as the principal speaker, Edwin M. Shepard, the well-known New York lawyer and former candidate for Governor against Governor Odell. As soon as it is learned whether Mr. Shepard can come here or not, the date for the meeting will be announced and other details arranged.

The association also planned last night to send out campaign literature. There are now about forty voters enrolled and others have signified their intention of identifying themselves with the organization in support of Parker and Davis. The association will meet again on Tuesday night, November 1, at the Casino.

In Justice Hudt's Court.

The following cases are on the docket at Justice Hudt's court: John Doe against James Brown, foreclosure of mortgage, returnable October 31; John Doe against John Griscowi, foreclosure of chattel mortgage, returnable November 1; John Doe against Mary Hope, foreclosure of chattel mortgage, returnable October 28; E. Dalton against A. Cornelison, landlord and tenant, returnable October 31.

Voting Wins the Match.

In order to decide their supremacy, a party of local gunners spent yesterday on the Rahway avenue shooting grounds and tried their marksmanship on clay targets. The record was made by William Fehring, who broke 21 out of a possible 25, at one time making a run of fourteen straight. Those who competed with him were Dr. C. B. Lafburrow, Alex. Ayers, Herbert Overbaugh, Philip Jahn and John Case.

REVELATIONS OF RADIUM

Prof. Von Nardroff's Instructive Talk at the Casino.

COSTS $2,000 A GRAIN

Fifteen Grains Will Lift a Ton's Weight One Mile High He Declares.

To reveal by words and experiments the powers and properties of a comparatively unknown natural element is always a difficult task but it was a task accomplished by Ernest R. von-Nardroff, professor in Erasmus High School, Brooklyn, when he lectured on "Radium and its Revelations," last evening in the Casino. The lecture was given under the auspices of the Monday Afternoon Club and a large audience greeted the speaker.

Mr. vonNardroff gave a brief history of radium, saying that the discovery of the Rontgen X-rays in 1896 gave an impetus to discoveries in the same line. M. and Madame Curie, scientists, of Paris, gave much attention to the extraction of a new power from pitchblende the mineral from which uranium, the basis of the X-rays is derived. Madame Curie found, by long and patient experiments in which the whole scientific world was interested, that the revelation power of the product evolved was 180,000 times as strong as uranium. The name of this new product is radium, manufactured at a cost of $2,000 per grain, as a ton of pitchblende was needed for securing three grains of radium.

Mr. vonNardroff threw on the screen some interesting pictures of atoms made up of positive and negative electricity and by experiments. later with gold leaf, showed how the different rays named, alpha, beta and gamma, were affected by contact with other atoms. The lecturer said that in experimenting in the development of some pictures taken by radium it was discovered that the developement went on under cloudy skies the same as in sun light and he exhibited a photograph developed as he talked, in which the key used was plainly visible on the card.

Mr. vonNardroff passed through the darkened room with a bit of radium, giving out its light and later with its X-rays, passed through a sheet of metal. The tremendous energy of radium was given in the statement that fifteen grains would lift a ton's weight a mile high.

One of the practical uses of radium, Mr. vonNardroff said, was in the cure of disease right and air contributing to the eradication of some fatal diseases, it is hoped that the power and energy of radium will hasten these cures. The enthusiasm and earnestness of the speaker did much to win for him the interest of his audience.

Little Victim Buried.

In St. Mary's church yesterday, funeral services were held over the remains of Edward Johnson, Jr., who died in the Elizabeth hospital from injuries received at Grassland Friday. The mass was conducted by Rev. Father Egan and a large gathering of relatives and friends was in attendance. Among the numerous floral tributes extended was a large set piece from the boy's classmates in the Washington School. The interment was made in St. Mary's cemetery, those who acted as pall bearers being Martin O'Loughlin, Donald and Cormack Muldowney, Martin Kane, William Edmundson and Lawrence R. Bray.

Watchung Avenue Improvement.

The employes of the Public Service Corporation have completed laying new rails on the north side of Watchung avenue, and in a day or so will commence the work of laying them on the south side. As soon as this is completed the work of paving the street with vitrified brick will be started by Street Commissioner Gavett. It is hoped to have the whole job finished within a few weeks.

Borough Democrats Will Attend.

The North Plainfield Democrats will attend the big mass meeting in Reform Hall Friday evening, in a body. They are asked to meet at the club rooms on Somerset street at 7:30, from which place they will march over. The speakers at the meeting are to be John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi; Charles G. Black, candidate for governor, and James R. Martine, of this city.

Fowler Here Nov. 5.

The last Republican mass meeting here will be held on Thursday night, Nov. 3, when it is expected that Congressman Charles N. Fowler will be the chief speaker. It is also possible that Lee Fairchild may speak.

Woman For Woman

Spirit of Union Among the Feminine Sex

It is to be regretted that wealthy American women have so little interest in the welfare of workers of their own sex. Except in a miserable, patronizing way, which every self respecting wage earning girl must resent with all her soul, even though she were starving, many of our millionaire ladies stand aloof from the brave woman worker as though she were of meaner flesh and blood than themselves.

It is true that in New York Miss Grace Dodge has endeared herself to thousands of working girls by showing them how to establish clubs of their own for improvement and social pleasure. It can be said of her, too, that she does not look down on them from stilted heights of alleged superiority self created, but she makes them know she is their friend, like unto themselves, except that luck has given her more money, which she is quite willing to use in their service. She employs the leisure fortune has given her to study out ways whereby working girls may become happier, healthier and more intelligent without at all losing that sense of their own human dignity, which is a priceless possession to man or woman. Her girls pay most of the expenses of their clubrooms, their classes and their outings.

It is unfortunate for us that Great Britain has many more wealthy women of the Grace Dodge stamp than America has. Over there the Countess of Warwick, the Duchess of Sutherland, Sarah Grand, Viscountess Harberton, Constance Smedley and many others hold out their hands on equal terms to their sister women and help them in that struggle which is now on the world over to break the old order of bondage for womanhood.

Among professional women the International Lyceum club, established by Constance Smedley in London, is the beginning of a sisterhood of the feminine sex the world over. In London, too, lately, Lady Hope has founded a club for women clerks of the city. There are many of these. Some of them, according to a London custom, are housed and boarded on the premises of their employers. It is as if the owners of a great American department store should set apart a loft at the top of their building, divide it into compartments, start a kitchen and put their girl clerks in the loft to eat and sleep.

When they are not caged in this manner London saleswomen too often are wretchedly housed in overcrowded quarters not fit for a good horse. To give all she can of them a little respite of cheer and breathing room Lady Hope established a clubhouse. It is a club to live in, so far as its accommodations reach. It has bedrooms for thirty-two shopgirls, with a cheerful dining room and parlors. In the entrance way are flowers and a pretty window seat. The girls pay a membership fee, then are entitled to the use of the rooms. There is no suggestion of charity in the club.

Thus of evenings and Sundays club members, even though they cannot all live at the home, have a social meeting place as pretty and comfortable as the home or club of many a woman far richer than they. They are very happy.

In our country every town and city ought to have club homes for working girls and women who are alone. If only they use their talent for organization in working women themselves might provide co-operative homes for their use. Such homes would offer comfort and artistic attractiveness far in advance of the boarding houses and dark little hall bedrooms so many are now forced to live in. The good temper every one may acquire, the business common sense every woman may develop, will make working women's co-operative homes a grand "go" in every part of the United. Then the working woman will speedily rise to be "somebody" socially. When we women can empty our souls of the foolish, wretched social caste idea and stand sister to sister against the world the millennium of woman will come once for all.

NEW STYLES GALORE.

The Shops Display a Bewildering Array of Winter Garments.

After a day of inspecting the garments, hats and materials offered us for the new season the mind is fairly confused with the riot of color and the many shapes. The coats and wraps vary, and one may find almost anything, from the velvet Louis XVI. to the Louis XV. forms and the directoire shapes besides. There are short sack coats of a dozen shapes, but all having the loose effect in the back, with the large sleeves. There are long coats, half and tight fitted, with velvet collars. They are very mannish in appearance. There are corset coats with the many seams and scores of jackets. We see capes of various forms, some of them being cut square, so that when they are on the points fall over the shoulders in the front and back. Some of these have flat collars of lace or the material, some are richly trimmed, and others are plain save for a flat band of velvet all around.

Then come the storm coats in cravenette and silk waterproof, though these last mentioned are not very durable. These coats are long, nearly always reaching to the bottom of the dress. Some have a belted effect in the back, and others are straight. The Louis XVI. and Louis XV coats of fine velvet are exceedingly handsome and desirable, but the whole velutina suits are fully as rich and wear better. If they get wet the pile rises of itself, while the silk velvet must have careful attention.

BROWN VELUTINA SUIT.

Whole suits of the plain or corded velutina are stylish and rich and particularly smart for young ladies. In the illustration is shown a suit of this material in plain velutina, which means that it is not ribbed. The color is a rich, deep, woody brown. The skirt is tucked in very narrow lines at the top and has two flounces at the foot. The inner waist of silk matches the rest or else is of faint blue. The coat is made with the three parts like flounces and has fancy silver buttons down the front. At the neck and on the cuffs is a motif of silver braid. Gold and Persian oxetic braids enter so largely into the trimming of almost all outdoor garments that they have become as indispensable as they are beautiful.

Many of the new hats are made entirely of braids in dark shades and colors brightened in different places by judicious employment of Persian on gold or silver braid. There are many separate muffs.

I notice among the new millinery bonnets for little girls made just like the Phyllis sunbonnets for young ladies. They are made of shirred silk or crape over a featherbone foundation. The front is set out prettily around the face, while the crown is puffed. Strings tie under the chin, but there is no cape to the present bonnet. Any lady can make one for her little girl, and be sure it is quite the prettiest thing to be found. Some few have a tiny bunch of small flowers in the front under the brim to nestle against the soft hair. Outside no trimming at all is needed if the material of which it is made is shirred nicely on the featherbone foundation. It is a great convenience to be able to get these ready to use.

The colors for the autumn are in the main very handsome. Dark garnet, burnt orange, mandarin, tangerine and several other reddish yellows are seen everywhere. Red is very popular in hats and in dresses, coats and even in full suits. The gowns for home wear are richer than they. They are very happy.

In our country every town and city ought to have club homes for working girls and women who are alone. If only they use their talent for organization in working women themselves might provide co-operative homes for their use. Such homes would offer comfort and artistic attractiveness far in advance of the boarding houses and dark little hall bedrooms so many are now forced to live in. The good temper every one may acquire, the business common sense every woman may develop, will make working women's co-operative homes a grand "go" in every part of the Union. Then the working woman will speedily rise to be "somebody" socially. When we women can empty our souls of the foolish, wretched social caste idea and stand sister to sister against the world the millennium of woman will come once for all.

The New Woman

Another Ancient Superstition Concerning Women Exploded

WOMEN tell all they know, do they? Women can't keep a secret? Listen. The manager of an extensive employment bureau, which places women clerks and stenographers, said lately that business houses generally preferred women for private secretaries because they keep the secrets of their employers' business better than men do. He said this might sound strange at first thought, but experience had proved it to be a fact. Men clerks gossip concerning their employers' affairs and let out trade secrets to a much greater extent than women do. A case in point is well known to have occurred during the summer just passed, where the private dealings of one of the largest banking corporations in the world were involved. The one person who knew more about those private affairs than even the directors of the company themselves, because she was the one who kept track of them, was a certain young woman private secretary. Bribes were offered to her, she was flattered, she was threatened, she was coaxed, she was interviewed time and again in the hope that she might let fall some careless word, but she never was tapped. The newspapers called her at length the sphinx and gave her up. This young woman is said to receive $10,000 a year for her services. Then there is that secret society of women called the P. E. O. sisterhood, of which it is nobody outside of it does know. All the members will tell is that, for one thing, they are banded together in the cause of woman—to aid in the progress and elevation of their own sex. The members of this mysterious order scarcely permit even their names to be discovered, yet whenever these become known they are those of cultured, intellectual, deeply thoughtful women. But they keep their mouths shut, absolutely.

There are three kinds of girls "in business," as it is called. One kind is the flibberty girl, who uses her wages only to get gay clothes wherewith she may capture some man and get away from earning her living, as she fondly imagines. This girl shirks her work, goes to parties nights, has her head full of Man and has a large Man in her heart of hearts body. Then there is the ox girl, who works when she is hitched up, so to speak, quits when the day is over and goes to her stall, with no thought beyond drawing her pay, with no ambition, no inspiration for betterment, promotion or improving herself. The third kind of girl is the wide awake one, whose mind is on her work before all else. She looks out for every opportunity to better herself and get to be advanced. She learns all she can in every department of her employer's undertakings and takes the interest in them that she would in her own. If opportunity for an independent enterprise appears she is ready to seize it and improve it. This kind of girl always accumulates a competency, often a fortune.

Speaking of her early attempts at literature, Sarah Grand says she "suffered terribly from want of encouragement." Heaven help us! What woman has not in whatever line of enterprise she has undertaken? The cutting, chilling, sneering, ill natured discouragement of her early efforts from one's own parents, stabs like cold steel. A woman never gets over it, even when she is too strong and brave to be downed and goes on and achieves in spite of her family. But many a woman who otherwise would have made for herself a noble career has had all the aspirations crushed out of her by the sneers of father, husband or brother. Heaven help them, too, for they will have it to answer for!

In a recent marital separation suit the judge decided that a man is "master of his own house," even when the house, with everything in it, belongs in her own right to the wife, and that the husband may "forbid" his wife's mother to visit his wife in the wife's house. When and where are we living? Women have all the rights they want, have they?

EMBROIDERED XMAS GIFTS.

How Is the Time to Make Them For Your Friends.

Some of the prettiest Christmas gifts are embroidered, and if at the last moment you find you have no time to spend beyond your means you will have only yourself to blame.

Take the picture frame, for instance, a section of which is herewith illustrated. It is the simplest thing in the world to make. The design, the Empire bee, is repeated regularly in its two tones of golden brown on a ground of deepcream. The stitch is the simple cross stitch of our grandmothers' samples worked with silk on coarse canvas.

The workbox is more elaborate. It is made of pale blue silk, pink baby ribbon and pink embroidery in a charming pompadour effect.

The foundation is made of cardboard, the edges carefully overcast with shoe thread and fastened together firmly. The handle of heavy straw braid is secured by means of paper fasteners. Then each part is carefully covered with the pale blue silk. On this the narrow pale pink ribbon strips are sewed, and they appear to be held down by a vine design of green leaves and tiny rosebuds embroidered in outlined silks. The dotted effect is gained by embroidered pin dots of pink silk. A little sachet powder should be scattered under the silk covering.

A very beautiful present is a linen robe inlaid with many medallions and bars of fine linen embroidery. This does not take as long to make as one would fancy, and the sections may be bought already stamped at any embroidery shop.

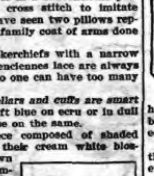
The smartest and newest thing in embroidery, however, is the square overmantel pieces for boudoir or drawing room.

Cushions, of course, are always popular gifts, and the newest of these are worked all over in a conventional pattern done in cross stitch to imitate tapestry. I have seen two pillows representing the family coat of arms done in this way.

Initial handkerchiefs with a narrow edging of valenciennes lace are always dainty, and no one can have too many of them.

Turnover collars and cuffs are smart worked in delft blue on ecru or in dull red or old rose on the same.

A centerpiece composed of shaded cherries and their cream white blossoms and brown stems is charming on the palest green linen, with a buttonhole border done in cream white. The ordinary lisle thread rib-bed low neck sleeveless vest may be made into a thing of beauty by the addition of an upper section and straps of valenciennes lace and open-work embroidery. Run through with pink ribbon. Don't forget embroidered garters with tiny chiffon rosettes.



EMBROIDERED PICTURE FRAME.

Pincushions embroidered in rosebuds or forgetmenots to match the toilet table are also always appreciated.

In fact, embroidery presents a larger field for moderate priced Christmas presents than anything else.

Making Friends

Its Pleasures as Well as Its Dangers

"SOME girls might be dropped into the middle of Siberia," remarked the wise woman, "and I'm blessed if they wouldn't manage to have a circle of friends within a week."

"Allowing for the exaggeration, I've known girls like that," remarked the bachelor. "On the other hand, I've seen plenty of frigid damsels who might stay a year in a hotel full of people and never know a soul. Not that any one cared to know them, for the matter of that, but I don't see why women make life barren for themselves by erecting imaginary fences all the time. Now, with men it is generally conceded that they know how to enjoy life. Well, you don't see a man moping by himself just because he's afraid of breaking rule 1013 of the Amalgamated Feline Protective union."

WITH A LOUD LOOKING WOMAN.

"That's all very well," here put in the wise woman. "I believe in broadening the horizon, in bowing and smiling and making acquaintances anywhere. Didn't I read a paper at my club called 'The Welcome Hand?' But, my goodness, since then I have seen an example that shows things can be carried too far. Perhaps you have met Marie Canton? Well, she and her husband live in the Boulevard, that big apartment hotel on the west side, you know. Nearly everybody lives there that has the price, and those that love variety can meet all kinds there. Marie beams on all alike—the godly and the ungodly—and if any one wants to hook arms with her, so to speak, why, Marie will still beam in that sweet childish way. It's all very well for Marie's husband, whose financial position is such that it will stand the strain, and it doesn't hurt Marie herself, because all her friends simply think she's a sweet, undiscriminating child, but it's awfully hard on Marie's friends. You never know whom she is going to introduce you to.

"For instance, the other day she and Mrs. Hamilton drove up to the casino in the park, and who should greet them cheerfully but a well dressed, seedy looking man of swarthy foreign appearance. 'They live in the Boulevard,' whispered Marie in explanation as she bowed back and actually introduced them to the horrified Mrs. Hamilton. She couldn't help herself, of course. The men quartered themselves at the same table, and some friends of Mrs. Hamilton at a table near by had the pleasure of beholding a very mixed foursome composed of two stunning women and two men that looked more like adventurers than anything else. When Mrs. Hamilton finally broke away she was so angry she wouldn't speak to Marie, and when the fastidious Mr. Hamilton heard of it there was almost a divorce.

"Ha, ha, ha, ha!"

"Well, I'm glad you can find it so funny, but here is a story that may not amuse you so much, because your sister was the victim. She was the guest at a lunch given to her at the West Side Yacht club. Suddenly both she and her husband saw Marie Canton in the distance. 'Oh, let's ask Marie over. She is such fun!' your sister said. Better find out who she is with,' put in her husband, laughing. Then Marie came over, sure enough, she brought with her a loud looking woman of the pronounced strawberry blond type. The young man who gave the lunch nearly fainted. Your sister was privileged to see him on the street at all times with the charming blond and Marie. Finally she remonstrated. 'Oh, she's a perfectly nice woman,' explained Marie, 'lives at the Boulevard and drives a pair of horses in the park every day.'

"It turned out in a month or so, when the 'perfectly nice woman' was put out of the Boulevard, that she was the divorced wife of 'Spot' Cole, gambler and also interested 'on the side' in a livery stable, which latter respectable part of his calling accounted for the swell turnout. Whenever the lady meets your sister she insists on bowing, and as she is pretty well known the ordeal is a trifle embarrassing. You see, there are limitations to making friends."

AMERICAN GIRLS IN PARIS.

Home for Lone Workers, Students and Tourists Has Recently Been Provided.

The problem of the American girl alone in Paris, either as student or breadwinner, has been solved more or less satisfactorily for many by the American Girls club, says the Brooklyn Eagle, founded by Mrs. Whitelaw Read. Quite recently a new protector of these expatriated workers has arisen in the shape of the British-American Young Women's Christian association which has become an interesting addition to the American colony. While the American Girls club is intended more particularly for students the Young Women's Christian association offers a home for the low price of four dollars a week, to young women of limited means engaged in any occupation.

The house is situated in the Rue de Turin No. 9, though but a short walk from the business district is well shaded by trees and fronted by a lawn. Some of its features are: An employment directory, reading room, physical culture, home nursing, millinery and French classes on Saturday afternoon tea and social evenings. Bible classes and gospel service. The enterprise has the backing of both English and American women of social prestige; it is the first permanently organized association of the kind in Paris, though at the time of the exposition a regular association branch was started, merely continuing during the summer of 1900. Much of the success of the Paris association is due to the generosity and executive ability of its president, Mrs. John Hoff, who has resided for the past four years in Paris. Mrs. Hoff is a daughter of the late David Whitney, the millionaire, and was born in Detroit, Mich.

The American Girls club established in 1891 by Mrs. Read was the head for American girls studying in Paris. It is located at 4 Rue de Chevreuse, not far from the boulevard Montparnasse, and is on the borderland rather than in the Latin quarter proper. The plain stone facade closes on the street, but a hint of the pleasant interior looking from three sides on to a large court and yard beyond filled with flower beds and shade trees. On the rez-de-chaussee are the dining and tea rooms, the latter the gathering place of the girls every afternoon at five o'clock, the former containing some dozen little tables where meals are served a la carte at very moderate prices. Coffee and tea cost five cents, meats 12 and vegetables five. On the floor above are two drawing rooms and a library with white oak stained room furnished with writing tables, periodicals and a good collection of English and French books. This is a favorite redezvous of the girls, another is, during the warm season, the long balcony overlooking the court, which with its awnings and vine-clad railings offers an inviting place for a chat of the discussion of a novel.

The majority of the pensionnaires are art students, though in summer numerous tourists take advantage of the homelike atmosphere and low rates of the house. They must, however, be unmarried, as married women are debarred from rooming at the club, though they are allowed to come there for meals. The rooms are rented as low as seven per month, the more desirable ones being slightly higher in price. A large hall on the upper floor of the building serves for entertainments, to which many well known artists contribute their talents gratis.

GOT WHAT HE CALLED FOR

Wanted a "Second-Hand" Watch, But the Salesman Was Slow of Comprehension.

He was a foreigner and, having entered a large jewelry store on State street, he said to the clerk behind the showcase.

"I would like to examine some second hand watches."

"Excuse me, sir, but this is not a pawnshop," observed the clerk, haughtily.

"No?" said the man, inquiringly. "But you have plenty of watches," and he pointed to the great showcase full of handsome timepieces, says the Chicago Inter Ocean.

"Certainly," replied the clerk. "Finest stock of watches in town. How much do you want to pay for a watch?"

"How much?" asked the stranger. "Much as he is worth, so that he is a second hand watch and will keep good time."

"See here, sir, you are in the wrong store. We don't keep second hand watches in this establishment."

The stranger's eyes opened wide. "But you have them here, there and there," he said as he began to perambulate. "I have said s-e-c-o-n-d h-a-n-d watches," spelling it out as though to make it plainer, "and they are here everywhere, yet you say you have them not. I do not understand you."

"Well, I do now," replied the clerk, sheepishly, as he quickly opened a showcase and produced a tray of watches. "Just a little mix up. No harm done, I hope. Certainly we have watches with second hands. All our watches have second hands. We make no other."

And the stranger got a second hand watch for which he laid down a $50 note.

SPORTS AND ATHLETICS

Several hundred disciples of Izaak Walton gathered at the lagoon at Garfield park in Chicago one afternoon recently to witness the first open contest of bait casting alone ever held in the world. The tournament was under the auspices of the Chicago Fly Casting club. Fly casting has been the principal contention of fishing clubs until quite recently when bait casting became the proper sport. No open contest of this sort had ever before been witnessed in the world's history of fishing. In 1900 an international fly and bait casting tournament was held in Chicago and another in 1901 in San Francisco. Chicago fishermen have made bait casting the ideal fishing sport. Chicago is the pioneer of that game and has more "overhead" bait casters than any other fishing port in the world. The bait used is generally a fly—all the other kinds are with a fly—and in some cases the old style angle worm. The first event was the "delicacy" contest, with a one-quarter ounce bait at a target located 60, 65, 70, 75 and 80 feet distant. Two casts at each distance were allowed each man. This proved the most exciting contest of the day, excepting alone the long-distance throw. Owing to the exceeding light weight of the bait the caster was obliged to use a very delicate touch in casting. It is considered about the finest piece of work the artist caster can possess. The target is a float with a wooden circumference of one foot of space, then one foot of water to an iron rod, which divides another foot of water for a wooden ball about six inches in diameter in the center of the float. To hit the ball or cast the bait inside of the inner rim counts perfect, or 100. If the bait hits the wooden outering it counts 99. For each foot or fraction from the target a demerit of ten from the perfect score is counted. Before entering the contests the pole, bait, etc. of each contestant was weighed, measured, and the make of the rod noted. This was for the purpose of filing with the international clubs in Europe and in the United States, as an open event for world's records. The winner of the first event was Joseph Hohmann, whose averaged record was 98.5. Mr. Hohmann will be remembered as the winner of the 1902 and 1903 open tournaments for all around casting. There were 38 entries for the second event, which was for "distance and accurate bait casting. This was an exciting contest and was won by A. C. Smith, who secured an average of 98.5. The third and last event was the long distance casting, which was held on the lawn. With a broken rod which had befallen him in the first event, Ernest Bartholomew, of Kalamazoo, Mich., sent the buzzing little leaden bait 169½ feet, ten feet of which were taken off as a demerit for having fallen shy that much of the center tape. There was a gusty, choppy wind blowing and under the conditions the throw of 158 feet was considered a marvel.

Remaining submerged for nearly four minutes is the remarkable performance of Thomas M. Smuitzer of Denver, who has startled the swimming world. The fact that Smuitzer is only 16 years old makes the feat of life more remarkable. In a recent sensational feat performed in London, England, he was able, by means of his extraordinary lung power, to swim the distance of 112 yards five inches in the remarkable time of two minutes 3½ seconds, thus giving him the title of world's amateur champion. The management of baths in London, where this wonderful feat took place, considered it presumption on the part of such a youngster to aspire to break the world's professional record, held by Prof. Finney, who swam under water a distance of 113 yards and one inch, but, as he was a stranger, they agreed to allow him to test his abilities. He desired that the water should be regulated to a temperature of 75 degrees. Plunging into it he did 112 yards and five inches, to the amazement of the attendants and others who came from other parts of the building to see him. He beat Finney's record for time at this distance. It is also worthy of notice, that while Smuitzer had the water at a temperature of 75 degrees, Finney's record was made at 80 degrees, which is considered among swimmers as of great advantage to the latter. It is also pointed out that if the younger had essayed the task from the deep instead of the shallow end of the bath he could have beaten the world's record. Young Smuitzer is going over to England again soon to try for the under water swimming record of the world.

EXECUTION OF CRIMINALS.

Some People Have a Morbid Craving to Witness the Grewsome Scenes.

Probably the people who read Dickens to-day are comparatively few, and largely confined to those who acquired a taste for him when he was the literary fashion, but his acquaintance with human nature, and his vivid picturing of some of its manifestations have left impressions which may occasionally be derived with profit, says the Boston Transcript. Perhaps Charles Dickens would not have acknowledged himself favorable to the abolition of capital punishment, but few men have brought out its distinguishing features in more revolting aspects. Those who still regard it as the best protection of society in extreme cases should read over his story of the rioters in "Barnaby Rudge." The conduct of the culprits was sorry enough, but that of the morbid thousands that gathered about the scaffold to witness the dreadful scene was infinitely worse, and not a few carried away in their hearts the germs of murder who had not harbored them before. It was a picture of soul degradation, the more sickening because it was true to the time and occasion concerning which it was written.

But all that described a scene which took place over 100 years ago, when theft and innumerable other things gave the law its justification for taking men's lives. We have become more civilized of course. We have reduced the hanging of capital punishment to the point where we only exact a life for a life, and we no longer make executions occasions for holidays to which the public is invited. Instead everything is now transacted in quite an exclusive manner, the details of which we get from the privileged reporter. The hangman is no longer a Dennis, taking pleasure in his grewsome trade, but more likely a gentleman upon whom the duty falls as one of the severest ordeals of his life.

It may be assumed that with the long exclusion of the public from these scenes the morbid hunger that only human agony can satisfy has ceased to manifest itself. But that is by no means the case. Between 5,000 and 10,000 requests to witness the hanging of the three car barn bandits in Chicago, which took place the other day, were received. Of course they were refused, but what shall we think of a populace so so large a proportion of which the chance to obtain a sight of suffering has such strong attractions?—and had it not been generally known that the public would not be admitted the applications would doubtless have run several times as numerous!

If singular prominence in this ghoulish quest were two Russian noblemen, making a tour through this country to inspect American methods of administering capital punishment, a strange impulse, indeed, to make men world wanderers. They were probably familiar with Chinese and Japanese methods, with the garrote of Spain and the guillotine of France, but they determined to have a liberal education in this matter. They are awaiting their time waiting for hangings in Chicago. They should come east and secure front seats when an electrocution is in order or if any impromptu methods are desired they might travel south and see how the thing is done with knives, corkscrews and faggots. No Russian need leave his native land to enlarge his acquaintance with hangings. He can find them plenty enough at home, or, if he desires more frequent reminder, let him pay occasional visits to that great hanging scene painted from life and death by Russia's great realist, the lamented Vereschagin. This interest in capital punishment that is still alive in the lower stratum of human nature, and which, if not a more morbid interest is more likely to incite men to murderous deeds than to deter them.

NEVER EAT CANDY ANIMALS.

Japanese Children Taught from Earliest Infancy Not to Be Cruel.

Though the martial spirit is industriously instilled into Japanese children by their mothers from earliest infancy, they are taught to be kind to animals. At home and in the schools they are not even allowed to eat cakes or confectionary made in the shapes of rabbits, frogs or other dumb beasts for fear they by acquire the sin of cruelty.

A teacher never whips a pupil. If the Mikado commits an injustice the culprit stays away until reparation is made.

Prof. Ootima told the foreign colony in his recent lecture here on the national system of education that a German teacher once scandalized a school by his brusqueness. The boys and girls stood it over among themselves and then asked the principal to dismiss him, saying:

"He is a learned man, but a pig."

Being informed, that the teacher had been engaged for a stated time, they were straight to him and said:

"If you leave us we (half a cent's) worth of honor break your contract and go back to Germany."

He went.

About Laces.

All genuine valenciennes lace is hand made and the inhabitants of the islands are strongly opposed to any form of labor-saving machinery. The industry is almost exclusively confined to women and girls, and many families have special designs that are handed down from one generation to another. Two or three firms practically control the output of the islands. Most of the lace exported is made on the island of Gozo. Silk or cotton are the materials used. The demand in America for this beautiful work is becoming greater every year.—Boston Budget.

THE PURSE WAS TEMPTING.

Empty Wallet Gives a Philosophical Chicago Salesman Chance to Study Humanity.

Picking up a worn-out, empty pocketbook, a salesman in one of the large dry goods stores the other day thought he would have a little fun with it. He therefore placed it on the counter, half concealed by the goods lying on it. Presently a shopper entered. Her eyes lighted on the wallet, as by instinct, and while priceing half a score of articles she endeavored to cover it quite artlessly, of course, now with her handkerchief, then with her satchel, and again with her umbrella. The salesman, without appearing to notice her actions, each time removed the pocketbook out of danger, and into light. Finally she adopted a new tactics, and picked it up with the remark:

"Somebody left a pocketbook."

"Yes?" replied the clerk, interrogatively. "Thank you." And he took the leather and disappeared with it for a moment. Upon his return the woman asked, with a slight show of interest:

"Was there much in it?"

"Only three dollars," said the salesman, carelessly, with the ease of one who has been used to lying all his life.

"And who will get it if it isn't called for?" asked the shopper.

"The firm," is the epigrammatical response.

The woman went out. In 10 or 15 minutes a boy came in and asked:

"Was a pocketbook with three dollars found here this morning?"

"Yes," replied the salesman, "but it has been called for."

"O," said the boy, and retired.

And the salesman smiled audibly.

WOODEN LEG IS HIS BANK.

Cashier of Horse Market Is Surprised by the Strange Actions of a Lame Customer.

A man who walked with a decided limp moved around the sale ring at the blue ribbon sale at Glenville the other afternoon watching all the horses sold, but paying particular attention to the trotting teams, of which a number were sold late in the afternoon. After sizing all the consignments up he finally bid in a pair at $370 and then made his way to the cashier's office to pay for them. After giving his name and address he asked the cashier to wait for a moment until he secured the money. The cashier expected to see him fish out a checkbook and then go chasing for some one to identify him, as he was a stranger to the people in the sales office.

But, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, this man carried his bank right with him, and, after asking the cashier to excuse him for a moment, walked over to a chair and sat down, then calmly rolled up his trousers leg to the knee and carefully unscrewed a wooden leg, and, much to the wonderment of the onlookers, extracted a large roll of bills from a hidden cavity in the artificial walking implement, and after screwing on the leg again, walked up and paid the $370 as though getting the money out of his wooden leg was an everyday occurrence.

PORT ARTHUR SIEGE.

A WAR MYSTERY WHICH ONLY TIME CAN SOLVE.

To Be Besieged Is Not to Abandon Hope, Although the Russians Are Hard Pressed by Oku's Army.

Chicago Special.

The situation at Port Arthur is the more interesting to the world because it is clouded by mystery. The garrison is cut off from communication with Russian headquarters, and no news can come from that side.

The rumors of the Japanese army on the peninsula changing position, or the reports of Russians going to or leaving the outer fortifications, are, even if based on facts, of little significance. A general in command of an army 50,000 or 100,000 strong must look first to the feeding and lodging of his men. He will not put a great camp under the fire of an enemy, but, while keeping a strong force in the trenches or on the firing line, will hold his main army some miles to the rear, where the men may be easily supplied with water and food, and where they may be properly quartered.

On the Russian side fortifications well to the front may be barracks as well as forts for the men to be kept under fire, but changes will be in the nature of one brigade relieving another. For, after all, soldiers are mortal men who must be fed and cared for, and who fight better when in possession of health and strength.

At Chickamauga Gen. Bragg screened the movements of his army to the last, having rations cooked in the rear and sent forward in wagons, so that the presence of fires might not betray the position of his divisions. On the union side some of the divisions covered a distance in their day's battle ordered some distance that night and bivouacked in touch with the regiments or brigades left on the line of battle. This was a matter of convenience, and was in no sense a retrograde movement.

While Japanese generals are reckless of life when battle is on, no officers in the world take better care of their men in camp or on the march. So it may be assumed that they have looked carefully after all sanitary and supply questions not only in front of Port Arthur but in the campaign against the Russian line at Liaoyang. If so, heavy masses of troops are being sent there for very much as they were quartered and fed in our civil war, and with a view to their efficient use in battle.

LIEUT. GEN. BARON OKU.
(Commander of Japanese Army Which Is Investing Port Arthur.)

To be besieged in war is not to abandon hope. The army of the Cumberland, penned in Chattanooga for two months in 1863 was never more cheerful nor in better fighting trim. It was pictured at the time, however, in deplorable state. The confederate army reposed in Atlanta, was reported to have lost heart; it never fought with higher spirit or greater fury than in the Nashville campaign that followed the surrender of Atlanta.

The situation of the garrison at Port Arthur is unlike that at Chattanooga or Atlanta or Vicksburg or Metz or Ladysmith. It is completely isolated; that at Chattanooga never was for an hour. The army in Metz was too large for the work in hand, and too large for the food supply. It could not be properly quartered, could not be fed, and could not be efficiently used.

The garrison at Port Arthur, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, is not too large, is well provisioned and is in good quarters. It may be destroyed, or it may be forced to surrender as was the garrison at Vicksburg, but its fighting spirit is not to be judged by the reports of Chinese refugees, but by what it does during the siege and at the end.

The theories of spectacular writers in the absence of facts amount to little. In the large collections of military experts are of little value at this stage of the war except in so far as they are based on experience in other wars. And this war is not like any previous war.

Lieut. Gen. Oku, who commands the Japanese army that is investing Port Arthur, is one of the mikado's noted military chiefs. His troops captured Kinchow on May 26, and heroically stormed Nanshan hill, and he is now directing his efforts toward the reduction of the czar's fortress. Oku first won fame in the Japanese rebellion of 1877, when his defense of the castle of Kumamota was considered masterly. Next he distinguished himself in the war with China in 1894-5, and thus far in the campaign against Russia he has maintained his military prestige.

FLAHETY'S SMILE ONE THAT WON'T COME OFF.

Policeman Took Great Pride in His Appearance — Momentary Excitement Failed to Break Habit of a Lifetime.

Speaking of a noted member of the Kansas City police force, the Star of that city describes him as big and fat and goes on to say that Patrolman Flahety's blue uniform hung limply from the shoulders to the baggy trouser knees. Flahety's price was his hair. It was always brushed flat and down on his large head, with a carefully constructed part down the middle.

Every now and then Flahety withdrew to some secluded spot to brush the few stray locks over the bald place that was just appearing on the crown. Some day, he feared, that bald spot would be discovered. For years he had walked that one beat in the heart of the city, always smiling and always polite. That was how he came to be there.

He had almost memorized the battered little directory in his vest pocket, and he gave a smile free with every word of information. That was why Flahety always wore a flower in his buttonhole as he strolled along his beat. No one ever saw the person give him the flower, but it was a fresh new bloom every day, and the big officer wore it until it had come to be regarded as a part of his uniform. The afternoon was hot, as Flahety passed at the door of the drug store. The boy at the soda water fountain noticed the officer and grinned.

"Have one, Flahety?" he asked.

Flahety grinned in reply and sat where the street car crossing was in plain view.

"Gimme a root beer, Freddie," he answered.

He drank the cool draught in silence and mopped the froth from his rough red mustache with a sky blue handkerchief.

"Much obleeged; hot, ain't it?" he said.

The boy at the fountain stooped to wash the glass, and Flahety passed on out into the sun, fanning his face with his helmet. A barefoot boy passed him, with an armful of papers. Flahety stopped the boy by glances at the headlines of the topmost sheet.

"WHERE IS IT?"

"Gosh!" he muttered. "Blamed if that ain't a good catch. Got 'em right in this block, too—two—on my beat."

He read the story half way down, then the boy passed on with the paper. Flahety still smiled, but he did it unconsciously, for within his mind was filled with gloom.

"Two men right here on this same ol' beat for nine years," he muttered, "but none ov them big catches ever comes my way. I'm gittin' tired ov helpin' kids and women on an' off cars. I'm goin' to do something the next chance. They ain't no use in just being a 'competent' officer for year in an' year out."

Flahety unconsciously straightened up, and he thought, and the blue uniform dropped into position. Without swinging his club, Flahety walked with a soldier-like bearing down the street in search of a chance.

It came sooner than he had expected. Pondering deeply on the antics of fate he wandered on until he arrived where the big office building rose into the smoke-stained sky. A woman's wild scream, from somewhere above him, made visions of murder crowd before the officer's good nature. With a rush Flahety ran up the steps and into the building. A girl stenographer stood on the first landing, looking wonderingly up the stairs.

"Where is it?" gasped Flahety. The girl pointed slowly to the second door and the big policeman dashed away. A faint moan reached him as he paused in the hallway above. It seemed to come from an office with the door closed. Flahety's courage surged to the front in an instant and he opened the door, then paused aghast. A woman sat in a dentist chair, moaning faintly.

"The other one will come easier," said the dentist, when Flahety closed the door. For a moment the stood in the hallway wiping the sweat from his face. Suddenly the smile came again to his face and he drew a glass and comb from his pocket. Glancing furtively around to see that no one was looking, Flahety removed his helmet and smoothed the hair across the small bald spot on the crown of his head.

Ammonia Puts Out Flames.

In these warm days, when gas, oil and gasoline stoves are so much in use a gallon bottle of ammonia should be kept in every kitchen. It will put out a fire. Flames [illegible] ammonia.

HE GOT THE HALF DOLLAR.

How a Wise Dog Secured Its Master's Property in Most Extraordinary Circumstances.

The following dog story is vouched for by the Nashville Banner. The narrator of the anecdote was driving in a town in Mississippi with the owner of the dog. To show the animal's cleverness he got out of the carriage, held his pocketbook to the dog's nose, and then taking therefrom a half-dollar, hid it under a large rock. The men drove on for a mile, and then the dog was commanded to fetch the half-dollar.

The animal, without the least hesitation, started back on a run, and my friend explained that as the rock was heavy the dog would be unable to turn it over, so would have to scratch under it to reach the piece of money, and it would naturally take him some time. It did, for he had not appeared when we retired, about ten o'clock.

Early the next morning we heard a sharp bark at the door. When the door was opened in rushed the dog, dragging with him a pair of trousers which he dropped on the floor.

Of course we were mystified, but the explanation soon came in the shape of a neighbor who lived several miles distant. He rode up on a mule, and inquired if a dog with a pair of trousers in his mouth had come into the house. Just then the pointer walked out on the porch, and the man exclaimed: "Why, there's the dog now."

The caller said that late in the afternoon of the day before he found the dog scratching under a large rock near the road, and thinking he was after a rabbit, stopped and lifted the rock up and to his surprise found a half-dollar underneath. He put the money in his pocket, and the dog followed him home.

Early in the morning, the man said, he got up and opened the window, and the instant he did so the dog seized his trousers and, jumping out of the window, fled with them. The man followed as soon as he could get his mule.

Of course my friend searched the pockets of the trousers which the dog had brought, and there found the half-dollar.

OLD FELLOW HAD 'EM FOUL.

How a Tennessee Justice Was Elected in Spite of a Strong and Popular Opposition.

Gov. Benton McMillin of Tennessee likes to tell this story of a J. P. in his state: "It chanced that this justice of the peace lived in a little town in a far recess. He was the only republican in the district, yet he happened, by some trick of fortune, to hold office.

"At length, when political excitement had reached an unwonted pitch, a project was formed to oust him from his office and put in a democrat. The election was held in an old distillery and the ballot box was a large one. The squire was early on the scene, clad in the roughest of clothes.

"I'LL BURN 'EM UP."

"'Squire-ettiness,' he said, 'I've been a-lookin' 'round here to see plain enough what's a-goin' on. I know what you want. I've been justice of the peace here goin' on 20 years, and I good many times I've saved many of you from goin' to the penitentiary, an' now you're tryin' to put me out of office.

"'But I just want to tell you something. I've got the constitution and the laws of the state of Tennessee in my pocket, and just as sure as you turn me out of office I'll burn 'em up—blame me if I don't—and you may all go to ruin together!'

"The effect of this speech was overwhelming. The ruin threatened was a gallon bottle of ammonia above the [illegible] majority. To be a [illegible] constitution [illegible] a calamity to be [illegible] of ammonia."

RATTLER DEFIED CHARMER.

Was Too Much for East Indian Who Braved Cobras and Other Deadly Reptiles.

Saalleen Brandon, Hindu, who has braved the terrors of giant pythons, boa constrictors, cobras and sundry other reptiles of the jungle with no other protection than his glittering eye, fell to a common American "rattler" at Coney Island the other afternoon, and just now he is in the Emergency hospital, with doctors having grave doubts as to his living to charm another snake.

The New York World says that in an effort to save the life of the snake charmer, Dr. Hall and other surgeons literally drained his arm of almost every drop of blood, through an inch and a half incision, and then swathed the arm in compresses of powerful antiseptics.

RATTLED AND THEN STRUCK.

Saalleen played with his King cobras, his boa constrictors and other snakes at the animal show while several hundred Royal Arcanum guests looked on and shivered. He had transferred all of the big ones back to their cages, and as a final act brought forth his prize diamond Arizona "rattler."

This snake is five feet long and has fangs that make it most dangerous. As he yanked it about, the little American snake sounded its rattles just once and then struck.

Saalleen wasn't quick enough to avoid the darting blow. The fangs buried themselves in his left wrist. Saalleen didn't lose his head, but quietly put the rattler back in the cage. A few minutes later he was writhing on the floor of his dressing room. Dr. Hall was called and hurried him off to the hospital. It's only an even chance that the Hindu will get well.

FINDS BIG SNAKE IN BED.

Reptile Five Feet Long Selects Little Boy for Bedfellow and Enjoys a Good Rest.

The little five-year-old son of Mrs. Nannie Cannon, residing at Limestone, East Tennessee, woke at ten o'clock in the night and told his mother that a snake was in his bed. The mother, regarding it as only a fancy of the child, due probably to dreaming, scoldingly insisted that the little fellow should be quiet and go back to sleep. Sobbing with fear, the little fellow soon became quiet, but in a short while his mother was again aroused by the cries of the child, who insisted that a snake was in the bed. The mother was still unwilling to believe that it was anything more than a fancy, and vehemently scolded the child, until he again became quiet. At intervals through the night she was aroused by the sobbing of the child, whose fear had thrown him into a state of terror. The mother still had no faith in the story, and the night wore away without an investigation.

At daybreak, when Mrs. Cannon arose to go about her household duties, remembering the fretting of the little boy during the night, she turned to see how he was, when the child lay asleep, and there, coiled up beside the youth, lay an unusually large black snake, about five feet in length. Seizing her boy, the mother lifted him from the bed. The disturbance aroused the snake, and before Mrs. Cannon could find any instrument suitable to kill the reptile with it had left the bed, which was in an upstairs chamber, and crawled up the wall into the garret. The snake has not been seen since, and the family have been in nightly dread of the reptile. The child was not in any way injured by its hideous companion.

TELLS A SAD STORY.

NEW YORK GIRL WHOSE LIFE WAS A REAL TRAGEDY.

Lived for Days on Food Which She Picked Up in Central Park—Never Begged But Once—Is Sent to Bellevue.

Hattie Barnes, the young woman who was found in Central park, New York, the other night with her clothes inverted to keep warm, has been committed to Bellevue hospital by Magistrate Whitman. The magistrate listened to a pathetic story from the girl of a struggle for existence. At Bellevue, where the girl repeated her story, the doctors decided she was insane, but that much of her story undoubtedly was true.

The girl had gone through terrible suffering and exposure. Her constitution verified her story to a considerable extent. Her face was a mass of red blotches which were found to be mosquito bites. Her eyes were sunken and her face was emaciated. Her clothes were torn, and her hair unkempt. Although she said she was 23, she looked at least 35. She ate ravenously of food given her by the matron of the police station. Magistrate Whitman asked her what she had been doing.

"I've been living for two weeks in the park without food and didn't feel hungry. Isn't that funny" said the girl.

When pressed for more of her story the girl talked rationally. She said her home is in Ypsilanti, Mich. She said she had been educated as a typewriter in a business college at Ypsilanti. She came to New York two years ago.

"I went from place to place trying to get work," said she. "I finally got a place and kept that four months. Then they said they would have to get a stenographer in my place. That was in March. I tried opening an apartment in Manhattan avenue and letting furnished rooms. Nobody came and I was put out. Then I rented a small room at 13 West Eighteenth street. I had only a few dollars left. I could not get any work. I pawned all but the clothes I have on now for food.

"Two weeks ago last Tuesday I left my room. I owed four weeks' rent, and I could not face the landlady any longer. I had not a cent then. I walked, and walked, and walked. Finally I wandered into Central park. I found an empty arbor and slept there all night. Next day I wandered around the park. When several picnic parties had left I picked up remnants of their lunches. That was all the food I had. That is what I have been doing ever since. Sometimes I saw a policeman and was on the point of asking for help, but I could not get up sufficient courage.

"Up on the playgrounds in the north end of the park one day, I saw hundreds of children enjoying a picnic. They were eating lunches from boxes. I hid behind a clump of bushes for hours. It seemed until they children left, then I hurried out, and in the boxes I gathered up scraps of food. There were sandwiches, crumbs of cake, and pieces of mutilated pie. I guess I got four or five shoe boxes filled before the park men came along to clean up the playgrounds.

"These boxes I hid in a bush down below the embankment, where no one was likely to go, and ate my fill of them daily. I found food for the two or three days. Then I foraged again in the same place."

In all this time she never begged, she said, until Wednesday. Then she asked a woman sitting beside her on a bench for five cents with which she bought bananas. She had one beside her when the policeman found her.

In court the girl said from the time she started to eat one of these bananas until she found herself in the station house in her mind was a blank.

Physicians at Bellevue hospital say they have no doubt the girl will regain her mental poise with sufficient food and a good rest. There is nothing to indicate that her story is not true.

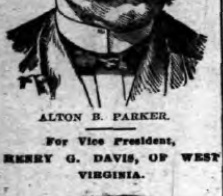
For Vice President,
HENRY G. DAVIS, OF WEST VIRGINIA.



HENRY G. DAVIS.

As many businesses have become extinct by ultra conservatism in regard to advertising, so through extravagant publicity without reckoning the cost.—Ex.

In Albert H. Atterbury the Democrats of Plainfield have a worthy candidate for the highest office in the municipality. If fortune should make him Mayor of this city, Plainfield will have an executive for whom it need not present any apologies.

If advertising could be done by simply bringing one notice to the public it would not be necessary for railroads to keep up the board "Look Out for the Cars." They would put it up until all of the neighborhood had seen it and then take it down. People forget. A thing in fashion once must be continued by the means which brought it in vogue.—Ex

Now and then the speeches delivered by professional stump orators are carefully edited before the spellbinder is allowed to mount the rostrum, but generally the little fry grind out burning thoughts without censorship. Thursday, John S. Gibson, of Newark, got off some remarks about James R. Martine which are not calculated to help his opponents any. The people of Plainfield know Mr. Martine far better than the imported speaker does and consequently what Mr. Gibson said will have no weight.

MISS INEZ STUART SECRETLY WEDDED

SHE WAS MARRIED TO STIRLING MAFFETT ON SEPT. 18.

Considerable surprise was occasioned today in the announcement by Captain and Mrs. P. H. Stuart, of Orange place, of the marriage of their daughter, Miss Inez Stuart, to Frank Reifield Maffett, of Stirling, N. J. The ceremony took place on Sunday, September 18, at Long Hill, N. J., Rev. C. Bauer, of that place, officiating. The couple went to the home of Mrs. Bauer, unaccompanied, and were married there. Mrs. Bauer, wife of the minister, was the witness. As yet Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Moffett have made no plans for the future as to where they will live permanently.

AMUSEMENTS.

Julian Edwards, the composer, has launched Mme. Schumann-Heink well in the comic opera swim with his new "Love's Lottery," at the Broadway Theatre. If Scantlius Scaggs's plot was not of sturdy oak, his lyrics were of willowy grace. There was the air of romance and the smell of English heather in his story, though his heroine was a washer woman of many more years than twenty. Manager Fred C. Whitney, too, builded well for his new star. The cast was exceptionally good, its voices were exceptionally true. It was backed by the best singing chorus which has been seen on Broadway since musical comedy gnawed at the roots of comic opera and stunted it to the level of the variety stage. Among all these necessities of a very refreshing and diverting comic opera Mme. Schumann-Heink was the giant of strength. She gave it nerve, she supplied almost all the humor, she was all over the stage. Musically she was not affected by the frivolous surroundings, for she sang with purity of tone and mastery of technique. She was the former Schumann-Heink of grand opera, plus vivacity, buoyancy, activity.

George Ade's pictorial comedy, "The College Widow," continues to draw packed houses. Since the opening, the capacity of the Garden Theatre has been tested at every performance and Henry W. Savage's tenancy of the house has opened under the most auspicious circumstances, in the quaint characters of interest—types that we all know—Mr. Ade has struck the keynote of popular approval and "The College Widow" will probably continue her uninterrupted sway all season. Dorothy Tennant is the "widow," Frederick Truesdell as Billy, Gertrude Quinlan as the "popular waitress and Frederick Burton as "Bub" Hicks and others have scored individual hits.

The Rogers Brothers are at Liberty Theatre, built for them by the Klaw & Erlanger Amusement Company, ten doors west of the New Amsterdam, in West Forty-second street. "The Rogers Brothers in Paris" is the initial production in the new theatre. The Liberty Theatre was constructed especially for the Rogers Brothers, and they have a financial interest in it. All their future plans in the New York city will be played there. The new theatre has a stage 73 feet wide by 36 feet in depth, equipped with practically every modern improvement for the performance of large productions. It possesses about the seating capacity of the Knickerbocker. The auditorium is 72 feet wide by 60 feet from the footlights to the rear wall. There are only sixteen rows of seats on the lower floor, so that the last row is about forty-eight feet from the stage. In the rear of the orchestra chairs is a promenade, 12 feet wide and 72 feet long. In case of necessity the entire house can, it is announced, be emptied in less than a minute and a half.

LITERARY.

Arthur Evans, the Oxford archaeologist, who has made so many interesting discoveries in the so-called palace of Minos, in Crete, has found in a subterranean sanctuary certain very ancient, small, earthenware statues, representing some goddess and two of her servants. The dress of the figures is said to be highly modern. The goddess, we grieve to say, wears a corset, just such a corset as contemporary man shyly wonders at in the windows of department stores. The skirt of the robe of the goddess is "in Louis XV. style." Her jacket is "exactly as is worn in the present day." Styles of say, 2,000 B. C., styles of 1904. Unless some humorist has "salted" the excavations, you are forced to hold that much nonsense has been written about the splendid, free, unencumped bodies of the female ancients, by no means ancient females, in their time. And "we saints and bedlock and bedrags us" much as our esteemed ancestors did in the morning of the world.—With the Procession, Everybody's Magazine for November.

The Burr McIntosh Monthly for November is a superb number, the photographic art being of the highest. Among the exquisitely fine pictures are those of the Manassas engagement, though the football illustrations are none the less interesting. As usual excellent portraits of people in the public eye, including prominent actresses and men of affairs, make the number of especial value. Find a Candidate at Least.

The Republican leaders in Elizabeth have at last found a candidate for Mayor who will make the race. The nominee is former Alderman Samuel J. Berry, a resident of Elizabeth since 1870, and who served five years as a member of the Board of Aldermen. He was selected first in the old Sixth ward, to serve out the unexpired term of William H. Corbin, and afterward, when the lines were changed, was twice elected from the Eleventh ward, the banner Republican stronghold of Elizabeth. He declined a third nomination.

TARIFF AND LABOR.

High Prices for Manufactured Goods and Low Prices for Labor.

Workingmen sell labor and buy goods. It is to their interest to have labor dear and goods cheap. How can a tariff on goods protect labor? It cannot and does not. Workingmen can never be protected by any tariff on goods, while labor is left on the free list and immigrants can flood this country with cheap labor, as they are now doing.

Labor on the free list means the cheapest possible labor in our protected mills. Tariff-taxed goods means the highest possible prices for manufactured goods. This sort of protection works beautifully for the manufacturers, but very poorly for the employees. It is, in fact, a swindle on the American workingman, for it compels him to pay American prices for goods while selling his labor practically at European wages. If day or week wages are higher here it is because our workers do more work and not because of tariff taxes upon goods.

The humbug of the tariff, so far as labor is concerned, was well summed up by Hon. William D. Kelley, a protectionist leader in Congress in 1872, when he said: "Yes, men are on the free list. They cost us not even freight. We promote free trade in men, and it is the only free trade I am prepared to promote."

A tariff on goods, by barring out foreign goods, makes it easy for our manufacturers to form trusts and put up prices. This they have done. Prices are now from 35 to 40 per cent. higher than in 1897, when the Dingley bill, which increased tariff duties on goods, became law. Trusts and monopolies now control the prices of nearly everything. A leading Republican Congressman, Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, had printed in the Congressional Record of February 26, 1903, a list of 300 trusts with a capitalization of nearly $14,000,000,000. The most of these trusts have been formed since 1897.

The Dingley bill did not put a duty on labor to keep out foreigners and to protect American wages. It left labor on the free list and 3,000 immigrants a day, or nearly 1,000,000 a year, are landing in this country to compete with American workingmen and keep wages down. When workingmen strike for higher wages or shorter hours their places are often filled by these foreigners. Many strikes are lost or partly lost, because of this steady inflow of foreigners, all looking for work. If the workers now on strike in the cotton mills, steel mills, beef packing houses, etc., are lost, it will be because there is plenty of idle labor, and it is easy for employers to obtain workers at lower wages. In fact, the employers would not have permitted or encouraged strikes, had it not been for this great influx of foreign labor and for the fact that high tariffs and high trust prices have prostrated our industries and thrown thousands of men out of employment.

The tariff must be changed somehow, if the workingmen are to be benefited by it.

WHAT TWO DOLLAR WHEAT WILL MEAN.

"May wheat is going to two dollars," is the cry of the gamblers in the wheat pits. Republican organs echo the cry and follow it with "Hurrah for Roosevelt and Prosperity!"

Prosperity for whom? Probably not for the farmer, certainly not for the consumer. If by any chance wheat should go to two dollars a bushel, the price of flour would advance correspondingly. There would be an increase of 100 per cent. in the price of bread. This might please a few people, comparatively speaking, but it would be a great hardship to millions and tens of millions of wage earners who find bread dear enough at present prices. The only way in which bread riots could be prevented if wheat should really go to two dollars per bushel, would be by the repeal of the duty of twenty-five cents per bushel on wheat, and even that might only relieve the situation in a measure. This is one of the many taxes on food stuffs levied to fool the farmer, who in an ordinary year is able to supply the home demand, and to export besides.

A GOOD SIGN IN NEW YORK.

The reappearance of Smith M. Weed as an active Democratic leader in New York State, is another welcome sign of Democratic harmony and coming victory. Mr. Weed was one of Samuel J. Tilden's most aggressive and trusted lieutenants during two of the Cleveland campaigns he was conspicuous for successful leadership. In Clinton and adjoining counties Mr. Weed is a political power, and his activity this year will be worth several thousand votes to the Democratic ticket. No Republican, familiar with political conditions in northern New York, will deny this.

THREE SLANDER SUITS

Mr. and Mrs. Abrams Plaintiffs and Defendants.

ITS AN OLD FUED

Plainfield Families Concerned in the Unpleasant Affair Which is in Court.

Resulting from an old family feud, which has been in existence with more or less strength for the last two years, there are at present three suits for $20,000 each awaiting trial in the Supreme Court. One is brought by Hattie and David Slonim, of New Brunswick, against Morris and Sarah Abrams, of this city, on the charge of slander, the other two being on the same charge, brought by Mr. and Mrs. Abrams against Marcus and Annie Silbert, and against Mr. and Mrs. Carl Silbert. The parties concerned in the last two cases are both residents of this city.

To a certain degree all the families concerned in the quarrel are related. Leo Slonim and Marcus Silbert were once partners in the jewelry business and were located on Somerset street. The Silbert brothers married Slonim's sisters, and when the firm dissolved partnership a general row ensued. Mrs. Abrams, it is said, has been somewhat intimate with both families and has from time to time repeated remarks which have caused the family feud to burn brighter.

Two days later, through their counsel, William Newcorn, Morris Abrams and his wife brought the two suits against the Silbert brothers on the same charge for the same amount. The lawyer for the defendant in the last two cases and for the complainant in the first case will be Craig Marsh, of this city.

ESKESON'S COMPANIONS BARELY ESCAPE HIS FATE

WERE ON COAL TRAIN WHICH CAUSED FATAL CRASH AT WHITEHOUSE.

William Ross and John Caffrey, the two West End boys who were with Edward Eskeson when he received fatal injuries falling beneath a train at Grasshead Friday afternoon, narrowly escaped the same fate themselves later in the day. When their companion gave an agonized cry as the wheels passed over him, they became so frightened that they ran away. Jumping aboard a west-bound coal train they rode as far as Hampton Junction and then caught another one to come back to Plainfield.

The latter was the one which crashed into the milk train at Whitehouse Friday evening and caused one of the worst wrecks the Central has experienced in years. The boys were seated on top of a coal car some distance behind the engine and when the collision came, they were badly shaken up but saved themselves from falling by clutching the sides. Despite this unexpected turn of affairs they clambered aboard another train and finally made their way to Plainfield. Young Ross is said by the local police to be the most daring train jumper they know of and their frequent warnings have remained unheeded.

CHALLENGERS NAMED BY THE REPUBLICANS

CITY COMMITTEE ALSO ARRANGES FOR ELECTION RETURNS.

It was announced at a meeting of the Republican city committee Saturday night that a pianist had been engaged and popular music will be rendered at headquarters every night until after the campaign. The committee has made arrangements for a special telegraph wire at headquarters for election night when returns will be received.

These challengers were announced for election day and their names have been forwarded to Elizabeth: First ward—First district, Fred Atkinson and Fred H. Freeman; Second district, J. H. Adams and W. L. Gloak; Second ward—First district, Fred'k J. Pope and John Keely, Second district, W. A. Kelis and Fred I. Smith; Third ward, Stephen Hignam and Byron B. MacDonald; Fourth ward—First district, John DeMem and Fred J. Hoff; Second district, William A. Westphal and Amos Gray; Third district, Andrew McArdell and Samuel Craig.

J. W. Seamus Hurt.

J. W. Seamus, of Trenton, father of George W. Seamus, of West Front street, met with a accident on Saturday which resulted in the fracture of his arm and other injuries. He was driving down a hill with a load of brick, when the wagon tongue broke, throwing him off his seat.

LOCAL TEAMS VICTORIOUS

Alis and O. F. C. Elevens Win at Football.

BOTH GOOD GAMES

Locals and Plainfield High School Lose to Newark and Cranford Aggregations.

The Alis football team journeyed to Jersey City Saturday afternoon, and administered defeat to the Columbia Field Club, of that city, by the score of 11 to 5. The game was the first of the season for the Alis eleven, and was in every way satisfactory to the captain and the players. They played a hard steady game, their line bucking being strong and their defensive far superior to their opponent's. The tackling of Phillips, and end runs by Cumings were features of the game.

The Columbia eleven drew the first blood by scoring a touchdown early in the first half. The goal was not kicked. This was the only tally which the Jersey City team made, the score at the end of the first half being 5 to 0. In the second part of the game, the Alis players crossed their opponent's line twice, Cuming making the first touchdown, and Moore following soon after with five more points. Phillips kicked the goal from the first touchdown, making the score finally 11 to 5.

The following is the line-up of the Alis team: Thayer and Wilson, left end; Voorhees, left tackle; Guier, left guard; Bourgeois, center; Darby, right guard; Egan, right tackle; W. Moore, right end; Phillips, quarter back; Cuming, left half; Moore, right half; MacNaughton and Whitney, full back.

Though the Alis-Dunellen game was cancelled at the last minute, the Orange Field Club satisfactorily represented the city on the gridiron Saturday by defeating the Flemington aggregation by the score of 16 to 0. The game was played on the Orange Oval, and though most of the Flemington team were disabled and to a great extent, a substitute eleven represented them, still the game was hard fought and exciting.

It was apparently greater weight and superior team work that won the game for the local players, the ball being in their hands most of the time. Smith, McCullough and Emmons played a strong game for the O. F. C. The touchdowns were made by W. Mc Cullough and Smith, the latter carrying the ball over the line late in the game. The one goal from the touchdown was made by Sherwin.

Referee—A. Willis West. Umpire —Foran, of Flemington. Time of halves—15 minutes.

Both the local scholastic teams suffered defeat Saturday, the Leal's School losing to the Newark Academy team in the morning, and the Plainfield High School eleven being worsted by the Cranford High School in the afternoon. The score of the Leal's game was 12 to 0, the Newark boys crossing the line once in each half. Shirley made the first touchdown and Pope the second. The former kicked both goals.

The Leal's School team was outweighed, and was slower in getting off than its opponents. Their line-up follows: Underhill and Suffern, right end; Gutierrez, right tackle; Jewett, right guard; Hollis, center; Howard, left guard; Curtis, left tackle; Manning, left end; Reece, quarter back; Glenney, right half back; Wilcox, left half; Dallas, full back.

The High School boys fell under the Cranford's attack by the score of 23 to 0. In spite of the large score, the game was interesting, and far from discouraging to the local school boys. The touchdowns were made by F. Cooper and F. Smith, two in each half. C. Smith kicked three goals. The P. H. S. boys lined up as follows: Jones, left end; Bentley, left tackle; Freeman, left guard; Bogart, center; Brager, right guard; Jahn, right tackle; Hockwell, right end; Williams, quarter back; W. Douglass, left half; J. Douglass, right half; Taylor, full back.

Big Rass-Meeting.

The Democrats have arranged for a big mass meeting to be held in Jacobs Theatre in Elizabeth, Thursday night. Mayor Ryan will preside and among the spellbinders will be Charles G. Black, the gubernatorial candidate; Hon. Benton McMillan, United States Senator from Tennessee; James K. Marsine and Richard V. Lindabury.

AUTO PARADE A SUGGESS

Fifty-seven Machines Participate in Saturday's Event.

VIEWED BY THOUSANDS

Committee Greatly Pleased With the Result, and Another Will be Given Early Next Summer.

Viewed by many hundreds of people all along the route, Plainfield's first automobile parade took place Saturday afternoon and passed off to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. Fifty-seven machines of all sizes participated and the long line of cars and roadbeats testified to the help the sport has taken upon the city. So attempt was made at decoration but the initial effort was so successful it means another and more elaborate one early in the coming summer.

The start was made from in front of the Crescent Avenue church shortly after 3 o'clock and long before that time the adjacent streets were crowded with sightseers. In the business section still larger crowds prevailed, hundreds of people coming from the suburbs.

Leading the line in a light runabout was Frank L. G. Martin, the grand marshal, and Assistant Grand Marshal Dr. P. J. Zegito, while directly behind was a huge car containing city and borough officials, parade officials and others, as follows: Mayor O. L. Jenkins, Mayor N. B. Smalley, Postmaster Bird, Chief T. O. Doane, Acting Chief of Police Frederickson, Council President R. I. Tolles, James F. Buckle, City Judge William N. Runyon, George H. Frost, A. L. Force, Charles B. Morse, George M. Kirkner, William F. Arnold, Recorder Dond, Chief Marshal George Weiss and Frank H. Smith. The vehicle was provided by Mr. Martin and the occupants were his guests. All the cars were in the first division with another big "van" at the end carrying the Plainfield band, which enlivened matters with music as the machines sped along. Dorsey W. Hyde's machine led those in the first division.

F. R. Stevens led the second division, consisting mainly of gasoline and steam automobiles. Several of the owners put original ideas into effect in the way of novelties in them, the most noticeable being William Stanbury's A young man attired as "Polly Prim" who seated at his side but belied the name by bestowing generous smiles and roguish winks at the crowds.

The touring car of Thomas Wheeler, of Park avenue, presented a very pretty appearance because of the occupants' attire, four in number, all being in white costume. Mr. Wheeler acted as chauffeur and the remaining three were in the rear seat.

The route as traversed was a great treat to many of those in the vehicles as it led through some of the prettiest portions of the city and borough. Decorations on the residences of flags and bunting were frequently seen while Otto Musck, of Watchung avenue, had one on his porch that was greatly admired. It consisted of a large painted automobiling scene, depicting machines speeding along a dusty road, set off with numerous flags.

The parade did not end at the place originally set for it, on Grove street, but proceeded back to the starting point and by passing around Watchung and Crescent avenues, enabled those taking part to see the others. The machines bearing the committee, the city officials and the band, were drawn up to the curb and reviewed the procession. Along the route there were a few breakdowns but no accidents of any serious nature occurred.

Chairman Kirkner, voicing the sentiment of the committee, desires to warmly thank the participants in the turnout both from Plainfield and the neighboring towns for their hearty support, and particularly the women without whose presence the affair would not have been a success. In his opinion a similar gathering in June when when all could be attired in their costume would be worth coming a long distance to see. He also wishes to express the committee's appreciation of the courtesy shown by the press of Plainfield, so ably seconded by that throughout this portion of the State.

Coriell Property Sold.

The Isaiah Coriell property on Grandview avenue, near Somerset street, was sold yesterday afternoon by Special Master in Chancery Henry C. Snyder, in a partition case, the complainant being Joel Codington and the defendants, Samuel Howell and others. The purchasers were John W. Codington and Charles R. Codington, the purchase price being $3,223.50.

Hurt in Football Game.

While playing in the Columbia-Alits football game at Jersey City, Saturday, Allan Wilson, of Grove street, had one finger broken and the muscles of his right hand badly sprained. The injuries were dressed by Dr. Dundon and it will be several weeks before he is to resume his position.

LAID THE CORNER-STONE

Ceremony on Site of Grace Parish House Saturday.

PROCESSION OF CLERGY

Members of Many Denominations Gathered to Witness the Service—Those Who Took Part.

The ceremonies attendant upon the laying of the corner-stone of the new parish house of Grace church on Saturday afternoon, attracted a large number of ministers, members of Grace church and other congregations in the city.

The procession formed in the rubing room of Grace church. A cruciter and the church choir preceded the following clergy:

Rev. A. S. Peak, St. Stephen's church; Rev. Robert T. Walker, Church of the Heavenly Rest; Rev. Dr. W. G. Snodgrass, First M. E. church; Rev. George Mooney, Monroe Avenue church; Rev. Dr. H. H. Sleeper, of Elizabeth; Rev. H. R. M. Pierce, of Perth Amboy; Rev. J. P. Taylor, Rev. W. H. Nielson, Rev. William Bryce Morrow, Rev. T. Logan Murphy, Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson and Rev. E. M. Rodman.

The procession proceeded down the side aisle and at the main doors was met by the wardens and vestry of the church who preceded the clergy up the main aisle to the chancel.

The opening prayer was said by Rev. Dr. Sleeper, followed by the rector's charge by Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson. The lesson was read by Rev. T. Logan Murphy and prayers by Rev. Robert T. Walker, after which Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, made the address of the afternoon. The closing prayer and benediction was by Rev. Mr. Stevenson.

The procession then returned by the way of the middle aisle through the tower doors to Sycamore street to the foundation of the new building where the corner-stone was laid by Rev. E. M. Rodman, rector-emeritus of the church. Mr. Rodman used a silver trowel, presented to him for the occasion.

Following the laying of the stone, the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Stevenson.

Y.M.C.A. PHYSICAL WORK TO BEGIN ON MONDAY

DIRECTOR HENCKEL ARRANGES FOR FALL EXHIBITION.

Formally opening the physical department of the Y. M. C. A., there will be an exhibition and social at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium, on Monday evening, October 31. The affair will be entirely in charge of the physical department, with Fred A. Henckel the chairman of the committee on arrangements.

In addition to the social an enjoyable programme has been planned for on the gymnasium floor. The regular fall exhibition will take place which will be an unusually interesting one. Among the attractions will be a mass run by members of the evening class, a dumb-bell drill, conducted by the physical director, and apparatus work, on the parallel bars, horse, bench and high bar. A squad drill on the parallels, the high bar and the horse will be a feature. As a special attraction, Messrs. Hansen and Bentliff will exhibit in tumbling, and a basket ball game between two picked teams will conclude the programme.

As there is an unusually large evening class this year, the exhibition will be one of the most interesting ones which has ever been conducted under the auspices of the local association. There are a number of new members in the gymnasium class, whose work on the various pieces of apparatus is remarkable, and the special squad work will include several good gymnastic features.

CO. K'S ACTIVITY.

Plans for Washington Trip and for a Fair Next Year.

Plans for Company K's proposed Washington trip on March 4 next have been made. It was recommended by the committee to hold the annual fair this year for a period of two weeks. The time suggested was February 18 to February 25. The action of the committee in making such a recommendation has not yet been voted up on by the company at large.

There are several changes in the officers of the company, some non-commissioned officers still remaining vacant. Harold Whitney has been dropped from his position as corporal on account of his removal from the State. There will be a meeting of the non-commissioned officers association at the armory on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock.

SLIM GOLF ATTENDANCES

Counter Attractions on Saturday Almost Deplete Links.

THE SCORES POSTED

Charles A. Reed Wins the Honors for Both Weekly Competitions at the Park Club Course.

That the automobile parade had its effect in the attendances at the local golf courses on Saturday there is no doubt. While there were a number at the Hillside and Park Golf Clubs to take part in the regular events there was a notable absence of many who follow the game just for the pleasure of it and not for the sake of gaining anything through competition. At the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club the weekly play for the Golf Committee cup was the chief attraction. In this J. A. Tompkins won first honors with an 81 net, D. W. Taylor was second with a score of 83, and Walter Peterson and C. B. Morgan were tie for third honors with net scores of 85. These scores were posted:

J. A. Tompkins, 92, 11—81; D. W. Taylor, 96, 14—82; Walter Peterson, 89, 4—85; C. B. Morgan, 91, 6—85; D. H. Rowland, 100, 13—88; S. D. Lounsbury, 93, 8—85.

These scores were posted for the Gaston cup:

Harold Robert, 93, 0—93; E. A. Cruikshank, 108, 0—108.

Miss Edith Tracy and Howard Huntington won a mixed foursome.

There was a little larger attendance than usual at the Park Golf Club and a number of scores were returned for the President's and Park Golf Cup trophies. The point-winners for the handicap cup were Charles A. Reed, Rogers T. Rogers and S. St. John McCutchen, while for the scratch cup those who won points were Charles A. Reed, S. St. John Mc Cutchen and Raymond S. Carroll. The fact that Mr. Reed took first honors for both cups indicates that he is steadily improving his game and is now considered one of the best in the club. The scores returned for the two trophies are as follows:

Charles A. Reed, 96, 11—85; George T. Rogers, 108, 17—86; S. St. John McCutchen, 99, 9—90; Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, 106, 16—90; Samuel Townsend, 107, 14—93; Raymond S. Carroll, 100, 5—95; J. H. Howell, 114, 18—101; Herbert Rogers, 115, 7—108.

The event at the Westfield Golf Club was the second round for the club championship. This was the result: Marshall Winfield Stacy beat C. H. Halsted, 2 up and 3 to go; J. A. Worth beat W. R. Davis, 5 up and 4 to go; Joseph Sherman, Jr., beat R. I. Townley, 2 up and 1 to go; W. J. Rogers, Jr., beat J. A. Woodward, 1 up in 19 holes. The semi-finals will be played next Saturday and on Election Day there will be the final play.

A feature of the social part of the club life was the euchre for women held during the afternoon at the Westfield Golf Club. There was a large attendance and the party was spirited. Miss Budell won first prize and Mrs. Samuel White second prize.

SPENT HIS INSURANC MONEY ON HIS FRIENDS

PLAINS OCTOGENERIAN WHO WON'T LEAVE ANYTHING TO RELATIVES.

Believing it is better to enjoy his own insurance than to let someone else get it after his demise, Daniel Baker, one of the oldest residents of Scotch Plains, last week sold a paid up policy of $65 to a Plainfield speculator for $10. Baker is now in his eighieth year but he hurried into the village when the money was handed to him and had a good time for the rest of the day. He entertained friends at dinner in the hotel and also provided various refreshment for them until the insurance gave out.

Baker is enjoying good health and he declares he will live long enough to fool the speculator who bought the policy on his life.

Barn Social by Y. P. S.

Celebrating Hallowe'en, the Young People's Society, of the First Baptist church, will hold a barn social on Saturday, October 29, in William Newcorn's barn on West Front street, above West End avenue. The usual Hallowe'en pastimes will be the features of the evening's enjoyment. Refreshments will be served and a informal time will conclude the affair. The social is in charge of the regular committee of the society, which consists of Miss Velma Oakley, chairman, Miss Harriet Matteson, Miss Alma Mackay, Mrs. J. B. Probasco, and Fred Armstrong.

—A little Italian boy, who has been hanging about the city for the past ten days, was picked up in the East End by Patrolman Charles Flynn Monday night. To Chief Kisly yesterday he said he had run away from his home in Philadelphia and arrangements were made to send him back.

GOD'S VALUE OF MAN

Estimate Placed on Human Being, Subject of Sermon.

REV. DR. SCHENCK'S TALK

Quotes Scripture to Show Position of Man in the World—His Authorities.

The value of man, in his relation to the universe, and in his relation to God, was the theme of Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck's sermon at Trinity Reformed church Sunday night. The pastor took for his text a part of the eighth Psalm, "When I consider the heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou has ordained: what is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?"

In introducing his subject, Rev. Dr. Schenck spoke of the comparative smallness of man, in the light of the great works of the creation, the sun, the stars, and the vast dome of heaven. Turning from this point of view, the preacher mentioned five reasons which establish the value of man far above God's other creations.

Man's value is determined from the fact that he is the object of the Divine love, was Dr. Schenck's first point. He referred to the passage in Scripture which states that not a sparrow falls to the earth without the divine notice, concluding with the words, "How much greater are ye than many sparrows." As further proof of the value of man in the sight of God, Dr. Schenck spoke of the many institutions of God, which are solely for man. He quoted the words, "the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath." The immortality of man is another estimate which God places upon man, which the so-called lower animals do not possess. The fact that man has an existence hereafter clearly identifies him as superior to other forms of life.

Following out the thought of man's future life, Dr. Schenck mentioned Christ's sacrifice for the sins of man, as the highest proof of God's estimation of his value, and in considering this remarks referred to the awful consequences which come to the man whose soul he lost. As a conclusion to his sermon, Dr. Schenck quoted the words of scripture, "what profit it a man if he gain the whole world and lose himself?"

J. E. MARTINE SURE HE WILL BE ELECTED

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS IS OPTIMISTIC.

James E. Martine, Democratic nominee for Congress, is making the fight of his life to defeat Congressman Charles N. Fowler. During the past week he has travelled night and day through Morris and Warren Counties, some days speaking at three and four meetings. In tarvelling from place to place, an automobile has been used as a means of conveyance over mountains and country roads.

The other night Mr. Martine, accompanied by the Assembly candidate from Morris County, left Morristown for Netcong, a distance of twenty-one miles. When within fifteen miles of the destination the auto broke down and the Congressional candidate started on foot for Netcong, five miles distance. He was over an hour late, but was amply repaired by meeting over 800 citizens who was patiently waiting his arrival. The other candidates, who also walked, arrived later.

Thursday night Mr. Martine rode twenty miles through a driving rain storm and when he reached Morristown he was drenched.

Today Mr. Martine declared with emphasis: "Win, of course, I'll win. As sure as I live I will sit in the next Congress to represent the Fifth district."

This week Mr. Martine will continue his campaigning through portions of the district not yet reached. Thus far he has been enthusiastically received at every meeting.

UNION AFTER HIM.

Whitney Frasee May be Fined for Playing With Non-Union Band.

Because Whitney Frasee organized The Plainfield Cornet Band here composed chiefly of non-union musicians, he has received notice from the Elizabeth Union that he is open to a fine of $25 and failure to pay this will make him liable to suspension. Mr. Frasee is not worrying much about the matter, according to his own words. He says that if he is fined, he will let it go by default and drop out of the union. It is understood that Kenneth Stuart a union musician, who played with the band on that day, is also likely to be fined.

GOD'S VALUE OF MAN HELD FOR CHICKEN THEFTS

Serious Charges Against E. Bergen and R. Waldron.

WAIVED EXAMINATION

Had Previously Been Arrested for Drunkenness and Disorderly Conduct—Bergen Being Fined.

Arrested at different times Saturday and Sunday for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, Richard Waldron and Edward Bergen, two West End young men, faced more serious charges in the city court before Justice Mosher Tuesday.

They were accused by Charles Giebelhouse, of West Front street, and seconded by the police, with raiding his hennery on several occasions and stealing valuable fowls which he raises for exhibition purposes. Both had been suspected and Patrolman McCarthy has been watching them for several weeks. Saturday night Bergen was picked up for drunkenness and Sunday Waldron was taken in custody, having been found intoxicated. Bergen was fined $8 yesterday morning and Waldron's case was put over, additional facts coming to light which strengthened the belief that he, at least, was one of the chicken thieves. Later in the day the full facts were learned and the two were formally charged with the thefts.

They waived examination when arraigned Tuesday and both were held for appearance before the Grand Jury. They have retained William G. DeMesa as counsel.

The police said today that chicken thieving has been prevalent in the city of late and the greater part of it has been done by a gang of boys and young men who congregate about the former freight station on South Second street, near Plainfield avenue. As a rule the stolen fowls were sold but in other instances they were taken by the gang to the secluded places along Green brook and roasted. The Giebelhouse hennery and others in that section have been raided many times but since the gang has been watched they have stopped.

DECLARED GUILTY OF YOUNG WOMAN'S CHARGES

WILBUR MILLER CONVICTED OF ATTACK ON MISS ELIZABETH LARKIN.

Charged by Miss Elizabeth Larkin, of Murray Hill, with assault and battery and criminal attack, Wilbur N. Miller, of North Plainfield township, was placed on trial before Judge Schenck at Somerville yesterday. The case took the whole session of court and went to the jury last night. It returned in a short time with a verdict of guilty in both instances.

The complainant went on the witness stand yesterday and declared that she and Miller had been in the employ of James Smith, a farmer living near Murray Hill. One night recently they drove to Plainfield and on the way home, while in Somerset county, Miller attacked her. He tore her clothing, she said, and shoved her badly before she could get away. After she did she went into a mill along the road and stayed there until morning.

The defense admitted that Miller had taken her to Plainfield and claimed she had for a long time "been setting her cap" for him and did not resist the attack, which was in no way violent.

Wants to Carry Freight.

When the Union County Board of Freeholders meet on Thursday, Nov. 3, the Morris County Traction Company hope to see the ordinance granting them a franchise passed on third reading There now appears to be a hitch in the proceedings for it is understood that the trolley company wants to operate freight cars between Summit and Elizabeth and to this there is considerable objection. The ordinance now specifies that no freight shall be carried, but the company hopes to have it amended to allow this.

Paul Nachtway, of Watchung avenue, conducts a first-class delicatessen store, where you can always find a full line of cheeses, butter, eggs and bottled and canned goods of every description.

HOPE CHAPEL'S PLAY

Story of Scottish Reformation is to be Produced.

THOSE TO PARTICIPATE

To be Given Two Nights—Promises to be Successful Affair.

With nearly the entire number who are to take part in attendance, the second rehearsal for the production of the "Scottish Reformation, or John Knox vs. Mary Queen of Scots," in Hope chapel next Monday and Tuesday, was held last Monday. Rev. L. R. Howard, who made the arrangements, was in charge and he was highly pleased with the manner in which the principals went through the respective scenes.

From present indications the production will be one of the largest and best church entertainment yet given in the city. It will be composed entirely of home talent, drilled by Mrs. H. E. Monroe, of Washington, D. C. There are numerous pretty scenes and with the costuming appropriate to the period depicted, the rendition will be very much out of the ordinary. The story is in nine parts the synopsis being as follows:

Rev. L. R. Howard.
Pastor of Hope Chapel

I. Allegorical processional, rallying of the clans.

II Illustrated lecture by Mrs. H. E. Monroe, Washington, D. C.

III. Scene, Students of Glasgow University and Puritans on their way to Leith to greet Queen Mary.

IV. Lecture continued.

V. Scene, John Knox at the Court of Mary, Queen of Scots.

VI. Lecture continued.

VII. Scene, Queen Mary on her way to execution.

VIII. Lecture continued.

IX. Evening closes with a march, representing the opening leaves of the Bible.

Mr. Howard has assigned the various parts in the production as follows:

BLACKMAIL HOUSES, MR. GILBERT SAYS

Former Mayor Recommends Common Council to Amend Ordinance.

PERMIT IS REVOKED

The City Fathers Prevent Another Shack Being Built—Action to be Taken Later.

A partial report was submitted to the Common Council Thursday regarding "spite" houses, of which Former Mayor L. V. F. Randolph, of East Front street, complained, at the last session of the city fathers. Robert L. Lee, chairman of the fire and building committee, stated that while the committee had held several meetings and had consulted with Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, it was not prepared to present a complete report.

Mr. Lee then offered a resolution providing that inasmuch as the fire and building committee by investigation in the office of the county clerk, ascertained that Antonio Mara was not on April 6, 1904, the sole owner of the property upon which the alleged "spite" house has been erected, which is about 700 feet north of Bonhamtown street on Front street, where at the time two permits were given for the erection of houses there, and in view of the fact that Building Inspector T. O. Doane was not acquainted with the true facts of the case at the time, that the permit for the erection of the second building be revoked and that the owner of the property be notified of this action.

This resolution was adopted, after which Mr. Lee explained that the investigation was not yet completed and that the committee would report to the Common Council from time to time on the matter. The committee made no report on the charges preferred against Mr. Doane by Mr. Randolph.

A communication bearing on the above subject was presented by Former Mayor Alexander Gilbert in which he characterized the buildings referred to as "blackmail" houses. This is the text of his letter:

"October 20, 1904.

"To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield.

"Gentlemen:

"The erection of 'spite houses,' or to call them by a more appropriate name 'blackmail houses,' should be an utter impossibility in Plainfield. Public sentiment should be strong enough to cover with reproach and contempt any individual or party who engages in such an enterprise, openly in such an undertaking. Our building ordinance should be broad enough to protect our citizens against damage to property from such a case. Buildings of the character referred to are not only a damage to property in their immediate neighborhood, but to the growth and development of the city as well. A dozen or more of such buildings scattered throughout the city in well improved neighborhoods would operate as a severe check to the growth of the city. Who would buy property or build in the neighborhood of a spite house?

"The question would naturally arise, does the Common Council possess the power to protect the city against damage of this character? The logical answer to this question must be that the Common Council has the power to pass ordinances to prohibit any act on the part of its citizens that can be clearly proven to be detrimental to the welfare of the city. The Common Council has already adopted a building ordinance to regulate the erection of buildings, which provides for the appointment of a building inspector whose duty it is to pass upon all applications for permits for the erection of buildings.

"In the discharge of this duty one would suppose that he would consider all the circumstances connected with every application, and ascertain before granting any permit whether plans and specifications complied with the ordinance, and if any other reasons existed why the application should be denied. If he could clearly determine, before granting a permit, that the applicant proposed erecting a spite house, or any building the character of which would be detrimental to the welfare of the city, it would clearly be his duty to refuse the permit. In order to give emphasis to this point would it not be well to amend the building ordinance, to make clear his duty in this particular. Something like the following would seem to meet the case:

"'Whenever the building inspector shall have good reason to believe that an applicant for a permit to erect a dwelling house, intends to erect what is commonly known as a 'spite house' or any other building which shall be detrimental to the welfare of the city it shall be his duty to refuse a permit for the same, and refer the applicant to the Common Council.'

"Other amendments providing for cellars and well constructed chimneys in all buildings intended for dwelling would prevent the erection of buildings of too flimsy a character.

"This is a matter of such vital importance to the whole community that it calls for a remedy for existing offenses and a prevention of similar offenses in the future.

"Very respectfully,

"A. Gilbert."

This communication was referred to the fire and building committee.

NO DEFINITE DESIGN FOR TRUST CO. BUILDING

COMMITTEE OF DIRECTORS TO DECIDE UPON PLANS.

Although no definite action has been taken regarding plans for the handsome new building to be erected at the corner of Park avenue and West Second street by the Plainfield Trust Company, a committee from the directorate has been engaged in collecting desirable information and ideas which will be presented to the full board when completed. It is the purpose of the directors to ascertain exactly just the kind of a building needed and the way it should be furnished and then the services of an architect will be employed.

The committee having the matter in charge has visited several large cities and closely investigated the banking institutions' structures for the purpose of getting the very latest ideas as to construction. While the institutions in New York are supposed to be the height of modern thought and invention, the committee has deemed it wise to visit other cities.

It is expected that a decision in the near future so that progress can be made in the work of construction. The company hopes to be able to occupy the new building, it is said, during the early part of next year. The customary notice will have to be given the tenants affected by the purchase of this property before the work of demolition can be started. It is the purpose of the company to erect the building first and the improvement of the remaining portion of the property will be an after consideration.

MRS. ROTH BURIED.

Father Egan Officiated at Service in St. Mary's Church.

Funeral services over Mrs. Caroline Roth, aged sixty-four years, who died Wednesday night at her home, 309 Arlington avenue, were held in St. Mary's church Friday a. m., Father Egan officiating. She had been in poor health for some time. She was the widow of Martin Roth, who for a number of years was one of the best known shoemakers in this city. Mrs. Roth was formerly Miss Caroline Dunn and had always lived in this State, where she was born. Four children survive her, Martin and John Roth, Mrs. Emil Scheidecker and Mrs. Peter Blaich. The interment was in St. Mary's cemetery.

ALFRED SPEER,

THE ORIGINAL

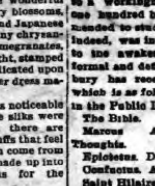
Port Grape Wine Producer in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had

The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich and so is the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while those grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. The New Jersey apple, for instance, makes a cider that was always popular the world over. If you want a wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards. Sold by Druggists.

SPORTS AND ATHLETICS

With the retirement of Herman Long from the management of the Toledo American Association club, there passes from public view one of the greatest players the game has known. At his own request he has been released as his throwing arm has finally gone back on him entirely. Long was one of the oldest players in the professional ranks and learned the game on the Chicago prairie. For years he was recognized as probably the leading shortstop in the country. He was a member of the famous Boston infield, which included Tenney at first, Lowe at second and Collins at third. Not only as a fielder was Long among his topnotchers, but also as a hitter, his batting always being above the .300 mark. His knowledge of "inside" baseball was recognized as equal to the greatest field general in the game and he was known the length and breadth of the baseball world. Long and Lowe perfected the famous "trapped ball" play until the National League was compelled to legislate against it by making a batter out on an infield fly whether it was caught or not, provided first and second bases were occupied, with less than two out. Then these two conspired with McCarthy and Duffy, who were outfielders on that famous team, and they pulled off the "trapped ball" in the outfield, something no other team has ever been able to work successfully. When the American League broke into New York last season Clark Griffith induced Long to quit the Boston National League club to join the Highlanders. He did not stay long with the Gotham team, his decline beginning from that date. When Elberfield was suspended and fined by the Detroit club Griffith negotiated for his services and gave Long in exchange for him. Long stayed with the Tigers last season and this year went to the minors, becoming manager and playing shortstop for the Toledo club until given his unconditional release.



HERMAN LONG.

One of the most unique characters of the racing world of to-day is Charlie Hughes, familiarly known as "Trainer Hughes," who has charge of the racing string of H. M. Ziegler, the Cincinnati turfman. Hughes graduated from the sulky before taking up with the runners, beginning as a driver of trotting horses in the grand circuit and he marked many fast performers. He first came prominently into public notice on the running turf in the year '90's as trainer of a division of H. Eugene Leigh's then extensive racing string. Leaving Leigh, he next became trainer for Bromley & Co., the company of the firm being A. Featherston, who was well known millionaire Chicago turfman. Hughes raced Pearl Song, Buckwa, First Mate, Chant and other cracks for Bromley & Co., and on quitting them joined fortunes with Charles Head Smith, another Chicago turfman, of Lieutenant Gibson and Garry Herrman fame. On Smith selling the latter great horse to Capt. S. S. Brown for $20,000 he went out of the racing game for a time and Hughes was engaged by Ziegler, in whose employ he has been constantly since. Hughes has the distinction of having trained two winners of the Kentucky Derby, Chant for Leigh and Lieutenant Gibson for "Board of Trade" Smith. He, however, has attained his greatest fame by introducing to metropolitan racegoers the mighty Hermis. Hughes is in the neighborhood of 45 years old. He is remarkable for his easy-going methods in his stable. He always on race days has his horse fit and just how he does it in his easy-going way is a secret many of his fellow trainers would like to know.

The world's hour record in bicycle hour racing is now 54 miles 545 yards, by Tommy Hall, of England. It must be remembered, however, that this journey was made behind a big motor blazing with a wind shield, so that the performance of Waithour is believed to be more creditable. Waithour's 30 miles in 33:52 3-5 is almost a minute and a half faster than Hall supplied when he made his hour record.

Italy will give the Olympian games in 1908, the centenary of which Baron Pierre de Coubertin is the head awarding the meet to Rome at a meeting held at London recently. It will be the fourth Olympian, Athens holding the first, Paris the second, while the third will be contested at St. Louis this summer.

When Lou Dillon starts to beat 1:58½ this season she will pull a sulky weighing just 24 pounds and will carry on all four feet just 16 ounces of shoes, the combined weight of her four shoes, Sanders including nails, harness, boots and shoes, will not aggregate over 180 pounds.

Colonial Girl won the rich $5,000 World's Fair stake at the old Fair grounds race track in St. Louis; Iberia was second and Fair Play was third.

The University of Chicago track team won the Stevens cup at the Olympic national collegiate championship at St. Louis.

JAPANESE ACCESSORIES

Designs of the Orient Are Much in Evidence in Season's Dress Goods.

Then tendency toward Japanese stuffs is most pronounced. The fad for all things Japanese invades the realm of dress and is becoming more and more pronounced, says the Brooklyn Eagle.

It is altogether likely that the Japanese stuffs always were in existence, but it is only lately that their beauties became apparent to western eyes. To-day on counters the great Japanese wisteria vines embroidered and stamped upon dress materials. There are wonderful dresses, all gay with cherry blossoms, while the Japanese quince and Japanese flowers of all kinds, from tiny chrysanthemums to the gorgeous pomegranates, are found painted and wrought, stamped and etched, outlined and indicated upon nine out of ten of the summer dress materials.

In materials this is just as noticeable as in colors. The Japanese silks were never so fashionable, and there are countless silks and other stuffs that feel and look like silk and which come from the Japanese looms to be made up into summer and autumn gowns for the American women to wear.

In hats, too, this Japanese influence is seen. The plain American sailor is still the style and always will be. But there is a Japanese sailor, made out of coarse, soft, open-meshed straw. It is braided and it is rolling in the brim, and the crown is round, instead of square. This sailor hat is trimmed with a scarf of soft silk, which is tied at the back and is finished with two floating ends, with fringe finishing each of the ends.

One of the pretty summer Japanese hats was made of openwork straw in openwork design. Upon the under side of the brim there was a design in big, coarse Japanese stichery. The top of the hat crown was worked in the same manner, while around the crown there was a twist of Japanese silk finished with a bunch of cherry blossoms. Fetching, indeed, these little styles, and very attractive to the eye of the artistic American girl.

In fancy silk stocks, in parasols, in sashes and in the small things of dress the tendency toward the Japanese is very pronounced. There are soft Japanese silks, which are made, not in Roman design, but very like the Roman, with stripes of varicolors. The silks are decorated in odd ways, which are so very oriently as to admit of no mistake.

Upon a background of plain dull gold silk there will shine forth the most brilliant of cerise blossoms, all done in clusters, with green leaves to temper the glare of the scarlet. There are long green stems to furnish the necessary note of green. The design will be small and neat and apparently done expressly for the stock or girdle which it is to adorn.

There is one very attractive feature about all the Japanese work, and, indeed, about all oriental designs. It looks as though it were done to order. There is no hit or miss or haphazard about it. There is all that is exquisite and neat to everything. And in this respect the American handiwork has taken a lesson from the oriental for nothing could excel the eastern work in absolute neatness.

FAILED TO SURPRISE HIM.

The Easterner Knew His Business and Readily Turned the Joke.

Last year the fruit-raisers held a convention in a western city. It was devoted largely to a discussion, pro and con, of the apple. Among the talks in favor was one by Commissioner Ira Davis" apple, relates Youth's Companion. Now, the Ben Davis, by reason of its being large, red, fine-looking, a prolific grower and an excellent keeper, is a favorite apple among westerners who raise fruit for the market; but the coarseness of its flesh and its lack of flavor and sweetness make it strongly disliked by those who judge an apple by its quality.

Among the apple growers in attendance at the convention was an eastern horticulturist who had been especially severe in his denunciation of the Ben Davis. He presented figures showing that the exportation of American apples to Europe had fallen off lamentably of late years on account of the fact that the most of them were of this particular variety, and that the people over there could not be brought to regard them with favor; and he urged that the convention set the seal of its condemnation on the Ben Davis and discourage its further growth and exploitation.

A fruit grower who had an orchard of several thousand apple trees, all of them of this particular kind, one morning handed him a magnificent looking specimen, bright red and of the largest size.

"You think you know a good deal about apples," he said, with a sly wink at the others who were standing about. "Take that and see if you can tell what variety it is."

The eastern man bit, or tried to bite, into it. He found that its exterior was a thin shell of papier-mache, while its interior consisted entirely of cork.

"Yes," he said, with a countenance wholly unmoved, "I known what it is. It's a Ben Davis, but it's the best one I ever tasted."

Washing Delicate Fabrics.

A valuable hint for washing delicate woolen goods, silks and ribbons, is to use potato instead of soap. Grate two good-sized potatoes fine, and dissolve them in a half of lukewarm water; in it the goods are washed as carefully as in soapsuds, then thoroughly rinsed. This method is especially good for outside garments.—Good Housekeeping.

Griddled Potatoes.

Have cold, boiled potatoes and cut in long, rather thin slices. Dip them in melted butter, sprinkle with salt and paprika. Broil and when serving garnish with chopped chives.—Boston Budget.

BOOK NEWS.

It is planned to issue on Thursday of each week items of literary news. This will frequently take the form of book lists, such as lists of books recently added, lists on special subjects and like topics. Frequently the lists will be annotated, the aim being to make these annotations of real service to the reader, by giving him the opinion of a trustworthy critic as to the value of the books or a few words as to their scope. Borrowers should keep these lists. The Plainfield Public Library will furnish to anyone making application a list of the books on a given subject.

Public Library Notes.

Twenty years ago Lord Avebury, then Sir John Lubbock, in an address to a workingmen's club, mentioned one hundred books which he recommended to students. * * * The list, indeed, was intended to be suggestive to the awakening mind rather than formal and definite. * * * Lord Avebury has recently revised his list, which is as follows, nearly all being in the Public Library:

MISS MADELINE M'INTYRE WEDDED TO CLAIRE BICKEL

CEREMONY PERFORMED AT ST. MARY'S RECTORY BY REV. FATHER EGAN.

Miss Madeline Margaret McIntyre, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John R. McIntyre, of North avenue, and Claire F. Bickel, of this city, were married as the rectory of St. Mary's church Wednesday night. The ceremony was performed by Father Egan, the only witnesses being the attendants, Miss Sophia McIntyre, who acted as bridesmaid and John J. Carty as best man. The bride was gowned in white silk and carried roses.

With the completion of the ceremony adjournment was made to the home of the bride's parents where a reception was held. It was attended by fifty relatives and friends from this city, New York, New Rochelle and the Oranges. At its conclusion Mr. and Mrs. Bickel departed on a trip and on returning will make their home on Saratoga avenue, Brooklyn.

The groom has been a resident of Plainfield for the past four years, coming here with his parents from Buffalo. He is in the employ of the New York Air Brake Company and has a wide acquaintance both in the city and borough. The young couple were remembered with a very handsome display of presents.

ACCUSES A POLICEMAN

Dr. Perry Prefers Charges Against Officer O'Gorman.

TO MAKE INVESTIGATION

Physician Declares Cop Used Insulting and Indecent Language to Him.

Dr. James L. Perry, of 1130 West Seventh street, a retired physician and a member of the New York Academy of Medicine, communicated to the Common Council at its adjourned meeting that he had recently been insulted and abused by Special Policeman O'Gorman, who had urged him with being disorderly. Dr. Perry said that the offense took place on East Front street, opposite police headquarters and charges that the police need abusive and indecent language.

City Clerk MacMurray had finished reading about one-half of the communication, when he decided that it would not be well to continue, the complaint being of such a nature that it could best be considered by the proper committee. It was therefore referred.

The matter will undoubtedly receive attention. Dr. Perry stated that he had consulted with City Judge Runyon concerning the affair and that the latter advised him to communicate with the Common Council.

Dr. Perry came to this city for the benefit of his health, which has not been good for some time, diabetes being a form of his trouble, as he stated in his communication to the Common Council.

Augustus M. Laing Dead.

A telegram was received Friday afternoon announcing the death at Washington, D. C., Friday morning, of Augustus M. Laing, a former resident of Plainfield. Mr. Laing was a typesetter in the Government printing office at Washington, and had held the position for nearly twenty-five years through changing administrations. He leaves a wife and two daughters to mourn the loss of a faithful husband and indulgent father. Kidney trouble was the cause of his death, after nearly six months patient suffering.

To Use Automatic Signals.

The Public Service Corporation has awarded the contract for the installation of an automatic signal system throughout its entire system and it is hoped to have the same completed early next year. The present system, while it works all right, is a source of considerable trouble to the conductors who are obliged to leave their cars to turn the signal light on before entering the single track. With the installation of the automatic system the cars would operate the lights, similar to the method used on steam railroads.

GRIGGS ON SHAKESPEARE

Noted Lecturer Dwells Upon Bard's Ethical Awakening.

MERCHANT OF VENICE

Discusses Plot of Famous Drama and Refers to Character of Shylock.

The "Ethical Awakening," a discussion of what may be termed the only incomplete drama from the pen of Shakespeare, "The Merchant of Venice," was the subject of the second lecture in the Shakespearian course by Edward Howard Griggs at Vincent chapel Wednesday afternoon. The lecturer referred to the incompleteness of the "ethical forces" of the play, based on the fact that the author so lost himself in portraying the character of Shylock that he conceived more in him than he did in the plot of the drama.

In introducing his subject, Professor Griggs mentioned the fact that Shakespeare was better prepared to write the Merchant of Venice from the standpoint of his knowledge of the country, than many of his other plays; and that England was better prepared for the reception of this drama from the fact that Italy was the standard of all that was superior in art and culture, at the time of its publication.

Speaking in a general way of Shakespeare's works, Professor Griggs said that the dramatist makes all of his characters speak in a poetic language far grander than their common manner of speech, yet they all have their distinguishing style adapted to suit their characteristics. Thus in the case of the Merchant of Venice, the imaginative nature, the adventurous spirit, and the easy manner of the Venetians, is brought out perfectly in the apt imagry, the bright wit and careless manner in which the characters converse.

As the dominating feature of the play, the lecturer struck upon the character of Shylock as the embodiment of the greatest strength and the greatest weakness in the drama. Seeing from the face that the character is clearly and perfectly represented in his worst light, the weakness lies in the fact that the author was so engrossed with this side of the man's life that the good qualities are forgotten, when in the fourth act the Jew is driven into the cold night, deprived of all he possessed, downtrodden, despised and bereft of his soul's desire, revenge. In the other characters, the good as well as the bad is brought out, but in the portrayal of Shylock, only the bad is represented. It was in this respect that the lecturer termed the drama an incomplete one. He said that the author must have seen this himself, when, not closing the drama with the trial scene, and the Jew's downfall, he adds, that which is clearly an anti-climax, a fifth act, calm and peaceful, a picture only of happiness, reunion, and of contentment.

The end of the dramatic climax, Professor Griggs referred to as the conclusion of the trial scene, when through the brilliant, though vastly improbably reasoning of Portia, the Jew's hopes and plots are overturned, and in their stead is introduced an overwhelming retribution. In no other of his plays does Shakespeare feel the need of an anti-climax after such a dramatic ending. In the Merchant of Venice, the author was "awakened to grasp the real ethical forces of a tragedy, which is the play he has done incompletely, as afterward he did with faultless art."

LITERARY.

The Thanksgiving issue of Madame, the magazine "For Women Who Think," published by the Ford Publishing Co., Indianapolis, is one of special interest. The cover design by Walter Tittle is especially strong, representing the "Banishment of Summer." The contents of this issue of Madame are fully up to its high standard, and the magazine is certain to have a large sale at the newsstands. Many interesting and pertinent subjects are discussed in this issue of Madame.

Young artists and the parents of youthful prodigies will be interested in C. D. Gibson's brief and direct advice in Collier's for October 15. Mr. Gibson says: "Beginners are worried needlessly over the quality of paper and ink to be used. It is only necessary that one should be white and the other black."

Mrs. E. H. Terry, of this city, has been visiting her cousin, Mrs. L. E. Rose, of Liberty Corner.

Miss Lulu Ackerson, of Elizabeth, has been spending several days with her parents at Liberty Corner.

Mr. and Mrs. John Owens, of this city, were recent visitors among Bartan relatives.

Assemblyman Swackhamer, of Bonnett avenue, has been visiting relatives at Whitehouse.

COUNCIL IN A QUANDARY

Late Arrival of a Bid Disconcerts City Fathers.

HAD BEEN AWARDED

Discussion Then Arises As to Whether It Should Stand Because Second Bidder Appears.

Circumstances of a very unusual nature arose in Thursday's special Council meeting through President Tolles' determination to start sessions of the body on time. They related to the receiving of bids for the West End macadam work and for a time the members were divided among themselves as to whether they had better go ahead or go back after awarding the contract to C. M. Meeker. The first decision stood in Meeker's favor and the work will be done by him at an aggregate cost of $10,681.

At the regular October meeting of the Council, President Tolles announced that he would not tolerate the habit members have had of straggling into their seats anywhere after 7:30 and gave notice that in the future he would call meetings at 8 o'clock and in the absence of a quorum would order an adjournment. His order was lived up to last night and before going into regular business the macadam bids were called for. Meeker's was the only one submitted and after it had been accepted in regular form, Councilman Tyler announced that Mr. Travell, a brother of Ira W. Travell, of Third place, had a bid and wished to submit it. Instantly the query arose as to whether it would be right to allow him to place it before the meeting after the matter had been disposed of in awarding the contract to Meeker. With the exception of Mr. Garrigues, all believed it would be establishing a bad precedent. Matters became still further open to discussion when Councilman Lee noticed the fact that the clock in the Council pointed to 7:30. It caused consternation until it was learned that it was an hour behind time. Mr. Garrigues was in favor of returning Mr. Meeker's bid and re-advertising the matter but he was overruled and the first action of the Council was allowed to stand.

Mr. Travell was seen after the meeting and said that he had been in the City Clerk's office before the session was called to order but believing it would be 8:30 before actual business would commence, thought he had ample time in which to present his bid. He looked over the figures in Meeker's contract and stated that they were lower in some instances and higher in others. He had no complaint to make regarding the action of the Council. Mr. Travell is a civil engineer and has had wide experience in road building, especially in New York State.

NEED ACCOMMODATIONS FOR BOY DELEGATES

THREE HUNDRED YOUTHS TO ATTEND Y. M. C. A. CONFERENCE.

The number of delegates at the coming Y. M. C. A. State Boys' Conference bids fair to exceed the attendance at any previous convention. There will be about 300 delegates in town on October 28, 100 of whom have been already provided for with lodging and board. For the remaining 200, Boys' Secretary Robbie has been unable to provide. Letters have been sent to the parents of the boys in the local department and many other families have been called upon to assist.

As yet few have responded favorably, and it is to be hoped that those interested in the affair will have heard enough before the date of the convention arrives. The delegates who will visit this city are chosen by the Boys Association which is in charge of all the conferences, and are the best representatives of the various associations. On the average there will be about eight from each Y. M. C. A. in the State.

Sunset Burke Engaged.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Sunset Burke, son of Mr. and Mrs. O. G. Burke, of Netherwood, and Miss Mary Blair, of Chicago.

Recovered Speech and Hearing.

Messrs. Ely Bros.:—I commenced using your Cream Balm about two years ago for catarrh. My voice was somewhat stuck and my hearing was bad. My hearing has been fully restored and my speech has become quite clear. I am a teacher in our town.

L. G. Brown, Granger, O.

The Balm does not irritate or cause sneezing. Sold by druggists at 50 cts., or mailed by Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., New York.

—Walter Kettenring has resigned his position in the employ of Woodhull & Martin, and has taken a position with Fred Ivanoy.

Y. M. C. A. TAKES THREE GAMES FROM WESTFIELD

LOCAL BOWLERS DEFEAT THE SATURDAY NIGHT CLUB.

In three fairly interesting games, the Y. M. C. A. bowling team defeated the Saturday Night Club, of Westfield, on the local alleys. Physical Director Hesekiel, who had been coaching the basket ball team in the gymnasium, was present at the last of the three games.

The line-up and scores:

WESTFIELD.
Weaner	132	110	98
Gilmore	74	109	109
Traynor	96	95	119
C. Ortleb	92	101	113
G. Ortleb	109	109	119
	501	604	625
Y. M. C. A.
French	139	141	134
Jeffery	107	141	116
Simmonds	128	...	105
Humble	119	...	...
Stephen	115	...	139
Neal	...	139	142
Koons	...	134	...
	608	654	636

The visitors were somewhat handicapped by the absence of two of their regular players. This accounts for the heavy lead secured by the Y. M. C. A. men, the average lead for the three games being 111 1-3 pins per game. However, Captain Charles Ortleb promises to "trim" the locals when the return game is rolled at Westfield.

HELP MISSIONARY BY GIVING A SOCIAL

FUNDS RAISED AT ENJOYABLE ENTERTAINMENT THURSDAY NIGHT.

Unique and entertaining was the missionary social at Trinity Reformed church Thursday night, the object of which as the annual contribution to the support of a missionary, Rev. Jacob Crist, of Salem, South Dakota, and his family, and each attendant of the social brought some article in clothing, books, or money to be shipped to him. A large box at the entrance to the church parlor was generously filled with useful articles. The box was dropped with the American flag, while the room was tastefully festooned in orange bunting. Vases of roses and chrysanthemums were set off by palms and potted plants, effecting a very pretty appearance.

Though the greater part of the evening was spent in a social way, an informal programme was arranged for the affair, which was in every way an enjoyable feature of the evening. The Y. M. C. A. quartette opened the programme by two well rendered selections. The numbers were "Softly Sleep," a serenade by Karl Linders, and "There's a Land," by White. The quartette was composed of the following voices: E. D. Young and W. C. Leek, tenors; William Symons and Alva Davis, basses. A cornet solo by Mr. Young was well received as were also recitations by Miss Helen Adams and Miss Edith Leek.

The social was in the hands of the missionary committee, of which Mrs. C. S. Leggett is chairman, and the direct management of the affair was in her charge. The various committees in the social and entertainment were as follows: Decorations, Mrs. Frances A. VanName, chairman; Mrs. Winfield Schoonp and Mrs. M. F. Gano; reception, Mrs. Emma Dilsbrough, chairman; Mrs. Cornelious Schenck, Mrs. B. A. Meeker, Mrs. A. M. Gillam, Mrs. E. A. Pares and Mrs. M. E. Kershaw; entertainment, Mrs. A. L. Force, chairman; Mrs. D. C. Adams and Mrs. W. C. Leek, Mrs. Robert Clark, Jr.; refreshments, Mrs. H. C. Paul, Mrs. G. Q. Dellriver and Mrs. J. Beekman. The refreshments were served by a committee of the following young men: Bertram Leggett, Fred Smith, Cornelious Schenck and Roy Woodhull.

Normal School Buys Farm.

The Newark Normal and Industrial School organized to train colored boys and girls in the trades, has bought a farm in Union County. The cost is about $17,000. One thousand dollars has been given by friends of the institution. The remainder is needed at once. Former Governor Voorhees, of Elizabeth, is the legal advisor of the corporation.

Nasal CATARRH

In all its stages there should be used Ely's Cream Balm

Ely's Cream Balm

Cleanses, soothes and heals the diseased membrane. It relieves at once. It opens and cleanses the nasal passages, allays pain and inflammation, protects the membrane from additional colds, completely heals the sores and restores the senses of taste and smell. A thorough treatment will cure. Not a liquid or snuff. Cream Balm is placed into the nostrils, spreads over the membrane and is absorbed. Relief is immediate and a cure follows. It is not drying—does not produce sneezing. Large Size, 50 cents at Druggists or by mail; Trial Size, 10 cents by mail.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Oct. 30: "Around the World; Our New Possessions"—Hawaii, Alaska, Philippines, Porto Rico.—Pa. xcvii, 1-15.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES.

"Righteousness and justice are the foundation of His throne."

It is an easy thing to grow enthusiastic over the progress of our national affairs, to indulge in boasting of our resources, marvelous development, prospects and prowess. But our true wealth has consisted in other than these.

That which made the republic possible was the moral worth of the early settlers of this country. The bulk of them were from the best stock of the old world. They had a high purpose in coming here. They adhered to their integrity at the risk of all else.

The traditions of righteousness have been influential all through our history. Our course has not been devoid of mistake and willful wrong. But the general intent of the national consciousness has been in the direction of the right.

It is desirable that we give attention in these days to the influence of our country in its civic affairs and their relations to religious truth. We should study our duties to state as well as to church in the light of divine revelation. We ought to make sure foundations of prosperity in moral principles as well as in commercial enterprise and inventive genius.

We have been suddenly thrust into the very center of the world stage and obliged to take a position entirely new to us. The events of the past few years have changed the currents of our activities, put our thinking into new channels and altered many of our most settled opinions.

Hour similar that list of names seems when coupled with the name of the United States. "Our new possessions!" What is it that we possess in them? Something more than fur animals and gold mines in Alaska, more than sugar lands and volcanoes in Hawaii, more than tropic islands in the others.

These names signify obligation and opportunity to us. Our chance lies far less with the natural resources than with the people now and to be.

Nor is our problem wholly with the religious needs of the inhabitants as we usually regard religion. The whole scope of civilization and the lifting of the people into intelligent moral righteousness is our task. Nor may we excuse ourselves by saying we never sought the responsibility and will not now assume it. The work is before us whether we like it or not. Our leagues are involved in the affair. Of our numbers some are to go into these regions and make known and help others to make homes. Some will go into business life, some as teachers, some as preachers and some in government positions. Every one will have a part in forming the life that is to be in the future in those places.

We do well to set clearly before ourselves the end to be sought. If the ether question is one of wealth or political preferment we shall have failure. Whether our stay be long or short, we shall carve ourselves and those to whom we go.

Our aim and purpose must be higher and more worthy. We go to form a people into new social order. As truly as we shape them we shall at the same time shape ourselves. The outcome will be a greater and more glorious nationality, in which God's will for men shall be better conceived and more adequately secured.

Let our leagues make a study of these lands and their inhabitants. Get a fuller understanding of their nature, conditions and needs. Learn what we as a nation and as a church are doing in each country. Know the men and women who are doing the work, what they are doing and how they are doing it. Invest some time and become interested in these affairs, because they vitally affect all our future and the destiny of our institutions, civil and religious.

We call them our possessions. We must make them to be the possessions of our Lord in righteousness and justice.

His Own Messengers.

It is God's glory to accomplish His work by messengers of His own choosing, and He often hides the meaning of His ways from His own people. Some may have made too much of the imperfections of the Bible, but others have certainly failed to see those best they should lose what faith they had. Shall we on that account attempt to exclude either party from the number of Christ's followers? That is a matter to be decided by Christ Himself on far other grounds than their opinion of the "higher criticism," but, looking at the matter from our own point of view, it is well to remember that the middle ground of today is not the middle ground of even a generation ago. There is an unreasonable exclusiveness of narrow belief as well as an inconsiderate inclusiveness of careless liberality, and it is possible to be more concerned for God's honor in the study of the methods of His work than He has ever cared to be.—Congregationalist.

What Is Wanted.

What is greatly wanted just now in our churches is a treasury filling spirit. That is the result of an ardent and growing love to our blessed Lord and to our fellow men. Less of self and more of Christ in heart and life finds increasing ways and means for caring on the cause of Christ and humanity.—Presbyterian.

Cause For Regret.

The man who gives to the cause of Christ only half as much as he ought to give is sure to regret soon after he gave anything at all.—Religious Telescope.

HIS LIFE IN PERIL.

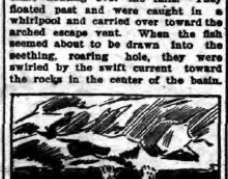
FISHERMAN SUCKED INTO A MOUNTAIN WHIRLPOOL.

Drawn in Swift Stream Toward Subterranean River — Saved by Catching on Jagged Edge of Rocks.

H. F. Kent, who has something of a reputation on the coast as a fisherman, tells in the Portland Oregonian of an experience which the average disciple of Ike Walton would find difficulty in duplicating. He says he was caught in the swirl of Lost River basin, and his story compares favorably with Poe's famous "Descent Into the Maelstrom." Lost river is a peculiar stream in the eastern part of Lane county, Ore. Out from beneath the base of a mighty glacier it rushes and goes singing down the mountain side. At times it is very narrow and shallow. Again it is broad and deep, dashing with tremendous force through tangled forests, growling and brawling over its bowlders in chaotic confusion. It is a quiet, harmless stream, in places a raging, furious torrent.

After fishing down the river for some distance and catching a good string, Kent entered the basin. It was in the forenoon, and the water was very low, but Kent was so engrossed in his effort to and some big Dolly Vardens to his catch that he did not notice how time passed, and how rapidly the stream was rising. That forenoon had proved very hot and ice low and snow had melted unusually early in the day. Kent soon realized the peril of his position, for when he made his way toward the natural basin he found a cataract three feet deep rushing down its slope with millrace force.

Just as he turned to get out of the swift water the big string of trout that he had left in a pool above the sink came floating over the falls. They floated past and were caught in a whirlpool and carried over toward the arched escape vent. When the fish seemed about to be drawn into the seething, roaring hole, they were swirled by the swift current toward the rocks in the center of the basin.



GAINED SAFETY AT LAST.

Around and around they were swept, but finally were sucked into the escape and carried underground.

In an instant he was in the whirlpool and at its mercies. He was borne around as helpless as a feather. He still had his fishing rod in his hand when he fell, but dropped it, and the heavy reel sank it to the bottom. The current swept him around as it had the belongings a few moments before. He shuddered as he approached the dark, cave-like hole, but fortunately was swept safely past.

Once again the waters bore him toward the horrible vortex, and this time Kent was carried a little closer. His progress was almost stopped, and the waters seemed undetermined as to his awful fate. He could feel the two currents separate—one to sweep underground and the other to swing around the rocks again. He chose, desperate though it was, to attempt to pull himself back into the friendly current again, and once more floated back toward the rocks. As he swung by, he reached under the water and clutched a slender bush. To his delight the branch sank as increasing current drew him nearer the yawning hole. There was no doubt but that Kent was to be engulfed this time. Straight toward the fearful point he was borne. It was only ten feet away—five feet—a foot. With every second the current gathered a horrible energy. Just as it pulled Kent downward he closed his eyes in despair and threw up his hands. Luckily they caught on the overhanging ledge above. In a second the water had whisked off his rubber boots. The bones of his arms cracked as the subterranean river struggled to draw him down to a fearful death. The two trout which he had caught last still swung over his shoulder and seemed to weigh a ton, the jagged edge of the rocks cut his fingers until he thought they would break, yet he clung with the clutch of desperation.

Then he made frantic efforts to draw himself up on that ledge. It was a great struggle. His joints stretched at the strain. Soon his eyes were even with the ledge; one more mighty effort and Kent pulled his body up on the narrow rock shelf—the surface of the rushing flood only a few inches below.

Hatless, bootless and coatless, Kent managed to make his way slowly to the nearest ranch. When fully recovered he made an inventory of stock. His hat lost, his coat, rubber basket and fishing rod. He had his life left, and two of the finest Dolly Vardens trout ever seen.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 23.

Topic.—How giving counts upon me.—Prov. iii, 9, 10; II Cor. ix, 6-11.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Action always produces reaction. A ball thrown against a solid wall will rebound. This principle is universally true in nature, so that in mathematics we have the axiom, "Action and reaction are always equal." This principle, practically defined, means that results are measured by effort. The power with which the ball makes its backward bound depends entirely upon the force with which it is thrown against the wall. In other words, we get what we give and in proportion as we give it. It is only the magician who can put nothing into a hat and yet bring out an egg or a silver dollar, and he really does not do so; he only seems to do so. Many men think that in life they are allowed money, time and something for nothing, but they will awake some day and find that it was only a dream and is now a shattered dream. Men may follow illusions for awhile and find them satisfactory, but the dreamer sometimes awakens, and then how sad and depressing that awakening usually is!

This principle is particularly applicable to the subject of giving—giving money to the Lord's treasury, for instance. Giving always reacts upon the giver, and the character of the giving always determines the character of the reaction. If we give liberally, joyously and willingly, the reaction is always for good. Our souls are fortified against one of the most repulsive forms of selfishness—miserliness. Who more contemptible than the miser? And yet he has brought himself to that condition by failure to respond to the demands of giving upon him. The rich and those who are growing rich should be most liberal givers. Giving is their only salvation from a niggardly miserliness that will make them despised by their fellow men and even by the most high God. Moreover, giving enlarges the soul and sympathy of the giver. The soul of the liberal giver expands instead of contracting; it is broadened rather than narrowed. The man who gives liberally to missions is the one most interested in the work of missions; the one who gives of his money that the poor and infirm may be cared for has his sympathies broadened toward those who are in need. Giving also uplifts the soul of the giver. God gave His best gift for the human race, and the man who gives abundantly, systematically and cheerfully becomes more and more like God.

The promises of God, as well as the laws of nature, prove the beneficent results of reaction in giving. "Honor the Lord with thy substance and with the first fruit of all thine increase; so shall thine barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine." "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly, and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

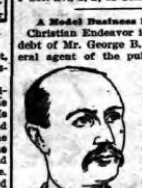
A Model Business Endeavorer.

Christian Endeavor is largely in the debt of Mr. George B. Graff, the general agent of the publishing department of the United Society. It is largely to his untiring efforts that this business end of Christian Endeavor is made profitable. The money thus accumulated is altogether used for the spreading of the cause. Mr. Graff is an ardent advocate of Christian Endeavor and a thorough believer in the platform speaker of no slight ability.



GEORGE B. GRAFF.

Indefatigable Dr. Clark.

Few men would travel around the world in the interest of a movement and pay the major part of the expenses of the trip by the use of their pen; fewer men could. And yet this is what Dr. Clark did in his recent journey. The world admires his spirit the more when it remembers that he is nearly forty-five at a time when he ought to have been resting for his next day's convention labors.

A California Worker.

J. R. White, the retiring president of the California State union, an attorney of San Francisco, has given a wonderful year of service. In the interests of state work he has traveled 9,700 miles, more than three times the distance between San Francisco and New York; has written 980 personal letters, delivered more than 80 addresses, and the total expenses of his office to the state union were $88.55.

From Dr. Carter's Successor.

There's room for somebody to work whenever there is somebody willing to work.

There's nothing so fine as a man who is good, but there is nothing sadder than a man who is good for nothing. The same is true of a movement.

If this convention should lead the people of this city simply to care that they are not saved, that would be enough for it all.

Do not let the fear of making mistakes keep you from trying. People who don't make mistakes don't make anything else.—Rev. Dr. Cleland B. Afee in New York State Endeavor Convention.

ANOTHER COUNTRY DANCE

Pad and Pencil Club to Repeat Successful Affair.

ON THANKSGIVING EVE

Unique Features to Predominate With the Rustic Idea Maintained Throughout.

Confident that it can be made to attain the success of its predecessor, the local Pad and Pencil Club is making preparations to conduct another "country" dance, similar to the delightful one given two years ago. It will take place on Thanksgiving Eve in the former A. O. U. W. Hall on North and Park avenues and the committee having the plans in charge is making every effort to have it the event of the season. The invitations, of a novel and unique form, will be sent out early next week.

As in the initial "country" dance, the best part of it will be the manner in which the idea is to be carried out. The young men are to come in their "workin' clothes" just as though they had been late at chores and didn't have time to "brush up." "Biled" shirts will not be tolerated and on one but the district school master will be allowed to wear claw-hammer coat. Calico gowns and home-made frocks are to be worn by the girls and the rustic simplicity is calculated to add to the picturesqueness of the scene.

The hall will be made to look like a country squire's barn, with decorations of corn shocks, straw and pumpkins. O'Reilly's Possum Hollow fiddlers will be seated on barrels and will give jig steps, Virginia reels and fancy flings until millkin' time. At midnight refreshments of cider, pumpkin pie made by Elijhalet Phaler's wife and rosy-cheeked apples picked from the far corner of the orchard will be passed around. An unusually pretty dancing card with original dance dedications will be distributed as favors.

The committee will insist that all who attend the dance come attired in the prescribed costume in order to make the affair entirely successful. At the previous affair there were so many requests for invitations "just to see the costumes" that at the coming time boxes will be provided and sold to those not caring to join in the merry-making.

BOROUGH DEMOCRATS HOLD BIG MASS-MEETING

FOUR SPEAKERS AT A RALLY IN HEADQUARTERS ON SOMERSET STREET.

Owing to the unfavorable weather conditions, the contemplated North Plainfield open air Democratic meeting was held at headquarters on Somerset street Thursday. The building was crowded to the doors when President David Carney, of the North Plainfield Democratic Club, called for order and introduced Assembly Nominee Daniel H. Beekman, of North Branch. He spoke upon National and State issues for half an hour and the audience was greatly pleased with his remarks.

The second speaker was Robert L. Stevens, candidate for Congress from the Fourth district, who gave a decidedly interesting talk that was applauded frequently. He is making a thorough canvass of the three counties, Mercer, Hunterdon and Somerset, and he declared all the meetings are being largely attended and the Democratic nominees will win out. The concluding addresses were given by Hev. J. B. Cleaver, of Bound Brook, the familiar campaigner of old, and County Attorney John H. Freeh, of Somerville. Both were accorded an enthusiastic welcome.

From all standpoints the meeting was declared a success and arrangements are being perfected for others.

STOP CARS CAREFULLY.

Motormen Instructed to Use Greater Care on P. S. C. Lines.

To avoid the trouble of having flat wheels on the trolley cars, all motormen employed by the Public Service Corporation have been instructed to exercise greater care in stopping cars. There have been instances where the motormen have stopped their cars so suddenly that they would slide for a considerable distance, with the result that one or more wheels would go flat. This is an expensive business, as the wheels have to be sent to the repair shops and sometimes it is impossible to grind them and use them again. The older motormen are more careful in this respect, but new men are generally careless, being anxious to stop their cars the instant the bell is sounded or they approach someone who wants to get aboard.

ATTERBURY NOMINATED

Lawyer Named for Mayoralty by the Democrats.

OWENS FOR CITY JUDGE

Schlief for Freeholder and Redman for School Trustee—Atterbury Popular.

At the city convention of the local Democrats, held in the headquarters on North avenue Oct. 19, Albert H. Atterbury, of West Seventh street, was named as the mayoralty candidate to oppose James F. Buckle. His selection was unanimous and the nomination was received with enthusiasm. The other city nominations were as follows: For City Judge, John F. Owens; for freeholder, Stephen H. Schlief; for school trustee, Hev. Dr. E. M. Redman. In each instance the election was made on the first ballot.

The convention was called to order by City Chairman J. V. F. Dilts and Vincent L. Frasee was named as chairman. Charles Messersmith acted as secretary, and the following committees were named by the chairman: Credentials, Miller E. Hetfield and Michael Flynn; vacancies, Andrew J. Nolan, Charles A. Starkevant and Richard Burke.

Mr. Atterbury was not in attendance at the convention but it was understood all along that he would accept the nomination and his name was placed before the delegates by A. J. Nolan. The others followed in succession without discussion of any kind, all slate having been agreed upon. It was understood that friends of V. L. Frasee, who had been frequently mentioned as the probable mayoralty nominee, had been urging him to run for freeholder, but he positively declined to have his name placed before the convention.

Following the completion of the ticket an informal discussion was held and several addresses were made, one of them by John F. Owens, who is to be Judge Smayer's opponent. The party members believe the nominees comprise the strongest make-up they have had in years and that all will make a good fight.

Albert H. Atterbury, who was named for mayor, has been a resident of Plainfield for twelve years and during that time has always taken a keen interest in local affairs. He is a lawyer with offices in New York and is popular in all circles, his strongheld being in the Third ward.

LITERARY.

Readers throughout the United States and Canada are on the qui-vive of expectancy at the announcement of a new novelette by Charles G. D. Roberts. This is published entire in the November number of Lippincott's Magazine. A bit of inside history concerning this "find" is that it was first submitted in short-story form to the editor of Lippincott's Magazine. He at once saw in it splendid possibilities as a novel and suggested its expansion to Mr. Roberts. Hence, "The Prisoner of Mademoiselle de Bienecourt" makes its bow to the public in a size befitting its greatness. This is a rattling good story of adventure. It is placed in the beautiful "Evangeline" country; and in picturesqueness, in power of portrayal, and in literary finish it is not surpassed in contemporary fiction.

The opening page of the November "Success" brings to mind the fact that Thanksgiving is once more rolling round, and that we must prepare for the festive turkey. Strickland W. Gillilan, the president of the American Humorists, contributes a poem to this page in "Success" which contains a certain delicate humor that will put all who read it in good spirits. It leads us to better things in the magazine, among which we find an article entitled, "The Presidency," analyzing the principal presidential candidates, by Alfred Henry Lewis, whose campaign writings have been very noticeable this year.

The November number of Scribner's Magazine contains the second of Thomas F. Millard's illuminative articles upon the war in the East. In this he deals with the organization and personnel of the Russian Army, with which he has been, and accounts for the efficiency and general unpreparedness of Russia to meet the conditions as have developed. His statements regarding the number of troops in the field and the Trans-Siberian Railroad will surprise many, and are especially valuable in forming any conclusions regarding the probable outcome of the war. The illustrations are from the author's photographs.

Mrs. J. D. Letsenzer, of this city, has been visiting friends at Somerville.

Mrs. George Strahlie, of this city, has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Higgins, of South Branch.

Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Waldron, of Martinsville, have returned home after a visit with friends here.

A. A. PHELPS DEAD.

President of Local Business College Passes Away Suddenly.

Though in comparatively good health up to the time of his death, Rev. A. A. Phelps, the president of the Plainfield Business College, died Thursday at Roxbury, Mass., as the result of over work.

Rev. Mr. Phelps conducted the school for the last ten years. Mr. Phelps was a graduate of the Syracuse University, having been born in Painesdepot in 1835. His father was in the shoe business and Mr. Phelps was obliged to work his way through college. He chose the theological profession, and graduated from the theological institute at Syracuse at the age of 24.

During the last two years, Mr. Phelps has been conducting the Boston Bible School, at Boston, where young men are prepared for the ministry. He spent the summer lecturing in Maine, where it is believed he over worked, and succumbed to the strain Thursday.

Mr. Phelps leave a wife and four daughters, Mrs. Joseph Walker, of Newark; Mrs. Samuel Blanchard, of Rochester. Miss Adelia Phelps, instructress of art at the local school, and Miss Flora Phelps, at Asbury Park. He is also survived by four sisters, Mrs. Abie Albee, of Addison, New York; Mrs. Corwin, of Addison; Mrs. Lois Hathaway, of Painesdepot, and Mrs. Lorie Albee, of Addison.

A Pleasant Surprise.

In honor of her birthday, Miss Mary Good, of this city, was tendered a delightful surprise party Thursday evening by about thirty of her friends. The surprise was genuine, and the occasion was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. The evening was spent in playing progressive whist, and other games, while vocal and instrumental music was a feature of the evening. In the progressive whist, Miss Irene Hope was awarded the first prize, the consolation prize going to Miss Good. Late in the evening refreshments were served, and the guests departed for their homes.

Memorial Window's Design.

The design of a handsome and costly "All Saints' Memorial window" that is to be placed in the chancel above the altar at Grace church, was displayed in the vestibule of the church Sunday. The expense of placing this window in the church is to be borne by the members who will be asked to contribute toward it on All Saints' day. A collection for it will be received at Grace church yesterday. Already several hundred dollars have been received for this purpose.

Lecture on Compressed Air.

A. E. Kenney, of the borough, will give an illustrated lecture on compressed air at the meeting of the Men's Association, of Trinity Reformed church, on Thursday night. This will be the first meeting of the association this fall.

HOLY CROSS RECEPTION TO REV. AND MRS. DOWNEY

DELIGHTFUL AFFAIR AT RECTORY ON WASHINGTON AVENUE.

The rectory of Holy Cross church, No. 30 Washington avenue, was the scene of an enjoyable parish reception on Thursday evening. This annual function is arranged for the by women of the Guild as a double courtesy to the rector and Mrs. Downey and to the entire parish, and its general appreciation was evidenced by the large number attending.

Mr. and Mrs. Downey were assisted in receiving by the wives of the vestrymen, while the members of the Guild constituted a floating committee on hospitality. The rectory was charmingly decorated with cut flowers and smilax and a particularly artistic touch was given by long festoons of many tinted amelopsis, where brilliant colors and graceful form rivalled the perfection of hot-house productions. Another attractive feature was the dainty, candle-lighted refreshment table with floral centre and decorations of yellow.

Refreshments consisting of chicken salad, sandwiches, ice cream, cake and coffee were served by six young girls of the parish. The guests were limited to the parishioners of Holy Cross church and the Episcopal clergymen of Plainfield.

DEMOCRATS' RECEPTION.

Candidates of Party at Headquarters Friday Night.

The Plainfield Democratic Club entertained the local and county nominees at the headquarters, Friday. All of the nominees with the exception of Stephen Cox, of Cranford, and Joseph Gunn, of Springfield, candidates for the Assembly, and the candidate for coroner, of Elizabeth, were present and made short speeches. A. H. Atterbury gave an excellent talk, encouraging the voters and assuring them that if they stand by the ticket the result will be all right.

J. V. F. Dilts called the meeting to order and Minure D. Moffett was chairman, after he made a few remarks, he introduced the candidates present.

ONE KILLED IN WRECK; THIRTY CARS SMASHED

BOTH ENGINES DAMAGED IN A BAD ACCIDENT AT WHITEHOUSE.

Both tracks of the New Jersey Central were torn up, thirty coal, passenger and freight cars were smashed to splinters and one man was killed in a wreck at Whitehouse Station, last Friday night.

The evening eastbound combination milk and passenger train was near the station taking on the Pottersville and New Germantown milk cars, the engine having left the main track to go on a siding for them. While there a coal train came down the steep grade from Pickels Mountain at fifty miles an hour and crashed into the passenger cars that had been left on the eastbound track. Both engines were completely wrecked.

Levi Able, fireman on the passenger train, was killed instantly. Fisher, the engineer of the same train, escaped serious injury by jumping. His leg was torn. Meyer, fireman of the cooler, was seriously injured.

The engineer of the coal train says that the air brakes on his train did not work and he could not stop. The block signals were against him. Passengers on the milk train heard the cooler coming and jumped before the crash.

Mrs. J. M. Whiton, President.

Mrs. J. M. Whiton was the president at the thirteenth annual convention of the Woman's Home Missionary Union, which was held all day Thursday in the Orange Valley Congregational church, adjourning to hold its next meeting at Germantown, Pa. Rev. Dr. R. A. Beard delivered an address at the afternoon session on missions and methods of doing missionary work, after which some routine business was transacted.

Comparing Candidates.

James E. Martine is the poor of Charles N. Fowler as a specimen of social economy, but possibly does not know so well what the great money interests want. He knows best, however, what are the burdens of the farmer, the mechanic and laborer.—Washington Star.

KUROPATKIN CHIEF.

Alexeieff Retains His Post as Viceroy.

WITH GOD'S HELP WILL DEFEAT JAPS

Imperial Ukase Issued at St. Petersburg—Land and Sea Forces Thanked For Self Sacrifice In Service of the Czar.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 26.—An imperial ukase has been issued appointing General Kuropatkin commander in chief of the Russian army and retaining Alexeieff in the post of viceroy in the far east. The emperor also congratulates Viceroy Alexeieff on the efficiency he has displayed in the formation, concentration and supreme direction of troops in the theater of operations. Alexeieff, in a proclamation, has thanked the land and sea forces for the self sacrifice they have shown and says he is proud of the mark of confidence bestowed upon him by the emperor in intrusting him with the supreme command of gallant troops. He hopes, in conclusion, that with God's help their strong adversary will be defeated.

St. Petersburg advices say that there is no news of important movements on the Shakhe river, though a resumption of hostilities is possible at any moment.

The emperor's trip to say farewell to the troops in the province of Vilna has been delayed ten days on account of the Dogger bank incident. War news has taken an entire secondary place in the eyes of the present complication. The sentiment in St. Petersburg is one of absolute stupefaction pending developments. General Kuropatkin's appointment to be commander in chief in the far east would have attracted much attention at any other time, but it arouses scant interest. It is an indication, however, of the emperor's unshaken confidence in Kuropatkin's ability. It is thought that General Meyendorff is the most likely candidate for the command of the first army, while General Grippenberg will command the second.

Japs In America Called to War.

OGDEN, Utah, Oct. 26.—M. A. Akimoto, who has charge of the 600 Japanese employed in the beet fields of Utah and Idaho, says he has received orders from the Japanese consul for all members of the first and second armies reserve to return home at once for active service.

POSTMASTER VAN COTT DEAD.

Suddenly Stricken at His Son's Home In New York.

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—Postmaster Van Cott died suddenly yesterday at the home of his son, Richard Van Cott, here. Mr. Van Cott's death followed his sudden stroke in his office in the postoffice, when he was stricken down while sitting at his desk.

It was rumored that he had been stricken with paralysis and also that it was a hemorrhage of the throat, but both rumors were denied, and the postmaster's illness was said to be only acute indigestion.

Mr. Van Cott appeared much better after reaching his son's house, but an attack of heart failure occurred, and he died in the usual way suddenly.

It was said that worry on account of his son Dick's recent arrest for alleged colonization brought on the attack.

Grout at Johnstown, N. Y.

JOHNSTOWN, N. Y., Oct. 26.—Edward M. Grout, comptroller of New York city, was the principal speaker at a Democratic demonstration held in this city last night. Fred Linns Carman, son of the late Congressman John M. Carroll, presided. Comptroller Grout said that the present campaign involved questions that go to the very root of American citizenship. He strongly deprecated the centralization of power at Albany. After touching upon the trust question and the administration's policy in the Philippines Mr. Williams dwelt upon Canadian reciprocity as an issue of vital importance, especially to border cities like Detroit, but which, he intimated, could be expected at the hands of the Democratic party.

Thirty Injured at Seattle.

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 26.—Over thirty persons were injured, three of them perhaps fatally, in two head-on collisions that occurred in a fog on the Benton and University electric lines here. The most severely injured are F. B. Boyd of Columbia, J. L. Cole of Columbia and F. D. Cleaves of Dunlap.

A Thousand Steel Men at West Point.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Oct. 26.—Members of the Iron and Steel institute paid a visit to West Point, arriving here on the steamboat Monmouth. The visitors were met at the landing by General Mills and his staff and were treated to a reception in Memorial hall. The party numbered about a thousand.

Y. M. C. A. Day at St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 26.—Exercises and receptions in celebration of Young Men's Christian association and Young Women's Christian association day at the world's fair. Miss Helen Miller Gould was the guest of honor at the several fetes.

CZAR'S DEEP REGRET

Russian Emperor Deplores North Sea Incident.

BRITISH FLEET LEAVE VENICE.

Diplomatic Delays Blamed For Non-arrival of Russia's Official Apology—Admiralty Issued Orders to Three Fleets.

LONDON, Oct. 26.—Emperor Nicholas has telegraphed to King Edward expressing his deep regret at what occurred in the North sea Saturday and his sympathy with the families of the killed and wounded fishermen.

The trawler Gull has arrived at Hull with three of her crew who were badly wounded in the attack which the Russian warships made on the North sea fishing fleet.

The British Mediterranean fleet will leave Venice this morning. Its destination has not been disclosed.

In the note dispatched to St. Petersburg the British government put forward certain definite demands in language which it is understood leaves little opening for any suggestion of a compromise. These comprise apologies for the action of the Russian squadron in firing on the British fishing fleet in the North sea, full compensation for the sufferers and punishment for the offenders, whoever they may be.

[British foreign secretary.]

That King Edward correctly interpreted the feeling of the nation in publicly stigmatizing the affair as "unwarrantable" was evidenced by the reception given him when he started for the race meeting at Newmarket. A big crowd awaited his majesty both at Buckingham palace and at the railroad station, and the heartiness of the cheering and the vigorous waving of hats and handkerchiefs from the enthusiasts made up a remarkable demonstration and afforded the king evident pleasure.

In view of the demonstrations against the Russian ambassador special precautions have been adopted by the police to guard him against any unpleasantness, but they have proved unnecessary.

The inevitable delays of diplomatic procedure appear to retard a complete and satisfactory settlement of the acute difference between Great Britain and Russia arising from the deplorable North sea affair. The cablegram of Emperor Nicholas expresses the deepest regret and a practical acknowledgment that Great Britain's peremptory note will meet with a reply conceding every demand for apology for the act of aggression against the British fleet, compensation for sufferers and punishment of the officers responsible for what is everywhere conceded to have been a gigantic blunder.

The Russian ambassador has expressed to Foreign Minister Lansdowne his sorrow and sympathy. These developments have allayed to some extent the deep resentment in the public mind. The admiralty gave evidence of its appreciation of the necessity of proving that it is prepared actively to support the position of the people of Great Britain and fulfill the expectations of the world when it issued the following statement:

"On receipt on Oct. 24 of the news of the North sea tragedy preliminary orders for mutual support and co-operation were issued as a measure of precaution from the admiralty to the channel, Mediterranean and home fleets."

Lord Selborne at the Pilgrim's banquet last night denounced the Dogger bank affair in the most outspoken terms yet heard from a member of the cabinet as an "inexcusable outrage" and "a terrible blunder, which would be impossible in either the British or American navy." Colonial Secretary Lyttleton, too, in another place spoke in quite terms, saying that it was impossible to view the affair as other than the result of murderous intention or wicked negligence.

The report of the admiral of the fishing fleet, dated from "the North sea," is said to have a picturesque touch, a plain sailor's yarn of the occurrence. It was handed to Foreign Minister Lansdowne last night.

A midnight dispatch from St. Petersburg says that Vice Admiral Rojestvensky's reasons for firing into the British fishing fleet remain as great a mystery as ever. The admiralty announces that the admiral's report of the affair has not yet been received. If the important allegation in the note that a Japanese torpedo boat, namely, that the squadron actually changed formation before opening fire—it would seem to fix the responsibility upon Rojestvensky, and, whoever the author of the offense may be, it is regarded as certain that Great Britain will demand, among other things, his punishment. It is also considered certain that failure to promptly comply with the demands will be immediately followed by Ambassador Hardinge's recall.

ENDEAVORERS RAISE FUNDS FOR A PIANO

ENTERTAINMENT GIVEN AT CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH FRIDAY NIGHT.

A nut-cracking social for the benefit of the rental piano fund was held at the Congregational church Friday under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society and was successful. The society pledged a certain portion of this fund, and the amount received last night will meet this obligation. The rooms of the church were decorated with autumn leaves, and a candy table attractively decorated with red and green, the prevailing colors, was in charge of Miss Woodland and Miss Rice.

The unique feature was in the distribution of all kinds of nuts by the Misses Fisher and Wisant. There was a fortune and the same colors, red and green were used with good effect, and there was no end of fun in reading the various fortunes.

Another amusing part of the programme was called a musical love-feast. To each one was given a slip of paper and pencil and as various selections were played on the piano by Miss Alberta Waterbury, the guests were expected to guess the names. During this part of the programme Miss Edith Robinson sang several selections. Additional pleasure was found in a peanut hunt, after which refreshments were served by the committee which included Miss Woodcock, Mrs. Lucy Tomlinson, Miss Ethel Millar, Miss Jenkins, Phillip Suffern and Rolland Rice.

ROUTINE BUSINESS BEFORE CITY FATHERS

BATCH OF WORK ACCOMPLISHED AT MEETING THURSDAY NIGHT.

Residents of East Second street, in the vicinity of Washington street, complained of the poorly lighted condition of the street in that neighborhood, at the Common Council meeting Thursday, claiming that the lights now on the street were inadequate, making it unsafe and dangerous to walk there at night. They asked that the street be properly lighted. The matter was referred to the light committee.

The residents of Stebbins place petitioned the Common Council to open that street, declaring that its present condition is a damage to property interests and dangerous in case of fire. This street was never opened as originally intended and it is possible that some action may now be taken in the matter.

County Collector Weed, of Elizabeth, presented the table of rateables and exemptions for the county, including Plainfield, and upon Mr. Daniel's motion the same was filed.

Mayor Jenkins appointed Walter S. Harrison as a full paid member of the fire department in place of Fred Broom, resigned, and P. E. Leland, as a call man in place of Mr. Harrison. The appointments were confirmed on motion of Mr. Lee, chairman of the fire and building committee.

Street Commissioner Gavett stated that since his last report, eighty-four sewer permits were granted and 954 placed in the hands of the city treasurer. Mr. Murphy reported on the petition of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital for two electric lights on Randolph road and Park avenue, and on his motion the same were granted.

NEW YORK CONTRACTORS WANT LOCAL PLASTERERS

LABOR TROUBLE CAUSE THEM TO SEEK MEN HERE.

For the purpose of securing a sufficient number of men to complete the big contract work now on hand in New York city, representatives of the Farley Agency in that city are scouring the country for plasterers. One of their agents, John Ackerman, is now located at 231 East Third street, searching for one hundred plasterers. These men are guaranteed six months' work, at $5.50 per day of nine hours, fifty cents more than the union scale.

Mr. Ackerman says the International Association of Plasterers is fighting the New York contractors for recognition. The contractors now want 11,000 plasterers and it is expected that it will be easy to get one hundred from here, especially as these men do not work in Plainfield in the winter.

Engagement Announced.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Jessie Perkins, of Westfield, and Hugh Pierce, of this city.

SWINDLER FLED AGAIN

Waite Jumped His Bail After Requistion Was Signed.

KIELY'S FIGHT FUTILE

Crook's Lawyers Got a Stay and Waite Skipped Out of Chicago.

After making one of the hardest fights in the history of the local department in order to get a prisoner that rightfully belonged to them, Chief Kiely and Roundsman Flynn returned home from Chicago, Ill., Saturday evening, without bringing Harry Waite, the clever clairvoyant swindler who they went after. Proving their claim for his extradition to New Jersey, the governor signed the necessary papers but the defendant's lawyers called for bail. It was granted in the sum of $800 which he produced in cash and then throwing shadowers off his track, fled from the city. Chief Kiely returned to Plainfield without his man.

When the Plainfielders went after Waite, Roundsman Flynn positively identified him as the man who had swindled Mrs. Abbie Drake, of this city, of $600 and they set about proving their claim to him. The executive put the matter off until last Monday, when he received both sides in the Chicago Auditorium. The charge against the man was so clearly proven, he ordered his delivery to the Jersey authorities but sent a letter to Chief O'Neil, of the Chicago police, in which he was instructed to sue for a writ of habeas corpus."

Waite's lawyers made no move until Wednesday and then appeared before the chief and declared the adjournment of court prevented them from getting the necessary writ and they asked for an extension of time. It was granted them and accordingly they called for bail. The bail was fixed and the time for Waite's delivery to Chief Kiely was to be last Friday. The lawyers appeared but Waite did not and they disclaimed knowledge of his whereabouts.

Chief Kiely declared today that the blunder was clearly up to the governor in fixing the habeas claus. Waite, he said, has unlimited funds and any number of influential men behind him. This makes the third time he has gotten away since he has been wanted in Plainfield.

GREATEST INVENTION EVER IN RAILROADING

NEWARK NEWS' COMMENT ON F. E. KINSMAN'S DEVICE.

The Newark Evening News said editorially Saturday:

"A Jerseyman seems to have successfully inventing a block signal system that makes collisions impossible. This is at least the claim made for a system devised by F. E. Kinsman, of Plainfield, and installed in the New York subway, where it is to be used exclusively. According to reports, experiments have been made giving the system the severest tests possible. Trains fully equipped have been ordered to run into each other, but have in each instance come to a dead stop after passing the ends of the blocks with signals set against them. The system not only stops the trains, but in every attempt to pass a signal, and the rule has been made that trainmen who allow their cars to be thus stopped will be instantly dismissed.

"Whether the system will act as well under real accidents as it does when collisions are prearranged remains to be seen, and it is now announced whether the system or an adaptation of it can be used on other than electric roads. If it proves as reliable as the experiments thus far made would seem to indicate, it will be one of the most valuable inventions ever applied to the railroads of this country. And surely the United States needs a device to stop railroad collisions."

Reunion of Feimley Farm Patrons.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. P. Arnold, who were guests at the Feimley farm at Lebanon, Hunterdon county, during the past summer, entertained other guests of the farm to the number of about twenty at dinner at their home in Third place Saturday night. The affair served as a reunion for those who spent such a pleasant summer at the popular farm house in Hunterdon county, and was a delightful one in every respect. Miss Feimley was invited among the guests, but her father, who is in poor health, was unable to attend. The others were chiefly from New York and Brooklyn, while a few were from this city.

BOY'S SLAYER COMMITTED

Harold Wilcox Must Wait Action of Coroner's Jury.

MAKES A STATEMENT

Declares to Officials He Thought Revolver Contained Only Blank Cartridges.

Is first inclined to condemn his action in the bitterest terms, the sentiment of Westfield's citizens against Alfred M. Wilcox, who shot and killed fourteen-year-old John Darling while playing Hallowe'en pranks, has changed greatly since yesterday. Almost prostrated by the terrible affair he was taken to the county jail at Elizabeth yesterday, to await the action of the coroner's jury and those who saw him had naught but sympathy to offer. The death of the boy is felt by him as keenly as it is by the bereaved mother, as he has three small children of his own. As he was being taken away to a cell he seemed on officials in broken tones that he had never meant to hurt any of his playmates as he believed the revolver contained nothing but blank cartridges.

Official investigation into the affair began yesterday when Coroner Horace Livingood empanelled the following jury: William Tuttle, Jr., Hiram L. Fink, Mahlon Ferris, Louis Oliff, James Moffett and W. I. Keeler. The body was viewed, following an autopsy by County Physician Westcott, but no witnesses were examined. After a brief conference it was decided to adjourn until Thursday and hold Wilcox without bail in the meantime. While at the Westfield police station he was not locked up but allowed the freedom of the main office. His business associates in the Boston Company were ready to furnish security for any amount, but none was asked for.

Harry F. Darling, the boy's father, who is from London for South Africa on a business trip, a few hours before the son was killed. This was learned through cablegrams sent out Monday night. Funeral services over the body will be held from the Darling home tomorrow afternoon with Rev. Dr. Wight, of the Methodist church, in charge.

BODY OF MRS. TALLIANT BROUGHT HERE FOR BURIAL

DIED SUNDAY AT HER HOME IN PORT RICHMOND, STATEN ISLAND.

The body of Mrs. Josephine Brown Talliant, a former well known resident of the borough, was brought to this city yesterday and interred in the family plot in the North Plainfield cemetery. She died Sunday morning at her home in Port Richmond, S. I., after an illness with Brights disease. Mrs. Talliant was the widow of the late Cyprian L. Talliant, who died in 1903. The latter was a prominent New York merchant in the sixties, having a large upholstering business on Thirty-third street. Coming to Plainfield in 1875 the family located in Rockview avenue and later removed to Manning avenue. Mrs. Talliant was a prominent worker in the First Methodist church during her residence here, taking great interest in all religious matters. She lived a consistent Christian life and was identified with many charitable and benevolent acts.

The deceased leaves two daughters, Josephine F., who is the wife of John R. Sharp, of Port Richmond, and Anna L., the wife of Charles S. Greer, editor of the Journal, Rockville, Conn., formerly city editor of the old Plainfield Evening News.

A COLORED MASS-MEETING.

Arrangements Completed to Hold One Friday Night.

Arrangements have been completed for a mass meeting to be held in Reform Hall on Friday night in the interests of the colored voters of the city. It will be given under the auspices of the Republican party and prominent speakers have been secured, including Hon. William F. Powell, Solicitor to Hayti; George Douglass, of Newark; Dr. J. G. Anderson, of this city, and Charles N. Robinson, of Camden.

Rev. E. E. Jackson, of this city, will be chairman of the meeting. Those to have charge include Dr. J. G. Anderson, Rev. E. J. Urndup, Rev. Moses Wallace, Charles Shelton, Spencer Conway, A. S. Venable, John Henry and Charles Irby.

CITY BOARD OF HEALTH ANALYZING CHEAP CANDY

FURTHER SALES TO BE FORBIDDEN IF IT IS POISONOUS.

Profiting by the Notrh Plainfield school authorities action, the city Board of Health has taken up the matter of cheap candies in which injurious dyes are used for coloring. At the regular meeting yesterday afternoon, it was reported that during the month an inspection of the candy stores, particularly those in the vicinity of the school buildings, where a large variety of very highly colored confectionery is sold. Samples were taken and will be analyzed for poisonous coloring matter and flavors. In the event of any injurious substances being found, prompt action to prevent further sales will be taken.

The regular reports read showed that eight cases of contagious disease exist locally, all of which are under quarantine. Permits for the collection of garbage were granted Walter H. Ingraham, August Norway and William Winkiebois, for offal to Swift & Company and to sell milk to William Mernagh. The work of dairy inspection has continued and of sixteen samples of milk analyzed, two were found to be of poor quality. During the month there were sixteen marriages, sixteen births and twenty-two deaths.

Y. M. C. A. MEMBERS HOLD A PLEASANT AFFAIR

FALL EXHIBITION AND HALLOWE'EN SOCIAL COMBINED.

Combining the annual fall exhibition of the physical department and a Hallowe'en social, a very pleasant event took place at the Y. M. C. A. Monday night. The gallery of the gymnasium was well filled, as the exhibition opened with a mass run led by Pionier, one of the leaders of the evening class. This was followed by a dumb bell drill conducted by Physical Director Henckle. Neal and Pionier led the apparatus work by classes, using the horse, parallels, and buck for their exhibition. The moves were well performed, and showed practice and talent on the part of the performers.

At the conclusion of this class work on the apparatus, a special squad consisting of Neal, Pionier and Manson each gave an exhibition on the parallel bars. Their work was enthusiastically applauded. On the high bar, Bentliff, Hansen and Smith led the special work, and went through the moves, some very difficult, in a very creditable manner.

After an exhibition in tumbling by Hansen and Bentliff, which won considerable applause, two picked teams captained by Smith and Heinecks, contested for basket ball honors. The two teams were very evenly matched and the score was 30 to 13 in favor of the former team. Smith's work on the basket ball team was a feature of the game, his goal shooting being remarkable.

Co. K's Fair.

Following out the suggestion submitted by the advisory committee a week ago, the members of Company K desired to hold their annual fair from February 13 to 25. A permanent committee on the fair will be appointed by the Captain before the next meeting. The idea of holding the occasion for such an extended time seems to meet with universal approval, as the armory was so crowded last year, that it was uncomfortable. So far no definite plans have been made for the fair, though it will probably be conducted on the same plan as the former occasions.

Dr. Blair Practicing.

Dr. Thomas Blair, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey Blair, of East Second street, has started to practice medicine in Morristown. He is a graduate of the Plainfield High School in the class of 1893, and attended Princeton University, where he graduated from the academic course in 1899. He afterward took a three years' medical course in the New York Homeopathic Medical School. Dr. Blair has recently completed an eighteen months' course in the Rochester hospital.

Ham Keen Optimistic.

Hamilton Keen, chairman of the Republican County Committee, was among those attending the mass meeting in Reform Hall on Monday night. He expressed great satisfaction with the prospects in the county, believing that the entire ticket will be elected by a substantial majority.

STRIKING SECTION HANDS RETURN TO THEIR GANGS

EIGHT FINED IN THE CITY POLICE COURT THIS MORNING.

Discouraged by the hot reception the local police gave them at Netherwood yesterday, nearly all of the New Jersey Central section hands gave up the idea of striking and went back to work this morning. The only ones still holding out are those stationed at Roselle and not one knows what has become of them since they scattered before the bluecoat charge.

James Morello, the leader of the strikers, and seven of his compatriots caught yesterday, were lined up before Judge Runyon in the city courts this morning. Morello pleaded guilty to inciting the different gangs and defiantly declared that he "didn's care whether he was sent to prison or not." He was fined $10 and the others $5 each. The latter were Dominico Tebia, Michael Merro, Dominick Valentine, of Westfield; Fred Smith, Joseph Back, Harry Bkadensky and Thomas Vannode, of Cranford. Only three of them had paid the fines up to noon.

PLANS FOR DEDICATION OF NEW HIGH SCHOOL COMPLETE

PROMINENT OFFICIALS TO ASSIST IN CORNER-STONE LAYING TOMORROW.

The dedication exercises of the new Plainfield High School will take place tomorrow, beginning at 2:30. Prominent city officials will be present and will take part in the ceremony, while Dr. William R. Richards, former pastor of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, will make the invocation. The pupils of the various schools will attend, the sessions closing at 12:30, while the members of the High School, under the Whitsner department will march to the corner of Arlington avenue and Ninth street in a body.

The order of exercises in detail is to be as follows:

Music, LaVere's band; invocation, Rev. Dr. William R. Richards; song, "Plainfield High School," school, written for the occasion by Louise M. Taylor, class of 1903; address, Craig A. Marsh, Plainfield High School, class of 1873; dedicatory song, "Alma Mater," school, written for the occasion by Mary Lock, class of 1900; address, Dr. John B. Prebsco, president of the Board of Education; laying of the cornerstone, Mayor Olin L. Jenkins; school song, "The Red and the Blue," school, adapted by Vincent B. Miner, class of 1903; benediction, Rev. Erskine M. Rodman; music, LaVere's band.

The public is invited to these exercises, which on account of the season of the year will not last over one hour. If the weather is unfavorable, the exercises will take place on the next clear day.

Directors of Public Library Meet.

The November meeting of the Board of Directors of the Plainfield Public Library was held last night. The special committee for preparing report of the library and periodical list reported the printing and delivery of 500 copies each. A letter was received from W. D. Weaver, chairman of the library committee of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, stating that he had obtained a set of American Institute of Electrical Engineer Circular four books, 11 volumes, which he had placed at the disposition of the Plainfield Library. On motion the gift was accepted and the secretary was directed to extend to Mr. Weaver the thanks of the Board.

Reformation Repeated.

The story of the Scottish Reformation was repeated at Hope chapel last evening before an audience which tested the capacity of the building. The various scenes were given smoothly and the production was in every way a decided success. Mrs. G. Bryan Simons and David Bowden, in the leading characters, were even more delightful than on Monday night and they were accorded unstinted applause.

Real Estate Changes.

William Jeffery, the real estate agent, has effected the following sales: Nos. 13, 14, 16 West End avenue, Norman Barnes to William Birrell; three lots on Woodbine avenue, Investor's Realty Co. to William Birrell; six lots on Rushmore avenue, Investor's Realty Co., Henry P. Vosseller; plot on Park avenue near Woodbine avenue, William Birrell, to Obed Gregory, of Newark.

VOTING MACHINES UNFAIR

The Boroughites Not Pleased With Their Location.

WILL STOP CUTTING

Prominent Residents Declare They Were Forced Upon Them for a Purpose.

The location of two voting machines in the borough has led to a widespread discussion among the residents and as a rule the action has been condemned. Many of the voters have written to The Daily Press about it while others have expressed themselves in person.

One prominent business man of the borough said yesterday: "A surprise is in store for the leaders of last spring's 'Citizen's Party' in the borough who are now recognized as bosses of North Plainfield by the Somerville politicians who control the Republican machine in Somerset County. They thought they could nominate a county ticket to suit themselves and then compel dissatisfied Republicans to vote for it by means of the voting machine.

"Is this they will find themselves mistaken. North Plainfielders are intelligent enough to see through a ladder and they will find a way to show these citizen bosses that they cannot use North Plainfield as a tool to serve the ends of Somerville."

Another Republican who has resided all his life in the borough said: "Last spring Messrs. Honeyman and Cooley, Dalliver and others were out in open and organized opposition to the regular Republican candidates and succeeded in defeating all but one of them. These same men are now putting themselves forward as the leaders of the Republican party in the borough. They are in charge of the campaign. They elected the delegates to the county convention. They refused to allow the name of any North Plainfielder to be presented to the convention as a candidate. They insisted upon the nomination of men whom they know a great part of the borough Republicans opposed. They delivered the votes of the North Plainfield delegates to Somerville to be used as the bosses there dictated. They contrived to have two out of the five voting machines in the county located in the borough in order to force votes for the straight ticket. They believe that the Republicans of the borough will not see through this game and will fall blindly into the mark. They will find themselves sadly mistaken when the voting machines are opened."

"Still another said:

"'New Jersey will give a Republican majority so large that the vote of North Plainfield or of Somerset County will cut no ice. The Legislature will be Republican in any event by at least twenty majority on joint ballot, so that the vote of Somerset's members of Assembly will not be needed for any party purpose. This is recognized of North Plainfield people who are familiar with the shabby treatment the borough has received and will continue to receive from the Somerville politicians and their allies in the borough. They will not stand for the county ticket nor for the men who last spring were against the Republican party, and who now masquerade as its high priests.'

"A Washington Park voter declared to a reporter for The Daily Press:

"'I believe that the Republican county ticket will be badly cut in the borough on Election Day. Many people resent the selling out of North Plainfield interests to Somerville. The U. S. Grant Club, for many years a stalwart Republican organization, is now dominated and officered by men who only last spring were at the head of a movement to defeat the Republican ticket. That ticket was nominated in open caucus and with out opposition. These men might easily have nominated whom they chose if they had tried. But they wanted control and now they haven't. It will be strange if the Republicans of the borough will support them or their ticket.'

"Another Republican said: 'I see by the papers that there are only five voting machines in all Somerset County and yet two of the five have been placed in North Plainfield. This is certainly most unfair. I did intend voting the straight ticket, but I do not propose to vote for any such methods as these. I will split my ticket on Election Day. I guess those people will find out that they can't force us to do just as they please.'"

ENDEAVORERS ENJOY NOVEL HALLOWE'EN SOCIAL

GUESTS REPRESENT SPIRITUAL WORLD IN GHOSTLY FORM.

The Hallowe'en social under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society, of the First Presbyterian church, held last evening in the church parlors, was a decided success. It was largely attended and was unique in character. As each guest arrived he was met by two forms in ghostly apparel, and ushered into the church where other white robed figures confronted him. By means of sheets and pillow cases he soon took his place in the spirit world and awaited the arrival of other victims.

The usual games were played and much amusement was caused by the unique costumes, as all were masked and it was with difficulty that the various ghosts identified one another. A feature of the entertainment was a recitation by Miss Neesie Pound, which was well rendered. At a late hour in the evening refreshments were served by the committee. The decorations consisted of corn stalks and lanterns.

MEN'S CLUB LISTENS TO STORIES OF TRAVEL

ENTERTAINING PROGRAMME PRESENTED AT CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Two descriptions of European trips, vivid and interesting, were given at the meeting of the Men's Club, of the Congregational church, last evening, by the officers of the club William H. Wadsworth, the president of the club, gave a general description of his travels, while the vice president, Alexander Millar, spoke particularly of the Rhine.

About forty members of the club were present and the evening was an enjoyable one. In addition to the description of the travels, two short solos were rendered by Elmer Dettling. He was accompanied by Orville Braider. Mr. Wadsworth spoke of the amusing incidents of his trip, and described the country through which he passed in a delightful manner. Mr. Millar's address was more confined to a description of the winding river, and of the scenes from its banks. The speaker said that he was especially impressed with castles and cathedrals which he passed on a trip up the river, and his narration of the legends and traditions of these old castles was instructive and picturesque.

Following the speeches, refreshments were served by a committee consisting of Charles Steiner and H. C. Nomer.

MOTION DENIED.

The Court Refuses to Dismiss the White-Zeglio Damage Suit.

Move to dismiss the damage suit brought by Mr. and Mrs. Frank White against Dr. P. J. Zeglio, was made by Craig A. Marsh at the opening of the November term of court at Trenton, yesterday. The counsellor argued that the plaintiffs had not complied with certain demands made. W. S. Anglemon, appearing for the White, presented arguments which was heard by the court, it afterward denying Mr. Marsh's motion.

The suit was instituted two years ago because of injuries which Mrs. White received by falling through a defective vault owned by Dr. Zeglio.

Lovers of flowers will have an opportunity of seeing a very pretty display of chrysanthemums at the greenhouses of Stephen A. Gnass at Carlton and Washington avenues tomorrow and Friday. The varieties are more numerous and attractive than ever and attendants will show visitors about.

Plains Democrats to Rally.

The Democrats as Scotch Plains and vicinity will hold a big mass meeting in Excelsior Hall Saturday night. Hon. George Blair, of New York, and Captain Edward W. Farrar, a retired army officer, are to be the speakers.

Labor Leader Addresses Democrats.

Peter Larsen, of Philadelphia, a representative of the Allied Trades of that city, addressed the members of the North Plainfield Democratic Club at their headquarters last night.

U. of P. Musical Clubs to Come Here.

Plans are being formulated to have the University of Pennsylvania Glee, Mandolin and Banjo Clubs appear at the Casino in the near future.

PLENTY OF PLACES TO GET ELECTION RETURNS

THE DAILY PRESS AND CLUBS TO HAVE PRIVATE WIRES.

The unusual interest evidenced this year in the election has resulted in a number of private telegraph wires being engaged for election night. A greater number than usual have been arranged for about the city and at each place there is sure to be a large and eager crowd. The Daily Press has arranged for a private wire and just as soon as the returns are received from this city, county, State and the whole country, they will be displayed on a sheet opposite The Press office.

Other wires will be operated at the Casino and Park Club, where arrangements have been made for social features as well. The Timbo Social Club and the Democratic Club will also have wires.

Among the places where returns will be received and announced is at the Y. M. C. A., while a private wire will carry the news to the large number of interested persons who will gather at Republican Headquarters. The Western Union Telegraph Company has made every preparation this year to give quick and accurate service owing to the importance of the election and it should be possible for people in this city to know considerable of the result quite early in the evening.

LOCAL GOLF SEASON DRAWING TO A CLOSE

YET CONCLUDING DAYS WILL SEE INTERESTING EVENTS.

The closing days of golf at the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club give promise of being of unusual interest to the members and their friends, as several special events have been arranged by the committee in charge. On Saturday there will be in addition to the handicap competition for the Golf Cup, a foursome and Union cups, a tournament for women at nine holes. Already there have been received nearly twenty entries and this number is likely to be increased.

Much interest is now being centered in the election day events, the programme being an attractive one. In addition to the events on the schedule, which include one play for the Greens' Committee Bankard and Holiday cup, there will be an approaching and putting competition at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon with a prize for men and one for the women. This will be open to all club members except the junior associates. Entries must be made before 3 o'clock on the day of play, by the prospective contestants, writing their names on the large bulletin card on the regular board.

The committee has arranged to reserve the sixth hole after 3:30 for this competition.

There will be no special social events at the club in the evening, as the members have accepted the cordial invitation of the Park Club to be present at the club and receive the election returns. Other features will be provided for the pleasure of the guests and a good time is promised all who attend.

There will be the usual weekly competitions at the Park Golf Club on Saturday and on Election Day there will be play for the Holiday cup and approaching and putting contests. In the evening the members, many of whom are members of the Park Club, will go to the latter place and join in the programme provided for the evening.

To Celebrate Anniversary.

The thirteenth anniversary of Monroe Avenue Chapter of Epworth League will be commemorated in the chapel on Friday evening. An interesting programme has been arranged. William H. Sorter will make the address of welcome, as president of the league, and an address will be made by Rev. William H. Morgan, D. D., of Central M. E. church, Newark. The anniversary committee is composed of the following members of the society: William H. Sorter, John J. Frost, N. Mansfield Smith, Miss Georgietta Beekman, Miss Margaret Williams and Rev. George Mooney.

T. A. B. Association's Ball.

St. Mary's T. A. B. Association will hold a ball in their hall on West Fourth street, Monday evening. The committee in charge is W. Shaefer, D. B. Doyle, J. Hines, James O'Keefe, M. Higgins, Eugene O'Reilly will furnish music.

C. N. FOWLER TO SPEAK

Last Republican Mass-Meeting Tomorrow Night.

GOOD MUSIC SECURED

Congressman Will Talk on National and Local Issues—List of Vice Presidents.

Local Republican leaders intend to make the mass meeting in Reform Hall tomorrow night, the banner one in the series, and a record-breaking crowd is expected to hear Congressman Charles Newell Fowler, who will be the principal speaker of the evening. This will be his first visit to the home of his opponent, James M. Martine, and what he will have to say will surely interest every voter. He will talk of National affairs and will incidentally have something to say about the conditions in the Fifth Congressional district as well as in Union county.

It is expected that Congressman Fowler will be accompanied by all the county candidates, and the local candidates will also be present. The committee of arrangements has engaged good music and as usual seats will be reserved for women until 8:15. As this will be the last Republican mass meeting efforts will be made to present strong arguments in favor of a continuance of the party in power.

This is the list of vice presidents for the evening.

CHILD ALMOST CRUSHED BENEATH TROLLEY WHEELS

STRUCK BY FENDER ESCAPES WITH POSSIBLE INTERNAL HURTS.

Laughingly running across West Fourth street in play, yesterday afternoon, Helen McCarthy, the eight-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James McCarthy, was struck by a trolley car and escaped serious injury by the narrowest margin. Seeing her danger, the motorman lowered the fender and striking her about the feet it threw her into the network. When the car was stopped she jumped off and to all appearances was unharmed. When taken home, the child was found to have sustained a deep gash in the chin and may possibly be hurt internally. She has been confined to her bed since the accident.

WM. G. E. SEE DEAD.

Passed Away Suddenly in Jersey City Yesterday Morning of Heart Disease.

William G. E. See, for many years a resident of this city, where he served as a Councilman, died yesterday in Jersey City. He dropped dead from heart disease. Mr. See was a lawyer and for twenty-six years was a successful practitioner in Jersey City. He was considered one of the best of parliamentarians and while a member of the Common Council he displayed exceptional ability as president of that body. He was forty-seven years old and leaves a wife, the daughter of the late William L. Stout, of this city, and a son, Chester Stout See. The funeral will be held from the late home tomorrow night at 8 o'clock.

Last Matinee Race.

Closing a very successful racing season, which at best of the weekly matinee races at the Gentlemen's Driving Park will take place Saturday afternoon. A good programme has been arranged, and it is expected that the usual number of entries will be filed before the day of closing. It is not yet known what horses will be entered in this week's races, though several of those on the track last week will be among the contestants for turf honors. Three trotting and pacing races will be run, the 2:30, 2:27, 2:20 classes, in addition to a running race.

FOX STOLE THE CHICKENS.

Colored Man Taught Reynard to Supply Him with Poultry from Neighboring Coops.

George Washington Alonso Jackson, of Barnard, Vt., a negro who lives in a cabin back in the hills with his wife and three pickaninnies, has been notified by a delegation of representative citizens that he will have to pull stakes and leave town or kill a lean red fox he keeps in a cage in his kitchen. This ultimatum was delivered after much brain thumb had been worn out in solving a problem that has caused no end of comment in the village.

The New York World says that during the past few months Jackson had been deriving a considerable income from the sale of hens, which he claimed to raise at his cabin. At the same time farmers began to miss many fat and valuable pullets and capons. Suspicion attached to Jackson's method of "raising" fowls, and when it was discovered that he hadn't even a henhouse he was watched. For several days the espionage was unproductive of results, but one night an amateur detective alleges he shadowed his man to a hill back of Elder Thomas' barn, where strange things happened.

Jackson was leading by a chain what in the darkness the detective thought to be a small dog, but which eventually turned out to be a trained red fox. The fox, it is alleged, trotted along quietly behind its master until it was liberated, when it made a bee line for the elder's henhouse and disappeared within. A few minutes later it reappeared and trotted up to Jackson with a dead hen in its mouth. The watcher declares that Jackson took the fowl, put it under his coat and after a due amount of petting sent the fox back for another hen.

It was found, after searching many calf-bound and musty volumes, that no statute governing the case exists, and it was finally decided to notify Jackson to kill the fox or get out of town. Jackson will probably dispense with his pet. "How he came to catch the animal and train him to hen-stealing ways is not known, but it is a fact that the man has a wonderful influence over horses, dogs and cats and possesses a mania for teaching them tricks. He has a hog which used to parade on his hind legs until he became too fat, and he makes great pets of two bullfrogs he has taught to croak in unison.

UMBRELLA SAVES A CHILD.

Little Girl Opened It and Fell from Train Lightly and Without Hurting Herself.

Ruth, the five-year-old daughter of Charles G. Walker, of Bennington, Vt., had a remarkable escape from death by falling from the platform of a south-bound train which was running 40 miles an hour.

Mr. Walker, with his two children, Ruth and Ina, reached the station just as the train was starting. The father placed Ruth on the platform on the first car and turned for the other child. Before he could pick her up the train was moving too fast for him to board it. Little Ruth was sitting on the front platform, where she managed to remain for about three miles, holding her two small handkerchiefs and an umbrella.

She raised her umbrella to prevent her hat from blowing away, and the strong current of air under the umbrella carried it, with the child clinging to it, off the train. She landed in a sand cut, uninjured. The fireman, who had happened to be looking back, saw some person leave the train. The train was stopped and was run back until the child was met. She was trudging along the track. One of the passengers on the train recognized the child and brought her safely home.

OUR NEGRO POPULATION.

Of the Nine Millions in the United States Nearly Half Are Illiterate.

As a result of requests for information from all over the country, the census office has prepared a bulletin on "Negroes in the United States," containing statistics with regard to the extent, character and condition of the negro population in the several states of the union. The summary of results given in the bulletin is in part as follows:

"The number of negroes in the United States (including Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico) is 9,200,000, perhaps a larger number than is found in any other country outside of Africa. Nearly nine-tenths of the negroes in continental United States are found in the southern states. The largest number of negroes living in compact masses are found in certain urban counties, several of which tie outside of the great cotton growing states. The four, each having over 75,000, are the District of Columbia; Shelby county, Tenn., containing Memphis; Baltimore City, Md., and Orleans parish, La., coextensive with New Orleans.

"The district in which the proportion of negroes is greatest lies in the Mississippi alluvial region along both banks of the lower Mississippi, where five-eighths of the population is negro, the maximum being in Issaquena county, Miss., with more than 15 negroes to each white person. The center of the negro population is in DeKalb county, *Ala., about four miles from the east*ern boundary of Georgia and 35 miles south of the southern boundary of Tennessee.

"In the country districts as a whole the negro males outnumber the negro females slightly and in the cities the females outnumber the males decidedly. This disassociation of the sexes between city and country is far more marked among negroes than among whites and has increased since 1890.

"Among negroes 44.5 per cent. are illiterate. The percentage of illiteracy has decreased rapidly since 1890, when it was 57.1 per cent. Illiteracy among negroes is about seven times as common as among whites, and this ratio between the races has not altered materially in the last ten years. Illiteracy among southern negroes is about four times that among southern whites. If the per cent. of illiterates should fall in each succeeding decade at the same great rate, amount as it did between 1890 and 1900 an improbable assumption, it would reach zero about 1940.

"There was a decided increase between 1890 and 1900 in the proportion of married among young negroes. The increase of early marriages was yet more marked among southern whites of both sexes and was probably due to the great prosperity of the country just before 1900.

"There are nearly 4,000,000 negroes in the United States engaged in gainful occupations. Those persons, who may be called breadwinners, constitute 45.2 per cent. of the total negro population, while for the total white population the per cent. is 37.3 and for southern whites 34.3."

PLUCK OF INDIAN BANDIT.

The Renowned Raisuli Once Proved His Utter Indifference to Danger.

"At Tangier," said a Chicagoan, according to an exchange, "I once saw Raisuli. He looked as magnificent as an Indian Rajah, and a Frenchman told me that he had a foolhardy and reckless valor.

"This Frenchman said that Raisuli had entered the shooting gallery at Tangier one day while a Tunisian was trying a little pistol practice.

"The Tunisian was an excellent shot. He broke glass balls, rang bells, split pipe stems, and penetrated bull's eyes with great number. Each shot a polite murmur of applause arose. The man was all puffed up with triumph.

"Raisuli looked on with a sneer, and finally he said in a loud voice:

"'Is a duel this *gentleman wouldn't*shoot so well.'

"'We'll see about that,' yelled the Tunisian, and he challenged Raisuli, and ten minutes later they were on the field.

"They were to fight at 12 paces, each to fire one shot. Lots were drawn as to who should shoot first and Raisuli lost. He took his stand before the Tunisian calmly, and the latter lifted up his weapon, took careful aim and missed.

"Raisuli smiled. 'What did I tell you?' he said.

"And he thrust his pistol in his belt and strode away humming a French song."

Boys and College.

When a boy tells me he just yearns for an education, that he longs to go to college, but that he has no one to help him as other boys have, that if he had a rich father to send him to college he could make something of himself, I know perfectly well that the boy does not yearn for an education, but that he would simply like to have it if it could be gotten without much effort. When a boy today says that he cannot go to college, though deaf, dumb and blind girls manage it, I know that he has such a knack of needless difficulties that he will not only miss college, but will probably also miss most of what is worth while in life.—Success.

Really a Wonder.

"Yes, Mr. Binkson is one of the most wonderful men I ever knew. He is really a genius."

"I didn't know he had ever written anything."

"Oh, he hasn't, but he can take a railroad time table and tell just when a train will start, where it is going, and when it will get there."—Chicago Record-Herald.

MODELS IN MILLINERY.

Ribbon Trimming on Headgear, The Season's Popular Colors.

Ribbon will play a prominent part as a trimming on hats and frocks. The soft messaline ribbons are manipulated *into the daintiest little roses imagina*ble with which to adorn my lady's natty headgear or frock.

Large sibeline hats are very much the rage for dressy wear. They are trimmed with ostrich plumes and sweeping amazone feathers. Ribbon and embroidery are extensively used in their construction.

Jet bead trimming appears on some of the Paris model hats, but it is doubtful whether such garniture will be popular unless mingled with mousseline on theater toques. White chiffon is to be made up into stunning little evening toques, touched here and there with silver.

Chestnut brown mingled with bronze green tips failing off to golden amber and russet greens makes some remarkable studies in hat color schemes.

A high white felt directoire hat is embellished with a high crown of golden brown and green velvet foliage. An upstanding brown and amber amazone plume gracefully sweeps toward the back, and long brown velvet strings complete the picturesque whole.

The smart little hat illustrated is of soft gray felt, turned up on one side and in the back with shaded old rose ribbon flowers, the same trimming forming a semiwreath about the crown.

WRAPS A LA MODE.

A Long, Loose Mantle Is Now a Veritable Necessity.

This year the separate wrap takes an important place in the wardrobe, and three or four handsome wraps for different occasions must be found in a complete outfit. One for evening wear may be of fine chiffon cloth, velvet or satin, and if it is to be especially stunning the garment will be of velvet trimmed with fur and old lace; if of less expensive materials, any odd arrangement of color or design will bring it up to chic.

For serviceable wear there is a wrap which is made of cloth three-quarter length, with three deep capes, the longest reaching below the waist and set on from a flat, braid trimmed collar of some becoming color in velvet. It is double breasted in front and fastens with eight large buttons. This is a particularly comfortable wrap, as there are no sleeves to crumple the dainty gown worn under it.

Black satin directoire jackets, with their wide revers, enameled buttons and girdle of velvet, with long loops at one side, belting in the full jacket skirt, are very stunning. As a finish a jacket of this kind has the usual jabot and sleeve ruffles of lace.

The elegant wrap illustrated is of ballotrope pastel cloth, made with a pelerine of shirred ruffles, edged with bands of the same colored velvet. Two ruffles, similarly edged, are placed at the bottom of the wrap. The stole and cuffs are of ermine, and the lace at wrist and neck is of ecru alencon. This style admits of a much simpler makeup, and velvet could very successfully take the place of the ermine.

GIRL GARDENERS.

Great Demand For Scientifically Trained Women Horticulturists.

The vast country place of a New York millionaire has a woman superintendent. Miss Margaret Smith. The estate is near Raritan, N. J. Miss Smith began life as a factory hand in a silk mill; today she receives $5,000 a year and has charge of 400 workmen who, under her direction, till and beautify the 2,500 acres of this great farm. Every morning Miss Smith rides on horseback over her domain, sees what is to be done outdoors, then returns and awaits in her office the report of her orderlies, to learn what supplies are needed in the many departments. She keeps track of every dollar spent on that 2,500 acre farm and each month returns to her employer the balance sheet of outgo and income. Beyond glancing over that sheet and entertaining guest parties in his rural palace the millionaire owner has little personal connection with the place. All details are looked after by the energetic and clear headed Miss Smith.

The secret of her success is that when only a mill girl she had aspirations for knowledge which would fit her on her own account to do something better paid for than factory work. She herself says she gained her present place by "hard work and the will to succeed." From her wages in the silk mill she saved enough money to take a course in a business college, also to give her sister Kate the benefit of instruction in a cooking school. Miss Kate is now the housekeeper at the millionaire's country home.

There are numerous such posts as Miss Smith holds waiting for the women who can fill them. Now, too, there is opportunity for women to prepare themselves scientifically to be either estate superintendents or to operate farms, gardens and ranches of their own. The logic of events has demonstrated that a so called education of Latin, Greek and ancient history fits a student neither mentally, morally nor physically to cope with the conditions of today. Moral and industrial training is the crying need.

For the girl who must earn her own living—for any girl, in fact—there is perhaps no field so promising as that which opens to one scientifically trained in rural occupations. Amherst Agricultural college admits both sexes, and this year the first girl has been regularly graduated. She is Miss Esther Cushman.

More remunerative *than a govern*ment clerkship, however, will be found the practical personal conducting of farms and gardens by trained women agriculturists. It is better to lay a foundation of general knowledge of farming, then on that to build one or more specialties, such as dairying, floriculture, beekeeping, poultry raising or fruit and vegetable gardening. Floriculture and beekeeping, dairying and poultry raising, for instance, may be combined with profit.

Amherst Agricultural college has a number of other girl students in its various departments. One is taking the full all around course, expecting to personally operate a live stock ranch of her own in the west. She says she intends to learn to run a farm engine, work at a forge, also to do land surveying, besides getting knowledge of botany and geology. All this knowledge is today needed for the skilled agriculturist. The rule of thumb in farming operations works no longer. It and that other rule that among a family of sons the stupid one was good enough to be a farmer have landed in bankruptcy a considerable proportion of the rural population in the older parts of the country.

An arrangement goes into effect this autumn whereby a preliminary agricultural course of two years will be added to the Simons Industrial Female college in Boston. Young women who have passed this course will then be admitted to the advanced classes at Amherst. Thus Boston city girls of small means will be enabled to commence their course at home. Landscape gardening is another branch of rural occupation which commends itself specially to women. Among those already successful in this field is Miss Beatrice Jones.

In the state universities many girl students are taking the agricultural courses. It is not enough, either, that a girl should put on a fantastic white sunbonnet and sit upon a stool beside a cow and be photographed, she must learn not only to milk that cow scientifically, but also with her own hands to feed and take care of the cow.

THE CHANGING MODES.

Some of the New Materials to Be Seen in the Shops.

The silhouettes of the gowns for the coming season, with the exception of a few changes in details, will be the same as they were in the summer. Skirts will be full, broad and rich in folds, the hip line being thereby considerably broadened.

With reference to the length of skirts, those for promenading and visiting will just touch the ground, and some few perhaps will train the least little bit.

Among the fashionable wool materials for winter, cashmere bids fair to regain its old prestige. The new variety is deliciously fine and soft and comes in all the desirable shades of the season.

Ribbed stuffs are something new, and these novelties come in all varieties, sometimes very coarse ribbed and again fine ribbed. Coarse threaded

COSTUME OF BLUE GRAY CLOTH.

English gentlemen's cloths with a dash of yellow, red and green are favorite fabrics for the walking gown.

Extremely attractive is the pictured costume of blue gray face cloth. The skirt is gracefully laid in wide plaits. On every other fold is a button trimming made of molds covered with velvet a shade darker than the cloth. The bottom of the skirt is stitched in a deep band. About the waist are stitched tabs of cloth and buttons. The slightly bloused waist has a novel stitched trimming of the Greek key pattern. The new gigot sleeves are intersected by a puff finished with a wide stitched band. The lower sleeve buttons to the elbow. A jabot and collar of lace trimmed mull complete this costume.

WAIST TRIMMINGS.

Many Pretty Trifles That May Be Made Easily at Home.

Band laces and embroideries are extensively used for waist trimmings, the short boleros, double sleeves and broad collars affording splendid opportunities for elaborate display. Many of the lace bands are made of flowers and figures that may be separated and used as motifs when desired.

The woman who is deft with her needle can copy expensive French laces by putting around the design of a good piece of lace crystal or cut steel beads and inserting metal threads where they will show when a brilliant light strikes them. The cost is slight, but considerable labor is involved.

Some of the new lace handkerchiefs are the daintiest things imaginable and not only have lace edges, but are partly covered with small motifs of butterflies, fleurs-de-lis and roses, following the design in the outer edges. The batiste is cut away, and the handkerchief looks as if it was entirely made of lace. These pretty trifles are absolutely useless as handkerchiefs, but are dainty little accessories and make the nicest kind of Christmas presents.

The dressy little waist pictured is of pale green silk. The tucked fullness forming a yoke is arranged in corresponding tucks for several inches just above the waist line. Outlining the vest and collar of lace are fitted straps of stitched silk. The sleeves of the new puffed variety are plaited a little above the elbow and flare out in a ruffle over the very full falls of lace.

FASHION'S FOIBLES.

New Trimmings For Evening Gowns, The New Jeweled Leather.

Perfectly stunning are the new evening frocks of painted chiffon, the billowy skirts inset with tiny islands of lace and dotted here and there with tiny ribbon bows or rosettes made of plaited satin ribbon. These plaque-like motifs are also sprinkled over the bodice and sleeves.

ribbon or of chiffon and the leaves of green mousseline. The sprawling stems are carried out in thin silk covered hat wire.

Jeweled leather is something very new. It makes up into charming belts, bags and stocks. The leather is painted in such a way as to have the appearance of jewels where mock gems themselves are not used.

A quantity of that strange orange color "coq de roche" is in evidence, and it may find favor in the sight of those fortunate people who have not exhausted its possibilities. To the artiste eye it has always been a quarrel-some contrast, and, although there are many others employed in the same manner, coq de roche has a peculiarly aggressive air. The only chance for it is a gradual shading off to brown.

The millinery model here illustrated is of brown beaver trimmed about the crown with bands of brown velvet and a paradise plume in a harmony of browns and this latter day orange color.

MOURNING COSTUMES.

Crape Voile Is the Material Which Is Most Approved.

Sooner or later there comes to almost every one a time when a mourning, or, as the French call it, a costume de deuil, is necessary. The trappings of woe are no longer so severe either in makeup or material as they used to be, for nowadays even the widow mitigates the costume effect of her grief.

The long veil of crape, that relic of barbarism, is a thing of the past, and the smart way of wearing this scarf is to attach it to a becoming close shaped hat and let it hang in a graceful short length down the back to about the waist line. Widows of the very conservative type alone wear the long crape veil reaching almost to the hem of the dress.

For elegant walking gowns dull finished broadcloth is the first choice or henrietta elaborately trimmed with crape and made attractive with dull jet buttons.

Voile is now the accepted material from which to evolve a mourning frock, and a stunning creation may be made from the new crape voile.

For dressy frocks black chiffon or brussels net trimmed with dull jet passementerie or rows of graduated black grosgrain ribbon is used. For a dinner gown unrelieved black tulle is delightfully becoming and smart.

The mourning costume illustrated is of crape voile. The skirt is gathered on heavy cords three times down its length and finished at the feet with pelerine flounces. The bolero shaped waist is gathered on the shoulders and has three gored attached basques on the jacket bodice. The trimming consists of narrow straps of the material and revers joined through dull ribbon and buttons of passementerie. The chemisette and belt are of crape.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Simplicity Is to Be the Keynote of Winter Fashions.

Just now is a busy time of the year for the mother of a young family, and the commencement of the cold season nearly always finds her unprepared to meet the demand for new gowns and coats. It is the child of ten or eleven who has an uncomfortable habit of outgrowing in a few months everything it possesses. Boys and girls are much alike in this respect, but as the boy's outfit is generally bought at a *shop the girls are the hardest to pro*vide with the necessary wardrobe.

Simplicity is the keynote of the small girl's gowns, and as children always look best and feel best in plain clothes mothers will be thankful for the present modes which approve of them.

Blue serge is a serviceable material from which to construct the small girl's everyday coat and skirt. Made up with a short box coat, with triple shoulder capes stitched or trimmed with black braid, the effect is always good. Any one of the charming designs shown in wash flannel will make a dainty accompanying blouse worn with a linen collar, black silk tie and leather belt.

A neat Breton sailor trimmed with a scarf and quill or a tricorne adorned with ribbon rosettes is a very suitable hat.

Plaids make up into wonderfully attractive and stylish gowns for a girl over eight, and the dress illustrated is of Scotch tartan in dull tones of green and blues plaided with a line of red. The skirt is cut on the bias and laid in rather deep plaits at the waist, commencing with a box plait in the center of the front. The waist is plaited from the shoulder and blouses slightly over a belt of green velvet fastened with a dull gold buckle. The vest is of white cloth ornamented with tiny gold bullet buttons. The chemisette is of the cloth and has a Dutch neck effect.

SMALL THINGS OF FASHION.

A Few of the New Ideas in Fringes and Galloons.

Galloons and fringes are enjoying extended vogue, and the former are worked in several shades of a color with fine silver or gold thread cleverly concealed. Solid gold or silver strips of narrow braid produce the same military effect which is so popular this season.

At the shops are to be found bands of matched embroideries running from one to six inches in width. These are often done by hand and show charming examples of artistic needlework. Flower foliage and small fruit are exactly reproduced. Gooseberries and maidenhair fern, with their delicate green shadings, are used on white or pink to trim dark gowns, while the richer tones are shown in cherries or currants embroidered on ecru or blue.

A new kind of fringe has the straight top band of heavy metal galloon, with silk fringe and an occasional brilliant thread to match the top. Others have bands of lace at the top and small medallions falling over the fringe at intervals.

The smart shirt blouse illustrated is of pale yellow faille adorned with stitched plaits and set on shoulder pieces. Box plaits border the front, stitched straps are also on the waistcoat. The buttons are of steel. The crossed strap about the neck and the narrow turned back cuffs are edged with lilac velvet. The collar piece is of white lace.

WASHINGTON LETTER

INTERESTING GOSSIP FROM THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

WHO WILL SUCCEED HOAR?

Attorney General Moody Talked Of for the Vacant Senate Seat—President Roosevelt on the Streets —Other Timely Chatter.

Washington.—The death of Senator Hoar of Massachusetts may mean another political honor for Attorney General William H. Moody. It is not unlikely that this brilliant statesman will be elected to the senate from Massachusetts and it is certain that he will be if the legislature of that state regards the wishes of her great statesman who has just passed away. A few months before his death Mr. Hoar expressed the wish that, when the time came, his young friend, Mr. Moody, should succeed him in the senate.

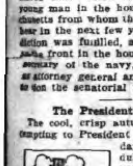
Attorney General Moody.

Mr. Moody has had a brilliant career, which he has filled with ability and his honors were won by his own energy and capacity. He is a man after the president's own heart and possesses many of the characteristics of Mr. Roosevelt. The two men are not unlike in personal appearance, although Mr. Moody is probably an inch shorter in stature than the president. He is of the same sanguine complexion, brown, sandy mustach, crisp, brown hair and nervous, energetic movements. When he was in congress and Mr. Roosevelt was assistant secretary of the navy they were close companions and the policies which Mr. Roosevelt put into effect in the navy department were often originated on friendly strolls, which the two frequently took together.

Mr. Moody first came into national notice as prosecuting attorney in the celebrated Borden murder case at Fall River. Soon after he came to congress and it was David B. Hill, the senator from New York, who prophesied a brilliant future for the young man. He declared that "there was a red-headed young man in the house from Massachusetts from whom the country would hear in the next few years." His prediction was fulfilled, as Moody forged ahead in the house, then became secretary of the navy, followed Knox as attorney general and is now likely to don the senatorial togs.

The President Walks.

The cool, crisp autumn air is very tempting to President Roosevelt these days and he is indulging in his favorite exercise of walking. The people of Washington have become so familiar with his appearance on the street that he attracts comparatively little attention from them. It is an interesting sight, however, for the stranger in the city to see the president of the United States taking his exercise or hurrying from church or a visit to some of his friends. He looks like a man walking for a wager, but there is no mistaking the identity of that athletic figure, wrapped in a bowling coat.



Taking a Daily Constitutional.

The other Sunday Mr. Roosevelt was walking rapidly home from church and as he crossed Lafayette square and swung into the white house grounds a stranger, evidently a country man, gazed at him in open-mouthed wonder. The visitor, poking his face between the iron railings of the fence that surrounds the white house grounds, shouted with lusty tones: "Well, Teddy, if you can run as well as you can walk, Parker will not be in it for a minute." The president turned around with a broad smile on his face, bowed his acknowledgment and continued up the walk to the mansion, his shoulders shaking with suppressed glee all the time.

It delights the president to test the endurance of the secret service men who are ordered to follow him when he goes out for a walk and they have to frequently break into a footrace to keep up with their distance of the chief executive. It was a long time before Mr. Roosevelt could accustom himself to the guardianship of these secret police and he only yielded to it at the earnest solicitation of his wife and friends.

Corbin and Cupid.

Gen. Corbin's lecture to young army officers and advice not to get married while they are poorly receiving lieutenants' salaries is not likely to have very much effect. The general was honest in his suggestions, which are the result of his own experiences. He got married immediately at the close of the civil war when he had the rank of brevet brigadier general. He was able to retain it rank at his request, afterward he came down to the rank of lieutenant in the regular army and had to struggle along on the salary of that position. He was assigned to western posts, but even there the cost of living and keeping up the style that is expected of an army officer, left him little or nothing out of his income. It was a hard struggle and taught him that the fullest discharge of an officer's duty is sometimes interferred with by the worry of domestic expenses.

Of late years, however, the young officers in the army have been more fortunate than some of the older ones in the matter of marriage. Army and navy officers in Washington, even of the lowest rank, are little heroes among the female sex and girls of wealth seem very glad to contract marriages with them. The wife's income comes in very handy in sustaining the establishment and style which society expects of these officers. This fact has caused serious reflection to the suggestion of Gen. Corbin that the consent of the war department be secured by young lieutenants before they enter into the marriage relation. They reject the idea of being called upon to give their financial standing, which would include an estimate of their finances' marriage "dot."

There are very few of Gen. Corbin's old comrades who endorse his ideas, as it is claimed that a young man possessing the intelligence and moral standing required of young officers will be able, by reasonable economy and management, to live on the salary allowances even of a second lieutenant.

Compared Postal Systems.

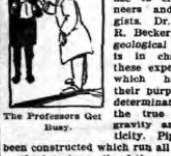
First Assistant Postmaster General Wynne, who has just returned from a European trip, is more than ever impressed with the efficiency of the United States postal system. While abroad he took occasion to investigate the postal service of some of the leading foreign countries and in every feature of the service he discovered that the old governments of Europe were behind the up-to-date methods of the United States.

In his travels Mr. Wynne made some interesting observations of the people and customs abroad. He was particularly interested in studying the men and women of the country. In Paris he declares that the women and men are groomed to the limit of perfection, but thinks the matter of personal pulchritude is a little bit overdone. He declares there is too much paint on one sex and too much wax on the mustaches of the other. In Ireland he looked diligently for the typical, beautiful Irish girl, but did not find her. As a result of his observations he says:

"I have seen some beautiful types of the Irish girl in this country, but if there were any in Ireland I missed them; they must have all come to America. The Emerald Isle is a beautiful country and intensely interesting, but a visitor is liable to be disillusioned as to the romantic character and beauty of the people. They are hospitable, industrious and a good race, but my observation is that we have the best types of the Irish right in America, where they have added greatly to our citizenship."

A Scientific Experiment.

An experiment is now in progress in the Washington monument, which is being watched with great interest by scientists and the result of which may be of great use to civil engineers and geologists. Dr. George R. Becker, of the geological survey, is in charge of these experiments, which have for their purpose the determination of the true laws of gravity and elasticity. Pipes have been constructed which run all the way up the interior walls of the monument, extending to within a few feet of the tower floor. In these pipes wires will be extended with weights attached to the ends and scientists will carefully measure the stretch of the wire produced by the gravity of the earth. This will be done by an instrument called the cathetometer.



The Professors Get Busy.

It will require some very accurate figuring, but it is expected that the results will be of much importance and value. The most extensive test of this kind ever conducted before were with 73-foot wires. Dr. Becker's experiments will measure the infinitesimal degrees of strain on a wire 500 feet long. When the results are computed bridge builders and construction engineers will have a more accurate idea of the ratio of strain in the materials which they use. At present, in the building of bridges, the factor of safety cannot be definitely reckoned with. So far as the geologists and their knowledge of the earth's compressibility is concerned they are still worse off from a scientific standpoint. The tests now being made, it is hoped, will in a great measure relieve these conditions.

Twas Easily Done.

Phrenologist—Why, sir, your bump of veneration is the greatest I have ever seen; such a bump should make you a bishop.

Bridgeport—Reepers, an' is that so? Well, I'm not really Nolan to give me mother whack in the same place, and I'll not get an archbishop.—Judge.

WALK WITH A BEAR

A NATURALIST DESCRIBES THE ANTICS OF A CUB.

He Was an Adept at Climbing Trees, Walking Stone Walls and Rail Fences—His Encounter with a Cow.

When I called him "Johnny," I had forgotten for the moment that already there was a celebrated bear cub of that name, well-known to all readers of Mr. Seton's "Lives of the Hunted," and as soon as I recalled this fact my hopeful was rechristened "Jimmy." At first he seemed to resent the change of name, and when I called "Jimmy," in a tone of authority, the cub would saunter off with a sort of "hands-in-his-pockets" air and a rather tough sidelong look, which seemed to say: "Who are you talking to, anyhow? My name ain't Jimmy." But he got used to it in the course of a few days, and now he answers to the new name as often as he did to the old one, which is about once in ten times.

Yesterday, Jimmy and I went out for a walk, and before we returned we had some rather exciting experiences. But before he would take one step out of the garden, the cub insisted on having his breakfast, which, as usual, consisted of a large pan of crackers and milk. He was hungry after his all-night's fast, and he rushed at the pan like a—well, like a hungry bear. His nose went down and touched the food but with a disgusted look he raised his head without taking a mouthful. He walked up the steps to the piazza, and, as the door was locked, he began to weave back and forth as bears and other wild animals will do when caged. Wondering why I refused his food, I made inquiries, thinking that perhaps the milk was a little sour. It was perfectly fresh, but I found that it was last night's milk, while Jimmy usually had that which was fresh from the cow. We made a change, and gave him the morning's milk, and with a hungry growl he fairly wallowed in it. After licking the pan clean, he was given a bowl of water, in which he washed his face with his fore paws, and then he was ready.

Along the country road we went, Jimmy galloping along, now in front, now behind, and making frequent excursions into the woods on either hand to satisfy his curiosity or to pick wild raspberries, of which he is very fond. When he came to a raspberry-bush, he would first eat those which hung near the ground, and then, standing on his hind legs, he would pull the tall branches down to him with his fore paws. The amount of energy he displayed was remarkable; he never seemed to know what it was to be tired even after the most violent exertion. After galloping perhaps a hundred yards to catch up to me, he would make a playful run at me, biting at my legs and giving me a vigorous hug and shake with his fore paws, breaking away only to dash up a tree to a point perhaps 50 feet from the ground, without so much as a twig to aid him in his ascent. Here he would probably chew the green leaves a moment, and then, turning round, he would come tumbling down, tail first, once breaking into a gallop to make up for the ground he had lost. He would march boldly along the tops of the stone walls, walk slowly and cautiously on wobbly rail fences, and rush up the trunks of trees when there was nothing more exciting on hand. Sometimes he would remain up a tree so long that I got far ahead of him on the road, or sometimes I would hide in the long grass and call him to see what he would do. Apparently he never followed my trail by scent, as a dog would have done, but relied on his ears and eyes.

By and by, we struck into the fields, and had gone but a short way when we countered a cow with her last-year's calf. She was interested in Jimmy at once, and started after him at a very businesslike pace. But Jimmy was attending to business, too, and before the cow was near enough to be dangerous, the little bear was looking at her from a safe position in the crotch of a wild-cherry tree. The cow was a sensible creature, and did not make any useless threats, but kept her gaze on the impudent cub who stared at her with a devil-may-care expression on his naughty little face. Presently, he seemed possessed of a desire to find out what she would do if he faced her, so he slid down the trunk, and went boldly to meet her as she advanced with lowered head. Just as she neared him, Jimmy stood bolt upright on his little hind legs, and, "squaring off" like a prize-fighter, swung for the cow's wet nose right and left in rapid succession, and landed twice. It was plainly a surprise for the cow, for she stepped back in a hurry, and before she could recover, Jimmy, with that peculiar sneering look of his, turned and bolted up the tree again. I drove the cow away, and we continued our walk.

UNCLE MOSE'S RUSE.

PLAYED BEAR IN ORDER TO CATCH SLY OLD BRUIN.

Vermont Farmer Dressed Up in Fur Proved a Fine Decoy — Fellow Citizens Talk of Sending Him to Legislature.

Uncle Mose White's belled bear, which ever since it returned to civilization after its winter snooze in the mountains has been pestering inhabitants roundabout Sherburne, Vt., has been caught.

The New York World says the bear was belled by Uncle Mose last summer to drive off other bears infesting the locality, and the whole township was proud of Uncle Mose as originator of the scheme until brain got to stealing lambs and otherwise making himself obnoxious. The animal finally got to be such a nuisance that every one was mighty glad when he holed up for the winter. Folks never expected to lay eyes on him again, but with the first warm spring sun Jack he came and resorted to his old tactics.

The Uncle Mose wrote a letter to Hiram Marsh, a Shrewbury hunter, and in due time received a big pack age. Even village gossips failed to learn its contents and when the farmer took it home no one knew what it contained. Probably all the details of what followed never would have been believed had not Sim Whittaker happened to need a new augur to tap sugar trees. The one he sent to Rutland for didn't suit and so he went over to Mose's house one evening to borrow one.

As he neared the barn cross-lots he heard a noise and saw a shaggy animal rubbing his back against an apple tree. It was pretty dark, but he had no difficulty in making out the form of a big bear and he moved up an elm with such agility that he lost his hat. He had scarcely straddled a limb when he heard a hollow tinkle and glanced over his shoulder to see the belled bear rubbing up against another tree a dozen rods off.

The belled bear uttered a low whine and the other responded with a guttural grunt and moved over to Sim's tree. This finished Sim and he couldn't have uttered a sound if his life had depended upon it. At the trunk the bear stopped, looked up, clawed at the bark and sat down. At this the belled bear tossed his nose in the air, sniffed suspiciously and rolled on the grass.

Finally he moved slowly toward the barn, now and then looking over his shoulder and grunting. Evidently the belled bear must do the trailing if there were to be any further confidences. Following the waddling bear with his eyes Sim was surprised to see the dim outlines of a gun leaning against the corner of the barn. If he could only lay hands on that, he thought, he could make short work of one of the animals at least. The idea spurred him, but the bear waddling bear heard the noise, stopped short and growled. It was a low growl, but it frose Sim into silence, and with bulging eyes he watched what followed.

The belled bear had advanced a few yards from the other reached the corner of the barn, knocked down the rifle with his paw, and picked it up in his forearms. The next instant he lay down on the weapon lovingly, wiggled the stump of his tail and stretched out on the grass. There was something unnatural and uncanny in the way he pushed the muzzle of the gun around, and when Sim heard the unmistakable sound of a clicking lock, his heart stood still.

Suddenly there was a flash, a loud report followed by a howl of rage and pain from the belled bear and Sim toppled out of the tree and struck the ground with a dull thud. The next moment he was in the arms of the shouting bruin and a voice, issuing from within the shaggy head, was yelling to him to keep quiet.

"Consarn ye," shouted the voice, "keep quiet, will ye? I hain't killed ye yet."

Then the paws again picked up the gun and sent a bullet through the belled bear's head.

At this Sim went straight into hysterics and Uncle Mose had to get out of his bear skin and show himself in his proper person before he could bring his neighbor back to his senses.

Sim giggled and cried by turns, but finally struck a mental balance and then Uncle Mose explained that he had dressed up in the skin of an old she bear, borrowed from his friend Marsh. After all he was glad Sim had appeared, as he could prove the truth of the story. Mose is the most talked of man in the village to-day and they are thinking of sending him to the legislature in the fall.

NEW ROUTE TO INDIA

EIGHTEEN HOURS SAVED FROM LONDON TO BOMBAY.

A Through European Railway Line That Will Connect Greece with the Other Nations of the Continent.

In these days of rapid transit, when the journey from London to Bombay can be performed in a fortnight, every hour counts for more than it did in the old days, before the age of steam, and any scheme to bring India half a day nearer to London would be sure to attract attention. The new Greek railway which is now being constructed will, when finished, accomplish more than this, the precise saving in time in the journey to the east being calculated at 18 hours. In addition to this, it will form the easy route of communication between Greece and the rest of Europe, for, strange as it may seem, Greece has not yet been connected with the European railway system, the few short lines she possesses stopping short of the Turkish frontier. The new railway then will be an important factor in the commercial development of Greece, and with a direct service from Paris to Athens an immense tourist traffic will be assured, and students of art and archaeology will flock to the cradle of European civilization.

The line is of the ordinary European gauge and is to go from the Piraeus to Larissa, in Thessaly, via Athens, Skimiari, Thebes, Livadia, Dadi, Lamia and Demirly, with branches from Skimiari to Chalcis and from Lamia to Stylis. The question of the junction with the Ottoman system is at present the subject of negotiations with the Turkish government, and in all likelihood no great difficulty will be raised by the Porte to prevent the realization of a scheme in which all Europe is interested. The extension from Larissa would cross the Turkish frontier at Karalik Derveni, on the seacoast, and follow the coastline until near Gida, where it would join the existing railway from Monastir to Salonica.

There is indeed a line already in operation between Demirly and Kalabaka, near the Turkish frontier, and it is theoretically possible to make junctions with the Turkish system in this and other directions, but the physical difficulties are so great that in practice only the above route is available. The total length of the line from the Piraeus to Larissa is 217 miles, and the branches to Chalcis and Stylis are respectively 13 and 12 miles long, while the extension from Larissa to Gida will be 84 miles, the total distance from the Piraeus to Salonica being 328 miles.

The first part of the line from the Piraeus to Thebes, tapping the fertile plains of Boetia, and the branch from Skimiarati to Chalcis, were inaugurated by King George on March 19 of this year, and recently another section—Thebes to Livadia—was opened to traffic, thus completing 100 miles of railway. On this portion of the line is Lake Copais, which was drained by an English company, the land so reclaimed being exceptionally fertile and capable of growing anything.

Work is being actively pushed forward on the line beyond Livadia and Dadi and Lamia, and the branch to Stylis, on the sea, is nearly complete.

In the mountainous country between Livadia and Lamia there are great engineering difficulties, including 17 tunnels and several viaducts over 300 yards long and nearly 200 feet high. Nevertheless this section will be finished next year. A large amount of tunnel work is also necessary between Lamia and Demirly, but the difficulties are not so great as on the previous section, while from Demirly to Larissa the work is quite easy.

When the line is completed, the journey from the Piraeus to Larissa will occupy ten hours, and in four more hours the traveler will reach Salonica, whence an improved service of trains will convey him to Nisch on the through route between Paris and Constantinople.

By those who have seriously studied the question, it is firmly believed that the line, even if it go no further than Larissa, would pay; but, of course, the real objective is a junction with the Turkish system of railways, so as to place the Piraeus in railway communication with the various capitals of Europe. The main route for passengers and mails to the east would then lie through Piraeus, which is 375 miles nearer to Port Said than is Brindisi.

PRAISE FOR THE JAPANESE

Famous English Writer Is of the Opinion That They Are a Valuable Race.

George Meredith, whose commanding figure is almost the last survival of the literary giants of the Victorian age in the course of an interesting interview has given his views on current topics of the day, reports the New York Sun. Speaking of the Japanese, he said:

"They are a people capable of great ideas and exact mastery of detail. They have known what to do and have never botched or muddled. Besides, they are an artistic people, full of invention. The English people have little real love of nature. The highest English ideal of beauty in nature is a southerly wind and the cloudy sky that proclaim the hunting morning. In regard to the defeat of a European nation by Asiatics, that does not trouble me in the least. Their natures will give free play for the best to win.

"We think of the Russian chiefly as dogged, but Inkerman was always a mystery to me. If the Russians were really dogged and wanted to come on I cannot believe that the fellows of the foolish class our officers are drawn from could have resisted them. Of course, it has been called especially a soldiers' battle. All our battles are soldiers' battles. Our army will remain in chaos so long as it is controlled by a singularly unintellectual, ill-educated, unbusinesslike class. With their Buddhism, self-devotion, restraint, fearlessness of death and artistic sense, it may well be that the Japanese are a more valuable race from nature's point of view than the Russians."

Referring to the recent outcry against pagan England and pagan London, Mr. Meredith says: "It is curious that 40 years ago I had to give up going to church because I could no longer listen to the nonsense I heard spoken there. The parsons were worse than the uneducated. The deadly monotony of a Sunday sermon is constant and should have episcopal supervision. The church, like the army, is now a chaos of men without brains. The clergy are drawn from the same narrow, incompetent class as the officers."

Talking of foreign affairs, Mr. Meredith declared that in speaking of a foreign nation we always try to realize what it has done for the world."

"Take America," he said. "She has been the shrewdest leader of men. She has given us Emerson, that very great writer. Americans have endowed the world with priceless inventions and a promise of great things to be expected from them, and they are a humane, large-hearted people, but are very young people still. Hitherto the country, perhaps, has been rather too large for them."

SWARM IN STRANGE PLACES

Bees Get Together and Settle Down Wherever the Mood Strikes Them.

Bees sometimes swarm in strange places. A swarm recently came from off the shore and installed itself in and about one of the ventilators on the upper deck of the British warship Diana as she lay alongside the Mole of Gibraltar, says the New York Sun.

One of the seamen, with the aid of an old soap box and a boarding pike, quickly hived the bees, and was afterward fortunate enough to dispose of his capture advantageously.

Some workmen upon fixing their ladders high on the south wall of the council chamber at Abingdon, England, found a swarm of bees. As no one appeared willing to remove them, the mayor ascended the ladder himself, fixed a hive over the bees, and after occupying his uncomfortable position for an hour, came down with the whole swarm nicely in his hive. This he had assembled to watch the operation and loudly cheered his descent.

At Dorchester, England, a large hive of bees swarmed into the brake van of the South Western express from Weymouth to London. The train was compelled to fight the insects until the train reached its destination, when an apiarist came to the rescue and hived the whole swarm.

One swarm a few days ago took possession of a big tree in the center of a pleasure park at Kansas City, Mo., and formed an interesting attraction of the place. Of the hundreds that saw them no one made any attempt to hive them until a farmer, named John Alcorn, came along.

"What'll you give me to take the bees away?" he asked the manager of the park.

"The bees," was the reply, and a bargain was struck right there.

Alcorn climbed up to the swarm, and swept all the bees he could into a nail keg. He must have got the queen with the first sweep, for the bees did not object to the treatment. After he had got the bulk of them in the keg he turned it upside down on the ground and placed a stick under one side.

Then he beat on a tin pan, and the remainder of the bees left the tree and swarmed into the keg. Alcorn gathered up the keg and its buzzing occupants, and started for home.

Honor for a Bell.

The ship's bell of the famous Britannic—which ship has been broken up—has been given a place of honor in the offices of the White Star line in Liverpool. It is artistically suspended under a polished wood canopy, and bears on its surface a white star. During her 20 years' career the Britannic traveled 2,232,599 miles.

Use of Gas.

Natural gas is used for cooking in more than 500,000 homes and more than 1,500,000 persons use it as an illuminant, according to the report of the geological survey. It is the fuel in 2,000 factories and supplies the world with lampblack.

A LITTLE BEAR CUB

ITS PECULIAR ANTICS WERE AMUSING TO ITS MASTER.

Was Horrid When He Was Hungry, But Very Good After Being Fed—A Fight with a Muskrat.

Johnny, my pet cub, differed a little from the little girl who had a little curl, right in the middle of her forehead, for

When he was good, he was very, very good;

But when he was hungry, he was horrid.

When that satisfied feeling which followed a meal began to wear off, Johnny let us know it by an impatient muttering, and all attempts to divert his attention were useless. He was hungry and he wanted his food, and no one could blame him for that, I'm sure. If he was loose, he made straight for the kitchen door, and, opening as easily as any child could have done, he marched straight to the sink. Standing on his hind legs, he would stretch until he reached the edge with his fore paws, and then quickly hoisted himself up. Here he was very likely to find a pan of water and this might occupy him for a moment, though he would probably be grumbling all the time he was drinking. Then, turning round, he would let himself down backwards until his hind feet touched the floor. By this time, the housekeeper would be busy getting his dinner of bread and crackers, but he would start at once to hurry things up by growling and dancing on his hind legs in front of her. Another moment's delay and he would rush at her, and clasp her about the knees with his sturdy arms, biting and tugging at her skirts. He was not, in the least afraid of him, and when all was ready she would sometimes try his patience, or rather his impatience, a little further, by holding the pan containing his dinner just above his head. He would stand on his hind legs, grumbling away, and making wild reaches for the pan. At last, he would manage to catch hold of it with one paw, and there there was no getting it away from him. His claws hung on to the rim like so many iron hooks, and if the pan was lifted any higher, Johnny went with it, and soon hoisted himself into it. Then, now he would attack that food, mumbling all the time as if he were badly used, and ending by cleaning the pan with his long tongue. Then he would probably be kittenish, tearing around the house, climbing on chairs, tables and shelves, and upsetting everything upsetable, in an effort to find out what it was made of. Like as not, the broom would end his frolic, and he would run for the barn and take a nap in the haymow.

The other day I took Johnny for a long walk, and he was certainly an entertaining companion. When we set out, I took one little black paw in my right hand, and he walked along on his hind legs like a little man. But he soon became tired of this method of locomotion, so I let him go on all fours. And by we came to a lake, and Johnny at once plunged in and took a short swim, after which he came out and shook himself like a dog. Then I sat down to see what he would do. He waddled down to the water's edge, paddling in the shallow water near the margin, until he was perhaps 25 yards away. On a flat stone, close to the bank, a muskrat was sitting, quietly rubbing his nose, and I expected to see him dive long before Johnny came near him. But he didn't move and Johnny failed to see him until they were close together. Then the little bear stuck out his nose to investigate, and the muskrat turned to face him, whereupon Johnny rose on his hind legs, and looked down on the muskrat, as though not quite sure what to do. Then he came down on all fours, and again advanced, sniffing for information as he went. Suddenly, maybe thinking it was time to resent his impudence, made a jump at the bear, snapped his teeth once and quickly turned to run. But he was not quick enough for Johnny, who struck out with his black paw and knocked the muskrat over on the bank. But the rat quickly recovered his balance and dived into the water.

Johnny's blood was up now, and into the lake he plunged. Just at that place then I cannot say, as there was such a splashing of water, but at any rate the muskrat turned and bit the little bear in the nose, and Johnny, perhaps smarting from the pain at a disadvantage in the water, turned and fled howling and panic-stricken to the bank, and taking to his heels did not stop until he was safe in the branches of a tree. It was certainly a laughable sight, and I was a pity that Johnny could not enjoy it as much as I did. But he stayed up that tree, and amused himself by chewing the leaves and bark.

For President,
ALTON BROOKS PARKER, OF NEW YORK.

For Vice President,
HENRY G. DAVIS, OF WEST VIRGINIA.

HENRY G. DAVIS.

LITERARY.

The Metropolitan Magazine for November is a special election number and contains two articles on the Presidential candidates. "Judge Parker, an Appreciation," is from the pen of the Honorable W. Bourke Cockran and is a strong presentation from a statesman's viewpoint of the qualities of leadership displayed by the Democratic candidate. Alfred Henry Lewis in his article, "Roosevelt or Parker," weighs the claims of the two candidates as he sees them and draws a very positive conclusion. His estimates of the two men and of the conditions under which they have become the leaders of the opposing parties are stated with the picturesque force which usually characterizes Mr. Lewis' writings.

Edna May, now again playing in New York after a three years' absence in London, has improved far beyond what most Americans believed to be her capacity. She is as pretty as ever, with that sweet, appealing beauty, all innocence and loveliness. She has learned many things and she possesses something that approaches animation and an interest in life. She has made one of the most remarkable successes ever won in England. She has wit enough to know it was not due to her votes or her acting, but simply to the fact that she was Edna May with a personality that appealed to English audiences. And she has the rare good sense to remain Edna May, without affectations or assumptions of any kind.—The Players, Everybody's Magazine for November.

When dinner or luncheon must be gotten ready in a hurry, don't forget that H. W. Barnes' store is filled with the things that will facilitate matters. Plenty of everything in the grocery and provision line as well as fruit and vegetables.

You've got to have winter clothes as sure as the winter comes and you might as well get your outfit at the Boston Cloak and Fur Company before the rush begins. Easy prices, perfect fit and fine quality are some of the features.

Levy Brothers, the West Front street dry goods merchants, are making a special feature of a silk that will not tear or crack. This is only one of the many features and bargains offered at this up-to-date metropolitan store. A visit to the place will prove conclusively that here is where you can get the lowest prices. The millinery department is modern in every respect.

AMUSEMENTS.

Critics generally in the New York press refer in laudatory terms to Henry Miller's production of "Joseph Entangles" which is the attraction at the Garrick. It's a comedy that captivates the theatregoer and Mr. Miller is given a splendid reception by the big audiences which are attracted by his appearance at the Thirty-fifth street house. The famous star is at his best in this piece and his support is excellent. Evenings at 8:15. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

Thomas E. Shea, who is this year one of the most prominent stars under the management of Nixon & Zimmerman is filling his annual engagement at the Grand Opera House, where he presents "The Bells," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "Cardinal Richelieu." Mr. Shea's success with these ambitious pieces has been of slow growth, but is built on a solid foundation. He approached as a student, feeling his way, and particularly in the characterization of Mathias, in "The Bells," and the Cardinal in "Cardinal Richelieu" he gave particular heed to the traditions left by his great predecessors. He did not accept these all blindly, however, but studied for himself, consulted authorities, and built up carefully these characters so that he can convey the impression of living them. In Robert Louis Stevenson's mysterious play "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," temperament has more to do with a correct impersonation than anything else, and here Mr. Shea is not found lacking.

The greatest theatrical effect Klaw & Erlanger have ever made will be presented at the New Amsterdam Theatre in New York, Monday evening, November 14, when the premiere of their American version of the last London Drury Lane spectacle, "Humpy Dumpty," will take place. They will, as in past seasons, utilize only the scenery, costumes and mechanical effects from Drury Lane. John J. McNally has written an entirely new book and Cole and Johnson a new score. This will be the largest theatrical production ever staged in America. Over 800 people will be employed in its presentation. Fully 600 will appear as principals, chorus, ballets and acrobats and 200 men will be required to handle the scenic and mechanical effects and operate the marvelously intricate trick scenery. William O. Sobrade, a young pantomimic comedian, a pupil of the Hanlons, will be the Humpty Dumpy in this production, which will also present another clown in James A. Rice, as "Humpty Dumpty's Brother." The harlequin, pantaleon and columbine will be played by Howard Prevost, J. H. Powers and Nora Sarony.

The revival of Langdon Mitchell's comedy of "Becky Sharp," founded on Thackeray's great novel, "Vanity Fair," by Mrs. Fiske and the Manhattan Company, at the Manhattan Theatre, New York, has proved to be more popular than even the original production at the Fifth Avenue Theatre some five years ago, when it took rank as the dramatic event of that season in the metropolis. The Manhattan is steadily drawing fine audiences that find in this play, as it is interpreted by Mrs. Fiske and her very strong company, rare dramatic entertainment. The play is put on with all the magnificence in scenery and costumes that originally marked it, and in the acting it is indeed a delight. Mrs. Fiske is by common consent the only actress that speaks English that could be plausibly thought of as the fascinating Becky, and her impersonation is admitted to be better than at first, when it was heralded as an achievement.

LITERARY.

To be truly sympathetic we should be able so to identify ourselves with the interests of others that we can have a thorough appreciation of their point of view, and can understand their lives clearly, as they appear to themselves; but this we can never do if we are immersed in the fog—either of their personal selfishness or our own. By understanding others clearly we can talk in ways that are, and seem to them, rational, and gradually lead them to a higher standard.—Annie Payson Call, in Leslie's Monthly Magazine for November.

There are thirty eight signal contributions in the November "Smart Set," and no magazine can offer a greater variety of stories and poems; certainly no standard is higher. The novelette which opens the issue is called "The Surrender," and is written by J. H. Twelly, Jr. It is a powerful study of divorce, presented with great insight and feeling. The scenes, many of which are dramatic in the extreme, are laid in Paris, and the author reveals an intimate knowledge of the French capital. A timely essay by the distinguished dramatist, Clyde Fitch, entitled "The Play and the Public," will be widely read and discussed. Mr. Fitch writes from the inside, and everything he says on a dramatic subject is spoken almost ex cathedra.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

The latest sign of "Republican prosperity" is the shutting down of the great Pullman car works, at Pullman, Ill., everyone of whose 7,000 employees has been thrown out of work.

Mr. Roosevelt's statement that "the Philippine Islands will be held for the benefit of the Filipinos," is mercilessly criticised by Bourke Cockran in a great speech delivered recently at Tammany Hall. "How about the action of Congress in extending the coastwise laws to the Philippine Islands?" asks Mr. Cockran. "This action means that hereafter every pound of produce coming from the Philippine Islands into the United States must come in American ships. There are only a few ships available for that traffic, hence the owners of them banding together can take from the unfortunate Filipinos every penny that their produce is worth over and above sufficient to keep them alive."

An old lawyer in Pennsylvania was asked what he thought of the President's letter. "Reminds me of a defendant's motion in arrest of judgment and sentence," was the quick retort.

If the Democratic position in this campaign were not a strong one, Republicans would not be so persistent in their efforts to misrepresent it.

"Do they intend to abolish Rural Free Delivery?"—Roosevelt's letter. Well, hardly. Having created that excellent extension of the postal system, Democrats are not likely to abolish it. Very likely, however, they will overhaul it at the first opportunity. After eight years of Republican rule it has become necessary to root out the grafters.

It is one of the President's ideas that "the voice of the United States would count for nothing in the Far East if we had abandoned the Philippines." He seems to think that the greatness of the American Republic began with the organization of his Rough Riders and will end with his retirement from the White House.

Mr. Roosevelt's attempt to inject the sectional issue into the campaign is resented and antagonized by some of the most consistent contributors to the Republican campaign fund. The men who have no sympathy with this feature of the Republican programme are Northern capitalists who have large investments in factories, railroads and banks, in the South. They are Republicans, for one reason or another, but they will not support a policy which will unsettle political conditions in Southern States, causing a shrinkage in their own incomes while serving no good end whatever.

It is just beginning to dawn upon many New York Republicans that Tim Woodruff has lost prestige by his action in withdrawing his name from consideration by the Republican State Convention without a fight, thus placing his friends, and especially his sponsor, Thomas C. Platt, in an embarrassing position. It was Sam Fessenden who turned savagely upon Joe Manley at St. Louis, in 1896, after the Maine boss had deserted Thomas B. Reed, and exclaimed, "Joe, God Almighty hates a quitter!"

Hon. D. H. Perry, National Committeeman from Utah, says: "It is pretty nearly a certainty that the nine votes of the three States of Utah, Montana and Colorado will be cast for Judge Parker. In my State, since the formation of the American party by Senator Kearns, the prospect for the Democratic party are growing hourly. The new party is made up almost exclusively of Republicans, so there are now two Republican parties in the State. A triangular fight, therefore, must redound to Democratic chances."

Hon. T. E. Ryan, National Committeeman from Wisconsin, says if the Democrats do not carry his State he will be a very much mistaken man. "The campaign out our way," said Mr. Ryan, "is warming up on both sides and I look forward to the most exciting contest that Wisconsin has seen since 1892. The vote will be the largest ever cast and I honestly and sincerely believe that Judge Parker will win out. Conditions in Indiana and Illinois are improving right along and I believe that those two States will show up in the Parker column."

"Protecting an industry as such is one thing; it means that Americans shall be enabled to hold possession of their market, provided they charge prices for their goods which yield a fair profit only. Protecting a monopoly in the industry is another thing; it means that foreign competition is to be cut off, even when the American producer charges unnatural prices. It means that the trust shall be enabled to sell a portion of its goods abroad at one price and the remainder at home at a much higher price."—Prof. John R. Work, of Columbia University, in the Political Science Quarterly for September, 1904.

EXCISE BOARD POSSIBLE

Agitation May Lead to Establishment of a Commission.

INCREASED FEES SURE

If Saloon Limit is Made No Liquor Could be Sold in Third Ward.

Thus far no opposition of any considerable strength has developed against Councilman W. H. Tyler's amendment to the ordinance to license men and taverns which provides for an increase to $1,000 a year for the retail liquor dealers, and it is not expected that there will be any when the ordinance is called up for final adoption.

Mr. Tyler will quite likely call up the ordinance at the next regular meeting, although there is no special haste about it. If adopted it would not go into effect before next year, and as the licenses are not granted until March, there is plenty of time. A citizen who favors the high license, has who has his doubts as to the wisdom of increasing the fee to $1,000, remarked yesterday that it might lead to the establishments of an excise board. This he thought would be one of the worst things that could happen along this line. Providing Plainfield had such a board, it would be within its province to grant or reject as many applications as it saw fit and applications could be granted at any time of the year, instead of March, as at present. This board could also fix the license fee. Of course, the power would be invested in a much smaller body than at present and it would be an easy matter, perhaps, to elect a license board, one that would favor the granting of every application made and at the same reducing the fee to a nominal sum.

Although such a thing is possible, it is not probable, for it is the opinion of many that there are too many people in favor of a limited number of saloons with a moderately high fee, to permit the wholesale granting of applications with a low fee. Such a thing would be disastrous to the trade if permitted and even the saloon keepers themselves acknowledge the foolishness of such a scheme. It would only reduce their revenue and complicate the liquor business in more ways than one.

It is known that Councilman Tyler also desires to limit the district in which liquor can be sold and that will undoubtedly be embodied in an ordinance covering that point this year or the first of next. In case such an ordinance is adopted it would cut off all saloons outside of the business district, for it is understood that Mr. Tyler wants to confine the business to that section. This would keep saloons out of the Third ward, as well as the West End, where so many hard fights have been made to establish saloons and hotels. There is every reason to believe that strong opposition will be made to this ordinance, although if Mr. Tyler can count on the same votes that accepted the license amendment to the liquor ordinance he can safely count on putting it through.

WILLIAM D. CRAIG DIES AT HOME IN GRAHAM, TEX.

FORMER PLAINFIELDER, AGED 45, A SON OF DR. LEWIS CRAIG.

William D. Craig, for many years a resident of this city, is dead at his home in Graham, Texas. William Craig was the son of Dr. Lewis Craig, one of the oldest residents of the borough, and spent the early part of his life in Plainfield. He was forty-five years of age and was a graduate of the Plainfield High School. He spent three years at Princeton University.

Mr. Craig subsequently left for the south, where he went into cattle raising near Graham, Texas. He was an active member of the Presbyterian church of Graham.

Surviving him are a brother, George Craig, who lives on a ranch near Graham, and three children.

Mrs. Ralph Wants Divorce.

The taking of testimony in the divorce case of Mrs. Walter J. Ralph against her husband has been completed by John H. VanWinkle, special master in chancery, to whom the matter was referred by the chancellor. The grounds of desertion. Mrs. Ralph was represented by John A. Frech, Esq., of Somerville. The report of the master has been filed in the office of the Clerk of Chancery.

Jury Verdict in Fireman's Death.

According to the verdict of the coroner's jury in the case of the death of Levi Able, fireman on the ill-fated mail train at Whitehouse, last week, no one is held responsible, it being the opinion of the jury that the accident was of such a nature that it could not have been prevented.

HOUSE WRECKED BY BLAST

Northeastern Telephone Company Again in Trouble.

ITS POLES CUT DOWN

Jacob Wagner at Samptown Retaliates for Damaging Explosion in Front of His Place.

Inserting powder in a hole to blast out red shale, employes of the Northeastern Telephone Company damaged the home of Jacob Wagner on the main road between Samptown and New Market, to such an extent Saturday, that the concern faces a big damage suit from New York to Philadelphia. Huge pieces of rock were hurled against the Wagner residence, smashing weather boards and causing the ceilings to fall about the heads of the frightened occupants. They were badly frightened and several of them narrowly escaped injury from heavy pieces of plaster.

The company did not have permission to erect poles in front of the places and immediately after the explosion, Wagner hurried to this city and consulted Counsellor W. S. Anglesman. He was advised to cut them down and he lost no time in making the deed square with the word. Taking an axe Saturday night he failed the three poles fronting his property, the erection of which caused the employes no end of bother and resulted in the explosion.

The construction gang reached the scene Saturday morning and it was a lucky thing for the company that they did. Across the street from Wagner's place are several houses occupied by Italian truck farmers in front of which poles had been erected without the consent of the owners. Witnessing Wagner's action and learning that he was acting under legal advice, they prepared to do the same thing last night but were frustrated. The construction gang divided itself into guards and the entire road has since been patrolled, the sight of an axe in Wagner's hands being sufficient to call them together. A temporary shed was erected directly back of Wagner's home and the watchers took turns in wandering up and down in the frosty night air. To a Daily Press reporter yesterday the Italians declared they would lose no opportunity to cut the poles down and there is prospect of a pitched battle occurring at any time.

Wagner was seen by a Daily Press reporter yesterday and he declared that he would sue the company for heavy damages, having placed the facts of the case with Counsellor Anglesman. He asserted that the company had no permission to place the poles in front of his place and he know nothing of what was going on until the powder blast nearly demolished the house. His property is situated just over the Lehigh Valley crossing at what was formerly known as Dunham's corner beyond McDonough Brothers' ice houses.

The Northeastern people have also experienced trouble on the Samptown property where John Keenan, a resident of New York, has forbid them to erect poles in front of property owned by him. It will require five poles to pass by and preparations had been completed to put them up when his agents appeared and stopped the work.

HOPE CHAPEL FIVE WINS FROM NEWARK TEAM

LOCAL AGGREGATION DEFEATS THE VISITORS BY SCORE OF 43 TO 17.

An easy prey to the Hope basket ball players, the team representing the Second Presbyterian Church, of Newark, was defeated last Friday on the Hope chapel floor by the score of 43 to 17. The visitors could not keep up with the speed of the Hope boys, being excelled in weight, team work, and individual excellency. At the end of the first half the score was 21 to 5, while in the second part of the game the Hope boys added 22 points to their opponents' 12.

The teams lined up as follows: Hope chapel—Duckworth and Dilts, forwards; Bimm, center; Porter and Roseberry, guards. Sacred Heart Club—Reilly and Garthwaite, forwards; Walsh, center; Seery and Boyne, guards. Goals from the field—Duckworth, 6; Dilts, 7; Roseberry, 5; Bimm 3; Boyne, 5; Reilly, Garthwaite, Seery. Goals from fouls—Duckworth, Reilly. Referee—Browning.

—A leap year straw ride was one of the pleasant Hallowe'en events which took place Monday night. The affair was entirely arranged by the young women, and was thoroughly successful. The party met at the home of Miss Edna Long, of Park avenue, and after journeying to Westfield, returned to this city to the home of Miss Belle Williams, of Somerset street, where the evening was delightfully spent with games and dancing.

AMUSEMENTS.

David Warfield will continue to play "The Music Master" at the Belasco Theatre, in New York, despite Klaw & Erlanger's efforts through their representative, Joseph Brooks, to stop him by injunction. Justice Leventritt, of the New York Supreme Court, Monday, handed down his decision in the new famous case of Brooks against Belasco and Warfield, in which the plaintiff sought to enjoin the star from further appearances in "The Music Master" except under the joint management of Brooks and Belasco. As Warfield, on his own declaration, long ago refused longer to act for a firm with which either Brooks or Klaw & Erlanger were connected, an injunction would have meant the sudden termination of Warfield's great success in "The Music Master," in which he is drawing crowds to the Belasco Theatre. Justice Leventritt's decision, however, completely defeats the efforts of Belasco's opponents. The injunction is refused for two very strong reasons. In the first place, in answer to Brooks' attempt to exercise an option renewing the old Warfield contract, Justice Leventritt says: "Undisputed proof is offered to show that the theatrical seasons contemplated end about the first of May or at all events before the first of June. The alleged renewal was made by the plaintiff Brooks several weeks after this latter date."

Mr. Shepard Not Available.

Unless the Independent Parker Club is able to secure a speaker of prominence no mass meeting will be held as intended. The president of the club, George S. Clay, has been unable to secure Edwin M. Shepard, of Brooklyn, to speak here, but Mr. Clay will endeavor to secure another orator.

DEMOCRATIC ORATORS EXPOUND ISSUES TO A GREAT THRONG OF VOTERS

Congressman John Sharp Williams Captivates the Audience With Convincing Logic and Telling Wit.

CHAS. C. BLACK ADVOCATES EQUAL TAXATION

James E. Martine Arraigns Congressman Charles N. Fowler—Mr. Atterbury's Address—LaVere's Concert Band Added to the Enjoyment of the Evening.

Trenchant wit, sarcasm and cold logic, strong weapons when controlled by gifted men, were the effective instruments used by the galaxy of campaign orators who addressed the throng at the Democratic mass meeting in Reform Hall Friday, commanding undivided respect and marked attention from the big crowd for three hours, though frequently interrupted by enthusiastic applause and uproarious laughter. Congressman John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, the minority leader of the House of Representatives; Charles C. Black, the Democratic gubernatorial candidate, and James E. Martine, the party's nominee for Congress, brought home to the voters arguments favoring a restoration of Democratic rule in a telling manner. Poor management on the part of the city committee was the only shortcoming. The hall had been packed long before the appointed time and the crowd outside clamoring for admittance exceeded the numerical strength of the voters inside, but lacking forethought evidently no provision had been made for an overflow meeting and hundreds went away disappointed.

Chairman J. V. F. Dilts called the meeting to order, immediately introducing Albert H. Atterbury, the Democratic mayoralty candidate, as chairman of the evening. Mr. Atterbury made a twenty minute address in which he dwelt upon the fact that this is the first time in a decade that the party is united on its candidates and on its platform. He deplored the ten years of dissention, wasted effort and defeat, adding that the period was marked by strife, war, unjust tariff restrictions and enormous expenditures of public moneys. He declared that the expenditures per capita had been grossly increased since the Cleveland administration. Mr. Atterbury it was considered put himself on record as being opposed to the increase in the House hostess fees in this city although he said that he had no comment to make on the wisdom of the Common Council's action. He had been impressing upon his hearers that the burden of all taxation falls upon the consumer and said that if the saloonkeeper has to pay more for his license he will get it out of the customers. "There'll be more fines on the beer if the ordinance goes through," said he.

After LaVere's band had rendered a selection, Mr. Atterbury introduced Charles C. Black, who was greeted with a great ovation. Mr. Black showed plainly that he was under a great strain, overworked and worn out by continued campaigning and the expressions on his face during his talk resembled that of a six-day bicycle rider. The issue of the campaign, said he, is simply that the railroad property should be taxed at the same rate as that of an individual. Today, he declared, the railroads pay $5 per $1,000 on the main stem, which includes all property along the tracks within 100 feet, and the revenue derived goes to the State. Fifteen dollars per thousand is paid by the roads on all second class property which includes buildings outside of the main stem. People pays fixed rate of $35 per $1,000 on all property here. There is today, he said, $7,000,000 of taxable railroad property in Union County and $6,000,000 is main stem, the taxes going to the State instead of the district in which they are located. If the Democratic doctrine becomes law it will have the effect of bringing into Union County $300,000 more tax value. There are four miles of railroad in Plainfield and he showed how much richer the city would be if the Democratic idea was law.

The chief argument advanced by John Sharp Williams, who captivated the audience by his keen satire, unbounded humor and eloquent arraignment of the Republican party, was that the Democratic party is a party of constructive policy and not one of criticism and constant opposition. After referring to the fact that the independent voter is the important factor in a campaign, he spoke of the Democratic candidate for President as one having reverence for the Constitution and not one continually playing to the galleries. At the mention of Judge Parker's name a storm of applause went up from the throng. "You nominated one of God's noblemen when you nominated Jim Martine for Congress," declared Congressman Williams, and then the crowd broke loose again. "By sending him to Congress you send a man in whom the people will have confidence and trust and who will not be in Vermont or Arizona when he should be in Washington." Scoring Mr. Fowler, the minority leader of the House declared that "public business is more important than private business and that is preeminently true of a sworn representative of the people." He ridiculed the Fowler banking bill as being a measure, which would make one more trust—the banks. "There would be two or three great banks in the country and all others would be branches. That sort of legislation would not be advocated by Jim Martine," said he.

Attacking the administration policy, Mr. Williams declared with emphasis that this is a country of peace and not of war and that a nation only has the right to take human life when an individual would under the same circumstances. Roosevelt's utterance, "Carry a big stick, speak softly and you'll go far," was condemned by him as un-American and contrary to the spirit of a Republic. He characterized the present foreign policy a "no backwardism" and the home policy a "stand-still-ism," adding that the Republican policy towards the Philippines is the idea of George the Third. In concluding his speech, Mr. Williams bitterly scored Republican reciprocity as a sham, citing many instances and showing that the Democrats in Congress had been true to reciprocity. In closing he declared there are no good trusts whatever.

James E. Martine was given a characteristic reception when he arose to speak and after the applause subsided, the farmer-orator lost no time in impressing upon the voters that he fully expects to be their next congressman. He paid a tribute to Mr. Fowler, saying that he admired him as a gentleman and a scholar, but that he condemned him as a tardy representative, or as he put it a "non-representative." He declared that Congressman Fowler had only attended four sittings of the National Legislature during the last session and had forfeited all claim on the people.

BOYS' CONFERENCE ENDS

Proceedings of Meetings Held Saturday and Sunday.

INTERESTING SPEECHES

Addresses Made by Lieut. Hearne, Mr. Kilborne and Others at Several Sessions.

Though Sunday evening's meeting marked the concluding service of the State Boys' Conference for the year 1904, the helpful and far reaching effects of the convention will not be forgotten for years to come. Returning to their individual associations the delegates of this conference will take back the thoughts which have been gathered from their visit to Plainfield, and in their own lives, and in the lives of their departments, the influence for the good will be lasting, and helpful to all concerned.

The Saturday afternoon session was one of the most interesting and instructive in the conference. The presiding officer was Elmer J. Wain, of Camden. Lieutenant Hearne spoke after the bugle call, "drill," on the subject, "A Call to Individual Work." His remarks were characteristic with regard to impressiveness, and to strength, his speeches, and services being one of the most attractive features of the convention. He spoke plainly and firmly on the value of personal and individual work, stating the advantages both to the helper and to the one helped by such Christian influences. Throughout his remarks, Lieutenant Hearne kept up the figure of the soldier, struggling at times against disadvantages, but strong and confident in the leadership of his captain.

Frank P. Johnson, of Trenton, made a careful study of the educational work of the boys' departments during the past few weeks and presented his paper to the conference in good form. He first told of the work in New Jersey, calling attention to the efforts put forth for the school boys through short term educational classes, including classes in burnt wood, electricity, free hand drawing and other studies. He also referred to the numerous educational clubs. Among those mentioned were the stamp club, camera club and orchestra. Then he referred to the libraries and reading rooms of the associations, giving the names of some of the best books and periodicals. The excellent work accomplished by several city associations for the boys over fourteen years of age who are employed during the day was spoken of at length and the Trenton Night School was used as an illustration of how this work was appreciated by the boys of that city. Mr. Johnson gave a great many statistics which he had worked out carefully from his recent study. Besides telling of the work in this State, he gave many good thoughts which were gathered from correspondence with associations throughout the country.

The paper showed a careful study of the entire field, and many good suggestions were made.

Mr. Burger, of Paterson, then emphasized the need of this work, and conducted a live discussion, which was limited to the boys in attendance. The man present had to keep quiet and listen.

At the conclusion of this address, and discussion, the remainder of the afternoon session was taken up with the group conferences, which was another most delightful feature of the conference. The boys expressed themselves freely, and frankly on the social, athletic and club life of the various departments, and the others learned much from the facts presented in this part of the programme. The group conferences were in detail as follows:

High School students—Group one, W. H. Wones, Newark, presiding; special topic: Clubs; a, College Clubs; b, Student Club; c, Literary and Debating Clubs. Group two, H. S. Park, Paterson, presiding; special topics: Bible Study, Foreign Work. Group three, H. O. Right, Camden, presiding; special topic: Boys' Meetings. Group four, Roy N. Berry, Madison, presiding; special topic: Social Work; a, Mass Socials; b, Group Socials; c, Entertainments. Group five, W. F. Langdon, Jersey City, presiding; special topics: Attention, Outings, Camps.

Grammar School Secretaries—Group one, George A. Hall, Mansonia, presiding; special topic: Boys' Meetings. Group two, F. R. Beckshaw, New Brunswick, presiding; special topic: Educational Work; a, Observation Parties; b, Popular Lectures; c, Clubs; d, Short Term Classes. Group three, William R. Eadie, Morristown, presiding; special topic: Social Work; a, Department Socials; b, Group Socials; c, Entertainments. Group four, M. L. Beebe, Rahway, presiding; special topics: Bible Classes. Foreign Work.

Business Boys—Group one, Elmer F. Hopper, Newark, presiding; special topic: Religious Work; a, meetings. Group two, George H. Hagaman, Orange, presiding; special topic: Educational Work; a, Educational Classes; b, Popular Talks; c, Observation Parties; d, Clubs. Group three, Joseph R. Brown, Passaic, presiding; special topic: Social Work; a, Mass Socials; b, Group Socials; c, Entertainments.

On Saturday evening, the boys were assembled in the Seventh-Day Baptist church by the bugle, and after a song service, Edward H. Austin, the presiding officer, introduced Lieutenant Hearne, who spoke on the subject "A Call to United Effort." Lieutenant Hearne emphasized the value of united endeavor, the strength derived therefrom, and the influence of such effort. He spoke also in preparation for yesterday's services, giving the boys directions for the Sunday meetings. He was followed by E. T. Colton, International Secretary, who spoke on "Opportunities of an Older Boy for Public Christian Service." His address, though brief, was interesting and to the point. The session Saturday was a short one and taps was sounded at about 9:30 o'clock.

Sunday morning, the boys attended regular church service as there was no meeting of the conference until 3:30 in the afternoon. At that hour, the Christian boys of the delegation met with Charles R. Scott, State Secretary of Boys' Work, for a short preparatory service. The regular afternoon service took place at 4:15 in the church auditorium, when Rev. James A. Francis, of Boston, made an address to all the boys over twelve years of age. His talk was concise, and very plain. In many ways this service was the most important of the conference. It was impressive, and of great value to the boys throughout their whole lives, being a talk which they will long remember. He drew a parallel between the life of a Christian boy, and the life of a faithful soldier, representing the evil influences which may act upon that life and the resulting effect. The speaker illustrated his talk in a simple manner, and held the attention of the boys up to the last word. Before concluding the service an appeal was made to the young to become Christian soldiers and to join the army of Christ. The result was very gratifying, and the number of boys who gave their names to Secretary Scott at the conclusion of the service, stating their desire to lead Christian lives, is a decided testimony in favor of the work which has been done by the convention during the last three days. Mr. Francis' remarks appealed to the conscience, not to the emotional nature, and the response was entirely voluntary.

Enthusiastic and inspiring was the service held in the First Presbyterian church last evening, when Charles T. Kilborne, of Orange, made the address. The church was crowded, every pew being filled with delegates, or with members of the regular congregation. Mr. Kilborne spoke of the progress which has been made since the conventions met in this city five years ago, of the increase in membership of the various departments, and of the help which has been received from the Divine power in carrying on the work. He also illustrated, by use of a series of charts, the fact that the greatest change and the greatest influence is brought to bear on a boy's life between the ages of 12 and 16. Mr. Kilborne stated in addition that it is a well proven fact that these influences are the ones which have the most lasting effect on the man's life.

Following Mr. Kilborne's interesting address, the delegates met in the lecture room for the farewell meeting, which, as is always the case, was a most impressive service. After a short service of song, the boys were called upon to give their thoughts of the conference. The young men were frank in their statements, and testified to the vast amount of good which the meetings have accomplished. There were other addresses, all brief, by various officers of the State work, including Frederick H. Andrews, Charles R. Scott and Kenneth Robbie.

Mr. Kilborne took for his text, Ephesians 6:11, "Put on the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." At the conclusion of his address, the reports on the attendance were read, which showed that the total number of delegates was 272, an increase of thirty-six over the number at last year's conference. A resolution drawn up by the committee was read. Embodied in the words of the resolution were the thanks of the members of the conference to the grace of God for permitting the conference to be held another year; to the officers of departments of the local Y. M. C. A., to the officers of the church, and the officials of the Y. M. C. A., for the privileges allowed to the delegates; to the ladies' auxiliary, and the people of the city for their kindness in entertaining the delegates; to the speakers at the conference, and to the local papers for the way in which they reported the proceedings of the convention.

As has been customary for several years, the conference for boys' work for the year 1904, was brought to a close, while, with hands joined, the delegates sang "Blest be the Tie that Binds."

The following are the chairmen of Plainfield committees: Reception, Dr. N. H. Probasco; entertainment, O. E. Rogers; usher, Harry Thompson; church, Philip Suffern advertising, Fred Smith; cost room, Webster Gavett; banquet, Edgar Freeman; decorating, Albert Codrington.

The secretaries of conference were Preston Ackerman, of Passaic, and W. W. Miller, of Bloomfield.

The conference committees are as follows: Credential, Dr. N. H. Probasco, of Plainfield; Charles F. Rashgeber, of Newark; Haldane Johnson, of Montclair; resolutions. Winston Paul, of Jersey City; Arthur Livingston, of Orange, Rush VanBickle, of New Brunswick.

PLANS FOR BUILDING ON WATCHUNG AVENUE

DESCRIPTION OF STRUCTURE TO BE ERECTED FOR C. H. HAND.

Architect W. H. Clem has completed the plans for the new building which Charles H. Hand proposes erecting at Watchung avenue and Second *street and the work will com*mence as soon as the property can be cleared.

Although the building will practically be the same structure throughout it will be in three parts. On the corner will be one, three stories in height and intended for a store and flats. Adjoining it, running along Watchung avenue, will be a one story affair which will be divided into five stores. At the end will be another three story building the counterpart of the one on the corner. In this way the flats will receive the full benefit of light and air all the way around, making them very desirable apartments.

The combined structure will be ninety-seven feet in length and is to be of brick and stone.

PLEASANT WORDS FOR FORMER PLAINFIELDERS

NEWTON, MASS., RESIDENTS WANT THEM FOR OFFICIALS.

In the issue of the Newton Circuit, of Newton, Mass., of Friday, October 28, there appears an article of interest to Plainfielders. It refers to Christopher M. Goddard, brother of George H. Goddard, who was a resident of this city for fifteen years, and Albert A. Tilney, formerly of this city. These pleasant words are said concerning them:

"It has been learned with regret during the past week of Mr. Christopher M. Goddard's refusal to permit his name to be used as a candidate for re-election to the school committee. Of the energy and skill which Mr. Goddard has shown in assisting to solve the many and perplexing problems which have come before the committee during the three years of his incumbency it is unnecessary to speak. It is sufficient, perhaps, to say that rarely has the Sixth ward been represented by a man who has brought to the discharge of his duties a more earnest and sincere purpose faithfully to serve his ward and city, or greater capacity, fidelity, and ability for the accomplishment of his work.

"Of the candidates who are suggested to succeed Mr. Goddard the most prominently mentioned is Mr. Albert A. Tilney, of Grant avenue, who already has the support of a large number of citizens. Mr. Tilney is an honor graduate of Yale, and was captain of the track team in his senior year. After graduation he entered the New York office of Harvey Fiske & Sons, one of the leading banking firms at New York and Boston. In 1895, when he took charge of their Boston office, he moved to Newton Centre and has since been prominently identified with the interests of the village. If elected Mr. Tilney will bring to the discharge of his new duties a mind well trained in scholastic matters and business ability of no mean order."

Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., will meet tomorrow night and initiate several candidates.

BOROUGHITES IN REVOLT

North Plainfield Delegation Talk With E. C. Stokes.

SLASH COUNTY TICKET

Mayor Declares That his Friends Will be Loyal to Rest of the Nominees.

For half an hour Monday Mayor N. B. Smalley and a delegation of North Plainfield Republicans, who declare they are determined to defend the interests of that borough, and Edward C. Stokes, the Republican gubernatorial candidate, were in conference at the Hotel Kenilworth, and during that time the boroughites impressed upon Mr. Stokes the reasons why they will not support the county tickets under present conditions. The Mayor gave a rehash of the attitude of the Somerville crowd and county leaders generally towards North Plainfield, which culminated in a rebellion twice defeating the county ticket and likely to do so again.

Mr. Stokes was told that North Plainfield contributes a large share of the county funds and is denied the right of representation or a fair division of the expenditures. The determination of the board of freeholders not to improve a foot of road in the borough or township was brought to his attention.

Joseph Frelinghuysen, chairman of the Republican executive committee, was charged by Mayor Smalley with having violated all precedent in putting men off the committee before their terms expired and supplanting them with others opposed to the North Plainfield's administration and the borough leaders generally.

Mr. Stokes was told that the Republican organization in North Plainfield is in the hands of men who joined with the Democratic forces to defeat the regular Republican municipal candidates last spring, and helped defeat C. M. Dolliver for Assembly one year ago.

"I believe that Somerset county will *still be Republican with North Plain*field out of it and it will be better off," declared the Mayor. During the conversation, Mr. Stokes promised that if elected governor he will give the Mayor and his friends a fair show if they come to Trenton for anything. With this assurance and with a pledge of loyalty for the National, Congressional and Gubernatorial tickets given by the delegation the conference ended.

Miss V. Cook Married.

Mrs. L. E. Cook, of North avenue, announces the marriage of her daughter, Miss Vernia Cook, to Jacob Shomacher, of Latimer, Pa. The wedding was performed by the pastor of the Presbyterian church at that place on Saturday.

H. J. Wierenga, the popular truckman, recently moved from the freight house to the Husbands Works a twelve ton gas engine of sixty-horse power, and the same was so carefully done and with such good management that no damage was caused, nor did the slightest accident occur.

In every part of the city, E. M. French & Company, have desirable houses and building lots for sale or to rent. If you contemplate a change of residence, let them offer you a few suggestions. They also place insurance and take entire charge of properties.

After you have inspected the handsome gowns, cloaks and wraps at the Paris Cloak and Fur Store on West Front street, you will agree that it is not necessary to trade in New York. The quality of the goods, the workmanship and the prices are attractive features.

Crusade Against Slingshots.

Through numerous complaints of broken windows and lamp globes received at headquarters Chief Kiely has commenced a crusade against the carrying of slingshots by small boys. The police confiscated a large number yesterday and today Superintendent Massen was instructed to take them away from boys in school.

MAYOR FLAYS ENEMIES

N. B. Smalley Scores Anti-Administration Leaders.

ANOTHER REVOLT

After Reviewing Acts of Some Prominent Republicans He Receives an Ovation.

Enemies to the present administration of the borough and leaders of the antagonistic body, were mercilessly flayed by Mayor N. B. Smalley in a speech before the Good Government Club Thursday. In reviewing the government of North Plainfield for the past decade, he scored Dr. J. H. Cooley and A. V. D. Honeyman in unmeasured terms, dwelling upon the fact that they had been ousted from power for good and sufficient reasons and that at the present time they are making desperate attempts to get back. Coming down to present day facts he touched upon recent charges on the various municipal departments which he declared had proven a stride in advancement without further expense to taxpayers but which had been opposed at every point by these same leaders.

Continuing the flaying, he paid his respects to H. H. Webb, Editor Bateman, of Somerville; Louis Thompson and others. He as much as advocated borough Republicans bolting the county delegates and expressed the wish that a large enough ball could be procured before Election Day in order that he might explain to the world why they should not be put in control. Returning to borough matters he declared that the same persons criticising affairs now, are the ones who all but plunged the borough into bankruptcy ten years ago, the situation being relieved by the election of Colonel J. F. Wilson as mayor.

As he concluded speaking, the Mayor received an ovation from the large crowd of voters in attendance and many of them assured him of their support in his statements. Peter Emmons and other members of the club also addressed the gathering.

WILLARD CASE WEDS MISS HELEN ELY MOUNT

CEREMONY IN FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH AT FREEHOLD.

Willard Case, son of Mrs. Susan P. Case, of 120 Plainfield avenue, and Miss Helen Ely Mount, of Freehold, were married Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the First Baptist church, Freehold, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. Rev. Mr. Stillwell, pastor of the church, officiated. A reception followed the ceremony at the home of the bride's parents. After a honeymoon the couple will reside at West Collingswood, near Camden, the groom being engaged in business in Camden.

Among those standing the marriage were Mrs. Susan P. Case, Samuel Case, Joseph, Howard Case, Mr. and Mrs. J. Herbert Case, of this city.

THE ORIGINAL

Port Grape Wine Producer in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had

The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while those grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. The New Jersey apples, for instance, make a cider that is always popular the world over. If you want a wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards. Sold by Druggists.

TOUCHED HIS HEART.

LITTLE GIRL'S GRIEF STRANGELY AFFECTS A RUFFIAN.

A Story of the Chicago Stockyards Strike Told by Opie Read—Man Who Defied Police Is Tamed by Child.

When this fellow came out of the western mines, writes Opie Read, in the Chicago Journal, he gave his name as Dick Bagley, but soon his acquaintances called him Blood-in-the-eye.

The police had no cause to give him other than a name of infamy. Once it required four of them to take him to the station, and then their crown was bloody. They broke one of his arms and mauled his head. But when he came out of the hospital he stood on the crest of opportunity, viewing the landscape for another chance to fight. His nickname was too long, so they called him Blood. A Salvation Army lass inquired of him, if he ever thought about dying.

"What's the use? It wouldn't put it off any," he growled.

"You might die better."

"But not any deader. When I get through with this world, I want to get through sure enough."

He was hopeless. The time thrown away on him might serve to redeem some less stubborn soul. But had he a soul? Some of the men said not. Old Crisp said that he had not as much soul as a wildcat, and this animal has seven less of psychological claim than a hyena.

How old Crisp hated him. Once he seized a gun, cocked it and leveled it at Blood's head; and Blood leered at him. He had no sensibility whatever. It was believed that he was insensible to pain. When he smashed his finger he talked while a surgeon was amputating it. He couldn't feel. He slept anywhere—in the weeds in summer and in winter his bed was of sawdust.

Strange to say, a woman at whose house he once boarded fell in love with him. The jokers said that it was because of contrast with her first husband, who was a mere skeleton, afraid of the dark. Brutes have humor; grizzly bears laugh, and Blood laughed at the widow. But he sat out of doors, and when she went into the country to hoe potatoes he sat in the place where his hunger had been appeased and called out: "Well, bring along the next one."

"AIN'T THERE PLENTY OF 'EM?"

Bets were made that one of these days old Crisp would kill him. He snapped a pistol at him one night, and when Blood had kicked the old fellow into a corner the giant said: "Crisp, you ought to get a gun that won't snap."

"I'll try a knife the next time," the old man moaned.

Out in the west they had come near hanging him for shooting a man who had become popular in society, but he showed so little concern that they didn't think it worth while. A reporter asked him how it felt to kill a man, and he answered: "Oh, something like filling a flush."

Not long ago he come out of a saloon with his head down. They had doubleteamed on him and some one had belabored him with a mallet. But he left them lying on the floor and he came away whistling. On the edge of the sidewalk sat a little girl, crying. While crossing the street she had dropped her doll. A wagon run over it and ground it to pieces. It was beyond all repair and her little mother soul was wrung. Her distress amused the ruffian. To him it was sort of music. He halted.

"What's the matter with you?"

"Oh, look at her—broke all to pieces."

"But can't you get another one," he asked, stirring the fragments with his foot.

"No; not any more."

"Why, ain't there plenty of them just like her?"

"But I can't get one now—maybe never again. The strike is still on and —and we haven't even got enough to eat. No, I can't get another one."

He felt in his pockets. Out came some silver and some pennies. "I've got about 97 cents," he said. "Come across here with me and we'll see what can be done."

Weekly she followed him into a store. He bought a doll and gave it to her.

She looked up timidly. "Will you let me kiss you?"

He blushed. "Yes, if you can."

He held her up in his mighty arms and kissed her. Then he turned away. Late that evening Old Crisp met him. "Will you take my hand, Blood?"

"Why?"

"You gave my little girl a doll." They shook hands.

Cigar That Lights Itself.

Self-lighting cigars have been invented by an Austrian chemist. They are tipped with a chemical preparation, and when rubbed against a hard substance, such as a wall or the sole of a boot, ignite like a match.

ON A COUNTRY ROAD

IT FURNISHES MANY BITS OF INTEREST TO THE STUDENT.

What It Pays to Look For on Our Rambles—The Little Things That Make the World Brighter.

Yesterday I tramped for many miles along a country road. The morning was cloudy, but fresh and cool for the time of year, and one could stride out in comfort. In passing along the main street of the village where I had spent the night, I noticed a number of birds, busy with domestic duties. Three pairs of orioles were building their gray, sack-like nests in the pendant branches of the elms which arched the road, and a bluebird, with a yellow grub in his bill, hovered near a bird box nailed in an apple tree close to a first floor window. In one neatly-kept garden, with a lawn on both sides of the path, there were two white poles set up, one in either lawn. From one fluttered the American flag, while upon the other was perched a well-made martin house, around which six or eight stately martins sailed in circles, some of them singing their soft liquid songs, and at times alighting on what might be termed the piazza of the miniature dwelling itself. At one of the upper windows of their home, two bright-faced children were eagerly watching the birds, and nudging one somewhile to notice each movement of the handsome swallows.

In a few minutes I was in the open country, where, for a mile or two, the fragrant daisy fields stretched on either side of the road. From these fields the meadow larks were calling, and the bobolinks, rising and falling, fairly trembled with the ecstasy of their song. By the sides of the roads great masses of buttercups were abloom, taking the place of the dandelions, whose seeds were flying in clouds before every gust of wind.

Crossing a stone bridge I noticed a phoebe sitting on a telegraph wire nearby, and taking the hint I leaned over the side to look down upon the back of another little flycatcher, as she sat upon her nest, built upon a projecting bit of masonry. She could see me, too, and after expecting for a moment, she joined her mate on the telegraph wire, where both birds were soon busy pressing their feathers. In the nest were five pure white eggs, lying in a little bowl of gray felt, which, in turn was surrounded by mud and moss. I was still looking over the side of the bridge, when the rattle of a kingfisher attracted my attention, and up the river came a streak of blue, which ended at a willow branch stretching far out over the water. The bird had a good-sized fish in his bill, and perhaps because my presence disconcerted him, he seemed as though he didn't know what to do with it. But rattling angrily, as a dog might growl on being interrupted in a meal, he dropped from his perch and passed upstream to a more secluded landing place.

For a time the road ran between high, steeps banks, gay with Robin's plantain, and then it dipped down into a hollow, where, in the wet, low-lying side, grew myriads of purple iris. Now and then in some spot more wet than the rest, a little pond would appear, its stagnant water made interesting by the reflection of a beautifully clouded sky and a dotting of yellow water lilies.

Suddenly, the stillness of the morning was broken by the yelp of a dog, and, looking over the fence, I saw a big gray woodchuck tearing through the grass toward a stump, with a fox terrier in hot pursuit. The woodchuck won the race, and with one terrific whistle, disappeared among the friendly stones. The terrier, an instant too late, was greatly excited, sniffing at the hole where the fugitive had vanished, and dancing about and yapping in his eagerness. Once or twice he looked at me and wagged his tail, perhaps with an impression that I might pull out a stone or two and let him settle his difficulties with his foe. But I left him to take the hint, and left him to enjoy the odor of woodchuck at a safe distance.

Birds were everywhere, and in good variety. About a little cottage near the highway, a pair of yellow orioles were flitting, and from their actions I suspect that they had a nest in a clump of elderberry bushes in a corner of the garden. Several times I saw chimney swifts drop down the chimneys of deserted houses, and in and out of the belfry of an old church, a troop of barn swallows flew, crying "Kitty, Kitty," as they came and went. And once as I passed a well-appointed cottage I saw a newly-made barn swallow's nest, plastered to a slight projection of the woodwork on the under side of the piazza. Never did I hear so many song sparrows singing in so short a time, and every few minutes I heard the call of bob-white, as the small flocks passed overhead. Chipping sparrows, too, sang with an earnestness worthy of a better performance, and the vigorous "preaching" of the red-eyed vireo was almost incessant.

Toward evening I came to some woodland where I heard the black-throated green warbler, the ovenbird and the warbling vireo, and where I saw the flicker go bounding off through the trees. And as the night fell, and I sat upon a high bank overlooking a valley, the voice of a whip-poor-will burst from the gathering mists beneath me, and for a long time I sat and listened to the weird call as it rose and fell, as the mysterious bird passed from point to point on business of his own.

BOOK NEWS.

It is planned to issue on Thursday of each week items of library news. This will frequently take the form of book lists, such as lists of books recently added, lists on special subjects and like topics. Frequently the lists will be annotated, the aim being to make these annotations of real service to the reader, by giving him the opinion of a trustworthy critic as to the value of the books or a few words as to their scope. Borrowers should keep these lists. The Plainfield Public Library will furnish to anyone making application a list of its books on a given subject.

Public Library Notes.

The Library's previous lists of 100 good short stories, printed in the local papers February 11 and 18, 1904, proved so popular, that another list has been compiled, which it is hoped may be equally so.

100 good short stories, part I.

Part II will be in next Thursday's issue.

Adventure of the speckled band, Conan Doyle. In his adventures of Sherlock Holmes.

Ardelia in Arcady, Josephine Dodge Daskam. In her madness of Philip, and McClure 18:381. At the end of the passage, Rudyard Kipling. In his life's handicap.

MISS JENNIE M. SHARKEY WEDS JOHN M'COY HUNT

CEREMONY AT HOME OF BRIDE'S PARENTS IN NETHERWOOD AVENUE.

In the presence of a large number of relatives and friends, Miss Jennie Maud Sharkey was married to John McCoy Hunt at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Sharkey, of Netherwood avenue, last Wednesday. The ceremony took place at 8:30 o'clock, Rev. J. O. McKelvey officiating. The bride was attended by two flower girls, the Misses Genevieve Smalley and Dorothy Hetfield, her cousins. The ushers were Clarence Sharkey and J. Raymond Lambert, both of this city.

The bridal party entered the parlor, which was tastefully decorated in autumn leaves, palms, and white carnations, and the wedding march was played by Miss Florence Smalley. The pastor awaited them under a floral arch of autumn leaves. Beautifully gowned in white silk mulle, the *bride presented a very pretty appear*ance kneeling before the background of palms and potted plants. She carried lillies-of-the valley. The flower girls were also dressed in white.

Following the ceremony, an informal reception was held previous to the bride and groom's departure for their wedding trip. After their return they will make their home on Long Island. The groom is a steam fitter by trade, being in the employ of an electrical plant in Newark. Both the bride and groom are well known in this city, where they have resided for many years. They were handsomely remembered with gifts from their many friends, including valuable and useful articles.

Those present at the wedding included friends and relatives from New York, Newark, Brooklyn, Westfield, Bloomfield, New Brunswick and Metuchen.

Miss Edna Howell to Wed.

Miss Edna Minnie Howell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George D. Howell, formerly of Plainfield, will be married to Rev. Adams Douglas Archibald, of Prince Edward Island, on Wednesday, Nov. 16, at 12 o'clock noon, at the home of the bride's brother, Edwin A. Howell, Chester, Pa. Miss Howell has visited here a number of times, where she has many friends. Mr. Archibald is of Halifax, Nova Scotia, and he holds a position as field secretary at Prince Edward Island under the direction of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions.

Reunion of Sisters.

Mrs. Mary Vreeland, of Chicago; Mrs. Howard Hegeman, of Elizabeth; Mrs. Kate Kibbe, of New Brunswick, and Mrs. T. D. Stryker, of Trenton, all sisters, are visiting Mrs. Stryker's daughter, Mrs. George W. Sauns, of West Front street. This is the first time that Mrs. Vreeland has visited here in twenty-two years, and as she is well advanced in years, being seventy, it was her desire to meet her sisters and visit among eastern relatives. She, as well as her sisters, were born at Harlingen, Somerset county.

Ernest Rapalje Married.

Announcement is made of the wedding of Ernest Rapalje, of Carlton avenue, to Miss Margaret Corbin, of Oxford, N. Y. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride, Tuesday evening, by Rev. Daniel Rapalje, father of the groom. The young woman is well known in this city and Elizabeth, having visited frequently at the latter place.

Miss Davis Married.

Many persons in Plainfield will be interested to learn of the recent marriage of Miss Mary Davis, formerly a teacher in the Stillman High School, to J. F. Bates. The couple is living at Setauket, L. I.

Edward Koechlein, of this city, has returned from a visit with Raritan friends.

STOCK CO. BASEBALL

George E. Greenleaf's Scheme for Crack Ball Team.

OUTLINES HIS PLANS

Gives the Probable Lineup and Explains How He Would Manage Affairs.

An effort to give Plainfield a first-class baseball team next season is being made by George E. Greenleaf, an old ball player, who now resides in Jersey City. Through the influence of local friends he has been induced to come here and look over the ground to see what the prospects are. He was in town last week and partially divulged some of his plans. Mr. Greenleaf's idea is to issue $5,000 worth of stock and to give local people the opportunity to take it up at $1 a share. He argues that there are a sufficient number of persons in the city and borough who would quickly subscribe to the stock, and in this he is encouraged by those who know the field here pretty thoroughly.

It is further proposed to have a thoroughly representative team and play two games a week in town. This might appear on the face of it to be an expensive and illogical thing to do, but to Mr. Greenleaf would nire players by the month and not the game, as has been the rule, the expense would be greatly reduced so that the team would not cost over $90 or $70 per game. In addition to the two games here, no plans to play on Sundays out-of-town and arrange travelling dates. He has in mind a well-known summer resort on the coast, where he would play one day a week and it is possible that Sunday games would be arranged out-of-town. In this way the team would always be in the best of condition and first-class ball would be the result. As far as the local games are concerned the stockholders would have control, with Mr. Greenleaf as manager. If two games are played here Wednesday and Saturday, as well as holidays, would be reserved for Plainfield. These would be the best days for this city.

In arranging a schedule, Mr. Greenleaf would bring only first class teams to this city, such as the Hobokens and other equally strong semi-professional clubs, while occasionally major and minor league teams would be brought here, thus giving the fans an opportunity to see the fastest teams in the business.

As for the location of a grounds, Mr. Greenleaf has not yet given the matter much attention. In case the Plainfield A. C. does not have a team, arrangements may be made to take the lease of Crescent Oval. If so, the grounds would be improved and more commodious grandstands erected, while the possibility of floods in time of heavy rains would be provided against. It is Mr. Greenleaf's idea to get things started as early as possible and learn whether he will secure the proper support in his undertaking. If Plainfield does not take hold of the matter enthusiastically, another town will be given the opportunity. One of the best reasons given why Plainfield should have a good team is that it is one of the best advertisements that the town could have.

Mr. Greenleaf gives this as his probable lineup for the team, in case Plainfield is selected: John Manefee, of the Chicago Nationals, first base; Frank Bonner, of Evansville, Central League, second base; Dowling, Georgetown University, third base; Hoffer, Little Rock, Southern League, shortstop; Shaw, Concord, New England League, catcher; Jerry Nops, Providence, Eastern League, pitcher; Iott, Concord, New England League, right field; Vinson, Providence, Eastern League, left field; Kassel, Evansville, Central League, center field; Apperine, Georgetown University, extra fielder.

Mr. Greenleaf says that he is personally acquainted with these players and he is positive that he can get every one of them for his team, if his plans are consummated.

AN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

Grace Church Institution Opens Saturday, November 5.

The Industrial School for Colored Children at Grace church chapel, Sixth and Sycamore streets, will resume operations on Saturday, November 5, at 10 o'clock. The school has been thoroughly and efficiently organized in each of the departments of its work. Classes for boys will continue the wood carving and bent iron work. For girls the school provides beginning and advanced sewing, garment making, shirt waist making and cooking.

The privileges of the school are not reserved for members of the Mission, but are extended to all who wish to avail themselves of the opportunity. No religious distinction whatever is made in the applicants.

Mr. and Mrs. John Reynolds and children, of this city, are visiting relatives in Raritan.

WATCHUNG HUNT CLUB ARRANGES SOME MEETS

WHERE IT WILL FOLLOW THE HOUNDS THIS FALL.

During the month of November the Watchung Hunt Club will take part in several events of unusual interest to those who like to follow the hounds, the first of which will be on Saturday, November 5, when the club will start from Mount Pleasant at 3:30 o'clock. On Election Day the club will start out at 11:30 in the morning from Dog Tavern and at 1 o'clock will partake of a feast breakfast at the Middletown Lodge, Odonia, being the guests of Charles D. Freeman, Esq.

On Saturday afternoon, November 12, at 3:15, the members will enjoy another chase, starting from Fanwood, and on the following Saturday afternoon, November 19, at 3:15 o'clock, the club will start from South Plainfield on a hunt through the surrounding country. On Thanksgiving Day, Mr. and Mrs. Urquhahnk will . . into the club at a hunt breakfast at the Colonia Country Club. The next hunt will be on Saturday afternoon, November 26, starting from Oak Tree at 3 o'clock.

Since its organization the club has steadily grown in numbers until at present it has a large membership. There is scarcely a Saturday that the club does not go out for a run with the hounds and a majority of the riders are now quite proficient. Mr. Middleton O'Malley Knott will be the master in charge of the events for November.

MR. AND MRS. M'CUTCHEN AS GUESTS OF HONOR

ENJOYABLE RECEPTION GIVEN BY THE PARK CLUB.

Society folk in both the city and borough joined Thursday in giving a reception to Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. McCutchen, of North Plainfield, who have been absent from their home for over a year. The event also marked the opening of the social season at the Park Club and judging by the large number of persons present the coming season will be the greatest in the history of the organization. The clubhouse never presented a more attractive appearance in its floral decorations from the conservatories of Mr. McCutchen and other members of the club, while the passing to and fro of the richly-gowned women lent a brilliancy to the affair.

The reception was an informal one, in many respects, and the greeting on the part of the guests and Mr. and Mrs. McCutchen was most cordial. The entertainment committee, comprising Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Reed, Mr. and Mrs. Townsend Rushmore, Mr. and Mrs. George D. Hallock, Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. McGee and Dr. S. VanD. Hedges, did all in its power to make the reception a success and they presented the guests to Mr. and Mrs. McCutchen.

The reception lasted until 11 o'clock, after which the younger persons were given the privilege of the floor for dancing until the early hours of the morning. Music for the occasion was furnished by a Newark orchestra seated on the stage behind a wealth of floral decorations.

Rahway Couple Married Here.

Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Emma Craig, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Craig, of 18 Barnet street, Rahway, and Frank Hall, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hall, of 18 Barnet street, Rahway. The couple was married by Justice Elmore D. Medfett at his office on Central avenue, on Saturday, October 8. The witnesses were Mr. and Mrs. George R. Hockafellow. The bride gave her age as twenty-five and the groom gave his age as twenty-three. They will reside in Rahway, where the groom is employed as an engineer.

Odorono and Hay Fever.

Liquid Cream Balm is becoming quite as popular in many localities as Ely's Cream Balm catarrh cure. It is prepared for use in atomizers, and is highly prized by those who have been accustomed to call upon physicians for such a treatment. Many physicians are using and prescribing it. All the medicinal properties of the celebrated Cream Balm are contained in the liquid form, which is 75 cts. including a spraying tube. All druggists, or by mail. Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., New York.

Dr. Frank C. Harbert, of this city, has been visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. O.C. Harbert, of Marlboro, N. J.

Mr. and Mrs. A., S. Strykes, of East 81st street, have gone to New London, Conn., for a week's stay with friends.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Philip Kirch have returned from their wedding trip and have taken up their residence on East Fifth street.

UNFIT FOR AUTONOMY

Lewis S. Thomas Thinks Philippine Freedom Unwise.

THEY'RE A BAD LOT

Former Plainfield Newspaper Man Residing Among Them Gives His Views.

Lewis S. Thomas, formerly a Plainfield newspaper man who has been in the Philippines for the last three years, has written the following interesting letter to a friend in Dunellen:

"I suppose you know that I have left the employ of the Government out here. I can assure you that I scarcely think it probable that I shall ever hunt another job from the Government. At present I am working for an American firm, G. A. Kaufman, in the town of Cagayan. I am sort of general roustabout. Sometimes it is hard and again it is easy. We are about the only firm of Americans in the islands who are doing anything in the native business and products. We are the principal merchants in the Province, being connected with Smith, Bell & Co., an English firm.

"We run a large store of everything and buy hemp and copra. As is every town in the Philippine Islands we find that it is necessary to look after the Chinese business, as that people are the backbone of the retail business. If a white man or even a Filipino wants to sell more stuff than a Chinaman he must sell a great deal cheaper than the Mongolian. It speaks for the character of the Filipino. He envies everybody who is willing to work and get money and so will not do anything with anybody who will not allow himself to be badgered and bulled as does the Chinaman. We are able to do the business because we can do it cheaper than the Chinaman and by this time have prestige.

"It is probable that before long I shall be out in the mountains of Mindanao buying hemp, coffee, cacao and bees-wax, besides selling all the necessities of life which the savage tribes require. Our intention also is to get land, of which there is almost an unlimited amount, and start to grow hemp and sell it for export.

"I always feel as if I'd like to enlighten the people at home a little about the Filipino. There seems to be a greater or less tendency to believe in giving them their freedom. Just consider the state of the Islands now other three years of as liberal a government as is possible to have, especially for the Filipino. It is hard for an American, with all the autocratic powers given the commission. In this province there is a Filipino governor and but one American official, the supervisor-treasurer. In all that time not one-quarter of the native landholders have paid their taxes. The lands have been sold at auction and bid in by the province and the old owners go on living there and oppose with force any attempt to dislodge them. A man does not leave a piece of land vacant two years without finding a dozen squatters who will oppose any eviction. And at last three towns have banded together and declared that they were free and all went to the mountains bearing with them the family of a man who had been prominent in assisting the officers of the law. They buried two boys alive and one man who escaped says that he saw one man kill thirty prisoners. Mind you, all white prisoners, but their own fellow countrymen. The bandits made a new religion for themselves and every band has a God the Father, a Holy Child, a Holy Virgin and Saints Peter and Paul to burn. The Virgins are chosen for their good looks and are very much respected by the followers, but generally have children.

"This state of affairs is common all over the islands and is only to be traced to the form of government which gives them the right to vote for their local officers and does not allow a white official to punish flagingly any of the derelictions until it becomes necessary to wage war. And this is the people some American writer should be left to work out their own destiny. We would have our hands full responding for the damage done to foreign holding here, for there are already justifiable claims against the United States of damage done to property belonging to foreign residents. If the Americans withdrew there would be more revolutions to the year than in South America in all the years since they had Republics there.

"But then I have no complaint to make, the people are a little afraid to do anything to an American, for they have been punished several times without the intervention of the authorities and they have learned that it is not a good thing to monkey with an American.

"Sincerely,

"Lewis S. Thomas."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 6.

Topic.—Some of God's promises that cheer me.—II Pet. i, 3-4. (A promise meeting.)

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

The promises of God as given in His word appeal in some way to almost all His people, yet there are promises that are especially precious to particular people or at particular times. One of the most precious facts concerning the promises of God is their number—over 30,000—and with the number their variety. Peter has well called them "exceeding great and precious promises." They are not few in numbers and limited to a small number of people, but like the sands of the sea for multitude and capable of being applied to every phase and condition in human life. The sinner mourning over his sin may read the precious promise, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." The child of God sensing through the deep waters of affliction can hear God say, "When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee, and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee, and when thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned." To the sin burdened and care worn comes the Master's precious promise, "Come unto Me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest." To the Mary and Marthas there is the promise, "Thy brother shall live again." To the lonely, "So I am with thee always," and to the dying, "In my father's house are many mansions," and "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth." He might be continued almost without end. No situation of sin or sorrow or adversity can be found in life but what there is a promise in the word of God to cheer the one passing through it.

It should be the children of God, lean more absolutely upon the promises of God than we do. They are "exceeding great and precious," and yet while we know them and can repeat numbers of them from memory we do not always lean upon them in the hour of need. We have the promise that "all things work together for good to them that love God," and yet when adversity comes to many who profess to love God, instead of accepting this truth they have their faith shaken in God and in His promises. No wonder therefore that they do not cheer and comfort us. But such an attitude toward God's promises is a miserably false one. If we faced bankruptcy and our earthly father who was immensely rich had said to us, "If you get into financial difficulty draw on me," we would not spend sleepless nights worrying and wondering if we had an earthly father and if he really would do what he said. If wise children we would take him at his word, and then, by increased love and honor and confidence bring him to the test. Let us trust God in the same way. Let us take Him at His word to us. Let us, as His children, accept His promises in the hour of need, and then to repay Him let us love Him more and consecrate our lives more entirely to Him. He cannot fail us, for "He is faithful that promised."

Interviewing Dr. Clark.

Just after Dr. Clark touched English shores, completing a voyage from South Africa, he was interviewed for the Christian World of London. Some things he said are of wide significance. When the reporter asked him, "You have found no signs of decay, no instances of failure?" he replied:

"No signs of decay, but everywhere tokens of present increase and future promise. Here and there, but not very often, I have heard of societies that have fallen off or dropped out, but these have been comparatively few. Indeed, I have had opportunities of comparison. Twelve years ago, when I first visited Adelaide, there were five Junior societies. Now South Australia has 160. When I first went to Victoria there were 30 societies there; on this last visit I was told of 230. And the unions, made up of many societies, grow and prosper. Nearly all are doing splendid work. Only in one union did I find anything like sagging, but I am convinced that that was only temporary and that the union in question has already entered on an area of progress. As a matter of fact, it has taken up the increase campaign.

"Some of my most interesting experiences were in South Africa. Of course there have been somewhat strained relations since the war, and there are now two unions—the Dutch and the British. But there are two Boers on the South African executive committee, and at a meeting in the crowded hall of Adderley Street Reformed church, Cape Town, there were duplicate mottoes in English and Dutch and the hymns and prayers were in the two languages. Friendliness cannot be forced, but there is reason for one of the influences that make for unity."

Gifts.

Labor and rest,
The sky at best
Blessings that heaven gives,
And happy be
To make them be
His gladness while he lives.
With every day
To work and say,
Thank God for work and light!
And when at last
The day is past
Thank God for rest and night!
This is to find
Sweet peace of mind;
To know life's precious worth!
God's gifts to take
And with them make
A paradise of earth!

BEHIND PROSCENIUM ARCH

Men Working There Are United in International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes.

Boston (Mass.) Special.

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, which recently held its twelfth annual convention in Milwaukee, was organized in New York city in 1893. Previous to that time there had been local unions of stage employes chartered directly from the American Federation of Labor in a number of cities, but all efforts to unite them in a national body had failed.

At the first convention there were 11 cities represented, and a campaign of

PATRICK T. BARRY,
(President International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes.)

organization was started, but it was found difficult to unite the men, as many were found ready to work for an evening during the week and doing work of that order for the privilege of seeing a free show. At the Omaha convention in 1898 it was decided to broaden the scope of the organization and admit the Canadian locals, and since that time the union has steadily increased in importance.

At the present time there are over 100 local unions, with a membership of about 6,000, controlling almost every theater in the country.

Patrick T. Barry, the international president, is a member of the Boston local union, and was elected to his present office at the Columbus convention last year.

Lee M. Hart, general secretary-treasurer of the organization, is a Chicagoan and is widely known in labor circles throughout the country. He has been identified with the labor movement since 1886, when he first entered as a sentimental in forming the present organization, and has held office continuously since, first as treasurer, then as president, and since 1898 he has been secretary-treasurer, being elected without opposition at each convention.

The executive work of the organization rests in the hands of Mr. Hart, and he has proved himself not alone an organizer of great ability, but an able and conservative official in handling strikes. The organization includes all mechanics behind the proscenium arch in a theater, and in addition to reducing the hours of labor to eight a day the men have practically doubled their wages since the union was formed, 11 years ago.

MRS. MAYBRICK'S RELEASE.

It Was Effected on the Fifteenth Anniversary of the Beginning of Her Trial.

London (Eng.) Special.

Mrs. Florence Maybrick, the American woman who has been imprisoned in England for the murder of her husband, was released on July 20, the fifteenth anniversary of the commencement of her trial.

In certain cases the term of imprisonment dates from the beginning of the trial, and such was the case on this occasion.

After her release Mrs. Maybrick immediately joined her mother, Baroness Deroques, in France, from whence they sailed for America.

After her arrival in the United States Mrs. Maybrick will proceed direct to Louisiana to appear in the land suit conducting for the imprisoned woman.

Mrs. Maybrick's recent term of semi-custody was granted for the purpose of permitting her to regain her mental tone, which the long incarceration had impaired. There were times when she appeared feeble-minded, but now her mind is normal and she is in condition to proceed with her suit.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Nov. 6: "The Study of Missions."—Isa. lx, 1-9. Junior Mission Study Rally Day.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES.

The whole of this chapter is a paean of praise to Jehovah. The viewpoint is afar from the holy city which has been the seat of Jehovah's sanctuary. His people have been in captivity and was the oppression and contempt. Violence and injustice have made havoc of all settled order. Iniquity and impurity have held high carnival. Peace and quietness are nonexistent.

In all this chaos and fear one clear voice is heard above all the babel of sounds. It rings full and true, buoyant and hopeful. It rouses the despairing to higher conceptions of their God and His purposes among men. It begets new hope and courage. Life is worth something once more. All is not in ruin. The old order has passed that a better one may be established. Men breathe easier because they begin to understand better the events that are taking. Jehovah still rules. Israel has been unfaithful, and the Lord has sent disaster as correction, but His truth endures and shall not change.

The promise shines as never before. Zion shall be the glorious. This prophecy, in the latter chapters of Isaiah, embodies the highest hopes of those who through ages of darkness looked for the coming of a day of light. It has had partial fulfillment; it is still the highest panacea of prophecy and in its completeness not yet reached. How it thrills one to read it at the present time, when such events as we have seen in our day give it new meaning and force.

All nations are to be blessed by the light which shall shine from Zion. Our God is to be God of all the ends of the earth. Israel is His messenger to proclaim the good news of Him who sit in the circle of the earth. Ah, that is the most difficult! Israel was called of Jehovah to call all men to Him. She became proud and treacherous and rebellious; she lost her place. But were the purposes of God frustrated?

Jehovah has risen. His truth has shone upon men. Manhood has been glorified in Jesus Christ. There is hope for every man. He also is a son of God. This evangel is to be declared to all people. They are to be evangelized, organized and taught all the truth of God. This is the work to which the church of Jesus Christ, the new spiritual Israel, is called.

Are we awake to this responsibility, but are not yet fully aroused. The signs of the times are hopeful, however. We are getting a sense of neighborliness in these days such as men could never have before. Not only one continent, race is coming to be to us more than an academic proposition, more than a theory of origin. It is getting into our business relations and beginning to affect our social conditions. We are getting a sense of unity in our political affairs and civil institutions. It takes longer to adjust ourselves to its recognition in our religion. But we are coming to it, even if slowly. The proof of this is the fact that we are taking some interest in the religious condition of other folks. We are coming to think of their salvation as a matter with which we have something to do.

The average Christian has not been very deeply absorbed in this subject as yet. The evidence of this is found in the amount of money he has devoted to this work, the time he has given to its consideration and the real anxiety he has felt for its success.

We need now to begin in all our leagues a special course of study of our mission fields, the forces at work and our part in the carrying on of the enterprise. There is a wealth of recent literature on the subject. Get the members of the chapter at work on the different phases of the matter, so that by papers or talks they may give the results to all. It is easy to get pictures that will bring to us the real Israel of old. Let us bring the gospel in this generation to all men. We can do it. Will you do your part toward it?

Moral Courage.

When the psalmist wrote, "The beginning of wisdom is the fear of the Lord," he might surely have said, with as much justice, it is the beginning also of all true courage, for of this we may be certain—that if only we could learn to fear God more we should undoubtedly live to fear man less. If the sanction of our every action came from within, from our training of moral and religious consciences; if we made the godlike image the sole criterion of our conduct, the first and last court of our appeal; if we could trust the thought that inspires, as as we trust the voice of the living God, then in all confidence and humility might we not exclaim with the psalmist, "The Lord God is on my side; I will not fear, for what can man do unto me?" What, indeed, can man do unto him with God on his side, unto him who belongs to the name of God?—Rev. G. Lipkiro of England.

A Bad Lodger.

Conscience is one of the worst lodgers to have in your house. When he gets querulous, there is no abiding with him—ill at lying down and equally troublesome at rising up. A guilty conscience is one of the worst curses of the world. It puts out the sun and takes away the brightness from the moonbeam. A guilty conscience casts a noxious exhalation through the air, removes the beauty from the landscape, the glory from the flowing river, the majesty from the rolling floods. There is nothing beautiful to the man who has a guilty conscience.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Somerset, Benevolent and Frank-lin Councils Represented at the Meeting.

Harvey R. Thorn, from Franklin Council; A. W. Pangborn, from Somerset Council, and Arthur G. Adams, from Benevolent Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., were the local delegates to the annual session of the State Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., held at Trenton, Wednesday. They declare that the convention was one of the best in the history of the order, and all reports were most encouraging.

These officers were elected for the coming year: Junior Past Councilor, J. Fred Lang, of Elizabeth; State councilor, William R. Conrad, of Burlington; State vice councilor, Rev. Edward M. Mount, of Millville; State council secretary, William H. Miers, of Trenton; State council treasurer, Dr. James J. Reed, of Sea Bright; State council conductor, John H. Lott, of South River; State council warden, John Cramer, of Trenton; State council inside sentinel, Paul Brewster, of Atlantic City; State council outside sentinel, Fred C. Clough, of Passaic; State council chaplain, Rev. Edward M. Mount, of Millville.

This finance committee was elected: E. W. Struble, of Newark; Henry Hawkins, Jr., of Elizabeth; J. B. Clevenstine, of Trenton; William Black, of Holmdel; John Fairbanks, of Paterson.

One of the features of the programme was an address on "Americanism," by Rev. Dr. Frank M. Bristol, pastor of the Metropolitan church, of Washington. There were also addresses by Mayor Frank S. Katzenbach, of Trenton, and Past State Councilor Fergus A. Dennis.

OSKOSH GLEE CLUB TO GIVE A BIG SHOW

JOS. M. SHELLABARGER PLANS TO BRING TROUPE BACK HERE.

The Oskosh Glee Club, which appeared at the Casino last winter under such favorable auspices and with so much success, will be "in session" at the Casino, this season, as date to be announced later. The members were so much pleased with their reception last year that they decided to return and present an entirely new programme. The first rehearsal for the "home coming" was held last night at the Casino and from the every start there was an unusual amounts of entnusiasm.

The membership of the club will be the same as last year, with the addition of the Misses Hess, of Central avenue, and H. E. Butler, of Madison avenue. Mr. Butler, who has just moved to this city, was for three years soloist for the Yale Glee Club. While last year's visit was an entire success, it is predicted that the affair this season will eclipse it.

Joseph M. Shellabarger has entire charge of the affair and he has written all the words for the songs. Assisting him are George S. Hing, business manager, and Harry Hall, stage manager. There will be about thirty-five members participating in the show. William E. MacClymont will be musical director.

F. B. C. Bond Issue.

The Public Service Corporation has authorized the issue of $7,350,000 5 per cent. five-year collateral trust bonds to be secured by the deposit of $15,00,000 of bonds of the subsidary corporations. The entire issue was authorized sold to Robert Winthrop & Co., of New York. This action provides for all improvements and extensions for two years.

Dispute Over Estate.

The case of John Anderson, administrator of James A. Anderson, against Mrs. Bridget Burke and Miss Julia Burke, heirs-at-law, in the matter of deciding to whom shall be paid $1,000 death benefit on the life of James A. Anderson, who died a year after his wife, who was made beneficiary, will be tried in the Chancery Court, Newark, on December 6. John P. Owens, Esq., as administrator of the late Rosanna Anderson, is opposed in the case by William Newcorn, Esq.

Mrs. Joseph Harding, of Raritan, has been visiting friends here.

Mrs. Frede Kaiser, of this city, has been visiting her parents at Raritan.

Miss Anna Gaston, of Somerville, has been visiting her brother, Ira Gaston, of this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Martin, who have been spending a few days with George Martin, at Raritan, have returned home.

Mrs. William Dodwell, of this city, is visiting her sister, Mrs. James VanHouten, of Manasquan.

KILLED BY P. AND R. TRAIN

C. E. Wade Meets Instant Death at Trenton Junction.

IDENTIFIED BY CARD

As Delegate From Twilight Council, of Scotch Plains, Had Been Attending Convention of Juniors.

Returning to his home after a day's attendance as a delegate to the State Council of the Jr. O. U. A. M., Charles E. Wade, son of Mr. and Mrs. Abram Wade, of Scotch Plains, met sudden death at Trenton Junction last Wednesday evening. Stepping out of the path of a local passenger train on the P. and R. he was struck and instantly killed by a fast freight going in the opposite direction. The body was terribly mangled and identification was made only by a card found in a pocket of the clothing, placed there at the earnest solicitation of his mother as he took his departure in the morning.

Wade, who was one of the most popular young men in Scotch Plains, was elected delegate to the annual State Council of the Juniors by Twilight Council, of which he had been secretary, having succeeded Horace Hunt, of this city, a beautiful wreath of flowers, was held in the Taylor Opera House at Trenton yesterday and lasted until nearly 6 o'clock. When adjournment was made Wade hurried to the P. and R. depot alone in order to reach the Junction in time to catch a through train to this city.

Arriving at the latter place he found he had a short time to wait and walked away from the depot to a point between the branch and the main lines, where a signal tower is being erected. He was surveying this when he noted the approach of a passenger train and believing it to be the one he wanted, hurried to cross the tracks before its arrival. The freight was coming from Philadelphia at a high rate of speed in order to pass the station before the passenger drew up, with the engineer's cab to the far side of Wade. He received no warning and had his gaze fixed on the incoming passenger when he was struck. The remains were picked up by trainmen and though Harvey Thorn and other delegates from this city viewed the features, they were unable to recognize them and did not know the victim was Wade until the card was found.

The young man was twenty-six years old and had built up a good grocery business in the store on Park avenue, occupied for many years by Thomas Fell. He was a member of the Scotch Plains Methodist church and was one of its most earnest and devoted workers, representing the congregation at nearly all the county and State gatherings. He frequently spoke at Epworth League conferences in the various local churches. Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company, of the Plains, numbered him among its members and the entire village respected him for his many lovable traits.

Surviving him are two sisters, Miss Nancy Wade, a teacher in a school at Milburn, and Miss Florence Wade, who resides at home; and two brothers, John Wade, a student at Dickinson College at Carlisle, Pa., and Harry Wade, his assistant in the grocery business. The coroner and county physician at Trenton, granted a permit for the removal of the body to Scotch Plains.

MANY GUESTS ATTEND MOUNT HOREB WEDDING

MISS M. ANNA NUSE THE BRIDE OF BENJAMIN GIDDES.

Miss M. Anna Nuse, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Nuse, of Mt. Horeb, and Benjamin M. Giddes, of the same place, were married Wednesday at the home of the bride's parents, by Rev. Charles E. Walton, pastor of the Mt. Horeb M. E. church. The ceremony was witnessed by 150 guests from this city, New York, Newark, Elizabeth, Bound Brook, Somerville and Dunellen.

Miss Edith Nuse was maid of honor and Miss Carrie Nuse and Miss Selma Wrecklander were bridesmaids. Eugene Giddes, cousin of the groom, was best man and the ushers were Minard Smith, Harry Nuse, Joseph VanNest and Charles Walton, Jr. Following the ceremony, a wedding supper was served and Mr. and Mrs. Giddes took the 1:17 train from this city to Washington. They will reside at Mt. Horeb.

Mrs. Mary Stevens, of this city, who has been visiting the Misses Gallagher, at Raritan, has returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. William Chamberlain, of Plainfield, have been spending several days with friends in Somerset county.

CHAS. WADE LAID AT REST

All Scotch Plains Pays Tribute at His Bier.

THREE PASTORS SPEAK

Each One Eulogizes Young Man, Whose Loss the Community Keenly Feels.

In the Methodist church at Scotch Plains where he had been one of the leading figures in its social and religious welfare, funeral services were held Sunday afternoon over the remains of Charles E. Wade, who met a sudden death at Trenton Junction after attending the State Council of the Jr. O. U. A. M. as a delegate. The outpouring of relatives and friends was one of the largest the village has ever seen and many were unable to gain admittance to the structure. The attendance included nearly the entire membership of Twilight Council, of the Junior Order, Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company, of which he had been a member and Franklin and Somerset Councils, of this city.

Rev. C. C. Woodruff, of Roselle, a former pastor of the church, was in charge and he was assisted by Rev. Warren D. Coons, the present pastor and Rev. G. M. Shott, of the Scotch Plains Baptist church, all of whom were in daily contact with the young man and who knew his inner nature as no one outside of the family did. Each departed from the customary form and spoke glowingly of his many noble attributes and devotion to the Master, Mr. Woodruff being specially eulogistic. He referred to the deceased as one of his "chums" and in calling him a Christian, asserted that it was the highest tribute that could be paid to any man. He declared his inability to preach a funeral sermon and devoted a considerable period to speaking in a reminiscent mood, at the same time drawing a lesson from the shock that had been thrown upon the community. Interspersing the remarks of the clergyman, two selections, "Nearer My God" and "Jesus Savior Pilot Me," were sung by a quartette from the Monroe Avenue church, of this city, composed of Rev. George Mooney, Lewis V. Taliamy, John Dash and Emanuel Gilbert.

The casket was draped with an American flag and the floral tributes were so numerous as to almost hide it from view. Set pieces were contributed by the two attending organizations, the Methodist church societies and by friends individually.

Quitting the church, the body was escorted to the Park avenue crossing where the Juniors and firemen quitted the cortage and were conveyed by special car to Hillside cemetery. At the graveside the Junior burial services was conducted by Harvey M. Thorn, of Franklin Council, this city. The pall bearers were members of Twilight Council as follows: Thomas S. Whitenack, Charles Fjelde, George A. Clark, Ernest Clark, John Mooney and I. Gager Walker.

MISS ANNA BARRE

BRIDE OF JOHN JOYCE

QUIETLY MARRIED LAST THURSDAY BY REV. JOSEPH O. M'KELVEY.

Miss Anna Barre, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Barre, of Somerset street, and John Joyce, of the borough, were married Thursday, at the home of Rev. J. O. McKelvey, pastor of Warren chapel. The ceremony was conducted quietly, only the members of the party being in attendance. Miss Elsie Burmeister, of New York, acted as bridesmaid and James Quee, of New York, was best man.

Following the ceremony at the bride's parents, a reception was tendered them by a large gathering of friends. Supper was served and several hours were spent with music and dancing, while Albert Haring, of Somerville, amused the guests with humorous vocal selections.

Mrs. Joyce is a prominent member of Warren chapel and has a host of acquaintances in the city and borough. The groom came to this city from Paterson and is employed by the Watchung Silk Company. They will make their home at 135 Somerset street which has been completely furnished. Both young people were well remembered with presents of silver, cut glass and bric-a-brac.

MARRA CONVICTED ON BOARD OF HEALTH CHARGES

WOULD NOT HAVE BEEN FINED BUT FOR SON'S FALSE TESTIMONY.

Tony Marra, the owner of the East Front street "spite" house, was again fined in the city court, Saturday, this time on two charges preferred against him by the Board of Health of building a cesspool and a privy on his premises without a permit. Judge Runyon imposed a penalty of $10 in each instance, making $135 in all that the defendant has had to pay since locating opposite former Mayor Randolph's residence.

In passing sentence, the magistrate declared that Marrra was guilty but there were circumstances which led him to believe that he had acted in good faith and the fault was not entirely his own. The ordinance calls for a heavy penalty where a man has been convicted twice on Board of Health charges within six months, but in this instance, the judge said, there was no call for severity. He added that he would not have been disposed to fine him at all had it not been for Marra's son lying to him on the witness stand.

Independent Light Plant.

The Watchung Silk Company has decided to light its plant by electricity by its own plant, a new thirty-horse-power engine having been installed at the mill to be used as an auxiliary to the thirty-horse-power engine already at the mill. It is planned to need 250 electric lights and the engine room will be enlarged considerably. With the two engines, there will be no trouble in the future as one will always be ready in cases the other breaks down.

Barn Social.

Amid the usual festivities appropriate to Hallowe'en, about sixty members of the Young People's Society, of the First Baptist church, met in William Newcorn's barn Saturday night. The loft of the barn was decorated in autumn trimmings, and with jack-o'-lanterns, presented a very picturesque appearance. All sorts of games were played and the attendants at the social had a most enjoyable time. Refreshments were served.

PLAINFIELD JR. O. U. A. M. PLANS TRIP TO NEWARK

THANKSGIVING DAY TO BE SPENT AT ESSEX COUNTY SEAT.

The members of the three Councils, Jr. O. U. A. M., of this city, have decided to go to Newark on Thanksgiving Day and join with the Councils of Essex county in a parade and exercises attendant upon the presentation of a flag to the city of Newark. They will make the trip in three trolley cars, many being accompanied by their wives and friends. The Independent Fife and Drum Corps will also accompany the local members.

The joint committee in charge of the affair is as follows: Franklin Council, William Hartpence and Harry Winn; Somerset Council, George Crevlin, Walter C. Walker and P. H. Latourette; Benevolent Council, A. R. Trancbard, I. N. Wyckoff and Gus. Windham.

Hunt Club's Run.

On Saturday afternoon fifteen members of the Watchung Hunt Club enjoyed an exhilerating chase after the hounds. The meet was near the Crescent Avenue church at 3:30. The drag was laid from a field north of Leland avenue over towards the mountain to Scotch Plains. From there the hounds led them through the field back of Mrs. Warren's Ackerman's place, where they circled and finished on Leland avenue, near the old railroad. There were twenty jumps and were all well taken. Among those who participated in the run were Miss Noe, Miss Weir, Miss Holly, Miss Cruikshank, George S. King, Charles D. Freeman, Eugene Smith and H. Duncan Belkley. The honors at the finish were divided between Miss Cruikshank and Mr. Bellows, whose mounts took the last fences together.

Thistle Club's Social.

The Scotch Thistle Club held its annual Hallowe'en social in Pythian apice hall, Saturday evening. Music, games and an old-fashioned supper made up the programme. The committee in charge consisted of Mr. and Mrs. William Gleak, Mr. and Mrs. William Wilson and Mr. and Mrs. John Calder. President Robert Kenney presided.

PARKER AT NEWARK

Presidential Candidate's First Speech In New Jersey.

"TRUSTS FURNISH CAMPAIGN FUNDS'

"We Favor Healthful Prosperity That All May Share, but Will Fight All Powers That Oppress the Masses."

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 2.—Thousands of enthusiastic New Jerseyites crowded into the Roseville Riding academy here last night to listen to Judge Alton B. Parker deliver his first speech in this state. His audience, which was enormous one, was one of the most enthusiastic that has assembled in New Jersey this campaign.

In no speech previously delivered during the campaign did Judge Parker devote much if any time to scoring the trusts as he did last night. In his speech he directly accused the Republican party of fostering the corporations, naming the beef trust and the coal trust in his charges.

Judge Parker said in part:

"It has given me great pleasure to accept the invitation of your committee. I have come to your city to make in this campaign the first speech which it has been my fortune to deliver outside of my native state.

"Another feature that adds to the pleasure of my coming among you is that of the population of New Jersey more than 200,000 are natives of my own state of New York. I, therefore, not only feel that I come among you to speak to you and through you to the people within your borders and to the people of the country, but my visit has this still closer relation that after all I am only speaking to my neighbors and friends.

"There is no parallel in history for a development like ours. In former times population spread slowly and gradually over the forests and plains of Europe, but it was not composed of people all moved by the same ideas and inspired by a common purpose.

"But there are other directions in which we have departed widely from our early traditions and which now menace our people industrially. We all know that during the last quarter of a century vast changes have taken place in our industrial condition—changes that have tended to do away with competition and have placed the leading industries of the country in the control of a few men. We have been warned against this tendency from time to time by thoughtful and farseeing men, but the warning has not been heeded.

"Because we are opposed to the purchase of the electorate and have felt it our duty to attack those who would corrupt it to the end that their power to plunder the people may continue cry out in these closing hours of the campaign that the business interests would not be safe with a Democratic administration. This cry is false, and those who utter it know it. We favor a healthful prosperity in which all the people may share. We would encourage the accumulation of property and dignify it. Even now I have sponsors of it in that possession under all circumstances. But we would do all we could to take away from the combinations and trusts that power to oppress the people which they now exercise. In other words we would put forth every effort to thwart their illegal methods of collecting tribute. Illegal methods of making money do not constitute legitimate business, although those who resort to them may pose as business men. Our purpose is to deprive so far as possible these illegal combinations of their present illegitimate advantage.

"As I have taken occasion to say before and I deem it my duty to say again the trusts are furnishing the money with which they hope to control the election. I am sorry to be obliged to say it. If it were not true I would be glad to gain the presidency or any other election by it. But it is true, and, that being so, it became my duty to warn the people of it. This I did in an address to the people on the 24th day of October, more than a week ago. What happened? The president summoned Senator Knox to his presence. From that consultation Knox emerged to give an interview which, he said, the president had approved. It was not sparing, to say the least, in its criticism of myself. He did not, however, meet the charge. He did not deny it. He could not, nor could the other party to the consultation.

"On Friday last, in a public address I called attention to the fact that it had not been met and could not be. Promptly it was given out that Mr. Cortelyou would make answer to the charge—Cortelyou, the chairman of the Republican national committee; the one time private secretary to the president, later a member of the cabinet as head of the bureau of commerce and labor, and as such having the right to obtain the secrets of the so called trusts. Secrets which under the statute may only be begged by the president if he so desires. And then it was almost as promptly denied that he had any such purpose.

"The New York Tribune publishes a dispatch from Washington under the head of 'Taft Not Named,' as accused, with a subhead saying that he 'has not extorted campaign contributions from corporations.' It gives what purports to be the statement of a man who withholds his name. He is described in the Tribune article as 'one who knows all that occurred at Mr. Cortelyou's last call on the president.' Whether it was the one or the other is left in doubt. But in any event it is of consequence which one it was. To these grave charges cannot be sons who can interest the people on this subject. If they have anything to say the people would like to have it said promptly.

"Weeks have passed since the New York World, the New York Times and the Brooklyn Eagle made charges covering fully this the most vital question before the people—charges that were reproduced in every part of the country—the former pointing ten questions, beginning with 'How much has the beef trust contributed to Mr. Cortelyou?' There has been plenty of time to answer these questions, but they have not been answered, and they will not be.

"It is for the people now to say whether the trusts of this country shall be permitted to control its national elections in order that their power to levy tribute may be continued."

TREATY WITH FRANCE.

Arbitration Agreement Signed by Hay and Jusserand.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—Secretary Hay and Ambassador Jusserand signed a treaty providing for the settlement by arbitration of any possible disputes between the United States and France. It is drawn on the lines of the Anglo-French arbitration treaty.

The only persons present when the seals were affixed were Secretary Hay, Ambassador Jusserand, John T. Coughlin, acting chief of the diplomatic bureau, and Secretary Hay's faithful messenger, Edward Savoy. The preliminaries occupied very little time.

While the treaty is the briefest ever negotiated here, every line of its short text is full of meaning. Out of deference to the United States senate, to which this treaty will be submitted when it assembles in December, the state department is not able to make public its text. However, it is very much like the treaty which was negotiated Oct. 14, 1903, by Lord Lansdowne for England and Ambassador Cambon of France.

It is the opinion of the officials here that this convention does not in any way threaten the predominance in this hemisphere of the Monroe doctrine.

The treaty is to be followed very soon by one between America and Italy, and there is reason to believe that some progress already has been made in that direction.

Fatal Shooting in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Nov. 2.—Two cases of murder and suicide of similar nature occurred within two hours of each other. Joseph MacSkale, a butcher, fatally shot his wife and then himself. The shooting is said to have been due to business troubles growing out of the fact that the wife in her own right was the proprietor of a meat shop. Shortly afterward William Kuhlman, publisher and president of a mining company, was shot and fatally injured by his former partner, Henry Holtse, who immediately killed himself. Holtse is said to have believed that he had been swindled by Kuhlman.

Douglas on the Tariff.

SALEM, Mass., Nov. 2.—The Democratic candidate for governor, William L. Douglas, discussed the effect of the tariff on the boot and shoe industry at a dinner to Essex county Democrats by the Democratic Club of Massachusetts. He held that the tariff cuts the boot and shoe workers both ways. It decreases their earnings and increases their expenses." He declared that in no way was the tariff a benefit to the boot and shoe worker, but that "the tariff on raw materials probably reduces wages from 5 to 10 per cent."

Louis Stark Killed While Hunting.

NYACK, N. Y., Nov. 2.—Louis Stark, superintendent of the Corbin mills at Park Ridge, was shot and instantly killed by the discharge of a gun at Pearl river, Rockland county. Stark, in company with two other men, went hunting. One of the party was removing a shell from a gun when it exploded, the bullet entering Stark's brain, causing instant death.

English Steel Men at Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 2.—A trip to the Homestead and Duquesne plants of the Carnegie Steel company was the first event of importance in the visit of 50 members of the British Iron and Steel institute to Pittsburg. The party was escorted by some of the prominent officials of the United States Steel corporation and the Carnegie Steel company.

Electric Engine Made Fast Time.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Nov. 2.—The big electrical locomotive being built for the New York Central Railway company by the General Electric and American Locomotive companies was taken out to the Hoffman's four mile race course, equipped with the third rail, and without coaches attached a speed of seventy miles an hour.

Two Quarrymen Killed by Blast.

MILLTOWN, Ind., Nov. 2.—The premature explosion of a blast at the Etchel limestone quarry resulted in the death of Foreman William Engleman and James Miller. Harvey Heath and Neal Miller were seriously and several others severely injured.

Couple Held For Burning Hotel.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., Nov. 2.—James A. Mathews and Mrs. Lora Allen, both of this city, have been placed under arrest charged with burning the Grand hotel at Point Chautauqua two years ago. The hotel was one of the finest on Chautauqua lake.

Prominent Democrat Shot.

WASHINGTON, Kan., Nov. 2.—Dr. N. L. Smith, chairman of the Washington county Democratic central committee, was shot and killed here by S. H. Bonar, a farmer. They quarreled

HALLOWE'EN SOCIAL IN VINCENT CHAPEL

ENJOYABLE AFFAIR UNDER AUSPICES OF EPWORTH LEAGUE.

The members of the Epworth League, of the First M. E. church, held a unique Hallowe'en social in Vincent chapel, last Friday, many novel features being introduced by the social committee which had charge. The chapel was decorated with autumn leaves, corn-stalks and pumpkins, typifying the season of the year. The five senses were used as a means to entertain those present, a separate room being devoted to smelling, hearing, tasting, seeing and feeling. The young people were given slips of paper and as they entered each room they were supposed to remember what they smelled, tasted, felt and saw. In all but one room they were allowed to remain ten minutes, but in the fifth room one minute was the limit.

They afterward returned to the main room where the hearing process was continued. Here all sorts of musical instruments were played behind a curtain and the audience was supposed to guess each one. Afterward the solutions were read off much to the amusement of all. Another feature was the distribution of apples all over the chapel, the young people being allowed as many as they could find. The refreshments served after the programme consisted of pumpkin pies and coffee. The affair was under the direction of the social committee of which Harry Gee was the chairman.

JOLLY FIVE DEFEATED BY THE LOCAL Y. M. C. A.

SUTPHEN DOES SOME GOOD WORK ON THE ALLEYS.

Although handicapped by the absence of one of their players, a local bowling team known as the Jolly Five mes the Y. M. C. A. team Friday and put up an interesting game and some creditable scores.

Sutphen, of the Y. M. C. A. team, made the highest score and the highest average of the evening, 183 and 183 respectively. This gives the Y. M. C. A. score a record of eight games won out of a total of nine played. The following is the score of Friday night's match:

SENATE ELECTED.

P. H. S. Law-Makers Appointed by Vote of the School Friday.

Reorganizing for the coming school year, the Board of Senators at the Plainfield High School were elected Friday by a vote of the school. They will serve in the same capacity as the former organizations, though the duty of tribunal will be upon the shoulders of the teachers, and not the pupils this year.

The Senate will make the laws, by which the self government system of the school shall be run and pupils violating these laws will be brought before the Senate for tribunal punishment.

The election resulted as follows: President of the Senate, Harry G. Thompson; senior senators, Inez Mc Tolles, Chester H. Briggs; junior senators, Gertrude Hunter, Stuart Freeams; sophomore senators, Mabelle Cabberley, William C. Douglass; freshmen senators, Elizabeth Pound, Ralph Taylor; preparatory class, Grace E. Weeks, Gideon Fountain.

Hurt by a Fall.

William Bowman, aged seventy years, of West Front street, fell on West Front street Saturday night, receiving a lacerated wound over the left eye. He was taken to the hospital for treatment, after which he went home.

Congregational Church Celebration.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Congregational church will be appropriately observed at the church during the week commencing Sunday, November 13. An elaborate programme is being prepared.

A Congress of Mothers' Manager.

Mrs. H. G. Phillips, of North Plainfield, was elected a member of the Board of Managers of the New Jersey Congress of Mothers at the fourth annual meeting of the New Jersey Congress, held in Trenton.

FOOTBALL GAMES GALORE

Four Local Teams Participate in Contests.

ALIS IS VICTORIOUS

O. F. C. Defeats Somerville, But Other Plainfield Elevens Lose to Opponents.

With a clear sky and light wind, Saturday was an ideal day for football and all four of the local teams took advantage of it. In the morning the Plainfield High School and the Leal's teams were both defeated, the former being worsted by the Perth Amboy school, and the latter losing the league game with Pingry. Alis demonstrated its superiority to the Dunellen team in a well played game on Crescent Oval, while the Orange Field Club easily worsted Somerville.

A sensational run for the entire length of the field was one of features of the High School-Perth Amboy game on Hope Common in the morning. The run, which scored the first touchdown, was made by Barter, of the visiting team. A touchdown in the second half made the score 11 to 0.

The line up was as follows: P. H. S.—Taylor, fullback; J. Douglass, right half; W. Douglass, left half; Williams, quarterback; Rockwell, right end; Jones, left end; Jahn, right tackle; Bentley, left tackle; Shrager, right guard; Freeman, left guard; Bogart, center. Perth Amboy—Barter, fullback; Boos, right half; W. Hornsby, left half; Dillis, quarterback; Orowell, right end; Afflerbach, left end; Hardiman, right tackle; Hanson, left tackle; J. Hornsby, right guard; Donahue, left guard; Wight, center.

Referee—Johnston; umpire, Best; time of halves, 20 and 15 minutes.

Leal's School met its defeat at Elizabeth, where the Pingry School piled up 17 points to their opponents' 0. All the scoring took place in the first half, and was largely the result of fumbling on the part of the Plainfield school, and good interference by the home team. Long gains through tackle, and equally long runs around the ends were frequent occurrences.

The line up of the local team was as follows: Manning, center; Smith, right guard; Geteries, right tackle; Sutton, right end; Lawrence, left guard; Curtis, left tackle; Glassby, left end; Wilcox, left half; Daniel, right half; Dallas, fullback; Rose, quarterback. Referee, Johnson, Alis won from the Dunellen team by the score of 27 to 0. The game was played on Crescent Oval, and was a comparatively easy victory for the Alis eleven. Their line was stronger, and their backs faster, while they were far superior in interference. The touchdowns were made by the following: W. Moore 2; F. Moore 2; Guier 1; kicked goals, Phillips 2.

In a game which was uninteresting on account of its unevenness, the Orange Field Club, though outweighed, defeated the Somerville team by the score of 44 to 0. Twenty-two points were made in each half. The O. F. C. team had little difficulty in getting the ball down the field, and apparently scored at will.

The local eleven line-up was as follows: Emmons, left end; W. McCullough, left tackle; Banks, left guard; Heliyer, center; J. McCullough, right guard; Todd, right tackle; Longboard, right end; McVoy, quarterback; Smith, left half; Snarwin and Hamilton, right half; Tobin, fullback.

Referee, Phillips; time of halves, 20 and 15 minutes.

Thrown Off Fast Trolley.

While standing on the rear platform of a local trolley car coming toward Plainfield, John Conway, of Plainfield avenue, was thrown off by a fast eastbound trolley, Saturday night at Westfield, while the cars were passing each other on a curve. Dr. Albert Pitts found there was but a slight abrasion over the eyebrows.

Change in Trolley Schedule.

Commencing Friday the motormen and conductors employed by the Public Service Corporation will begin running through between Newark and Dunellen, instead of between Elizabeth and Roselle, as at present. By that time it is expected that the new cash registers in the various through cars will be in operation. By this system the ringing up of a fare is indicated so that every passenger can see it. The system provides for full and half fares and transfers.

ENTIRE REPUBLICAN MUNICIPAL TICKET

James F. Buckle, the Republican candidate, was chosen mayor of Plainfield by a majority of 1,005, which is less than that given Dr. Olin L. Jenkins, two years ago, notwithstanding that the heaviest vote on record was polled yesterday. The strength of A. H. Atterbury, the Democratic nominee, was surprising, the entire vote cast for him being 1,848. Mr. Buckle received 2,853 votes. He was justly apt, running behind his ticket in every district of the four wards. Two years ago, Dr. Jenkins was given a majority of 1,196 over J. P. Homan.

J. F. Buckle.

The magnificent majority of 1,616 was given City Judge William N. Runyon, Republican candidate for re-election, out of a total vote of 2,-701, but his opponent, John P. Dynes, ran well, nevertheless, polling 1,055. Three years ago when elected Mr. Runyon received 2,008 votes. He is next to high man on the municipal ticket, running ahead of the mayoralty candidate by 561. In his own ward, the Second, he ran away ahead of the Presidential election and in the First district of the Third ward he did likewise. This will be his third term as city judge.

Captain J. Frank Hubbard, who has been a member of the Board of Freeholders for over a quarter of a century, was again returned to that body, receiving 2,701 votes, which was 1,451 more than the sole Democratic candidate, Stephen H. Schlelf, who polled 1,250. William A. Westphal, the other Republican candidate, obtained a majority of 1,194 over Mr. Schlelf, though he was cut heavily, principally in the First districts of the First and Fourth wards. As there are two vacancies, both Hubbard and Westphal are elected to succeed themselves.

Dr. John B. Probasco, renominated by the Republicans for school trustee, received a majority of 1,641 over Rev. Erskine M. Rodman, rector-emeritus of Grace church, who was the Democratic nominee. Dr. Probasco polled the greatest majority on the municipal ticket. One year ago, E. M. Cave defeated Rev. Mr. Rodman for the same office by 1,676.

ROOSEVELT SWEEPS COUNTRY

Theodore Roosevelt is triumphant.

Alton B. Parker is defeated worse than William Jennings Bryan was four years ago.

In the electoral college, the Republican nominee will receive 336 votes of the total 476. Grant in 1872, received 292 of the total 366.

The stupendous popular majority of 765,000 is conceded him. It eclipses that of William McKinley in 1900 and is the greatest ever given a Presidential candidate.

Every State north of the Mason and Dixon line went solidly for the brilliant and strenuous nominee and every so-called doubtful State in the Union as well as the entire West gave him splendid majorities.

His success at the polls astounds his most confident supporter and proves conclusively that the people most heartily approve not only the platform of his party but the record he has made as the successor of the lamented McKinley.

His own State, New York, went Republican by 177,000 majority, and Higgins has been carried into the gubernatorial chair by 70,000 on the Roosevelt tidal wave. Connecticut, New Jersey, Indiana, Delaware, West Virginia and Wisconsin gave him rousing pluralities.

This is the electoral vote:

Theodore Roosevelt.

Republican—California, 10; Colorado, 5; Connecticut, 7; Delaware, 3; Illinois, 27; Indiana, 15; Idaho, 3; Iowa, 13; Kansas, 10; Maine, 6; Maryland, 8; Massachusetts, 15; Michigan, 14; Minnesota, 11; Montana, 3; Nebraska, 8; Nevada, 3; New Hampshire, 4; New Jersey, 12; New York, 39; North Dakota, 4; Ohio, 23; Oregon, 4; Pennsylvania, 34; Rhode Island, 4; South Dakota, 4; Utah, 3; Vermont, 4; West Virginia, 7; Washington, 5; Wisconsin, 13; Wyoming, 3. Total, 336.

Democratic—Alabama, 11; Arkansas, 9; Florida, 5; Georgia, 13; Kentucky, 13; Louisiana, 9; Mississippi, 10; Missouri, 18; North Carolina, 12; South Carolina, 9; Tennessee, 12; Texas, 18; Virginia, 12. Total, 151.

TALE OF THE LANDSLIDE.

ROOSEVELT ELECTED PRESIDENT BY A TREMENDOUS MAJORITY.

STOKES CHOSEN GOVERNOR OF NEW JERSEY BY A MAJORITY OF 55,000.

FOWLER RE-ELECTED CONGRESSMAN OF THE FIFTH DISTRICT BY A SURPRISINGLY BIG VOTE.

BUCKLE WINS THE MAYORALTY OF PLAINFIELD BY A DECIDEDLY DECREASED MAJORITY.

NORTH PLAINFIELD REPUBLICANS IN REVOLT AGAINST COUNTY LEADERS FAIL TO DEFEAT THEIR PARTY TICKET IN SOMERSET.

STOKES, BY 55,000 MAJORITY

Edward C. Stokes.

Passing the expectations of the Republicans themselves, New Jersey gave as large a majority to Roosevelt yesterday as it did to McKinley four years ago when the Ohioan received 56,899 more votes than W. J. Bryan. Roosevelt's approximate majority is 55,000, but it may climb higher.

Edward C. Stokes, the Republican gubernatorial candidate, is likely to have a majority ranging from 40,000 to 45,000, which is almost double that banked on by those who managed his campaign.

Only four counties in the entire State were carried by Parker. These were Hudson, Hunterdon, Sussex and Warren.

Nine out of ten of the Republican Congressional nominees have been elected, among these being Ira W. Wood, in the Fourth district, and Charles N. Fowler, in the Fifth district, all the Republican candidates for the State Senate are triumphant.

The State Senate will be fourteen Republicans and seven Democrats and the House will be forty-five Republicans to fifteen Democrats. John Kean will be re-elected United States Senator by the Legislature.

Franklin Murphy carried the State two years ago by only 14,130 majority, Hudson, Hunterdon, Sussex and Warren counties only returned Democratic pluralities. Mr. Stokes' popularity and the Roosevelt tidal wave have nearly tripled this majority.

These are the Republican majorities for Roosevelt: Atlantic, 4,000; Bergen, 1,500; Burlington, 3,200; Camden, 6,-500; Cape May, 1,000; Cumberland, 2,500; Essex, 30,000; Gloucester, 1,500; Mercer, 4,000; Middlesex, 3,000; Monmouth, 1,000; Morris, 3,000; Ocean, 2,000; Passaic, 7,000; Salem, 100; Somerset, 800; Union, 12,000.

Hudson gives 8,000 majority to Parker and 12,000 to Stokes; Hunterdon gives 4,000 to Parker and 12,000 be point to the First, for the Second, his own ward, gave him a good complimentary return, while the Third ward showed due appreciation of him. The same is true of the Fourth ward. Two years ago Fowler defeated Finnagan here by 1,196 votes.

Tax Collector Frank H. Smith, the Republican nominee for registrar of deeds, was well remembered by his fellow townsmen and like Judge Runyon he proved to be a strong card politically. In some of the districts he came out ahead of the Presidential electors and should be happy over the compliment paid him at the election. He received a bigger majority in the city than did Judge Runyon. Mr. Smith defeated the Democratic candidate, Mr. Higgins, here, by 1,072 and only fell seventeen votes below Roosevelt.

Roosevelt's majority here was almost double that of Congressman Fowler. The Republican Presidential candidate receive 1,687 more votes than Mr. Parker. Four years ago Mr. McKinley received a majority of 1,-606, just eighty-two less than that of Mr. Roosevelt.

R. O. Stokes, the Republican gubernatorial candidate, ran away ahead of the majority given Franklin Murphy three years ago, while his opponent, C. O. Black, polled about the strength as Seymour did when running against Murphy. Mr. Stokes' majority here was 15,88.

The greatest majority for any candidate other than Presidents cast in Plainfield was that of James C. Calvert, the Republican nominee for county clerk, who got 1,979 more votes than his opponent. The candidates for Assembly, Coyne, Hankes and Tillman, received solid support from the Republicans throughout.

FOWLER'S GREAT VICTORY

Charles N. Fowler, Republican candidate for re-election in the Fourth Congressional district, won a signal victory over James R. Martine, of this city, when just as a stubborn fight. Mr. Fowler swept Union and Morris counties and was beaten in Warren by a surprisingly low majority.

Mr. Martine gave up the fight early last night, wiring his congratulations to his opponent. Union county gave Mr. Fowler approximately 2,200 majority and Morris added about 2,300 more. Warren netted Martine only about 600, thus giving Mr. Fowler a total majority of about 4,800.

Two years ago, Fowler got 1,240 majority against Flanagan in Morris and 1,182 in Union, while his opponent carried Warren by 1,400.

UNION COUNTY IS SOLIDLY REPUBLICAN AGAIN

Edward C. Coyne.

Union County gave Roosevelt 5,251 majority.

Congressman Fowler defeated James R. Martine by 3,292.

Stokes won by 3,901.

The detailed vote will be found in a table published on this page.

Miss Hegeman's Debut.

Invitations have been issued by Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin A. Hegeman for the debut of their daughter, Miss Virginia Hegeman. The affair, which will be an elaborate one, will be held at the Park Club on Wednesday night, November 23.

John Dunham, of this city, has been visiting his daughter, Miss Mabel Dunham, of Lower Valley, N. J.

WOOD SUCCEEDS LANNING

Ira W. Wood, of Trenton, defeated Robert L. Stevens, of Bernardsville, in the Fourth district for Congress, carrying Mercer and Somerset counties by big majorities and losing Hunterdon by a small majority. His entire majority is estimated at approximately 2,000.

Ira W. Wood.

NORTH PLAINFIELD'S FIGHT

In North Plainfield, the Republican administration forces carried out their threat to knife the county candidates as a rebuke to the Somerset county leaders. As a result Irving Hoagland, the Assembly candidate, only received a majority of seventy-three in the two districts while Edward Cooper, the chicrenty nominee, got a bare majority of thirty-nine.

A solid vote was cast by the Republicans for all other nominees. Rose-

DEMOCRATS GET NOTHING IN SOMERSET COUNTY

Returns from the voting precincts in Somerset county are coming in very slowly and several districts are yet to be heard from. Only majorities for the winners in each poll have been received so far, except where the voting machines were used, and these all indicate that the entire Republican ticket is elected in the county by the highest pluralities in years. Not until Friday when the clerks of the various districts file their results with the County Clerk will it be possible to tell the majorities of each winning candidate, but a conservative estimate with a view of what have been heard from gives Roosevelt and Fairbanks 2,200 majority; Wood, 700; Stokes, 1,000; Hoagland, 600; Cooper, 400.

The majorities in Bedminster township were Parker, 137; Stevens, 140; Black, 142; Beakman, 150; Ross, 127.

Bernards gave these: Parker, 8; Stevens, 169; Black, 47; Beakman, 79; Ross, 83.

Branchburg's were: Roosevelt, 60; Wood, 51; Stokes, 55; Hoagland, 17; Cooper, 46.

Bridgewater gives Roosevelt 566; Wood, 496; Stokes, 379; Hoagland, 416; Cooper, 311.

Bound Brook borough majorities were: Roosevelt, 111; Wood, 89; Stokes, 84; Hoagland, 100; Cooper, 74.

Franklin (one district): Roosevelt, 109; Wood, 91; Stokes, 89; Hoagland, 111; Cooper, 85.

Hillsborough: Roosevelt, 127; Wood, 110; Stokes, 119; Hoagland, 141; Cooper, 107.

Millstone borough: Roosevelt, 97; Wood, 11; Stokes, 13; Cooper, 8; Hoagland, 13.

Montgomery: Roosevelt, 88; Wood, 84; Stokes, 71; Hoagland, 63; Cooper, 83.

Rocky Hill borough: Parker, 3; Stevens, 13; Black, 10; Beakman, 14; Ross, 12.

North Plainfield township: Roosevelt, 32; Wood, 36; Stokes, 28; Hoagland, 30; Cooper, 36.

Warren: Parker, 57; Stevens, 66; Black, 66; Beakman, 59; Cooper, 9.

North Plainfield borough: Roosevelt, 423; Stokes, 377; Wood, 410; Hoagland, 73; Cooper, 39.

Cycling In France

Pleasant Autumn Tour In Normandy

IN northwestern France autumn lingers late and lovingly. The gulf stream laps its coasts with mellow warmth and the harshness of coming winter is not felt as in the northern United States. The roads of Normandy and Brittany are perfect. The smell of apples and cider is in the air. The common drink of farm folk in the two provinces is a kind of hard cider, or apple wine, instead of the cheap grape wine used elsewhere in France. The northern drink, however, is warranted to "make the drunk come" equally with the southern, if enough of it be consumed.

For active women who love outdoor life no enjoyment can be conceived greater than is to be had from a bicycle tour through this northwestern France. The ladies may be accompanied by men friends or relatives or not. If they have common sense and know enough of the French language to make their way about, a party of two or more ladies can cycle through the country quite comfortably. The heavier luggage may be sent by train to some terminal point, but a compact parcel containing overnight necessaries can easily be carried awheel.

All Americans entering France go first to Paris. It is safe to say, then, that the point of departure for any place in the French republic is Paris. The cycling tourist should go by train from Paris to Rouen, there to begin the actual trip awheel. To my mind, Normandy and Brittany present, if possible, more of historic interest to a traveler than even Paris itself. At Rouen ended the tragedy of Joan of Arc. In the market place you stand upon the actual spot where the great woman soldier of the cross was burned at the stake. Very peaceful today is the place of the tragedy. Pleasant voiced, polite women offer for sale fat poultry, dainty French vegetables or quaint curios and souvenirs of Normandy, not noisily, but quietly and gently, as though even now, nearly 500 years after this crime of the centuries, clack and clatter would be unseemly there. And indeed they would be.

Our cyclers will want to linger overnight in Rouen. It is one of the cheapest and best places in France for the tourist. All through Normandy and Brittany, too, the hotels at the country towns are excellent and extremely reasonable in price. The food is of the best—crisp, tender vegetables, eggs new laid, golden butter with the flavor of the unsurpassed fields of Normandy upon it, rich milk fresh from the also unsurpassed Norman dairy cows. And then the cooking!

From Rouen let our cyclers strike across the pretty winding Seine westward toward Lisieux. And now behold the joy of working one's way over roads so perfectly graded and kept that to the cyclers they are perhaps the best in the world. Certainly in civilization there are no nobler highways than those of Normandy and Brittany. In fact Normandy you glide past fair, fertile fields over roads so level that with a coaster brake machine frequently you can travel a considerable distance without pedaling at all. In the fields are beautiful cows tethered, filling themselves with fat Normandy pasture grass. Cattle never run at large on Norman farms. The cow is fastened to a rope some twelve feet long. She eats all around it in a circle; then she is taken to another place where the process is repeated. It is sometimes always performed by old women who wear great white caps and knit long blue stockings. They done and knit and watch the cows alternately. The reason for being of the magnificent roads in this part of France is that they are military highways, constructed by the government for the purpose of rapidly mobilizing troops. Even in Brittany, where the land is less level, the grades have been made so easy that the cycler climbs them without much hard pedaling.

People in wooden sabots patter over the stone paved streets of the quaint villages. Southward and westward from Lisieux is the old town of Falaise, where A. D. 1027, was born that William the Conqueror who, Jerseyites say, annexed England to the Isle of Jersey.

FASHIONABLE FRILLS.

How Women's Sleeves Will Disport Themselves During the Winter.

That the sleeve proclaims the garment is one of the unwritten laws of is mode, for no point in a gown's makeup will "give it away" more completely than a last year's sleeve, with its excessive fullness below the elbow.

The sleeve of the up to date corsage will have the fullness pushed up above the elbow, but in the matter of jackets there will be a greater diversity, and it is on the coats that the leg of mutton sleeve will flourish most.

The young girl's gown pictured is of blue broadcloth. The little jacket is trimmed with black braid applied in bretelles over the shoulders and looped in a pretty fashion on each side of a tiny vest of white velvet dotted with pin spots of black. The chemisette is of cream linon banded with heavy lace, which forms the standing collar. A draped girdle of black satin finishes the waist. The skirt is box plaited on each side of the front width and laid in side plaits around the hips and back. A waved trimming of braid is about the skirt, and the box plaits are held in place by passementerie pieces.

FASHIONS IN FURS.

Correct Things In Pelts—Moleskin Still a Favorite.

As is usual with capricious Dame Fashion, she is only constant to a constant change, and as we have for the last few seasons seen fit to adopt furs with long hairs the coming last gone forth for this year that the pelts with a flat pile are to reign.

Moleskin will be in evidence again, and broadtail and caracal, together with pony skin, will share honors on the furrier's list. Another fur, a newcomer, by the way—is a dyed red sable known as kolinsky. Entire coats are made of this pelt, and it is to be used as a trimming on many of the brown cloth costumes.

Mink is one of the standard furs that are always exclusive when of the finest quality. In the illustration the smart stole, with muff to match, is of mink and is something entirely new in stoles. It is arranged with two wide ends in front, each end finished with three full tails. Above these ends there is a cravat also carried out in the same fur and finished with six smaller tails. The shape of the muff is one of the season's novelties. The fur is drawn up on wide ribbon strings so that it may be carried in the hand as a bag or worn in a flat muff shape. This handsome muff is finished with a fringe of tails. The hat which is pictured with the mink set is made of golden brown velvet in a novel and becoming shape, turned up very sharply at the back and trimmed both there and under the brim in front with a wide band of brown chenille embroidery caught with brown silk cabochons. The turned up brim is fastened with a new art ornament in leaf colorings, and at the back, dropping over the hair, is a cluster of shaded brown ostrich tips.

WHAT TO WEAR.

Some Colors Which Are New to the World of Fashion.

Ashes of roses in an up to date shade of this old fashioned color will take the place in popularity held last year by mole. This ashes of roses is a sad pinkish mauve in many gradations of tone and is particularly fetching in mousseline velours.

Coral pink is another exquisite color, and a charming cloth gown is made in this hue of satin cloth. The skirt is three tiered, with a plain front panel. Each tier is trimmed with a narrow fold of the material, below which are "vanishing plaits" tailor pressed instead of stitched down. The little straight bolero has its fullness worked off in tiny horizontal plaits fastened loosely down the front with small shell buttons and further adorned with wide castellations of cloth edged with gold braid and piped with dull green silk. The same tabs or castellations appear on the wide loose sleeves, under which are gathered undersleeves finished with pointed cuffs.

Most attractive is the little hat illustrated. It is of blue corded panne velvet caught at the side and trimmed about the crown with white ostrich feathers.

THE BLOUSE BEAUTIFUL.

Colored Wash Shirt Waists Now Thought Smarter Than White.

The dainty, fresh and natty blouse shirt waist that makes for neatness, smartness and variety shows no sign of declining in popularity when worn with the tailored coat and skirt gown.

There are several new models, among them the surplice and sailor waists, but the most exclusive houses that handle these dainty affairs stick to the old designs in wash materials, those with stitched plaits as far as the bust line having the long shouldered effect and a wide box plait down the front, with mannish small sleeves.

The new materials for waists are charming, and the colored fabrics are this year considered smarter than the ubiquitous white stuffs that have had such a vogue.

The favored materials are cotton hopsack, homespun, cheviot and the new striped, wash and French flannels, showing all the browns, mauves, copper and reddish tints of the fashionable color scheme.

For more ceremonious occasions waists of filet and brussels net will be very much worn, trimmed in different designs with a half inch soft ribbon of the same color as the waist material and matching the skirt worn with them.

A dainty separate bodice for evening is built of white chiffon, with a tucked off the shoulder yoke, about which is a puffing of wide Dresden ribbon, then a ruffle of oriental lace, again a ruffle of Dresden ribbon, and so on, alternately filling in the space to the girdle. The sleeves are corped at two rather tight, full puffs of chiffon, between which is a puffing of Dresden ribbon. The elbow sleeves finish in a fall of oriental lace.

A stunning waist is pictured here of brown silk, with the bretelle-like pieces of copper glinted satin shirred across on cords. The double breast effect finishes at the neck with revers inset with Russian lace. The chemisette and collar are of pale yellow mousseline. Originality shines forth in the sleeves, which are leg of mutton at the top, rather directoire in the middle and decidedly odd at the bottom, with their deep tight cuffs inset with a V of corded satin. Buttons and belt buckle are of enameled bronze.

The Domestic Woman

Has She Really Gone Out of Fashion?

"IN my mother's time women would mend their husbands' socks over and over again, and now I'm blessed if a woman wants to mend the same hole twice!" grumbled the bachelor.

"I beg your pardon," remarked the up to date woman. "Woman is as domestic as ever. She is only a revised edition of domesticity. Times have changed. It is not necessary for a woman to perform a multitude of heavy tasks that formerly kept her drudging and gave her no time to cultivate her mind. Woman does not have to spin or knit or make soap. All these things are now so cheap that it would be no saving for her to undertake them. You speak of darning the same hole twice, and yet do you realize how much cheaper stockings are than they used to be and how it is really poor economy to waste time mending a sock that can be renewed for so little? No wonder the old fashioned women were slow and their intellectual improvement was slight. They had to be meek and conventional in thought and deed, for their laborious round of homely duties left them no opportunity for anything else."

"And a mighty good thing too! Look at the new woman movement and see what an unnatural set of freaks it gave us."

"I am glad you are using the past tense; it shows you are observant, for, my friend, the 'new,' the very 'new,' the mannish woman is dead. You see a few stalking around with cropped hair and outlandish clothes, blunt of speech and of manner, but for the greater part they belong to the past generation, not to the rising one. Their habitat is the region of women's clubs, a region peculiar to itself and not of any importance whatever to the rest of the feminine world, which means nearly all of it. I picked up the other day a magazine which belonged to the time when the new woman and the bicycle alike were rampant. Pictures of new women decorated every page. There were photographs of women cyclists in bloomers and stiffly starched shirt waists. There was even a picture of a woman blacksmith! The aggressive new woman tone was rampant. Now, look around you today. Where are the bloomers and the bicycles and the rampageous women?"

"I must admit they have toned down a bit, but they still want to go in offices and shops instead of staying at home. I tell you the womestic woman is dead."

"Pish is not; she is more admired than ever. Home and marriage and the bringing up of children have all been raised to a plane never before attained. Women, thanks to their brains and monetary independence, are able to marry for love and not for the sake of getting a home. They do not, it is true, perform manual tasks—machinery can do that cheaper and better—but they use their brains; they are companions to the men they marry. When necessary they help swell the income and keep the home in comfort by the exercise of their talents. New York this winter flocks to see a celebrated singer, the mother of seven children, and she is such a good mother that every night she returns home for her home and her adored children, and her sweet, Rindly, motherly nature shines in her very smile, and her audiences love her for it.

"I know of a young couple, the husband a struggling young lawyer, and the wife—I suppose you would call her a new woman—works all day as clerk in another law office. In the old days I suppose she would have stayed at home and been sweetly domestic. Nowadays she does better—she doubles his tiny income. They have a dainty little home, in which she takes great pride, and every evening while Mr. Young Lawyer sits at the desk porting over his books and papers his wife, industrious little wife takes her needlework and sits in the shadow of the lamp while she watches him from time to time. So they both work together and help each other. Don't you call that woman domestic even if she is new woman enough to work in an office?"

IN THE STREET CAR.

Just a Few Remarks For Women In General.

"Trust a woman to show her little idiosyncrasies in a street car," observed the critical man. "I have compiled just a few remarks, and if it's the same to you I wish you would put them in print so that women may profit thereby."

Here they are! Perhaps some enterprising woman will feel moved to retaliate with a few don'ts for men passengers. Heaven knows they need them!

However—

Don't read a man's paper over his shoulder. If you are trying to scrape an acquaintance it is a good way; otherwise it is unpardonable. Newspapers are cheap; some of them only cost a cent. Save your eyes and the man's temper. Besides, he may not always wait for you to turn over the page.

DON'T READ HIS PAPER!

Don't fish for coppers—and drop them all over the car. If you want to treat your friend treat her to something worth while, and don't struggle for her gratitude over a five cent fare.

Advertisements are sometimes worth reading, but never if they make you squint.

In going around a curve it is better to embrace a strap than a man.

Lower your voice.

Two inches of shoe is enough to show.

The woman who stands her umbrella in a slanting position should pay damages to those that break their necks over it.

There are two ways of sitting, and the proper thing to do when you are offered one-third of a seat is to sit one-third.

Little Johnny's shoe may be cunning, but not in another person's lap.

Remember that other people are even more interested in your conversation than you are.

Five minutes is enough to spend in taking in the gown of the woman opposite.

Don't blame the conductor if you pass your street while you are immersed in samples.

Don't pretend to feel faint while standing in front of the brute who is reading his evening paper. You may have the mortification of not succeeding in arousing his pity. Trip over his feet a few times.

The conductor has eyes, and your umbrella has points.

By all means wait until the last moment to get your transfer.

Use a plug if necessary to keep little Susan from asking questions.

On the last day don't be surprised to find a few of the conductor's swear words on your record.

R. DE LA BAUME.

SOME SEASONABLE HATS.

Late Autumn Creations In All the Newest Tints.

It would be very difficult for any one to make a sweeping statement saying that this or that shape is the style in hats, for there are almost as many different shapes as there are hats.

Ostrich tips and long plumes are among the most fashionable and desirable of all trimmings, and the black ones have the very excellent quality of toning down the showy orange and onion yellows in vogue. It seems that the primary colors are preferred to tints this season, and the newest greens, yellows and reds are in full evidence, while the violet ray is seen everywhere.

There are black velvet hats, shirred and handsome in themselves, made hideous by emerald green coq plumes hanging down the back and sides. There are other black creations with astonishing paradise sweeps that put the military helmets to shame for size. A favorite way of putting the black plumes on hats is to have several of them, all curled in different ways, but all seeming to start from under one big black quill.

The newest shapes in white, soft and silky felt, as a rule, are scantily trimmed, but what is put on is exceptionally fine. A metallic band of gold or silver wrought with some dark colored silk in conventional pattern is put around the crown like the band on a man's hat, and the brim is lifted at the left side with a draped piece of velvet to match the color in the hat and a little more of the band twisted in. This makes a pretty hat, yet a dressy one, according to the rest of the costume, and, too, according to the way it is tilted on the head.

Hats made of braided felt, felt velvet or chenille are much in evidence, and many very pleasing combinations are the results of this admixture of materials. Brown and tawn, brown and cream and other shades of brown or other colors are seen braided in rather loose braids and then sewed to make the hat. Such hats are scantily trimmed, and most often with entirely self trimming or else a drapery of silk or rough wool bordered with a row of the braid. These are generally regarded as runabout hats, but many wear them to match costumes. Brown in all shades is so very fashionable that we find many hats wrought out all in browns. One really artistic toque shaped hat was of brown velvet with a large flat crown. The brim was of shirred velvet of another shade and stood up all around. Twined over and around the brim was a vine of velvet flowers, burs and foliage all in brown. One is surprised at the number of shades there are in this favorite color this season. They begin in cream and end in seal. The favorites, however, seem to be a rich, warm, woody brown and the brown which is now called onion from some fancied resemblance to the skin of that vegetable.

A very pretty style of hat for a young woman is shown in drab felt, with a ruching of velvet to match along the middle of the brim. The crown is of the sugar loaf variety, with figurings wrought upon it by Persian braid. Under the brim at the left side is a pretty drapery of the velvet, with lace falls at the back. Another curiously devised hat is made of dark brown velvet, with rows of gilt braid around the crown. The brim is higher in the back than in front and joins in front with an arrangement of the braid. A scroll design of the braid is put along the middle of the brim and a row of gilt braid at the upper and lower edges. A small flat drapery is set on either side of the joining at the front.

The fur nap beavers are among the best of all the hats for women. They are in all the newest shapes, which include the large cavalier, directoire and Louis XVI. forms. These make extremely picturesque hats, especially with the enormous mass of plumage. Champagne color is seen in these soft fur nap beavers, and when these are given a draping of white and a long and sweeping plume of the paradise bird it would seem that life could offer little better. Three plumes are sometimes set on a hat in the old Prince of Wales feather effect—that there is no style that was ever in vogue for hats that has not some little reminiscent feature now. Even the dainty little poke bonnets with the big bow to tie under the chin are shown.

The fur nap beavers are offered in black, navy, brown, castor, slate, red and green, and also with crowns of one color and brims of another. In white there are camel's hair, fur, nap and smooth finished beaver and silk finished beavers, so the variety is almost limitless.

OLIVE HARPER.

The New Woman

The Old Woman Vanishes; the New Arrives

I HAVE been to the St. Louis exposition. There I saw signs that woman is entering more and more into the conduct of affairs. I attended the Buffalo exposition, too, and I find women have more to do in a business capacity at St. Louis than they had at Buffalo. At the best of the numerous shows on the Pike women were employed as ticket sellers in most cases. The evil little adids shows, those where a dime admission was charged and no proper return made for the money, were, naturally, conducted by men. In the Fish, Game and Forestry building an eloquent tongued young lady had charge of the Oklahoma exhibit. Bless us, how she could talk! She knew her business to the last dot and exploited the glories of her territory in a way that a mining promoter would have envied. In her corner were also exhibits from a coffee, chocolate and India rubber plantation in Mexico, and these, too, were in charge of the wide awake girl. She was well educated and thoroughly refined and ladylike in her manner and full of enthusiasm over her subject as she told us how the cacao tree grows and how much profit there is in cultivating it. I, who had seen cacao, or chocolate, groves in the Philippines, found that she knew what she was talking about and told the truth. Here is a new occupation for woman—that of promoter. If responsible companies with really good mining or agricultural properties wish to raise money to develop these the services of a woman like the Oklahoma young lady exploitant and lecturer would be invaluable to them. Of women lecturers, including Mme. Mountford, with her wonderful talks on Jerusalem, there were several. Then, too, there was a woman jurer in every department in that exposition. This came about because the lady board of managers, which had the appointing of one juror in each department, loyally selected a woman in every case.

The other evening a fat woman walked ahead of me—no, I'll take it back; she did not walk—she wabbled ahead of me. The reason of the wabbling was that she wore shoes three sizes too small for her, with peglike heels three inches high. Upon the peg heels her vast body swayed from side to side, painfully and awkwardly, with the hobbling gait of a crippled animal. She was a crippled animal. Here is a psychological query that I have never been able to answer: Why do very fat women wear those awful high peg heels that make them walk like a hobbled ox?

In Eleanor Kirk's Idea is an editorial, beginning, "Put your mind on it." The end of the editorial is "Put your mind on it." Just so. Whatever worthy heart's desire is yours put your mind on it and keep it there day after day, month after month, year after year, if necessary, and the heart's desire will be achieved if you use the means that will come your way to attain it.

In the department of machinery at the St. Louis fair the woman juror was Miss Edith J. Griswold, the patent expert and attorney of New York city. In the electricity department the woman juror was Miss Hope Loughborough of Cleveland.

* * *

Miss Caroline Wetherell is winning an enviable reputation as a writer on natural history topics, especially for young people. Miss Wetherell walks by the seashore and gathers seaweed and shells. She goes into the fields and woods and watches the butterflies, birds, squirrels and others of nature's live things. Thus she learns many a lesson not down in the books. These living lessons are given in all their freshness to her readers. Next to the accurate scientific knowledge imparted, the best of the young lady's work is the teaching, running like a thread through her writing, of kindness and gentleness to all dumb life.

* * *

I have seen recently an item with the heading "Women Play Japan and Russia." It was an account of a woman's club meeting, in which women abused both Japan and Russia "up hill and down dale" for fighting. That's it! Just so! Will women ever learn enough to cease shooting off violent and intemperate opinions, particularly concerning topics whereof they have little or no real knowledge? Somehow it seems as though women must always be "flaying" somebody or something and then they grow the more effectually the hapless object of their ignorant wrath is "skun."

* * *

Mrs. Jeannette Robinson Murphy, a student of negro music and character, has found that negro women in the south are quite sure to know their own birthdays and therefore do not grow old so rapidly as white women. It is certain that negroes do not age as soon as white people do.

* * *

This world has no use for a woman "quitter" any more than for one of the other sex.

* * *

Some persons are so stupidly and self satisfiedly "good" that they exasperate you. Their very "goodness" is a bar to their ever learning anything.

WASHINGTON LETTER

NEW AND OLD POLITICAL CAMPAIGN METHODS COMPARED.

GROWTH OF PRESS BUREAU

Days of Spellbinder Not Yet Passed—Magnificent Driveway Proposed to Mount Vernon—Creation of Drinking Water.

Washington.—One thing seems to have been developed in this year's campaign, and that is a change in electioneering methods. This change has been gradual during the past dozen years, but in this national campaign it is more marked than ever before. The old brass band, torchlight processions, and barbecue style of campaign is not followed, as it formerly was, but the excitement and hurrah of such demonstrations are reserved for the last few weeks or days before the election. Twenty or 30 years ago, and even before the war, there were months of campaign excitement, and political gatherings were held throughout the country, where issues were fought over, presented and refuted, and the voters talked to for the purpose of conversion.

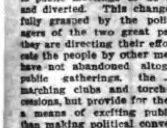
To Excite Public Interest.

So far this year it has been demonstrated that the voters of the country take little interest in the public addresses, and in the old-style "joint debates," by means of which political doctrines were formerly disseminated. It has been demonstrated that these only attended public meetings who are interested in sending noted men, and hearing the oratory of noted speakers. They do not attend to hear arguments, and care little for what is presented on either side. They go to public meetings to be entertained and diverted. This change has been fully grasped by the political managers of the two great parties, and they are directing their efforts to educate the people by other means. They have not abandoned altogether the public gatherings, the barbecues, marching clubs and torchlight processions, but provide for them more as a means of exciting public interest than making political converts.

Norman Babcock, of the republican congressional campaign committee, declares that the most important work it now done on election day, not illegally, in the way of bribery or any fraudulent work, but by persistent personal efforts in getting out individual voters.

The Political Press Bureau.

Political managers of the republican and democratic headquarters believe that the highwater mark in campaign expenditures has been passed. Neither party expects to spend so much this year as in former national campaigns. This is due largely to the change in the public mind regarding politics. It is not necessary to spend so much money in the spectacular as formerly, and while a corps of spell-binders will traverse the country from one end to the other, there will not be so much dependence placed upon their efforts.

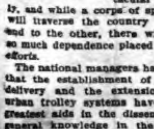


The New Political Educator.

The national managers have learned that the establishment of rural free delivery and the extension of suburban mail routes have been the greatest aids in the dissemination of general knowledge in the past ten years. They have aided in the political education of the country by giving the rural population daily mails, and of this the national committees have taken due advantage. They send out daily brief pamphlets on political topics, which the farmer and workmen can read in a few minutes. They have a corps of newspaper writers at headquarters who furnish to the smaller daily newspapers editorial matter and news letters of a political character, so that the claims of each party are constantly before the eyes of the public. The public is a closer reader than ever before, and for this reason has almost made up its mind on political questions before the campaign orators swing around the circle with their speeches.

Spellbinder Still with Us.

It is too much to say that the day of spellbinders has passed, especially when the array of oratorical talent, most of which is produced from official circles in Washington, is considered. Congress furnishes the largest corps from which to choose its speakers are drawn. The cabinet circle contributes a number, and other branches of the government furnish some eloquent speaking. The democrats draw from congress, as well as do the republicans, and rely to a great extent upon ex-office holders for their debaters. Wherever these men go, whose names are household words on account of their prominence in public life, there is sure to be an interested audience to listen to them. Speaker Cannon, of the house, draws immense throngs, as does Bourke Cockran, easily the first orator on the democratic side of the house. Senator Fairbanks, vice presidential candidate on the republican ticket, and ex-Senator Davis, the vice presidential candidate on the democratic ticket, are always sure of a hearing.



The Spellbinder Puts His Trust.

When it comes down to a heart-to-heart talk with the horny-handed sons of the soil, Secretary of Agriculture Wilson takes the prize. His value as a campaigner is so well established that he was one of the very first to receive assignment for work in the field. The old gentleman is a Scotchman by birth, and he has never lost the burr and the tongue. He speaks with a broad accent, and is possessed of plenty of quaint Scotch humor, that is keenly appreciated by the people. He draws his illustrations from nature, and when he gets right to an earnest talk with his audience he comes nearer snatching votes than any other speaker on the political platform. He is a good mixer, and when he goes around among his audience after the speaking is over, shakes hands with the farmers, and asks about their crops, at the same time giving some shrewd suggestions regarding the same, he just about captures the rural crowd.

National Avenue to Mount Vernon.

In the recent agitation for improving and beautifying Washington and surrounding historic territory, the attention of many patriotic organizations has been called to a scheme for the construction of a national avenue connecting the Arlington cemetery with Mount Vernon, the home of the immortal Washington. This idea was first suggested by Gen. Corbin two or three years ago, and has been discussed to some extent since. It is just 12 miles from the boundary lines of Arlington national cemetery to the old Mount Vernon mansion. The way lies along an elevated ridge, bordering the Potomac, from which a beautiful view of that noble river and surrounding country can be had. The idea as it has been discussed in the states now representing the 13 original colonies each to take in charge one mile of this avenue, build the road, and suitably beautify it.

Proposed Road to Mt. Vernon.

Such a project, if carried to completion, would mean a perfect and handsome driveway from Washington City to Mount Vernon, and it is believed would become exceedingly popular in addition to its historic significance. There is now a splendid road from the limits of the city to Arlington cemetery, the ancient home of the Custises and the Lees. Adjoining Arlington is the military reservation of Fort Myer, now one of the best-appointed military posts in the country. If the avenue of the 13 original states were built, it is suggested that memorial arches and other means of perpetuating the history of the first confederation would be built, and the driveway be lined with shade trees representative of the various latitudes, as nearly every form of tree will flourish in these parts.

The Question of Drinking Water.

The city of Washington has been greatly stirred this summer on the question of wholesome, healthful drinking water. Epidemics of typhoid fever in various parts of the country have called the attention of the people to the methods of purifying water supplies. In the agricultural department are noted scientists, whose business it is to study means of conserving the public health. These learned gentlemen have experimented to great deal, and are satisfied that they have discovered a safe and cheap method in the use of copper sulphate. They do not want to force their remedy upon the people, but they have been hinting very strongly that the District of Columbia is a field for a trial of their discovery. They want to put this copper sulphate in the city reservoirs, and they also recommend that for simple drinking purposes water be placed in copper vessels and allowed to stand a few hours.

How Washington Is Threatened.

The district authorities, however, do not take kindly to the suggestions of the government experts. They declined to allow the copper sulphate experiment to be "tried on the city," They have ignored the recommendation regarding the use of copper vessels, and when the public schools opened a few days ago they insisted that the children be irrigated with boiled water. This, they claim, is the antiseptic method so far found of exterminating germs. They have supplied the schoolhouses with old-fashioned tin wash boilers, in which the water to be used by the children is boiled. Now come the government experts with a cry of horror that water boiled in these tin vessels, containing a large percentage of lead, is poisonous, and so the controversy goes on.

DOG'S SPIRIT TALKS.

RIDER HAGGARD HAS PUZZLE FOR PSYCHIC SCIENTISTS.

Famous Author Relates Story of Remarkable Dream That Told Him His Canine Pet Lay Dying in a Ditch.

London (Eng.) Special.

A remarkable story of his dog, Bob, is told in a letter to the Times by Sir Rider Haggard, the novelist. Bob has been killed by a railway train, and Mr. Haggard has had a dream which he considers was caused by telepathic communication from the dog, which sought to call his attention to its plight. Mr. Haggard tells the story of his dream as follows:

"On the night of Saturday, July 9, I went to bed about 12:30, and suffered from what I took to be a nightmare. I was awakened by my wife's voice calling to me from her own bed upon the other side of the room. As I awoke the nightmare itself, which had been long and vivid, faded from my brain.

"All I could remember of it was a sense of awful oppression and of a desperate and terrified struggling for life such as the act of drowning probably would involve, but between the time that I heard my wife's voice and the time that my consciousness answered to it, or so it seemed to me, I had another dream.

"I dreamed that a black retriever dog, a most amiable and intelligent animal named Bob, which was the property of my oldest daughter, was lying on its side among brushwood, or a rough growth of some sort, by the water. My own personality, in some mysterious way, seemed to me to be acting from the body of the dog, which I knew quite surely to be Bob and no other, so much so that my head was against its head, which was lifted up at an unnatural angle. In my vision the dog was trying to speak to me in words, and, failing, transmitted to my mind in an undefined fashion the knowledge that it was dying.

"Then everything vanished and I woke to hear my wife asking me why on earth I was making those horrible, weird noises. I replied that I had a nightmare. I told her about the fearful struggle and that I dreamed old Bob was in a dreadful way and was trying to talk to me and tell me about it. Finally, seeing that it still was quite dark, I asked what time it was. She said she did not know, and shortly afterward I went to sleep again and was disturbed no more.

(English Author Who Had a Strange Dream About a Pet Dog.)

Mr. Haggard learned afterward that the dog was killed that night, perhaps three hours before he had his dream. He therefore considers himself forced to explain the matter by telepathy.

"The dog Bob, between whom and myself there existed a mutual attachment," he said, "either at the moment of his death, if his existence can conceivably have been prolonged until after one o'clock in the morning, or, as seems more probable, about three hours after that event, did succeed in calling my attention to its actual or present plight by some whatever portion of her being that is capable of receiving such impulses when enchained by sleep into its own terrible position; that subsequently, as that chain of sleep was being broken by the voice of my wife, calling me back with some last despairing effort, while that indefinable part of me was being withdrawn from it."

Appended to the letter and certificate by the veterinary surgeon, who inspected the body of the dog, which he says must have been in the water three days, is a certificate signed by Mr. Haggard, Angela Haggard, Lilias R. Haggard, L. R. Hildyard and Ida Hector as witnesses of the nightmare story having been told at breakfast on Sunday morning.

Mr. Haggard says he will welcome any investigation by competent persons.

Henry Rider Haggard, who had this remarkable dream or vision regarding the death of a favorite dog, is one of the leading writers of fiction, especially as relates to adventures in Africa. He was born in Bradenham, England, June 22, 1856, and was educated privately. As a young man he served in South Africa in official capacities, being at one time master of the high court of the Transvaal, and also was lieutenant and adjutant of the Pretoria Horse. His first book was published in 1882, and since that time a number of entertaining volumes have emanated from his pen. Mr. Haggard is now a justice of the peace.

REFUSED AMERICAN GOLD.

Hotel Cashier in Chicago Had Orders Not to Take in the Yellow Coin.

"Who can help smiling at these belighted Turks? Certainly these doings are calculated to amuse Americans, writes Jerome Hart, in Argosy.

But stop—it is not so many years since silver was at so heavy a discount on the Pacific coast that money changers' offices were about as numerous in San Francisco as they are in Cairo. At that time there was ten to 15 per cent discount on silver half dollars; there were no standard silver dollars then coined. Some smart skinflints conceived the idea of paying their colored wages in the trade dollar, which, although not legal tender, was worth more in silver than two half dollars. The trick was at first successful—the trusting artisans accepted the large new coins and held their tradesmen with them. But the banks refused to accept the trade dollars from the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker.

Like lightning the news ran all over the Pacific coast, and within a week the trade dollar was discounted among the working classes. They did not know that it never had been monetized, but they now knew that it was demonetized. In all truth, in an intelligent nation like ours, clever sharpers should work off on workingmen as money that which was not money at all, but merely minted bullion? And that it should pass through three hands—workmen, jobber, retailer—before it was unmasked!

Yes, there are odd things in the money line in more countries than one. Only this spring I handed a restaurant waiter a five-dollar gold piece to pay the bill for breakfast. He returned in a few moments and said the young woman cashier wouldn't take it.

"Why?" I asked. "Is it counterfeit?"

"No," he said; "it ain't bad money, but she says she won't take no gold; her orders is to take paper inside."

I sent him out to the cashier in the hotel office to see if it was good there. Same report. The hotel cashier said: "Discount on gold—take nothing but paper."

"I have found English gold readily taken in every place I have been. Where was it, then, that I found American gold refused. Was it in Constantinople? In Smyrna? In Jerusalem?

In none of these places. It was in the Wellington hotel in Chicago, Ill., U. S. A., in the year of our Lord 1904, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-eighth.

WORSHIP THE CROCODILE.

The Repulsive Reptile Regarded by the Malays as a Spirit of the Water.

Many beasts and some reptiles are worshiped as sacred by the Malays along the Malacca straits. They are particularly impressed by the belief that the crocodile is a spirit of the water. Therefore, these ugly monsters are not only extremely plentiful there, but they are so daring that they make most of the water ways dangerous even for persons in boats.

The Englishmen who dwell in that part of the country declare that hardly a week passes without the killing of a native by a crocodile. The brute swims slowly along behind the rude, flimsy canoes and dugouts used there and suddenly switches his terrible tail around in such a way as to sweep the man out of the boat into the water.

Here and there along the banks of the black rivers will be seen the strips of white cloth and baskets full of fruits and rice, attached to trees or saplings close to the water. These are offerings made by the natives to some crocodile that has his haunt just under the bank.

Now and then, however, a crocodile becomes too ferocious and kills so many persons that even the superstitious natives feel it necessary to dispatch him. Then they use an ingenious and curious method. They make a small bamboo raft, about four feet square, and to this they attach a long rope made of loosely plaited cotton. At the end is a huge hook, to the shank of which they tie a live chicken.

They set the chicken on the raft and shove it out into the stream. The poor fowl cackles and screams, trying to release itself from the line; this attracts the crocodile, who darts at it and gulps it down. The next moment the raft bobs below the surface.

The villagers follow the course of the raft as it goes down stream and after a day or two, when the crocodile has wearied himself thoroughly by his struggles, they paddle out and haul it in. The crocodile comes to the surface without much fighting and is killed with ease.

It is very rare for a crocodile to escape once he has swallowed the bait, for the hook goes deep into his stomach and the loosely plaited rope is so soft that the brute's teeth have no effect on it.

A Bee's Eye.

Did you ever look at a bee's eye through a very strong magnifying glass? It is made up of many little eyes massed together. And yet the eye as a whole is so small that it seems incredible that it has these thousands of little parts, each one complete in itself! This sort of eye is very useful, for as the little eyes face in every direction the bee can see above and below and behind as well as in front and sideways as people do.—Nature.

Liberty Bell All Right.

A Wisconsin genius now bobs up with a proposition to mend the liberty bell so that it will ring just as well as ever. It is a great idea that will place the bell right in line with independence hall, which Philadelphia has tinkered up until it is as good as new.—Newark (N. J.) News.

THE WAYS OF CUPID.

How a Young Kentuckian Won a Bride and a Thousand Dollar Bet—Other Events That Are a Trifle Strange.

"I'll bet you $1,000 you can't do it."—This was the remark made some months ago by Mrs. Charles Patton, of The Highlands, near Erlanger, Ky., to her daughter, Miss Evelyn Patton, who declared she could marry Harold Barcroft White without her mother's knowledge. The couple were betrothed, and the wedding was not to take place until next fall. The girl, however, accepted her mother's bet and the contest was on. Mrs. Patton kept an eagle eye on her daughter, and the daughter and her lover were constantly watching for a chance to win the wager. Last month the opportunity came. Mrs. Patton invited a large party, including Mr. White, to visit the battlefield on Lookout mountain. In the confusion of leaving the hotel the young couple disappeared for a few minutes. When they came back they were man and wife, the girl flourishing her marriage certificate and gleefully demanding the $1,000. Mrs. Patton is the wife of an official of the Southern Pacific railway and is rich, so she could afford to pay the $1,000. Besides, a fashionable wedding would cost her much more than that, anyway.

What girl doesn't love a hero? Thomas Taafe, of East St. Louis, a year ago saved Josie Touchette of Centerville from a negro highwayman who was trying to rob her of a diamond ring. Taafe and the negro and the girl. Both men had revolvers and both began shooting. Neither was hurt, however, Taafe only receiving a bullet hole through his hat. The negro ran away and Taafe escorted the girl to the home of her friends. She was as pretty as he was brave, and every girl who reads this knows already how it all ended. They were married last week, of course.

If a wealthy woman decides to marry a peanut vender, it usually sounds just like the name of the town where Cupid would turn the trick. For many years Henry Chamberlain sold peanuts on a Kalamazoo street corner. For many years Mrs. Julia Damon bought peanuts of him. He is 69, and it isn't fair to tell how old she is, but she owns considerable real estate and has cash and stocks worth $100,000. No one suspected a romance in their lives. Their wedding came about this way:

Chamberlain until recently was the proprietor of a peanut stand on the corner of one of the principal streets of the city. At the last meeting of the common council it was decided to eject him because he insisted he could not pay the necessary license for his privileges. It is thought this move on the part of the council caused the wedding to be hastened.

At any rate, they were married and are now on their honeymoon trip.

There's something about a life on the sea that makes the sailorman jolly and lovable, whether he is 18 or 80 years old. That is true of Capt. Henry B. Merrill, an old whaling captain of Greenport, L. I. He is 80 years old, and two weeks ago married his housekeeper, Mrs. Sarah J. Rogers, a widow of 60. Capt. Merrill has led a roving, interesting life, having been around the world three times, landed on the eastern coast of Russia, on the coast of Alaska, stopped six different times at the Sandwich islands, crossed the equator 16 times, rounded Cape Horn four times, and helped to kill 160 whales. He was also a forty-miner and saw life in the California gold fields.

There is something pathetic in the romance of Edward O. Smith, chief clerk of the West Shore railroad at Weehawken, N. Y., and Carrie Reed. They were married after a courtship of 11 years. She waited all that time until he could provide a home for her. Their wedding day was on Tuesday and on the following Saturday night he was asphyxiated by gas in his room at Union Hill, where he had gone on a business trip.

Alligator Farm in France.

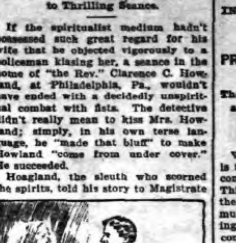
An alligator farm, stocked with young animals from the United States, is to be established in the south of France. Alligator skin has become so highly prized that the animal dealers believe it will pay well to raise the alligators on this the first farm of its kind in the world. The skin is said to become more valuable each year, and there is always a great demand for it for boots, shoes, hand bags, writing pads, portfolios and toilet articles.

WANTED TO KISS A SPIRIT.

Detective's Offer to Embrace and Fondle His Mother Puts End to Thrilling Seance.

If the spiritualist medium hadn't possessed such great regard for his wife that he objected vigorously to a policeman kissing her, a seance in the house of "the Rev." Clarence C. Howland, at Philadelphia, Pa., wouldn't have ended with a decidedly unspiritual combat with fists. The detective didn't really mean to kiss Mrs. Howland; simply, in his own terse language, he "made that bluff" to make Howland "come from under cover." He succeeded.

Hoagland, the sleuth who scorned the spirits, told his story to Magistrate



"ARE YOU MY MOTHER?"

Pullinger. His story of being tackled by unshadowy forms, with highly substantial fists and fingernails, was corroborated by Detective McCarthy. As a result Howland was held in $1,100 bail, on charges of obtaining money under false pretenses and assaulting a policeman. His wife was held in $600 on the first charge.

"We went to Howland's public meeting and paid 25 cents admission," testified Hoagland. "But there wasn't much doing there, so we went to the private seance in the Howlands' home. We paid one dollar so make ourselves solid. We let the spirits work that time, but last night we thought we'd take a hand.

"At last Howland called me up. He said he'd show me my mother. Sure enough, a tall figure came from the cabinet. It had on a white gown—this gown."

Hoagland held up a white china silk dress, which told mutely but eloquently of having passed through a sharp conflict.

"I said, 'Are you my mother?' and a faint voice said, 'Yes.' 'Well, if that's so I'm going to kiss you,' I said, and I made as if to grab her.

"Her husband didn't seem to like that a bit. 'Don't do that!' he shouted. 'You'll break the spell.' I gave him an uppercut, and he closed with me. He fought like a—a—well, like a champion heavyweight."

"I was scrapping with Mrs. Howland," said McCarthy, taking up the tale, "and she fought like mad. I followed her into the cabinet, as I wanted to arrest her in the white gown to get evidence. In the fight the thin stuff was torn off down to her waist."

HOUSE HAUNTED BY GOOSE.

Mystery of a Philadelphia Suburb Solved by Veteran Who Was Not Afraid of Ghosts.

The mystery of Germantown's "haunted" house has been solved.

For several days weird noises, emanating from the house, an unoccupied one on Chew street, filled the neighbors with alarm. Strange shadows were seen to flit across the closed blinds, and the patter of footsteps upon the bare floors sent a shudder through the passer-by.

The Philadelphia Inquirer says that none dared to enter or start an investigation, until William Harkins, of 613 Mechanic street, arrived on the scene. Harkins is a brave man, a veteran of the civil war, and he excited the admiration of the crowd in front of the house the other night by expressing a determination to locate the "ghost." He entered alone. A few minutes later there were sounds of a scuffle, then a weird scream, and terror seized upon those without. Suddenly Harkins appeared on the threshhold of the front door with a big goose in his arms.

"Here's your ghost," he said, laughing. And the crowd melted away. An investigation revealed the fact that the goose was the property of William Logan, who conducts a poultry farm, near by. It had escaped a few days before and had sought refuge in the house through an open cellar window.

WASHINGTON LETTER

INTERESTING GOSSIP FROM THE NATIONAL CAPITOL.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES

The Old and New Methods of Nominating Them—Cortelyou Always a Republican—Alaskan Judiciary to Be Investigated.

Washington.—At no city in America is the interest in the great political conventions so great as it is here This is natural, as one or the other of the nominees of these conventions must become the official head of Washington, and his home and family become the social center.

Practically all of the large cities from the Missouri river east to the Atlantic have at some time entertained one or more of these national gatherings, with the exception of the national capitol, and yet this is the political center of the country. It is almost an indefinable sentiment that keeps the conventions away from Washington, and probably always will do so.

Presidents have been nominated in Washington, however, but it was before the days of conventions. Previous to 1830 national conventions were unknown, and candidates were named by congressional caucus. This method of naming candidates lost favor after the race made by Jackson, Adams and Clay in 1824, none of whom were named by the caucuses.

Philadelphia entertained the first national convention in 1830, when delegates selected by the anti-Masonic party met in that city to adopt a platform and name candidates. Since that time every candidate for president has been named by one of these national gatherings.

Chicago is preeminently the convention city. Since 1860 more conventions have been held there than in any other city in the country, and as many presidents nominated there as in all other cities put together.

Of the many "first citizens" of the country nominated by these national political conventions, three were assassinated—Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley. William Henry Harrison died 31 days after beginning his term of office.

Five vice presidents have died while holding office—Elbridge Gerry, 1814; William R. King, 1853; Henry Wilson, 1785; Thomas A. Hendricks, 1885, and Garret A. Hobart, 1899.

Always a Republican.

Much of the opposition that manifested itself against Cortelyou as chairman of the national republican committee was in all probability traceable to the general belief that he was at one time a democrat. This belief is widespread throughout the country, and has been believed even by the leaders of the party. It is said here that an authoritative denial from a high official in the government was telegraphed to Chicago during the convention so as to set at rest those of the national committee who were uneasy over the prospect of a democrat presiding over the republican campaign.

HON. GEORGE B. CORTELYOU.

A friend of Mr. Cortelyou, and a man who has known the family for many years, gives me the following as his political record:

"Secretary George B. Cortelyou's father and grandfather were republicans of the staunchest kind. His grandfather, Peter Crolius Cortelyou, Sr., was the intimate friend and associate of Horace Greeley, Thurlow Weed and other great leaders of the party's early history. Both his brothers are republicans, and the members of his family have been for the past 50 years the stay of the foundation of the party. All the teachings of his early years were in that political faith, and when he took up the study of public questions on his own account he became a firm believer in republican doctrines. His first vote was cast for a republican candidate, and from that day to this he has voted the republican ticket.

"Mr. Cortelyou was one of the founders of the Young Men's Republican club of Hempstead, N. Y. He was an active member of the Plumed Knights, and did hard and effective service in the Blaine campaign. He was secretary of the Harrison managers at the Minneapolis convention. Upon the advent of the democratic administration in 1885 he tendered his resignation and left the federal service. Again, in 1893, upon the advent of Mr. Cleveland's second administration, he tendered his resignation and remained only at the earnest request of his new superior. He has gone regularly each year to his home and voted for republican candidates, and while he loyally served a democratic presi-

HOSPITAL WORK GROWING

Governing Board of Muhlenberg Issues Yearly Report.

HAD 457 PATIENTS

Treasurer's Statement Shows Balance Dispite Increased Expense of New Buildings.

Probably one of the most complete and comprehensive reports ever issued by the Muhlenberg Hospital Board of Governors, made its appearance Saturday. It covers the work of the institution from the time of its beginning, together with a history of its establishment, the Boards of Governors, the officers, committees, medical staff and superintendents from 1881. There is also a fund of general information which makes the book invaluable to every resident of the city.

That the work of the hospital is increasing rapidly is shown by the report for the year from May 31, 1903 to June 1, 1904. In the time intervening a total of 457 patients were treated at the institution, the male cases being 230 and the female 227. The operations were unusually numerous, a total of 245 having been performed. The number of patients of the various wards has averaged twenty-five and at times during the year there were over thirty. In the new buildings sixty persons can be accommodated.

In the dispensary the total number of cases treated was 703, divided as follows: Surgical cases, 298; medical cases, 114; eye and ear department, 212, dermatological cases, 36; unrecorded diagnosis, 43. The total number of visits to the dispensary was 1,-318. In addition to these there were six X-ray examinations conducted by Dr. Norman Hayes Probasco.

Despite the increased expense attached to the new buildings, the report of the treasurer shows a balance of $305. During the year the receipts from all sources amounted to $19,685.-35, while the disbursements were $19,-380 43. A separate report covers the building fund and this shows the total receipts to have been $65,159 98, divided as follows: Balance in trust companies, $5,350.53; subscriptions, $30,155 44; temporary loans from memorial funds, $13,493.33; loans from general fund, $600; loans from Plainfield Trust Company, $3,000; proceeds from sale of old hospital buildings, $4,618 90; charity ball, $1,-622.60; interest, $315 64; lecture by J. Dundar Wright, $208 50. The disbursements for main buildings, operating pavilion, wards, furniture, nurses' home and incidentals were $65 014.94, the balance now in bank is $3,145 04. The individual money donations for hospital work, during the year, were $8,720.48.

The James Clark fund of $15,000 donated by James E. Clark and Frank L. Clark in memory of their father, has been deposited and is to be held in trust for the benefit of the hospital. The declaration of trust in respect to the fund provides that if this amount the Board of Governors may withdraw not more than $5,000 to be applied toward the erection or establishment of a nurses' home.

Galvin Rehearsing "A Bell Boy."

The Galvin family, of this city, began rehearsals in T. A. B. Hall Monday with the company which is to produce "Bell Boy," one of the best known farces on the road. It is to open in New Brunswick Thursday night and is booked solid for the season, including Christmas week at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, New York. The company is composed of thirty people with John Galvin playing the title role.

Humble, Not Krewson.

It was Councilman Humble and not Councilman Krewson, who voted against an adding machine for the collector's office at the Borough Council meeting last Friday evening. Mr. Krewson being chairman of the finance committee and familiar with the work of the office favored the machine and voted accordingly.

Plainfield Clerical Discussion.

The Plainfield Clerical was the guest of Rev. Erastus M. Rodman, pastor emeritus of Grace church, at his home on East Seventh street, yesterday afternoon. There was a general discussion of the subject: "The Essential Position of the Holy Communion in the Service of the Church." After the discussion the members, eleven in all, were entertained at luncheon at Mrs. Wagstaff's place on Crescent avenue.

LONG FAST OF CATFISH.

Denizen of New York Aquarium Breaks All Records of Its Kind in Captivity.

All records for fasting among catfish in captivity have been broken by the big specimen from the Mississippi river now in the New York aquarium. After its period of hibernation the catfish took its first food of the winter on May 13. This was the first food it had taken since July 7, 1903, a period of ten months and six days.

In each succeeding year since it has been here this big catfish has in the hibernating season abstained from food for a longer and longer time. It was received in December, 1899. The following little table shows when in each year it stopped eating and when it resumed.

Stopped Feeding.	Resumed Feeding.
1900, November 1	April 20, 1901
1901, October 5	April 28, 1902
1902, August 1	May 13, 1903
1903, July 7	May 13, 1904

This big catfish is about 3½ feet in length and weighs probably 70 pounds. It has grown somewhat in length and in weight since it was first received. It is clean and free from fungus and in good condition, and it has now apparently as much vitality as when it first came in.

This year, when finally it began to take food, it came up for it with its normal degree of activity, and took three medium-sized eels, cut up into lengths convenient for it to swallow. On May 17 it was eager for food and it ate four rather larger eels, cut up for it into suitable lengths, and it now moves about in its tank in its accustomed manner.

In nature this big catfish would bury itself in the mud in winter and there lie dormant until spring. Mud cannot be provided for it here, because mud would choke the pipes of the tank of which the interior is supplied with a bed of sand on its bottom.

The catfish rubs and hollows this out to make in it a comfortable bed for it-self, and this sand also serves the good purpose of helping to keep the big fish clear of parasites.

As the hibernating season approaches the big catfish settles down in its bed of sand and it will lie motionless for weeks at a time. It is not an uncommon thing for visitors to announce that the big fish is dead, as in fact it might easily seem to be, for its respiration is at such times so faint that the movement of its gill-covers could be detected only by those experienced in observing fishes.

But, as has been seen, after months of seeming lifelessness, the big catfish will come up and begin feeding again, and resume its ordinary manner of life just as though nothing had happened. It would scarcely seem, however, that it would ever surpass its present fasting record.

FEAT IN GLASS BLOWING.

Four Bottles Made at a Western Factory Are Among the World's Wonders.

It is a long cry from 1754 to the present time, and it is not surprising that great progress has been made in the manufacture of glass bottles in that time. The first glass factory permanently established in the states, about 1754, and which is still preserved among the curiosities of the Long Island Historical society, to the remarkable making of which glass quarrel which was recently turned out at a western glass manufactory, there may be traced the phenomenal growth of the manufacture of glass, says the Philadelphia Press.

Three of the bottles are said to be the largest ever made in the world. A man over six feet stands below the height of the largest bottle, the range of the huge quartet being from five feet four inches to six feet four inches. Three of the most expert glassblowers in the world were employed in the manufacture of these bottles. It took 50 pounds of liquid glass to make the largest bottle. This was drawn, rolled and inflated. The blowers used being five and one-half feet in length.

To complete the process it was necessary to reheat the material several times owing to the great quantity needed. It took about an hour to shape the bottle. Then the rings and the mouth were finished, and the glass annealed in specially large ovens prepared especially for this piece of work. At its greatest width the largest bottle is 20 inches in diameter, and it will hold 65 gallons, liquid measure.

Charitable Tip.

It is a sensible suggestion some one makes that those who are bound for their country places for the summer should send to hospitals the stores of jellies and jams which would naturally be left behind. The season is at hand when fresh fruits are available for immediate use, and for the making of a fresh stock of sweets for next winter's demands, and the "left overs" from last season's vintage might furnish pleasure to invalids and convalescents who are not so well favored with such home-made delicacies as their attendants would like them to be. —Boston Transcript.

DISCUSSION OF MISSIONS

Chicago Woman Speaks at Baptist Society's Meeting.

MAKE CONTRIBUTION

Closing Session of Woman's Baptist Home Missionary Society of East New Jersey Baptist Association.

The session of the Woman's Baptist Home Missionary Society of the East New Jersey Baptist Association was continued Thursday afternoon and proved to be more interesting than the morning session. There were present 131 women as delegates and visitors, and the entire afternoon was devoted to a discussion and presentation of facts concerning the home mission field.

After the devotional exercises conducted by Mrs. Payne, of Newark, there was a symposium of three different topics, all having an intimate relationship to one another. The first topic, "The Measure of Our Responsibility," was presented by Mrs. William Littell, of Elizabeth, the second, "Our Opportunity," by Miss C. M. Gooding, of Newark, and the third, "Our Motive," by Mrs. W. G. Fennell, of Newark. As each topic was presented an informal discussion followed, all of which proved very helpful to the women.

Mrs. Augusta Post, whose home is in the West, and who has for some time been identified with the home missionary society, and who is now engaged for a month in doing general mission work in New Jersey by addressing meetings in the interest of the work, gave a brief talk and presented helpful literature concerning the home mission field.

As the present officers continue in office for some time to come, there was no election at yesterday's session. Miss Emma Baker, as director, presided at both sessions and Mrs. L. L. Serpel, of Newark, the secretary, was in her place. Miss Florence Marsh, who with Miss Laura J. Runyon, had charge of the arrangements, reported that 131 delegates were present.

The address of the afternoon was delivered by Miss Mary J. Burdette, of Chicago, sister of Robert Burdette. She is identified with the Baptist Training School for women in Chicago, and her talk was concerning the needs and the progress of this school. She said that the officers of the school are anxious to raise $100,000 this year for the institution so that ample accommodations may be provided for those who are taking the training work.

Miss Burdette is a bright and entertaining speaker and evidences considerable of the wit of her brother. She made an urgent appeal to the women of the New Jersey society to increase their contributions and thereby assist in the great efforts of securing more funds. She also told of the work on the home mission field and related many pathetic incidents associated with the labors of the missionaries in all parts of the country. Many new and interesting facts were presented to show that the work of the home society is doing a great work, especially among the foreigners who locate in various parts of the country. She said that every day there is an appeal for a trained missionary to take charge of some new field.

The women present obtained an expression of opinion as to increasing the annual contribution to $150 and by a rising vote showed their approval.

After a vote of thanks was given to the women of the First Baptist church for their hospitality, the convention adjourned.

Courier-News to Move.

The Courier-News Publishing Company has leased the store in the Marsh building at Second street and Park avenue and will remove its entire plant there soon after January 1. The business and composing department will be located in the store proper while the editorial department will be on the second floor.

Mrs. Woodruff Dead.

After a lingering illness of several months, Mrs. Katherine Woodruff, one of the oldest residents of this city, died Monday a m. at her late home on East Second street. Mrs. Woodruff was in her eighty-seventh year, having come to this city in 1868. She was the widow of William S. Woodruff, and leaves a son, William A. Woodruff, of this city, and a brother, Jacob D. French, of Westfield. Mrs. Woodruff was born in Westfield, where she will be buried in the family plot at the old Presbyterian church yard on Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

King's Daughters Tea.

The Charity Circle of King's Daughters will give a tea at the home of Mrs. Daniel F. Gioss, 1127 Watchung avenue, tomorrow from 2 to 6 o'clock. A silver offering will be received at the door, and home-made candy and useful articles will be on sale.

Miss Marjorie Fleming, of Park avenue, is visiting in Brooklyn.

ALLS-O. F. C. DISPUTE

Afternoon Game Undecided on Account of Dispute in the Second Half.

From a local standpoint, Saturday's football games were a failure. Though the weather did not interfere, the afternoon game between the Alls and the Orange Field Club teams was undecided and ended in a dispute which did little to either team. On the other hand, the two school teams played clean games, but were both defeated. The High School fell under the attack of its old rival, the Rutgers Prep. School, and Leal's was defeated by Montclair Academy. Rutgers Prep. rolled up a score of 17 to 0 against the High School players, and the Montclair eleven won by the score of 18 to 0. The local schools were too light to contend favorably against the more formidable elevens, and though they put up a good fight, the weight of their opponents, and their practice and team work told in the end.

On Hope Common, the local High School and the Prep. fought it out for two twenty minutes halves. In the first play the New Brunswick team made a touchback, and followed it by a touchdown before the half was over. In spite of good runs by Williams and Douglass, fumbling prevented the local team from reaching the goal line. With the ball in their possession, the Rutgers eleven gained their distance easily on line plunges, and steady playing. In the second half they added two more touchdowns to their score, and when the time was called had the ball on their opponents' thirty yard line. The score 17 to 0.

Leal's School met with a similar fate in the morning on Crescent Oval. They were outplayed in interference, and in team work, though they put up a plucky fight against odds. End runs netted Montclair six points in the first half, their best gains being made in this manner. The Leal's boys took a brace toward the end of this half, and held their opponents down to no points for the period of play. In the second half, twelve more points were won by the visitors on two touchdowns, and two kicked goals. The following was the line up for the Leal's team: Manning, left end; Curtis, left tackle; Lawrence, left guard; Smith, center; Strong, right guard; Bateries, right tackle; Howard, right end; Wilcox, quarterback; Glenney, left half; Dallas, fullback; Daniels, right half. Referee, Mellick and Phillips.

The first half was all that was played of the game between the Alls and the Orange Field Club teams Saturday afternoon. In actual points the Orange Field Club eleven won the game, as they scored a touchdown in the first half before the dispute began. It was at the beginning of the second period of play that the two teams fell into a quarrel and left the field.

Alls kicked off to the Field Club, and the ball changed hands on downs After two minutes of play in which the ball changed hands twice more, Tobin skirted the end for thirty yards and a touchdown. He failed to kick the goal. Though no further scoring resulted in this half, though the O. F. C. players outplayed their opponents, and kept the leather in the Alls territory most of the time. Several long runs were made by Tobin and Sherwin before the whistle blew with the ball on the Alls twenty yard line.

In the first minute of play in the second half, the dispute arose over an alleged foul on the part of the Alls team. The eleven left the field after a short conflict of words, and the results is undecided by the backers of the two teams. They lined up as follows:

Alls—Thayer, left end; Voorhees, left tackle; Guyer, left guard; Pound, center; Derby, right guard; Egan, right tackle; Moore, right end; Phillips, quarterback; Cummiog, left half; Whitney, fullback; Moore, right half. Referee, Woolston; umpire, Hamilton; linesmen, Joseph and Pike.

Dance at Park Club.

The first informal dance of the season was held at the Park Club Saturday night, under the auspices of the entertainment committee.

Quietly Married.

Miss Ida Frances Conzett and Edward Clark, both of this city, were married quietly Saturday afternoon at the home of Charles A. Sturtevant on Liberty street. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. O. McKelvey and was witnessed by a small gathering of friends.

WALKED RATHER THAN BEG.

Honeymoon Trip of a Virginia Couple Has an Ending Which Neither of Them Anticipated.

With their feet covered with blisters by the dust of 105 miles of country roads, E. A. Holsenberger and his pretty wife, each about 23 years old, a refined though tired-out looking couple, arrived in Harrisburg, Pa., on foot from Philadelphia, on their way to their home in Richmond, Va. The long tramp of the man and woman is due to the southern pride of the young couple, who were left penniless through a robbery in Philadelphia, and would not depend on charity as a means of reaching home.

Mr. and Mrs. Holsenberger had been visiting in Philadelphia for several days when he was held up in an ill-lighted street and $46 was taken from his pockets. Mrs. Holsenberger had some loose change, less than a dollar, and this was all the money the two had left after the robbery. With no friends in the city and with no means of getting money from Richmond they scorned proffered advice that pointed out charitable institutions as places where aid could be found. They left the City of Brotherly Love on their wearisome trip homeward. They spent the nights in barns and with the few cents the robbers had not got bought food.

HELD UP IN PHILADELPHIA.

The Holsenbergers averaged 25 miles a day. Here a friend of the young woman living in Shippensburg was thought of and they decided to stop off there a day or two before going on to Richmond. They asked the way to Shippensburg and were directed to the Market street bridge. Going out Market street they attracted a great deal of attention. Of evident refinement and well dressed, their dusty appearance created much wondering comment.

LOVER SHOWS HIS COURAGE

It Took Two Revolvers to Get the Girl He Wanted, But He Got Her, Sure Enough.

A pair of pistols, a girl in love, a daring lover, an irate father and two belligerent brothers are enough of a combination to make a tempestuous romance and they did.

F. M. Kiger, of Germanton, N. C., loved and was beloved by Miss Lulu Covington, daughter of Mr. Charles Covington, of the same place. On April 1 the young couple eloped to Greensboro to wed, but a telegram from the obstinate dad to court officials stopped the event.

Then Kiger took his sweetheart to his home, where she visited the Kiger family two days, until she was forced by an officer to return to her father's home. But Kiger armed himself and appeared with two 44-caliber pistols at the Covington home. The father and two sons, armed with shotguns, appeared and ordered Kiger to get away, but Kiger didn't, and the Covingtons fired over his head. Then Kiger and his pistols got into action. He covered the Covingtons with the two revolvers and they took to the woods. Then Kiger got Miss Lulu from the house, drove to Dennis station, Forsyth county, and went on the train to Martinsville, Va., where they were married.

Immense Cantaloupe Farm.

The largest cantaloupe farm in the world will be that which is to be planted near Greeley, Col., the present spring. It will embrace 2,000 acres. Hitherto cantaloupe raising in Colorado has been mostly confined to the famous Rocky Ford district, in the Arkansas valley.

Old Kitchen Brought to Light.

During some recent explorations at Pompeii an ancient kitchen was unearthed. In the fireplace there was a kettle on the grate, just as it was left 1825 years ago by some cook residing in that old city.

DUNELLEN.

The Republican ticket at Dunellen was given a majority of forty, the candidates on that ticket receiving 201 votes, as against 161 for the Democrats. Roosevelt received 203, Benjamin F. Howell, for Congress, 194;

Edward C. Stokes, for Governor, 191; John H. Conger, for county clerk, 197; for member of Assembly, Frank C. Henry, 186; J. H. Thayer Martin, promise to Mr. Stokes to be loyal to all nominees save those named at the county convention.

North Plainfield's vote is probably the largest in its history. The regular Republicans and the bolting party, which had twice thrown Somerset county into the Democratic column in revenge for past treatment, worked unceasingly to get out the full vote. The effort is apparent in the total vote in Somerset county, shown in another column.

Four years ago, Mr. McKinley was given 350 majority in the borough and up to that time that was the largest Jr., 193; Alexander R. Fordyce, Jr., 193. There were 180 votes cast for the law to reduce the number of Freeholders, and 143 against the law.

Parker received 161 votes, James E. Otis, for Congress, 169; Charles C. Black, for Governor, 173; Arthur B. Appleby, for county clerk, 170; for members of Assembly, Freeman Woodbridge, 168; Thomas F. Dunigan, 170; Frederic M. P. Pearse, 169.

NEW MARKET.

In New Market there were 270 votes cast, 168 Republican and eighty Demo ocratic, and seven rejected. This was the vote:

Republican—Roosevelt, 166; R. F. Howell, for Congress, 165; E. C. Stokes, for Governor, 151; John H. Conger, for county clerk, 161; members of Assembly, Frank C. Henry, 163; J. H. Thayer Martin, Jr., 163; Alexander R. Fordyce, Jr., 161.

Democratic—Parker, 80; James E. Otis, for Congress, 82; Charles C. Black, for Governor, 96; Arthur B. Appleby, for county clerk, 85; members of Assembly, Freeman Woodbridge, 87; Thomas F. Dunigan, 83; Frederic M. P. Pearse, 93. Sixty-four votes were for the law reducing the number of Freeholders and 103 against the law.

IN SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

Over in South Plainfield the vote was rather close with the small majority on the Republican side. In this district Roosevelt received 79 and Parker 69 of the ballots. Howell, the Republican candidate for Congress, received 82 and his opponent, James E. Otis, 66. Practically the same figures applied in the vote for governor and county clerk and the assembly poll.

ROMAN CATHOLIC JUBILEE

Celebration Began at St Joseph's Church Yesterday.

PAPAL ENCYCLICAL

The Intention of the Pope—Father Miller Explained Significance.

Sunday 8 was set apart by Rev. Father Miller, of St. Joseph's church, for the celebration of the jubilee commemorating the promulgation of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception, this being the fiftieth year since that important event took place.

It is the intention of the Pope, who has issued an encyclical upon this jubilee, that every Catholic make the jubilee according to the rule laid down by the church. The celebration of the jubilee consists of devotions of prayer and fasting, which may be made by each individual.

In St. Joseph's, however, it was begun yesterday by the congregation in a body, at Benediction in the afternoon at 3:30. A large number was present. Next Sunday and the Sunday following will be set apart for similar services and then one day will be given as a penitential day on which a rigorous fast will be observed. Also a day on which those who are making the jubilee will receive communion.

Yesterday morning Father Miller gave an interesting explanation of the origin of jubilees and the reason of their observance in the church, the jubilee being proclaimed every fiftieth year, commemorating some unusual event. Father Miller made Biblical references to jubilees, quoting from Leviticus.

GEORGE ALLEN JOINS CHICAGO AMERICANS

PLAINFIELD BASEBALL PLAYER SIGNS ARTICLES WITH MANAGER COMISKEY.

Articles of agreement were signed Saturday between George Allen, of this city, and Manager Comiskey, of the Chicago American League team, known as the "White Stockings," whereby the former is to be a member of the nine next season. While it is understood that he will catch his position was not indicated. He is to join the team early next spring and his salary as named in the contract is to be $2,200.

Allen is one of the best known of the local baseball players who came into prominence during the League season of 1902. He caught for the Sole Works team, having been won over by Manager Muir from the Scotch Plains nine. He is infallible as a backstop, while his accurate throwing and stick work attracted widespread attention. For the past two seasons he has been playing independently but his ability was brought to the attention of Comiskey while in the East a short time ago and he began the negotiations which ended in Allen being signed.

—Mr. and Mrs. William Meier, of Westfield, formerly of Netherwood, are the parents of a ten pound baby girl.

—Prof. Edward H. Griggs will lecture in Westfield on Monday, November 14, under the auspices of the Woman's Club.

—Borough School Commissioner M. A. Overton says that the Board of Education hopes to have the new school building on Somerset street ready for occupancy by the time school reopens next September.

—Mrs. George Neff, of Fairview avenue, has just gone on a visit to her former home in Kansas, to be gone about two months.

SATURDAY ON THE TRACK

Horses Make Good Time at Weekly Matinee Event.

LAST OF THE SEASON

Though Somerville Club May Conduct Race on Local Track Next Week.

Concluding a successful racing season, the last of the weekly matinee races under the auspices of the Plainfield Driving Club, of this city, was held Saturday afternoon at the Park.

After losing the first two heats in the 2:40 race, L. D. Wood's Sadie Smith took the next three races straight, winning in good time. Lady Eternal, owned by J. H. Green, Jr., finished first in the first two heats, and came in second in the last three. Alcyetta, owned by Hodge, of Somerville, was third, and Brightson, owned by B. Thorn, of Rahway, finished fourth. Time, 2:27, 2:33, 2:36, 2:37, 2:37.

In the 2:27 class, only two horses were entered, Ned Davis and Fancy Step, owned by D. C. Smalley and J. H. Green, respectively. Ned Davis won the first two and the last heats in this race, the time being as follows: 2:33, 2:33, 2:32, 2:34.

Rex, the fast pacer owned by A. C. Blair, of this city, won the 2:20 race, capturing the first two and the fourth heats, while Glitters Lad, owned by J. H. Green, and Tom Brantingham's Maryland Boy won second and third places. The time was as follows: 2:26, 2:24, 2:26, 2:26.

The half mile running race between N. Huntington's Lucsation and C. Pope's Dark Night, was won by the former in two straight heats. The time was 1:01:37. Following the running race, Mr. McKinsey exhibited his team of pacers who made the half mile in 1:18.

HOLIDAY FOOTBALL GAMES

Orange Field Club Wins From Dunellen in Close Game.

GOAL FROM THE FIELD

Atis Defeats the Madison A. C. by the Small Margin of a Goal From the Field.

In a well played game of football the Orange Field Club team defeated the Dunellen aggregation on the Orange Oval Tuesday morning by the score of 6 to 5. The two teams were evenly matched in weight and played a hard, close game. Orange scored their 6 points in the first half, Smith making the touchdown on an end run of ten yards, while in the second half Hamilton crossed the line for the Dunellen team. Tobin's kick from the first touchdown won the game, as the Dunellen goal was missed. The teams lined up as follows:

O. F. C.—Emmons, left end; W. McCullough, left tackle; Banks, left guard; Hellyer, center; J. McCullough, right guard; Giddis, right tackle; Shephard, right end; McVoy, quarterback; Smith, 1st half; Tobin, fullback; Todd and Sherwin, right half.

On the Atis field in the afternoon, the Madison A. C. was defeated in a game which had to be shortened on account of the darkness, by the Atis eleven, the score being 11 to 0. After Whitney had scored a touchdown in the first half, in the last half minute of play Captain Phillips kicked a pretty goal from the field. The following was the line up of the local team: Thayer, left end; Voorhees, left tackle; Guyer and Guinn, left guard; Prince, center; Derby, right guard; Egan, right tackle; Moore, right end; Phillips, quarterback; McNaughton, left half; Whitney, fullback; W. Moore, right half.

Two touchdowns by William Douglass, and a safety in the second half won the game for the Plainfield High School football team yesterday morning against the Carlton A. C., of this city. One goal from the touchdown made the final score 12 to 0. The Plainfield High School team lined up as follows: Loizeaux, left end; Jahr, left tackle; Fountain, left guard; Bogart, center; Freeman, right guard; Bentley, right tackle; Jones, right end; Williams, quarterback; J. Douglass, left half; Taylor, fullback; W Douglass, right half.

The quarantine has been raised at the home of Rev. Dr. H. B. Shaw, of Central avenue, his wife and daughter, who were ill with diphtheria, having recovered.

Next Sunday being Y. M. C. A. Sunday throughout the country, the local pastors will preach sermons appropriate to young men.

DEATH INTERRUPTS TOUR

Bride's Father, John L. Darby, Dies Suddenly.

WELL-KNOWN CITIZEN

His Daughter, Edith Marion Darby, Just Wedded to Edward P. Simons, of Philadelphia.

Married quietly in this city Saturday afternoon by Rev. Charles M. Herring at his study, the honeymoon of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Paul Simons was sadly and abruptly terminated Sunday. The bride was Miss Edith Marion Darby and while she and her husband were at a hotel in Washington, D. C., word came by telegram that her father, John L. Darby, one of the best known residents in Fanwood township, had passed away at his home in Alden. His death was unexpected and the news came as a great shock to the young couple who had received the blessing of the parent only the day before. The groom is a young Philadelphian and prominent as an architect in the Quaker City.

John L. Darby was born in the old Darby homestead on Rahway road, fifty-eight years ago, and always resided in that vicinity. He was prominent in the politics of Fanwood township as a staunch Democrat and had served the party in different capacities. He was collector in the town*ship for several terms* and tendered his resignation last Friday evening on account of ill health. While the sickness was confining it was not thought in any way serious but last night a sudden turn for the worse came and he succumbed within a short time. His death was due to a complication of disease and is the first that has occurred in the family. He leaves a widow and five children, all of whom are married.

The ceremony which united Miss Edith Darby and Mr. Simons was performed without any display because of the father's illness. They left soon afterward on their wedding trip and by a fortunate circumstance the telegrams sent last night reached them quickly and they returned home today.

AMUSEMENTS.

One of the greatest difficulties to be solved in the performances of "Parsifal" is made by the number of invisible choruses in the Grail scenes. Two female choruses and a choir of boys are stationed in the fly galleries on either side of the stage. Only by chance can they hear the orchestra, so the question of getting the proper pitch is a very serious one. A conductor is with each. Various methods were experimented with and finally Mr. Savage found a little melodeon of four and one-half octaves, that folds up in a leather case little larger than a suit case. It is a most ingenious instrument, complete as far as it goes, and splendidly adapted to the purpose for which it is used. In a production in which everything must be packed in the smallest possible compass this little organ is regarded as a great acquisition. Parsifal is now drawing big houses at the New York Theatre.

The fame of McCutcheon's Bird Center cartoons has extended all over the entire country and it was altogether natural, therefore, that those famous pictures, pregnant with humor and originality should attract the omnivorous dramatist who is ever seeking fresh themes for stage use. "Bird Center," a new comedy-drama evolved from the McCutcheon cartoons, is one of the most stimulating promises of the early season. It received its initial production in New York Thursday, at the Majestic Theatre and will direct from Chicago after a successful run at the Grand Opera House, that historic home of successful plays. Whatever the merits of the new play may be it is certain to receive artistic interpretation. A quintette of such clever comedians as Edward J. Connelly, George Richards, William Burress, Louis Payne and George E. Mack are seen in the lead*ing comedy roles, while accomplished* actresses like Blanche Chapman, Rose Coghlan and Mabel Strickland are doing justice to the quaint types of femininity in "Bird Center."

Birthday Dance.

In honor of the anniversary of his birthday, H. H. Coward, of East Front street, gave an informal dance to a number of friends in the old Common Council rooms on Park avenue, Monday night. The affair was marked by many pleasant features. Westervelt, of Newark, furnished the music.

Norman VanNest, son of Mr. and Mrs. George VanNest, of Mariners place, is detained at home with a severe injury to his hip, the result of a fall while at play.

—Some of the good things at Neuman Brothers' tomorrow: Choice crisp celery, Jersey cauliflower, green wax beans and mushrooms. All are received fresh each morning.

MUCH INTEREST TAKEN

E. B. Shoemaker and Mrs. Clifton Wharton Win Honors—Dr. Carroll and R. Rogers Are Tied.

The attendance at the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club on Saturday was much larger than usual, although not a great many scores were posted for the Golf Committee cup and Gaston cups. The course was crowded during the afternoon with enthusiastic players, many low scores being made. During the afternoon a number of members gathered at the clubhouse and enjoyed the social features provided.

E. B. Shoemaker won first honors for the Golf Committee cup with the low net score of 79, while E. E. Iremonger and J. A. Lane divided the remaining honors, each returning a net score of 81.

These scores were posted for the Golf Committee cup:

E. B. Shoemaker, 88, 9—79; E. E. Iremonger, 92, 11—81; J. A. Lane, 102, 21—81; Robert Abbott, 81, plus 2 —83; E. A. Cruikshank, 101, 18—83; C. B. Morgan, 91, 6—85.

There were two scores returned for the Gaston cup, each receiving 3½ points. The scores were E. A. Cruik*shank, 101, 0—101; J. A. Lane, 102, 1* —101.

In the morning there was a women's tournament, at nine holes. This was won by Mrs. Clifton Wharton with a score of 49, while Mrs. B. Payson Legare and Miss Helen Bloodgood were tie for second place with a score of 50.

An unusually large number of scores were returned for the President's and Park Golf Club cups at the Park Golf Club on Saturday, and throughout the afternoon the course was well occupied with players. For the President's cup the point-winners were Rev. Dr. H. K Carroll and Herbert Rogers, who were tie for first honors, and Samuel Townsend and George T. Rogers who were tie for second place. For the Park Golf Club cup, Herbert Rogers won first honors, while George T. Rogers and S. St. John McCutchen were tie for second honors. The competition was very close, the contestants being evenly matched.

These scores were posted for the two cups:

Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, 104, 16—88; Herbert Rogers, 95, 7—88, Samuel Townsend, 107, 18—89; George T. Rogers, 104, 14—90; J. H. Howell, 106, 16—90; John I. Watson, 128, 17—96; S. St. John McCutchen, 103, 5—98; Charles L. Nichols, 118, 19—99; Charles A. Reed, 109, 8—101.

CAME LONG DISTANCE TO VOTE IN PLAINFIELD

JESSE LAWSON, OF WASHINGTON, OBSERVES ANNUAL CUSTOM.

Jesse Lawson, a former Plainfielder, but for many years an employe in the Pension Department at Washington, was among those who came home to vote Tuesday. Mr. Lawson cast his first vote in 1876 and has always voted in Plainfield ever since. In speaking of political matters, Mr. Lawson related with considerable pride that in 1880, the year that President Roosevelt was graduated from Harvard, he was one of the speakers at a political meeting in the Eleventh District, New York, with Mr. Roosevelt, and he had always been a warm personal friend of the President ever since.

When President Roosevelt invited Booker T. Washington to take dinner with him at the White House, the invitation was sent to him through Mr. Lawson. Being a graduate of the Plainfield High School, Howard University, as well as the law department of the university, Mr. Lawson is specially qualified for his position, that of looking after the legal points in pension applications. He has held this position for years, but is now endeavoring to get the appointment to a Recordership in Washington, now held by a colored man whose term expires next March.

—William Langer, of Fairview avenue, is building a residence on the corner of Fairview avenue and Verdon street, where he intends to reside. It will be ready for occupancy about the first of the year, as the work is now well along.

DROWNED IN RAIN BARREL

Three-Year-Old Boy Dies As Playmates Laugh at Him.

HIS MOTHER FRANTIC

Attis Alphonso Crellie Tripped and Fell in Water Barrel—Dead in Three Minutes.

While his older brothers and sisters and several other playmates looked on wonderingly at his helpless struggles, Alphonso Crellie, the three-and-a-half-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Crellie, of Columbia avenue, was drowned in a rain barrel at his home Friday afternoon. Running about the yard in a childish game, he tripped and fell into the receptacle, which stood half sunk in the ground beneath the leader pipe. It was nearly filled with water and as [his] head went down with a splash the other children laughed in glee at the thought of his "getting a ducking."

When he did not arise, their merriment changed to wonder and finally alarm. One of them ran to the house and summoned Mrs. Crellie who had heard their shouts but thought it was simply in their fun. By the time she reached the barrel the child's struggles had ceased and it lay partially submerged in the water, face downward.

The frantic mother lifted the boy out and rolled him about the ground but to no purpose. Every method known in resuscitation was tried by herself and neighbors but not the slightest sign was given to indicate that a spark of life remained. It is considered a very unusual case as the child was not in the water more than three minutes at the most and there are numerous instances on record where people have been revived after five and six minutes submersion. The little fellow was in robust health and the doctor called declared the result of strangulation.

County Physician Westcott investigated the case and finding it purely accidental, granted a burial permit. He was told by the parents that ordinarily a cover was kept over the barrel but yesterday it had been taken off by some one who had forgotten to replace it.

BOROUGH COLLECTOR GETS ADDING MACHINE

MISCELLANEOUS WORK OF NORTH PLAINFIELD COUNCIL.

In the regular order of business at the borough Council meeting last Friday, it was voted to purchase an adding machine for Collector George E. Brown at a cost not to exceed $350. The motion led to a wide discussion as to the need of the contrivance and the members were divided in their opinion, Councilmen Krewson and VanWinkle voting against it. Before disposing of it, Mayor Smalley called upon Mr. Brown to explain why it was needed and he gave several sufficient reasons.

Chairman Arnold reported that during the past month, $938.95 had been expended in street repairs and $891.78 for stone. Mr. VanArsdale reported fifteen arrests by the police department and cited the disposition of the cases. Claims to the amount of $2,-236 81 were ordered paid and a bill from Architect Frederick Lancaster for $35, as commission in fixing up the new police station, was rejected. On motion of Mr. Lee an electric light was ordered placed on Whitewood avenue between Regent street and Cedarglen avenue.

The ordinance for occupying the new police station was passed on its third reading and it will go into effect November 15. Through a communication from the Secretary of State, the question of insurance and safe keeping of the two voting machines in the borough was brought up and the matter was not taken. Nearly every member of the Council passed some facetious remark about the much discussed machines and Mayor Smalley's suggestion that they be put under lock and key at police headquarters for ninety days may be accepted.

People' Recital.

On Monday evening, November 14, J. Edmund Skiff will present a few of his pupils in a recital in the Camera Club rooms in the Babcock building. Free tickets of admission may be secured of Mr. Skiff at his studio, or at Stettel's music store on North avenue, or at the Mathushek piano rooms on West Front street.

Miss Nellie Meade, of this city, has returned from a visit at her former home in High Bridge.

Mrs. Peter VanDoran, of South Branch, has returned home after a visit of several days with relatives in the borough.

GUN CLUB IS ACTIVE

Local Organization Arranges for Tournament Nov. 19.

AT THE DRIVING PARK

Invitations to be Extended Many Organizations — Fifteen Events Scheduled.

Not since the days of the Middlesex Gun Club, which twelve years ago was one of the leading clubs in the city, has the prospect of a successful season in trap shooting appear so bright as at the present time. Though from time to time local shooters have attempted to reorganize the sport and have held shoots on a small scale, no big shoots have taken place in this vicinity.

At a meeting last night, the newly organized Plainfield Gun Club, arranged to conduct an all day shoot in this city Saturday, November 19, at the Plainfield Driving Park. The affair will be an elaborate one, the following being present in this city on the occasion:

Neaf Apgar, of this city; T. H. Keller, Jr., Jack Fanning, Sim Clover, "Pete" Emmons, of Trenton; Marshall Harrington, trap editor of Forest and Stream, and others.

Invitations will be extended to the following clubs in the vicinity: Rahway Gun Club, Bon Air Shooting Club, Trenton Shooting Association, South Side Gun Club, of Newark; Brookside Gun Club, of Scotch Plains, and the Independent and Grant Avenue Gun Clubs, of this city. All unattached shooters are also invited to participate in the various events.

There will be fifteen events, every third being a sweepstakes. Inter-State rules will prevail, except "no bang, no bird." The shooting will start at 10 a. m. Merchandise and cash prizes will be offered. In addition to the events there will be several individual matches arranged between local shooters. It will be the first fall tournament of the new organization and all indications point to its success.

Among the local shots who will be invited and will probably enter in the different events are the following: Dr. B. F. Leonard, Dr. C. W. Leonard, Dr. Lufburrow, Dan Gavin, Henry Hanrand, Lou VanDyke, Asa Ayers, Herbert Overbagh, "Pete" Fetring, Dr. Lucky, Robert McCormack, George Johnston, Edward Hand, Van Goodman, "Oy" Wilcox, Scott Terry, "Bill" Terry, Charles Keller, C. W. Krause, and others.

A complete programme of the events of the day will be issued next week. The committee in charge is as follows: Neaf Apgar, Henry P. Vossellar, Phil Jahn, R. E. Sebring and Charles E. Kelley.

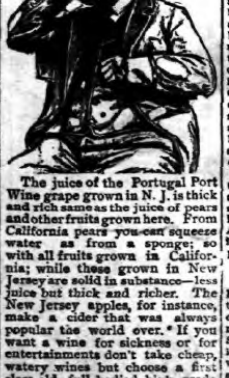
As this is the season of the year for coughs and colds, it is necessary that everyone should be prepared. L. W. Randolph, the West Front street druggist, has just what you need in this line, and the remedies will give quick relief. He also carries a full line of rubber bags, all sizes, which are often a household necessity, especially during the fall and winter. That Mr. Randolph's efforts to please the public are appreciated is attested by the increase in patronage.

ALFRED SPEER,

THE ORIGINAL

Port Grape Wine Producer in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had



The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California, while these grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. The New Jersey apples, for instance, make a cider that was always popular the world over.* If you want a wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards.* Sold by Druggists.

THE UNEXPECTED HAPPENED

Too Careful Wife "Did Nicely," But There Was Some of It to Be Undone.

"Everything is ready. My trunk is packed, sent to the station and is checked through. Didn't I do nicely?"

"That's good management, that is."

This was the conversation between a certain west end man and his wife one afternoon recently, relates the Albany Journal. The wife was about to go on a western trip and expected to leave on the 11:49 train that night for Buffalo. Her husband had secured a pass for her, and she was happy. At the dinner table the question of readiness for the trip again became the topic of discussion.

"Have you your money and pass all right?" inquired the husband.

"Oh, yes," answered the wife, fumbling in her pocketbook. "I placed it in this compartment. Why, what has become of it? My goodness, it isn't here!" And she turned with apprehension. "Whatever did I do with it?"

"Look in your bureau drawers," suggested the husband.

This was done, and every possible hiding place was searched, but without success.

"I believe I placed it in my trunk," said the excited wife, almost in tears. "I am almost sure I did. Whatever will I do?"

"Have you your trunk check?"

"Yes. But the trunk has gone to Buffalo."

"Maybe it hasn't gone yet. Give me the check and trunk key and I'll see if I can find it." Saying which the disgusted husband hurried to the baggage room of the Union station, where luck favored him. The trunk was still there. After some little difficulty he opened the trunk and found the missing pass stowed carefully away in one of the numerous boxes in the upper part of the trunk. From then on until the train left for Buffalo the husband kept watch of the pass. A too careful wife is apt to need assistance.

THE SACRED CACTUS HERE.

Grows Only in Caverns and Is Found in the Gaudalupe Mountains.

The chief Sabbath attraction in an uptown church recently was a pyramid cactus. It held the most conspicuous place on the altar, and scores of strangers visited the church to see it, says the New York Times.

"It was given to our home missionary," said one of the members, "by an Indian convert in New Mexico. The cactus grows only in Texas, and is found in the Gaudalupe mountains. The beautiful vase-shaped maroon blooms develop to over two inches in diameter, and there are as many as 130 on a mature plant. In early times the faithful Indians used the caverns as churches, and beautiful places of worship they must have made with majestic walls of variegated limestone wreathed in flowering juniper and mountain laurel. They must have met over the mouth of the spring chanting seasonal songs to their gods. When they reached the mouth of the cavern the chiefs were decorated with the pyramid cacti, and a dance was performed.

Then chanting, dancing, and the sacrifice of animals took place in the cave. Often the redskins, worn out with their exertions, fell asleep and stayed through the day and night of devotion within the sacred precincts. To this day near the sacred cactus plants was the same to the aborigines as a visit to Mecca is to the Mohammedan. The touching of its leaves was a purification in itself. From some mysterious part of the plant a liquid was extracted to serve for medicine, and the flower petals were placed upon a babe's forhead at christenings."

THE MAN WHO MADE JAPAN

Marquis Ito Is to Be Accredited with Advancement of the Island Empire.

It is to Marquis Ito that Japan owes in a very great measure the position she now holds in the world. But for him she might be to-day a second China; but for him she would assuredly not be the rival of Russia, the chosen ally of England, says the London World.

He belongs by birth to what we should call the lower middle class, and has therefore had neither wealth nor influential connections to give him a helping hand. None the less, at an age when in England he would have been counted a boy he was already a minister plenipotentiary arranging terms of peace with the great powers of Europe. For he had the good luck in very early years—it was a pure piece of luck—to attract the attention of the old emperor, Komei Yenno, who was so struck by his extraordinary ability and all-round cleverness that he took his education into his own hands and set to work to train him for a political career.

In 1867 the old emperor died, but his successor, Mootsuhito, had just as high an opinion of Ito as his father had had and as soon as he had power in his hands he made him governor of Hiogo. A year later he made him finance minister, a post from that day to this Ito has practically ruled Japan.

Lesson in Rice Eating.

Rice grown we believe that there are hundreds of thousands of people in this country who do not eat rice, because they know so little about the various ways of preparing it as a food. So they are going to have a $16,000 exhibit at the St. Louis exposition, in which the cereal will be served in scores of forms, just as potatoes are now commonly served, for which they claim rice is an excellent substitute.—N. Y. Times.

AIRSHIP RACES FOR PRIZES.

Programme of Aerial Contests for the World's Fair Season at St. Louis.

With the issuance of an announcement to prospective airship contestants of changes in the rules, the arrangements for the aeronautic tournament, which is expected to be the most spectacular feature of the world's fair, were virtually completed, says the New York Telegraph.

The changes announced are as follows:

The minimum speed required in the race for the grand prize of $100,000 is 18½ miles an hour, instead of 20 miles.

Formal entries will be received until June 1, instead of closing May 1.

The prize for the highest altitude attained is withdrawn, because of the great danger in such contests without adequate motive.

There will be only eight races for spherical balloons, instead of ten, and they will begin the first Monday in June. There will be no races in May.

Prizes of cups, medals and other trophies are offered for amateur balloon races, having the races in charge. Of the number one is a St. Louisan and 27 others are residents of the United States. Only six foreign contestants have thus far entered. M. Santos-Dumont and M. Lebaudy are among prospective contestants who have visited the city.

The competitive flights will take place between June 6 and September 30. Alternate weeks have been chosen for the trials, and each competitor must make at least one flight during each week on a day due to be chosen by himself and announced the day previous. He must choose days on which the expositions is open, and may make as many trials as he chooses within the prescribed dates.

The start of any trial must always be between ten o'clock and sunset.

This arrangement does away with the necessity of the ships racing side by side like horses. The contest will be like a game of golf, in which a person may play his game without a competitor in the ground, the decision being made after a comparison of records at the end of the series.

For minor prizes for airships, balloons, dirigible balloons and kites, $50,000 is set aside by the exposition, and the remaining $50,000 is for dispatches. In addition to the grand prize there will be four minor prizes, amounting to $3,500, $3,000, $2,000 and $1,500, to be awarded according to speed.

THE MARINE "MINISTER."

Comforts of the "Interior" Are Provided For by the Steamer's Chief Steward.

The comfort of the passengers depends, perhaps, more to the vigilance and executive ability of the chief steward than anyone else, writes Winthrop Packard, in "Stewards of an Ocean Liner," in Bookman Magazine. He it is who orders the supplies for the voyage, has a minute knowledge of what the storerooms and refrigerators contain, and sees that the menu for each meal is ample, well cooked and daintily served. He makes arrangements in port for the entire trip, plans each day's meals at sea and, with the assistance of the chief cook, gets up the menu card. You will find him mornings in his office, just off the grand staircase, making up his books and records; but during the rest of the day he is all over the ship, now taking a look at the storerooms far below to see that groceries and provisions are rightly served out to the cooks, now inspecting the refrigerators to note the temperature, again watching the butchers with precise knowledge of how meats shall be cut, and seeing that they are delivered to the cooks on time and in the right quantities.

All these things he is responsible for; but, in addition to these duties, he must also keep a minute record of all transactions of this sort, and must have a watchful eye upon the passengers to note that his lieutenants among the men are giving them prompt and cheerful service. He has a record of every passenger traveling with him, and all the details connected with his journey. If you sailed with him last year or 20 years ago, he can refer to his books and tell you the date of the voyage, its duration, your room and seat at table, and just what the stewards served you.

Crusoe's Island.

In writing "Robinson Crusoe," Defoe, with a story seller's genius, took many liberties with the original narrative. One of these changes has been to tell us that Crusoe's island was situated on the east coast of South America, near the mouth of the Orinoco river. There can be no doubt, however, that the island of Juan Fernandez, with its cave and its lookout, was the island which Defoe has described; nor that the adventures of Alexander Selkirk have been faithfully reproduced with an added charm, in the story of "Robinson Crusoe."—From Francis Arnold Collins' "Robinson Crusoe's Island," in St. Nicholas.

THE MISSES COGAN AND HASBROUCK WIN

IN FINAL ROUND OF P. H. S. GIRLS' TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

Winning the final round in the girls' tennis tournament at the Plainfield High School, Miss May Cogan and Miss Margaret Hasbrouck are the champions in doubles for the year 1904. They defeated the Misses Taylor and Pierson in a hard fought match Wednesday afternoon on the Albert street courts. The score was 7-5, 5-7, 6 2. In the first two sets, the two teams played a remarkably even game, consisting each point for a long time. Rallies several minutes in length were frequent. They turned the tables on each other in these sets, Miss Taylor and Miss Pierson bracing in the second and winning out by the same score.

In the final set, the players seemed tired out, and the game was not as good. The losing pair appeared outclassed, and the victory was comparatively easy for Miss Cogan and Miss Hasbrouck by the score of 6-2. The Girls' Athletic Association has not yet purchased cups for the winners of the tournament in doubles, though it is thought that they will procure them in the near future. It is the plan of the association to have the cups presented when the field meet honors are awarded to the boys of the school.

To Tear Down Buildings.

Alex. Kane has purchased from the Plainfield Trust Company the Force house and barn on West Second street, near Park avenue, and has been given ninety days in which to remove the buildings. He also has an option on the old row of buildings owned by the Plainfield Trust Company and located on Park avenue. The company expects to begin the work of erecting the new bank building at the corner of Park avenue and Second street, April 1 next. In the meantime, the work of removing the buildings and preparing plans will go on. Mr. Kane will demolish his newly-purchased buildings and sell the lumber.

Kept Wedding a Secret.

Mrs. Catherine Honan, of West Fourth street, announces the marriage of her daughter, Miss Mary L. Honan, to Eugene A. Held, of this city, formerly of Nashua, N. H. The ceremony was performed on Wednesday, October 26, and was kept a secret by the young people until yesterday.

BOOK NEWS.

It is planned to issue on Thursday of each week items of Library news. This will frequently take the form of book lists, such as lists of books recently added, lists on special subjects and lists topics. Readers of this note will be assured, the sum total to make these representations of real service to the reader by giving him the opinion of a trustworthy critic as to the value of the books or a few words as to their scope. Readers should keep these lists. The Plainfield Public Library will furnish to anyone making application a list of its books on a given subject.

Public Library Notes.

The Library's previous list of 100 good short stories, printed in The Daily Press February 11 and 18, proved so popular, that another list has been compiled, which it is hoped may be equally so.

MACBETH'S TRAGIC LIFE

Subject Discussed by Prof. Edward Howard Griggs.

OUTLINED THE PLOT

The Fourth of the Shakespeare's Series Heard by a Large Audience.

Swept on by an uncontrollable ambition, challenging fate at every turn, and finally falling under the natural consequences of sin, Macbeth's life was a tragic one as was vividly portrayed Wednesday afternoon by Professor Edward Howard Griggs, in the fourth of his Shakespearean lectures in Vincent chapel. The title of the lecture was "The Tragedy of Ambition," and the theme was clearly presented.

The visible consequences of the sin, the inevitable punishments which the natural forces of the world work upon the criminal, and the horrible results of Macbeth's deeds are, as the speaker said, pictured with Shakespeare's usual co-operation with the laws of humanity. So completely is the author's dramatic instinct displayed that in spite of the thrilling tragic scenes with which the plays abounds, the horrorous tension of the reader is always relieved by the introduction of some descriptive and beautifully poetic passage. None of the horrifying murder scenes are presented on the stage, as in the drama "Julius Cæsar." The points of view in these two tragedies is different, so that in Macbeth the tragic scenes are presented only indirectly, and yet none of the force of the play is lost.

The lecturer outlined the plot of the drama to some length, referring to the various characters, and completing them with other creations of Shakespeare's pen. He spoke of the three main tragedies of passion, Othello, Lear and Macbeth, the first representing the passion of jealousy, the second rage, and the last ambition.

Professor Griggs pointed out the fact that the play was perhaps written in a hurried manner as would be suggested by the rapid, impetuous movement of the drama as there is no ethical force incomplete, as in the "Merchant of Venice," no problem unsolved as in "Hamlet." Professor Griggs' reference to the character of Lady Macbeth was decidedly interesting and instructive. The possessor of an indomitable will, she added to her husband's wavering resolve her remarkable nerve, until swamped in crime, he ejaculates "I am in blood stepped—so far that, should I wade no more, returning were as tedious as go o'er," and from that time pursues his murderous course, blindly, while his wife breaks beneath the strain, and succumbs to death. In the eventual ruin of Macbeth, is seen the natural outcome of a passion, which, uncontrolled and irresistable, spurred on by the prophecies of fate, and by a woman's taunts, leaves its owner entirely to the power of circumstances and a challenger of destiny.

BEAUTIFUL DISPLAY OF CHRYSANTHEMUMS

FOUR HUNDRED PLANTS ON PUBLIC EXHIBITION.

It has always been the yearly custom of Stephen C. Ginna, of Washington avenue, to invite all lovers of flowers to his conservatory to see his beautiful chrysanthemums. The usual invitation has been extended this year and a large number of persons have thus far availed themselves of the opportunity to see this display, probably not equalled in this part of the State.

There are over four hundred plants in the collection this year, seventy varieties, including several new ones. The plants are displayed in Mr. Ginna's handsome barn, where there is more room. Special attention is directed to two plants, one named for Mr. Ginna's wife and the other for his daughter, Mrs. Erickson Perkins, who is now visiting her parents. The one named for Mrs. Ginna is a cerise and the one for the daughter a gold and bronze.

Probably one of the most valued plants is a white one, eleven inches across the top. There are many white ones, interspersed with the yellow plants, presenting a rare display of beauty. Other colors include the bronze, pink, red, garnet, white called the Black Hawk, attracts general attention. In addition to the display of chrysanthemums and orchids of which Mr. Ginna is especially fond, he is showing a fine collection of other flowers, including carnations, one of which is a sprout from the celebrated $30,000 carnation called the Lawson. There is probably no finer display of flowers in a private collection to be found in this part of the country and Mr. Ginna is pleased to have his neighbors and the people of the city enjoy it with him.

BOROUGH'S GRIEVANCES

Indictment Against Somerset County Strongly Presented.

NUMEROUS COUNTS

Mayor Smalley Fearlessly Proclaims Why North Plainfielders Are Dissatisfied.

Waxing indignant as he began addressing the large audience at the Good Government Club gathering, Thursday night, Mayor N. B. Smalley recited in detail the wrongs that have been heaped upon the borough by the Somerset County leaders. In order that the issue before the fight might be understood why he opposed certain candidates, he presented facts and figures which showed that North Plainfield has been paying more and receiving less from the county than any other town within its limits. His statements were based on personal knowledge and investigation and they were as follows:

"The spirit of unfairness to North Plainfield extends not only to elections, but to all county affairs. Take, for example, the subject of stone roads built by the county. The only stone road in the borough or township in the building of which a dollar of county money was expended, the Board of Freeholders refused to build until compelled by an order of the Supreme Court of the State. Since that time they have steadfastly refused to build a single mile of road leading into the borough, although they have built many miles which lead to, or benefit Somerville.

"North Plainfield pays in county taxes into the county treasury, more money than any other single town in the county, and yet this year our new assessor has materially raised our valuations, thus increasing the amount which we must pay. We pay this year in county taxes $15,551.84, and yet in addition to refusing to build any road leading into this borough, the Board of Freeholders has this year appropriated as the share of the county money to be used in the borough, only the sum of $2,500. Out of this must be paid $1,900 for the Girard avenue bridge, which was contracted for last year, and ought to have been paid for out of last year's appropriations. Therefore, out of the $15,551 paid by the borough, we really get back for improvements in the borough, only the insignificant sum of $600—which statement is made on the authority of John Emmons, the Freeholder from the borough, who adds that the $600 has already been spent, and he is without funds.

"This is one instance which shows how the taxpayer of the borough is being robbed for the benefit of other parts of the county.

"In every department of county government, North Plainfield is discriminated against. Take for example the subject of prisoners convicted before the Borough Recorder, and sentenced to serve a term in the county jail at Somerville, as the law provides. Long before the term for which a prisoner was sentenced had expired, he was out of the jail and at liberty. The excuse? none that we could learn. It finally became evident that prisoners from North Plainfield were not wanted in the county jail, although the borough pays so large a portion of the expenses of maintaining that institution. This is another instance which shows how the borough is wronged.

"Take the subject of county bridges. It is well known that only by the hardest kind of a fight can we get a bridge built in the borough by the freeholders, or one enlarged, even where great damage is being done to property by reason of its insufficient throat. That is common knowledge. "Only recently J. E. Frelinghuysen, chairman of the Republican County committee, declared to me that no man from North Plainfield could have any office. That is true, and those Republicans of the borough who last spring were in open opposition to the regular Republican organization in the borough, are hand in glove with the Republican politicians of other parts of the county.

"Knowing that the nominees for county office would be obnoxious to many borough voters, they concluded it would be wise to have a voting machine in every polling place in the borough, and then declared about the county that they had the North Plainfield Republicans by the throat. What are we going to do about it? There is no great political issue at stake. The Legislature will be strongly Republican in any event. The election of these men will only strengthen the hands of those who use their power to the injury of North Plainfield.

"The only possible way for the borough to get its rights is to keep on voting against such methods until it becomes clear that we will not submit to them.

"The following from a recent editorial in The Newark Evening News, seems to me appropriate to the occasion:

"'Voting a straight ticket may or may not indicate cowardice or slavery, but a ticket scratched and split for reasons is an indication that the voter acted carefully, thoughtfully, intelligently and with a full and conscientious appreciation of his duties as a citizen.'"

EPWORTH LEAGUERS OBSERVE ANNIVERSARY

REV. DR. MORGAN, OF NEWARK, TALKS AT MONROE AVE. M. E. CHURCH.

Under the auspices of the Monroe Avenue church chapter of the Epworth League of the thirteenth anniversary of the society was observed last night at the chapel and was in every way a pleasant occasion. The chapel room was well filled.

Addresses by William N. Sortor, the president of the society, and by Rev Dr. William H. Morgan, of Central M. E. church, of Newark, were much enjoyed.

Two violin solos by Ernest Higham were well received, and played in a highly creditable manner. The programme in full was as follows:

Hymn, "Stand up, Stand up For Jesus;" prayer, by the pastor, Rev. George Mooney; quartette; Scripture; violin solo, Ernest Higham; address of welcome, William N. Sortor, president of Monroe Avenue Chapter Epworth League; quartette; address, "Consecrated Personality," the Rev. Dr. William H. Morgan, of Central M. E. church, Newark; violin solo, Ernest Higham; hymn, "Church Rallying Song; benediction.

The committee in charge of the affair were the following: William N. Sortor, chairman; John J. Praed, N. Mansfield Smith, Miss Georgietta Beakman, Miss Margret Wil iams, and Rev. George Mooney.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY DISCUSSES MORMONISM

SECOND MONTHLY MEETING AT CRESCENT AVE. CHURCH THURSDAY.

Mormonism was the topic at the second monthly meeting of the Women's Home Missionary Society, at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, Thursday afternoon in the church parlors.

Especially interesting were the talks by Mrs. Harman, who has been in New Mexico, and by Mrs. Lawrence Myers, who has also been West and spoke of her experience in Colorado and New Mexico.

Preceding the regular meeting, a joint meeting of the executive committees of the Home and the Foreign Missionary Societies was held for the purpose of arranging for the annual thank offering service in the interest of both societies.

The committees decided upon Tuesday, December 13, for the service, and under the direction of Mrs. Israel Pierson, and Mrs. Samuel Milliken, the presidents of the societies, the arrangements for the joint meeting will begin at once.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 18.

Topic.—Our partnership and fellowship.—I Cor. xii, 26-31; xiii, 1-13.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

The Christian life has many great and precious advantages. One of the most precious of these is Christian fellowship in service and in feeling. In Christ all Christians are one. They are most intimately related, having God as their common Father and Christ as their elder Brother. The result, therefore, is that every Christian is joined to every other Christian. The glorious deeds of the past are our common heritage, and we have a part in the work of the Christian world today. We are laborers with God, but also fellow workers, and should meet the obligations and duties of this relationship as well as enjoy its advantages and privileges.

Christians are partners. They are associated together in the work of the Lord. All Christians have a part in the Lord's work. "To every man his work" was the teaching of Christ. But, moreover, there is what we may call the law of labor. God has given different abilities to different people, that His work may be intelligently and systematically done. In the early church some were apostles, some prophets, etc. Had all been apostles the other branches of the work could not have been done. The same principle holds good today. There are diversities of gifts and consequent diversities of labor, and, whether our gifts are exalted or humble, we should do our work faithfully, and not envy, and without envy, for thus only can all God's work be done in the world.

Christians have fellowship one with another. They are joined in heart as well as in hand. No sweeter fellowship exists in the world than that which exists among the people of God. The tie that binds Christians together is love, the best of all gifts.

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love.
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.

The importances of Christian fellowship is very great. The work of life is made easier to perform, its burdens easier to bear and its temptations easier to overcome if we enjoy close fellowship with the people of God. Therefore let us cultivate fellowship by developing the sentiment of love in our own hearts and in the hearts of others. Envy, jealousy, pride and ill feeling never result in fellowship. It is those who love one another that enjoy the affection and service therefor. If love predominate in a church, fellowship and sociability will exist, for people will love one another delight in each other's companionship, but without love successful partnership and true fellowship are impossible.

BIBLE READINGS.

Josh. i, 7; Matt. xvIII, 19; Acts xvIII, 11-15; I Cor. xv, 58; Gal. i, 1-10; Phil. iv, 1-3; II Tim. i, 16-18; ii, 7-16.

A Call to Action.

This stirring word for the fall campaign has just been sent out by the president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor:

There are two definite ideals that every society may well set before itself:

First, larger numbers, more active members, more associate members, more honorary members. A junior society in every church. These are all possible. There is a social side to the work that may not increase its membership from 10 to 300 per cent within a year.

Second, better prayer meetings, better quality, better prayer meetings, better committees, better service for the church, better union work.

Let us take for one of our mottoes this year, "Larger and better."

"Organize, multiply, evangelize," have been the Christian Endeavor watchwords throughout the world during the past year. Let us add to them for the coming year, "Larger and better. "Larger and better" for the society. "Larger and better work for Christ and the church."

May God help us to use and not abuse the tremendous opportunities of the Christian year. Your friend,

FRANCIS E. CLARK.

General Secretary Vogt's Questions.

What helpful ministries does your society undertake besides giving money and attending the church services?

Is every member asked to do some little regular labor because of his membership?

Are the young folks of the church that are not in the society working for the kingdom?

Why not have them affiliate with you on that basis?

Why not plan definitely to keep every young person in your parish at some little task or, better, some great task all the next year?

It is the surest way to hold them.

It will develop a growing interest in religious things.

It will save them from dangerous periods of doubt.

It is the finest character culture exercise. The Master asks it and needs it. Yours for hard labor.—Von Ogden Vogt.

It Stands For Sacrifice.

Christian Endeavor stands for sacrifice and heroism. We sometimes sing, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord," and we've been trying in our Endeavor work in India not only to sing the hymn, but to live the sentiment which it utters.—Rev. F. S. Hatch, Field Secretary For India.

In Egypt.

Egypt has five societies, and they are decidedly consecrated. One of them has among its members Italians, Syrians, Armenians, Copts, Hindoos, Germans, English and Americans.

Translated From the Swiss.

Endeavorers should be ready not only to seize opportunities for service, but to create them.—L'Activite Chretienne, Swiss Endeavor Organ.

THE SAHARA DESERT

OF ITS VAST INTERIOR WE KNOW BUT LITTLE.

Its Ruler a Despotic Sheik Known as the "Veiled Prophet"—It Is Not All a Great Barren Waste.

The region of Sahara, which has come so prominently before the public, owing to the claim of M. Jacques Lebandy to be emperor of it, is a practically unknown land. Very few Europeans have visited its interior, and the few attempts that have been made to trade with the inhabitants from the coast have resulted in failure, sometimes with disastrous results to the people engaged.

Capt. Rider Noble, an officer in the English army, who was lent some four years ago to his majesty, the sultan of Morocco, has had an exceptional opportunity of penetrating into the country, under the protection of his sheriffian majesty. He found the country rich in minerals, and in many places capable of agricultural developments, inhabited by a large number of nomadic tribes, averaging about 500 members each. The whole were ruled in a despotic manner by a religious chief, or shiek, known as the "veiled prophet," whose national name is Sheik Malain. So great is his power that the sultan of Morocco has an arrangement with him to keep his ferocious subjects in order and prevent them attacking the country under the sultan's rule. This is paid, which, of course, is a fixed tribute. Periodically he issues from the interior to pay a flying visit to the sultan, and it happened during Capt. Noble's stay in Morocco the time had arrived to pay this visit. Contrary to his usual custom of coming only to the borders of Morocco, he had accepted the sultan's invitation to come as far as the city of Fez, and Capt. Noble had the opportunity offered by his friend, the sultan, of meeting this illustrious personage. He came accompanied by his sons and relations, and a retinue of a hundred or more of his tribe, for the most part mounted on the slight camel of the southern desert. There is no doubt that Sheik Malam has profited by his religious renown to add to his prosperity. Not only has he obtained temporal as well as spiritual ascendancy in his own country, but he has played up to his reputation further afield, and in his manner and costume, he does all he can to obtain notoriety, in which he is backed up by the Moorish government. He is treated by them as no other subject of the sultan is treated, and on his arrival some 6,000 infantry were turned out to line the road outside the city gate, while the great officers of state, with retinues in keeping, met him some miles away on the road.

He was a little bit shocked at first at the idea of a dog of a Christian being allowed to come near him, but on the representations of the sultan's officers, he agreed to meet Capt. Noble. This gentleman was extremely fortunate in having a camera with him, and without loss of time proceeded to snapshot the prophet. He at once betrayed nervousness at the black box as he called it, and promptly demanded his umbrella, the usual appenage of an eastern potentate. This was handed to him, as seen in the photograph, and to Capt. Noble's intense amusement, instead of being the cumbrous affair, was a thin-rolling, latest pattern Bond street production. Where and how this had got into the interior of the Sahara, however, no one was able to explain. Capt. Noble also he found the sheik an extremely intelligent, well-read man. He was utterly unable to form any conclusion as to what nationality he was, as he kept the green veil over his face all the time he was in public. The language he used in conversing was classical Arabic.

Capt. Noble feels sure that should M. Lebandy actually carry out his idea of endeavoring to locate himself in the Sahara, he will find the existing ruler an extremely difficult person to oust from his present position.

Not Well Informed.

Kinglake, the historian of the Crimean war, was approached by a spiritualist one day, who told him that the speaker had had a command from the recently deceased Mrs. Kinglake to convert "William Alexander Kinglake" to his doctrines. "Well," said Kinglake, "even in Heaven she has a right to expect obedience. My name is Alexander William Kinglake." The commissioner left at once.—Chicago Daily News.

Hard on the Oldest Son.

A strange law prevails in China. If a native dies while being tried for murder, the very fact of his dying is taken as evidence of his guilt. He has departed, but somebody must suffer; and his eldest son, if he has one, is sent to prison for a year.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Nov. 13: "Our Partnership and Fellowship"—I Cor. xii, 26-31; xiii, 1-13.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES.

In partnership there is a common interest among the members to accomplish some particular work. Each one may have a different reason for desiring to have it done, and the temper of spirit in which they work may not be the same in any two of the workers. So long as there is a common aim some sort or partnership may be maintained, however diverse the motives and feelings of those associated.

Fellowship has less regard for the work to be done, but has to do with the personal relations of the workers. It is the feeling which the members have toward each other. It is the emotion of companionship. It is agreeable association of spirits with like motives and sentiments. Such fraternity may exist and grow stronger with the lapse of time and broadened experience among those whose ideas vary widely and of those who are of little variance.

The highest efficiency and supreme satisfaction are reached when there is a common end sought and all the workers have the same motive and kindred sentiments. But in such case there will be great differences in the ability of the different persons associated together, in their tastes, views and adaptation. The artistic temperament will not be changed to the speculative nor is the mechanical mind to be found with them, but each will find in the other a complement and balance to himself, supplying his lack and assisting to make a complete whole, which no one by himself is able to do.

"One," "Our partnership together with God, and members in particular."

Our partnership is with God and each other in bringing in the kingdom of heaven. This is a definite work. Among the multitude of interests possible to men we are to choose one. We are seeking one, and but one, end. All other pursuits must be merged in this or abandoned as unworthy or inconsistent. "Our citizenship is in heaven." We exercise the franchise now and here on earth, among men, in the affairs of today. This heaven is not a realm lost in the ages past by other men, its citizens remote and under conditions widely variant, but it is to be found in times to come merely in the close unknown future and new surroundings. The kingdom of God is among men, God's prophets now live and teach. The Divine Spirit inspires thought and fires the emotions as really as ever and anywhere.

In this section of Scripture selected for our lesson the apostle is pressing home this truth of fellowship in all partnership.

"There are diversities of gifts."

"Covet earnestly the best gifts."

"I show unto you the excellent way. Follow after charity and desire spiritual gifts, particularly that ye may prophesy."

"Covet to prophesy."

We are to be speakers for God, His heralds.

The spirit of unity in which we are held is not physical appetite, philosophical opinion, aesthetic emotion or commercial advantage, but Christian affection.

"Our fellowship is with the Father and the Son, Jesus Christ."

"If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another."

Showing Forth the Risen Life.

Your business is to trust the risen Lord with your secret hearts, to be believing in His perfect righteousness and by faith to be clothing yourselves with His nature. Your business is to be fighting, as your forefathers fought, against all the temptations to distrust, cowardice, baseness which are besetting you on every side. By simplest acts of daily obedience, by continual efforts to be true, to love truth, to follow truth, you are to prove that Christ's word is speaking to you, speaking in you; you are to show forth His risen life.—F. D. Maurice.

Faith in God.

Of all the blessings which a merciful Redeemer has conferred on us in this world I cannot conceive any gift comparable to the possession of a strong and luminous belief in a divine revelation—faith in God and in Jesus Christ, an abiding faith in the verity of His gospel message and in the blessed promises of eternal life. I would not exchange a single article of the creed for all the treasures of the United States.—Cardinal Gibbons.

Whose but Thee?

From past regret and present faithlessness,
From the deep shadow of foreseen distress,
And from the nameless weariness that grows
As life's long day seems wearing to its close—
Thou Life within my life, than self more near!
Thou veiled Providence infinitely clear!
From all illusive shows of sense I flee
To find my center and my rest in Thee.

Below all depths Thy saving mercy lies,
Through thickest glooms I see Thy light arise;
Above the highest heavens Thou art not more surely than within this earthly round.

Take part with me against these doubts that rise
And to the throne Thee far in distant skies!
Take part with me against the self that Assume the burden of these sins and cares!

How can I call Thee, who art always How shall I praise Thee, who art still most dear?
What shall I give Thee save that Thou hast given,
And whom but Thee have I in earth or heaven?

—Ellen Scudder.

ORGANIZED A. A. MEETS

Secretary Declares Wife Desertion is Increasing.

SHE QUOTES FIGURES

Address by Alexander Johnson on Aid Work and Officers Re-Elected.

Detailed reports outlining the year's work and addresses appropriate to the gathering, made up the programme at the annual meeting of the Organized Aid Association in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church, Thursday. The attendance was not as large as on previous occasions but those present evinced rapt interest in the proceedings.

The meeting was called to order by the president, Dr. H. M. Maxson, and in the absence of Secretary Tyler, Boardman Wright was elected to fill the office. Mr. Wright, who is treasurer, submitted this report: Total receipts from all sources, $894.36; disbursements, $812.52, leaving a balance of $11.84. Dr. Murray rendered the report of the district committee, which was brief, and Miss Sadie M. VanBoskerck, the general secretary, reviewed her work and observations for the past twelve months.

In it she asserted that wife desertion is on the increase in this city and she urged that steps be taken to bring the fact to the attention of the authorities in such a way that more drastic measures will be exercised in dealing with men of this calibre. To bear out her statement she submitted these figures: During 1901-1902, desertions, 14; willful non-support, 9; 1902-3, desertions, 10; willful non-support, 11; 1903-4, desertions, 11; willful non-support, 19. She recommended that a committee be appointed to collect statistics of non-support cases in Union County, this committee to work with similar bodies from other towns, and submit their findings to the Board of Freeholders.

Continuing Miss VanBoskerck made a plea for neglected children in this city and spoke for older brothers and sisters.

"There are many young girls," she said, "living a riotious, downhill life in Plainfield because they are left to grow up in immoral and degraded homes."

During the past five years, thirty children were taken from bad homes and placed where the surroundings and influences were good. In only one instance was it necessary to take a child to court, but she suggested that it might be better if a children's society or an especial committee were provided in order to look after legal perplexities. The total applications for relief during the year, she said, were 769, an increase of 106. In caring for them she had been materially aided by the City Union, King's Daughters, and Overseer-of-the-Poor Ayers, both of whom she praised highly, closing she made an appeal for donations of clothing, saying that many garments were sent out of the city when "they could be put to good use at home."

Following Miss VanBoskerck, an address was given by Alexander Johnson, of the New York School of Philanthropy, on the subject, "The Public's Servants and Their Master." It was highly absorbing and contained many helpful suggestions for organized aid work, particularly with reference to the enforcement of laws.

Before adjournment the following officers were re-elected: President, Dr. H. M. Maxson; vice presidents, John Doull Miller, Mrs. J. K. Myers and Mrs. Frederick G. Mead; secretary, William S. Tyler; treasurer, Boardman Wright.

Edward Lewis, of this city, who has been visiting relatives at High Bridge, is home again.

Mr. and Mrs. John Chamberlain, of this city, have returned from a visit with relatives at High Bridge.

Miss Rafferty, who has spent most of the past year in California, has returned to her home on Willow avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. George G. Davidge, of Rockview terrace, are entertaining out of town friends with an automobile.

Mr. Gardiner, who has occupied his house corner of Grove street and Park place for the past two months, has returned with his family to his New York home for the winter.

MANY GUESTS PRESENT

Ceremony Performed by Rev. William P. Finney, the Bride's Pastor, Assisted by Dr. Zelie.

Miss Elizabeth De La Cour Nivin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Farr Nivin, of Moorestown, Burlington county, and Irving Wayne Clark, son of E. B. Clark, of Crescent avenue, were married Wednesday at 6 p. m. in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, in the presence of a large number of guests from this city and distant points. Rev. William P. Finney, pastor of the Moorestown Presbyterian church, performed the ceremony, assisted by Rev. Dr. S. H. Zelie, of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Adele Nivin, of Moorestown, as maid-of-honor, and the best man was Frederick Clark, of Philadelphia, cousin of the groom. The ushers were Arthur Clark, of Philadelphia, cousin of the groom; Sydney Arthur Brown, of Orange; Malcolm Bonsall, of Morristown; Owen Fleming, W. L. Glasney and Lawrence Tweedy, of this city.

While the wedding march was being played by Arthur Drake, organist of the church, the bride accompanied by her father, who gave her in marriage, was preceded up the aisle of the church by the ushers and the maid-of-honor. At the altar they were met by the groom, best man and officiating ministers. Following the ceremony the bridal party left the church for the home of the groom's father, where a reception was held for the immediate family.

The decorations at the church were quite elaborate. There was an arrangement of chrysanthemums and southern smilax about the pulpit platform, the prevailing colors being green and white. At the home where the reception was held the floral decorations were very attractive. There were pink roses and chrysanthemums in the parlor, while in the dining room there were pink roses, chrysanthemums and white cosmos, a large basket occupying a position in the centre of the table being filled with these flowers.

The bride was gowned in mousseline satin, trimmed with Brussels lace, over a veil and carried lilies of the valley and bridal roses. The maid-of-honor's gown was of pompadour net with pink girdle, and she wore a white beaver hat with pink chiffon strings, and carried pink chrysanthemums.

The ushers were boutonnieres of lilies-of-the-valley.

The bride was the recipient of a large collection of gifts, of great value and use, including silver and gold-lined cuglass, linens, furniture and many other articles.

During the evening Mr. and Mrs. Clark left the city to enjoy a honeymoon. Upon their return they will reside in this city. Mr. Clark is a graduate of Princeton Class '02, engineers, and holds a responsible position with the Phoenix Assurance Company, of London, in the New York office. Both he and his wife have a host of friends and acquaintances who extend their best wishes for their future happiness and success. Owing to the long illness of the groom's father it was arranged to have the wedding celebrated in this city, it being impossible for him to make the trip to Moorestown, the home of the bride.

The music at the reception was furnished by the Imperial Orchestra, directed by Charles M. Dale. The selections as well as the "calls" sung by Hobart Heits, of New York, were well rendered and greatly enjoyed.

Says Candy Not Injurious.

C. H. Hoops, chairman of the executive committee of the National Confectioner's Association, has written Superintendent Wightman, of the North Plainfield schools, asking that he secure a retraction from the Board of Education that candy sold in the borough has injured school children. Mr. Hoops asserts that from an investigation nothing has been found that the candy contains harmful ingredients. The matter is still being considered by the North Plainfield officials.

—After the singing of the song "Alma Mater," written by Miss Mary Leek, class 1900, for the laying of the cornerstone of the new High School, on Thursday, the school was given the pleasure of listening to a few words from the young poetess. Miss Leek spoke of the many pleasant days she had spent in the chapel of the Stillman High School, and she added that she considered it an especial honor to have the words which she had had the privilege of writing, sung with so much enthusiasm.

—Mr. and Mrs. John Auten have moved from Watchung avenue to the New Madison on Madison avenue.

P. H. S. MUSIC CLUBS PERMANENTLY ORGANIZED

HIGH SCHOOL MANDOLIN AND GLEE CLUBS PREPARED FOR WORK.

Under the leadership of Samuel B. Howe, Jr., of the High School faculty, both the glee and instrumental clubs at the school have been rehearsing for several weeks, and the final choice of the clubs will be made this week. The two clubs will be, of great value, it is considered, to the school both in assisting the singing at the exercises, and in furnishing music at entertainments. Both the instrumental and vocal clubs will be led by Mr. Howe, and will be entirely independent of the course in music which is conducted by Charles L. Lewis.

The following is the personnel of the musical association at the present time:

S. B. Howe, Jr., faculty director; Chester H. Briggs, treasurer. Instrumental club—Samuel B. Howe, Jr., leader; mandolins, S. B. Howe, Jr., Chester H. Briggs, Theodore O. Gavett, C. Bertram Leggett, Martin B. Stutsman, Stuart F. Freeman, Monroe Long; guitar, Miss E. K. Cumming; violins, Juna B. Tolles, Clara E. Halard, William F. Gaston, Evelyn M. Berg; flute, Lindsey Best; banjos, Garth Williams, William Briggs; piano, Inez M. Bragg.

Samuel Howe, leader. The following persons constitute the glee club chorus, from which a selection will be made in the near future: Soprano, Wilhelmina C. Pastor, Carre A. Bird, Zella L. Kelly, Miriam C. Carman, Grace G. Chamberlain, Lula M. Stryker, Anna L. Runyon, F. Blanche Heidelolf, Julia Q. Fitz-Gerald, Florence Smalley, Helen M. Whitney, Emma J. Yaeger, Clara L. Kanen, Agnes L. Brown, Christine W Thompson, Lillian Snodgrass, Eleanor VanTuyl, Carola E. Hart, Eva C. Kelly, Mabelle Cubberley, Rose Bottberg, Reisa Sachar, Jannet D. U. Lake, Marion Sachar, Kate Hunting-don; altos, Antoinette Aalbelm, Laura Bent, Jessie F. Maclay, Henrietta Winn, Florence E. Kanen, Daisy Gilbert, Elizabeth Pound, Elsie L. Knowlton, Katherine Miller, Elizabeth D. Winter, Leon Bohan; tenor, Juna B. Tolles; bass, Chester H. Briggs, Samuel Reid, Jr., J. Malcolm Davis, Harold A. Brownell, Philip P. Smith, Theodore O. Gavett, Garth Williams, Howard H. Craig; tenor, Charles F. Titsworth, Samuel B. Howe, Jr.; accompanist, Rezanna B. Love.

CITY COUNCIL MEETS BUT QUICKLY ADJOURNS

REGULAR BUSINESS TO BE CONSIDERED FRIDAY.

Too much pre-election business interfered with the regular November meeting of the Common Council Monday evening, and in consequence an adjournment was taken until Friday night. President Tolles and Councilsman Lee, Randolph, Tyler, Higham, Bullock and Garrigues answered the roll-call, but outside of paying the monthly bills nothing was done. Councilman W. L. Glenk was unable to attend, he being detained at home by illness.

President Tolles suspended the regular order of business on motion of Mr. Lee, for the purpose of receiving reports of committees, but the report of the auditing committee authorizing the payment of bills was the only one received.

An invitation was received from the Timbo Social Club asking the members to visit its rooms Election night to hear the returns and this was accepted. Several members of the Common Council, as well as other city officials were present.

CRAZED FROM GRIEF STAYED AT GRAVESIDE

STORY REGARDING ACTIONS OF MRS. HUBBARD CAN'T BE SUBSTANTIATED.

A story emanating from Brooklyn and published in New York papers, describes a woman named Mrs. John Hubbard, of 624 St. John's place, Brooklyn, kneeling on the grave of her sister Margaret in a cemetery near Plainfield. According to the story Mrs. Hubbard has been missing from her home since last Wednesday and she was found yesterday morning in a hysterical and emaciated condition and her clothing was covered with dirt.

The story further relates that since the death of her sister a year ago, Mrs. Hubbard has been ill with grief, that they had closed their home in Plainfield and moved to Brooklyn.

After her disappearance on Wednesday, says the story, Mr. Hubbard instituted a search for her in the hospitals and various morgues in New York and on Saturday he appealed to a detective agency for aid. After hearing the man's story a detective was sent to the cemetery, where Mrs. Hubbard was found. She was weak and hysterical and it was impossible for to tell where she had been. It is supposed that she had been sleeping in the cemetery.

Inquiries here failed to reveal any facts concerning the story and those who would be supposed to know whether Mrs. Hubbard had been in Plainfield disclaimed any knowledge of the visit.

P. A. C. SELLS FRANCHISE TO A LOCAL SYNDICATE

GAMES FOR WEDNESDAYS, SATURDAYS AND HOLIDAYS NEXT SEASON.

The Plainfield Athletic Club's franchise has been sold to Charles S. Woolston, of this city, for $600. The sale includes a two years' lease on Crescent Oval, the stands, uniforms, baseball bats and other things belonging to the club, also the insurance on the stands and club property. Mr. Woolston is interested with others in the deal and it is proposed to enclose Crescent Oval with a board fence, erect new covered grandstands, grade the field and make such improvements that will prevent a flooding in rainy weather.

A well-founded rumor says that the Hoboken team will be engaged to play here on Wednesdays, Saturdays and holidays. Last season this team introduced Saturday games at Hoboken, but it was not a paying venture. It is believed that the patronage here would be much larger. The team, it is said, will also play Sundays in Hoboken, as at present.

The $600 received for the sale of the franchise will be used to liquidate the club's indebtedness.

—At the annual election of officers of the Boys' Department of the Y. M. C. A., the following were elected: President, Walter Caldwell; vice president, Harold S. Robbs; secretary, Russell Morris. These officers will assume their offices, and will appoint the various committees which will conduct the work in the department for the coming year. The chairmen of these committees will constitute the cabinet of the department, which has the power of making the laws governing the organization, and arranging for all executive business of the boys' department.

—Henry Hazbwrite, of Manning avenue, will move to his new residence on Fairview avenue, the latter part of this week.

WHEN MEN ARE GROWING OLD

Traces of Age on Wives' Faces Are Never Discernible to Some Married Men.

"How old is Tompkins?" was the question, according to a recent writer.

"Oh," said the scion of the house, "Mr. Tompkins is a pretty old man. He must be at least 40."

"Tompkins," said the father, who had not heard his son's reply, "Tompkins? Oh, he's just a youngster yet—about 40, I should say. He'll settle down and do something when he reaches the age of discretion."

"It all depends on how you look at it," said a visitor, commenting later on the difference of opinion as to a man's "youngness" or "oldness" as expressed by the father and son. "I remember when I was a boy I thought that a man at 30 was pretty doleful in years and counted on dying all my great work in the world long before that time. As I reached 25 I did not seem to see 30 in the same light. It didn't look quite so old. When I passed the thirtieth milestone I left myself more of a 'kid' than ever, and looked on 40 as the time when I should begin to consider myself at man's estate. At 35 I decided that a man of 40 was, after all, nothing but a boy developing his powers, and when I got there myself looked forward to 50 as the very earliest age at which I should begin to feel at all old.

"I've passed 50, and if it wasn't for a thousand little hints that come up now and then to remind me of it I should find myself just as young as I used to be.

"As for imagining that my wife has grown any older than the day we were married, such an idea has never entered my head until recently. I always made her dress like a young woman, and I believe I have caused her to be laughed at on this account, for nobody except those who don't notice the passing of time likes to see a middle-aged woman rigged up like a girl. Well, I was shocked the other day when she came to me unknown. She had on a bonnet tied with strings—a regular old lady's hat! I nearly cried, I can tell you.

"But that wasn't the worst. Imagine finding that you are so old that your children are passing the age of youth themselves! Just imagine, if you can, realizing, all of a sudden, that the little baby girl you dandled on your knee only yesterday is becoming an old maid! This was brought to me yesterday, and by my own son!

"This son of mine is a big, strapping chap, who plays on his high school polo team. He went with it to a neighboring city, the other night, to play. Next day at breakfast he got to talking about the girls in the town he had visited.

"'I never saw such flirtatious girls,' he said, 'and not only the girls, but the women. Why, I got lots of smiles in the rink during the polo game from old hags of 40 or 45 years.'

"You could have knocked me down with a feather. I glanced at my daughter—my baby girl. She is 27 and still unmarried. An old hag! My stars!

"I put on my hat and coat and went down town quick. I couldn't think of it any more.

"But when I got home last night everything seemed different. I began to wonder why my girl wasn't married.

"I saw signs of age in my wife's face and I felt old myself. And my boy had done it."

MAKING FAKE DIAMONDS.

An Art That Turns One Genuine Stone Into Two Apparently as Good.

The lapidary was splitting a diamond. He leaned forward with intent brows. His tiny machine buzzed like a bee. A delicate and shining dust arose, says the Chicago Inter Ocean.

Then, suddenly, everything was stilled, and the diamond, split in halves, lay in the lapidary's white, thin hand.

"Out of one diamond," he said, "I am going to make two, and each of these two will be as big and as brilliant as the original one was."

As he scraped up the glittering dust, he explained:

"First, I will make, in paste, an exact duplicate of each of these two halves. Then I will join to the bottom of each genuine half its artificial complement, making the junction so carefully that no one will be able to perceive it. Finally I will mount these two half fake and half genuine stones. Each of them will appear to be altogether genuine. Their paste foundations will not detract in any way from their brilliance. The owner of the big diamond will have two big diamonds.

"The making of fake jewels," the lapidary said, "is an interesting study. Do you know what the best fake pearls are made of? They are made of fish scales—silvery and iridescent fish scales pasted on the inside of balls of glass. The fish the scales come from is called in France the ablette, and in England the bleak. It is rather char a minnow. Its scales must be picked off by hand, and only a small portion of them can be used. It takes 18,000 ablettes, or bleaks, to yield one pound of scales."

Three Club Types.

The frequenters of the clubs may be divided into three classes. The billiard and bowling room crowd, who pass all their time in the club playing their favorite game or watching others when the tables and alleys are occupied; the card-room set, who only come to the club for the purpose of a game of poker or a rubber of whist; and finally, the window coterie, which embraces all the loiterers and habitues, who naturally frequent the windows as the pleasantest seats.—Chicago Tribune.

NEW SKIRTS AND GOWNS.

Revival of Fashion of Early Date—Trains Banished Except on Wedding Gowns.

Many of the new full skirts are being made to open over a flounced panel of lace or muslin. This is another revival, fashion plates of the forties and fifties showing gowns open in the front to reveal elaborate petticoats women of that period perfled their precious eyesight to embroider and embellish. Of course the fashion antedates this period, says the New York Post. In one of these it belonged to the directory, and went with jackets with wide revers opening over a frilled waistcoat, and having a jabot of lace at the throat. This jacket has been made recently, it is asserted, by a celebrated French dressmaker. It is always picturesque, and is becoming to tall, slender figures.

Returning to skirts, while trains are practically banished, except on wedding gowns, many of the new skirts are long enough to lap in billows about the feet. The width of most of them is amazing, six yards around the hem being nothing unusual. The utility gown for street and ordinary wear is short. Triple flounces and simulated tucks made of circular folds continue popular.

One sees fewer models in straight, full skirts, the circular form, tight at the hips and very wide at the hem, having gained in popularity. Plaits are stitched flat to aid in giving a slender effect. An untrimmed skirt is a rare sight. Even severely simple gowns and shirt waist suits have some kind of trimming, braid, spangled motifs, buttons or embroidery on the skirt. Tucks are very much in vogue.

Wash gowns—so called, though many of them would hardly stand a tubbing—are tucked a great deal, not in straight lines up and down, and across the material, but in elaborate designs in which lace motifs and medallions, embroidery and drawn-work are combined. Tucks alternated with rows of Valenciennes lace are favorite decorations for thin muslins. Sometimes puffs are substituted for the rows of tucks.

HINTS FOR HOME READING.

Simple Remedies for Simple Afflictions and Bits of Toilet Lore.

In warm weather bathe with diluted vinegar; it is cooling and will make the skin soft.

Over-fatigue is regarded by Dr. Burton Fanning as the determining cause of ten per cent. of cases of consumptive.

Put a pint of vinegar, and a tablespoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of cayenne pepper and one quart of boiling water will cure almost any cold. Mix, let cool, strain and sponge the patient at bedtime.

Use soft soap to keep the hands white and smooth and prevent chapping when exposed to the cold air after washing in hot or soapy water. Before drying the hands rub over them a tablespoonful of vinegar, and the relief will be very great.

An eyelash is pointed. A cut lash is blunt. A lash once cut never again becomes pointed. Every lash lives a variable time, and then falls out, to be replaced by a fresh one. Such a cut lash so falls the newcomer is pointed. So any mischief resulting from cutting the lashes will be remedied by time. Opinions differ as to whether lash cutting promotes growth. That it renders the lashes unsightly is very certain.

To treat grimy hands begin with rubbing them well with cold cream, or even with a little pure melted mutton fat. When the grease has loosened the soil, then wash with soap and rag or a piece of soft paper, and wash the hands in warm water. Use a good soap and a nailbrush, rinse in cool water and dry thoroughly. Very few women take time to dry their hands properly, and then they wonder at their becoming coarse and chapped. The housewife who has much to do in the way of dusting and cleaning should save her hands by wearing housemaid's tan gloves as much as possible, and on going to bed after washing her hands with warm water, she should apply to them a little glycerin and rose water.

General Rule for Soups.

One pint of fresh vegetables, or one can, one pint boiling water, one pint hot milk, one tablespoonful flour, one tablespoonful butter, one small teaspoonful salt, a very little pepper. Cut the vegetables into bits and cook 20 minutes, or, if you use canned vegetables, cook ten minutes. While it is cooking, make the milk, flour and butter into a thick white sauce. When done mash the vegetables with a fork, and rub them through a wire sieve and stir in the sauce, salt, pepper and hot water. If you wish it very nice pour the hot soup over a cup of whipped cream and it will be foamy.—Good Housekeeping.

Snow Fritters.

Beat one egg very light and add gradually a cup or half a pint of milk; into another bowl sift a cup and a half of flour; one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt and pour the milk and egg on the flour, stirring thoroughly to prevent lumps. Then add a large, tart apple which has been peeled, cut in quarters and chopped in small pieces. Last of all, fold in a large cupful of light, dry snow which has freshly fallen. Drop the batter in small spoonfuls into a kettle of boiling hot fat, after rolling each spoonful into a little flour. Cook until brown, or for several minutes. Serve immediately with powdered sugar.—Boston Budget.

SITES FOR PUBLIC PARK

Others Besides the Randolph Road Location Considered.

COST OF IMPROVEMENT

A Park on Randolph Road Would Cost $90,000 It Is Estimated.

The question of a city park for Plainfield is now being considered by a sub-committee, appointed by the Common Council. This week the committee met and took up certain phases of the proposition, also the site on Randolph road, which has been under consideration for some time.

The site on Randolph road would cost the city about $90,000 and it is understood that it would require more than twice that amount to put the property in such condition that it would look like a park. According to the proposed plans of dredging for the purpose of making a lake, some of the members believed would be an expensive thing and would not warrant the outlay required.

Another thing that argues against the adoption of the Randolph road site is that that section of the city is already like a park and if such a thing is to be established here, it would be better to locate it in some section where these conditions are not so to be found. A member of the committee in speaking of the matter intimated that other sites are under consideration for a park, but he refused to state where they are located. It they should be made known no doubt prices in lands would take a sudden jump.

While some members of the committee favor immediate action in the matter, it is safe to say that a majority do not and the prospects are that it will be several years before the city decides to purchase a tract of land for a park. It was originally the idea that it would be a wise thing to select a suitable site for a park while the number of acres required can be purchased at a reasonable figure and not wait until all of the available sites are used for building purposes. This the committee believes would be an excellent thing to do, but there is not the disposition at present to bond the city for the purchase of a site. There are many advantages and disadvantages to be considered and it is the purpose of the committee to thoroughly discuss the matter pro and con.

Until the committee obtains complete information on the subject of parks the committee will not present a report to the Common Council. It will then be up to the latter body to decide the question and that time seems to be a great way off.

CITY SCHOOL BOARD HOLDS SHORT SESSION

NO IMPORTANT BUSINESS AT MONDAY NIGHT'S MEETING.

The Board of Education held its regular meeting Monday evening but transacted all its business in less than half an hour. At Professor Hamm's request the following school calendar for the year was adopted: Fall term, September 15 to December 23; winter term, January 3 to April 21; spring term, May 1 to June 23; fall term, September 13 to December 22. The medical inspector reported examining 578 pupils during October and Frederick A. Pearce submitted an application for a janitorship in the schools.

On motion of Mr. Lovell it was voted to insure the new high school building as the work progresses, the Board to confer with the contractor relative to the liability of each. Messrs. Woodhull, Clave and Lovell reported examining the annual school report to their satisfaction and a motion was passed ordering 2,000 copies printed for free distribution. The fact that George J. Tobin, who was awarded the contract to install the plumbing in the new high school, had not yet filed a bond, was made known and the Board ordered that steps be taken at once to have him do so.

Annual Harvest Home.

The annual harvest home for the Baptist Home for the Aged at Roseville, was held Tuesday from 10 to 4 o'clock, and was largely attended. The donations this year were numerous, the local churches responding in a liberal manner. Those present at the celebration included Mrs. J. A. Chamblin, Mrs. O. E. Leonard, Miss Mary Thickstun and Miss Laura J. Runyon.

—Solemnly promising to take the pledge for ten years, Mike Donko, an old offender, had sentence suspended in the city court Monday. His was arrested for drunkenness. James Henderson, a Philadelphian, arrested on second place for begging, also had sentence suspended.

MAYOR RAPS ASSESSOR

Borough Executive Criticises Act of Dr. Cooley.

DECLARES IT UNFAIR

Says He Made Increase in Assessment and Then Asserted It Was Done by the Council.

Declaring that he had acted in an unfair way, Mayor N. B. Smalley at the Borough Council meeting last Friday, expressed himself in decided terms relative to a statement made by Assessor J. H. Cooley to Francis Del. Hyde that the Councilmanic body and not he, had made an increase of $6,000 in the assessment of his property on Norwood avenue. After meeting the members before him who had gone over the tax lists if they were responsible for it and receiving a negative reply, the Mayor asserted that it had been done by the Assessor and that he had shifted the responsibility.

"It is his duty to make an increase on an assessment if he sees fit," said the Mayor, "but he has no right to say some one else did it and I take exception to Dr. Cooley's action."

The assessment in question was on Mr. Hyde's vacant property located by Norwood and Belmont avenues. The former street was macadamized last year and the outside of the row was borne by Mr. Hyde. He asserted that the ground had not increased in value any as a result but his assessment was jumped $4,000. When Councilmen Arnold and VanArsdale were examining the tax books they inquired of Dr. Cooley why his was done and he replied that it was simply a transfer of the assessment from Belmont avenue to Norwood avenue and they allowed it to pass.

Mayor Smalley knew nothing of the increase until Mr. Hyde took him to task for it and was then informed that Dr. Cooley had told him (Mr. Hyde) that it was changed by the Council. This prevented him from going before the Commissioners of Appeal and he said at the time that he would take the matter to the State Board of Taxation. This led the Mayor to investigate, finding that the Council had nothing whatever to do with the increase.

"Dr. Cooley should have assumed the responsibility," asserted the Mayor, "and not lay it on the Council also. If that is done prominently by the people a decree to strike at the Council under the belief that the members are to blame. Mr. Hyde is away at present but on his return I shall call a special session of this body with the Assessor present in order to have him place his objection before us."

Following the Mayor's remarks, Councilman Lee declared the matter should be investigated and if the assessment was not just, the Council should recommend to the State Board of Taxation that Mr. Hyde's tax be returned. Corporation Counsel Reed also spoke, saying that it was a prevailing custom in the borough for one official to perform some act and when it was questioned, assert it was another. As an instance he specified the controversy over the assessment on St. Gabriel's Academy, in which the Corporation Counsel had been quoted several times.

"As a matter of fact," said Mr. Reed, "I knew nothing of the matter until a few evenings ago when one of the Commissioners of Appeal called me up on the telephone and asked for my opinion regarding it."

HOSPITAL GOVERNORS WANT AVENUE EXTENDED

SIGNS A PETITION FOR PRESENTATION TO COMMON COUNCIL.

At its regular meeting, the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, authorized the officers to sign in behalf of the hospital, the petition to the Common Council for the opening of Kensington avenue from its present terminus at Prospect avenue to the corner of Park avenue and Randolph road. Residents in that section have been wanting the improvement for I guess while and the Board believes it would be a decided improvement.

The medical staff report for the month was as follows: Patients remaining at date of last report, 19; admitted, 45; total number treated, 64; discharged cured, 36; improved 11; removed, 3; died, 3; remaining, 11; total hospital days, 688; operations, 32. In the dispensary there were 45 patients, 140 visits and 4 operations.

—In order to accommodate the pupils in this city, Mrs. H. S. Abell of Elizabeth, teacher of the piano, has consented to come to Plainfield Thursdays of each week. She will accept a few more pupils for that day and anyone wishing the service of a thoroughly competent teacher should address 20 Jefferson avenue, Elizabeth, N. J.

CROSS AFTER STOKES' JOB?

Union County Senator May Become Chancery Clerk.

BOOMED BY COLLEGUES

Senators Favor Him for Position Provided He Doesn't Accept Presidency of Senate.

It did not take many minutes' conversation with the Senators assembled at the State House in Trenton, yesterday, to learn that Senator Joseph Cross, of Elizabeth, is practically assured of the presidency of the senate except on one contingency and that is that he is made clerk of the Court of Chancery to succeed Governor-elect Stokes.

There was a great deal of talk in the corridors to the effect that Mr. Cross was to be the next clerk in chancery. He himself said he knew nothing about it and that the first he had heard of his candidacy was what he had heard about the State House since his arrival there yesterday. None the less it was said that persons having some of the most potent influence to the State had been to see the chief in Mr. Cross' behalf.

Senator Joseph Cross.

Should Mr. Cross be appointed to the vacancy that would remove him from the Senate, according to the gossip, and a sharp struggle for the presidency would ensue. It is understood that Senator Bradley will not be a candidate against Mr. Cross, but if his appointment to the Chancery clerkship should be made, and he should be taken out of the race, then its Camden man would seek the office with all the energy he has himself and his powerful supporters.

There were those who believed that this situation is what David Baird had in mind when he made the equivocal statement last week that Mr. Bradley, while not opposing Mr. Cross, was a candidate for the presidency of the Senate.

Wood McKee, of Passaic, also announced his candidacy for the position. He, too, said that Mr. Cross was his first choice, but if the judge is made clerk in chancery and removed from the fight, he did not see why another North Jersey man should not have the place, nor did he see why that North Jersey man should not be himself.

In the event of Mr. Cross' selection as president, both the Camden and the Passaic men will be candidates for the leadership of the Senate and the contest between them will be no child's play.

Daniel S. Voorhees, of Morristown, member of the Republican State committee from Morris county, was at the State House and expressed his confidence in his own appointment to the Chancery clerkship.

John Boyd Avis, the speaker of the last House, was also in the crowd. He is an active candidate for re-election. Everett Colby, who will be a candidate if the appointment should be allotted to his end of the State, was busy shaking hands with the old and new members.

The drift of the talk among the members yesterday was unmistakably toward Mr. Avis.

Friends' Half-Yearly Meeting.

The Religious Society of Friends of Shrewsbury and Plainfield will begin its half-yearly meeting tomorrow morning at 10:30 at the meeting-house on Watchung avenue, opposite North avenue. The afternoon meeting will be at 3 o'clock, when there will be a review of the Peace Conference recently held at Boston. In the evening at 8 o'clock the young people will hold a social. An invitation is extended to all.

Stokes' Vote in His County.

The official returns filed with and compiled by the Mercer county board of elections show that Stokes ran behind the ticket to the extent of 1,614. Murphy carried the county in 1901 by 1,700.

Y. M. C. A. BOWLING TEAM TO HIRE OTHER ALLEYS

ASSOCIATION ALLEYS ARE NOT SUFFICIENT FOR THE NEEDS OF THE CLUB.

On account of the fact that the alleys at the Y. M. C. A. are in such general demand, and on account of the lack of time and space for practice, the members of the Y. M. C. A. bowling team are negotiating with various owners of bowling alleys in this city to secure the use of the alleys for one or two nights a week. They have several places to choose from, though as yet they have not definitely decided upon any one alley.

The fact that the Y. M. C. A. alleys are so small is a great inconvenience to the team, when it plays a game in which outsiders are interested, as there is no place for spectators. The membership is also limited by this fact that the team has only the use of the association alleys. The team is in every way independent of the Y. M. C. A., though all the players are members of the association. Non-members who might desire to take part in out-of-town games have no chance to practice with the team. With the acquisition of the use of some other alleys, the team will be able to more adequately entertain visiting teams, and will have more time to devote to practice.

PARK CLUB AFFAIRS FOR MEMBERS ONLY

INCREASE IN MEMBERSHIP COMPELS CHANGE IN RULES.

The Park Club has changed its rule which allows residents of Plainfield and North Plainfield to attend social affairs at the club twice a year, once every six months. This action was made necessary by the fact that the club now has a membership of nearly 200 and it is quite enough to take care of the regular membership at the various social events. At the last meeting of the Board of Governors eleven candidates were elected to membership.

Beginning December 1, the clubhouse will be open every Thursday afternoon for the women members who may wish to play cards, pool, billiards or bowl. This arrangement will continue until May 1.

P. H. S. ELEVEN WINS.

In Practice Game Against the O. A. O. Eleven, the High School Leads Show Decided Improvement.

The Plainfield High School football team defeated the O. A. O. eleven, largely composed of members of the Cedarcroft School, in a practice game on Hope common yesterday afternoon. The high school players showed a decided improvement in their game, and their offensive game was stronger than it has been this year.

All four of the backs crossed the line for a touchdown, the score being 22 to 0. Williams, at quarter, managed his team well, and his tackling and runs with the ball were features of the game. William Douglass put up his usual snappy variety of football.

The following was the lineup of the Plainfield High School eleven: Russell, left end; Hastings, left tackle; Freeman, left guard; Bogart, center; Sragge, right guard; Jahn, right tackle; Meany, right end; Williams, quarterback; William Douglass, left half; Taylor, fullback; Jack Douglass, right half back.

State Election Returns.

Although returns from the State election in New Jersey are as yet unofficial, the results as finally passed upon are not likely to show any material change from the figures already given. They give Roosevelt for President a plurality of 78,397, and Stokes, for Governor, a plurality of 50,758. As in the National election of 1900 and the gubernatorial election of 1901, the Republicans have carried seventeen counties and the Democrats four—Hudson, Hunterdon, Sussex and Warren.

Freshmen to Give Play.

The freshmen class at the Plainfield High School will give a three-act play from the Idlis of the King, by Alfred Tennyson, sometime after the Christmas holidays. The committee in charge of the affair is Gladys Burt, chairman, Ralph Taylor, Josephine Serrell and Gerth Williams.

Helping Hand Society.

Rev. Scott Wallace, pastor of the Calvary Baptist church, organized a helping hand society at his church last night.

ACTIVE SOCIAL SEASON

Events Scheduled for the Winter Months Here.

MANY DEBUTANTES

Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's Dances Are on the Society Calendar As Usual.

Probably the greatest activity of the winter season will be at the Park Club, where the entertainment committee has provided several events. There will be the usual Thanksgiving dance on Thursday night, November 24, and the Christmas dance on Thursday night, December 29, and the Junior dance on Saturday night, December 31.

In addition to these events, there will be the New Year's reception at the club, from 3 to 6 o'clock in the afternoon, and on January 3, in the evening, there will be bridge and bezique.

More than ordinary interest is centered in the announcement that Miss Grace Rowland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David H. Rowland, of 311 West Seventh street; Miss Edith Fisk, daughter of Mrs. Chapman Fisk, of 312 West Seventh street, and Miss Sherman, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Harman, of 505 West Eighth street.

The date for Miss Fisk's coming out has been set for Monday evening, January 2. The other dates will be announced later.

Another indication that society will be active in Plainfield is that many families who have heretofore gone to Richfield Springs will be located in Plainfield to remain here and this means that they will be identified with the social affairs planned.

There also promises to be much activity at the Casino, where several entertainments are being arranged, including that of the famous Oakoah Glee Club, which will be given about the holiday times.

MISS EDNA M. HOWELL NOW A MINISTER'S WIFE

FORMER PLAINFIELD GIRL WEDDED TO REV. A. D. ARCHIBALD.

Miss Edna Minita Howell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George D. Howell, formerly of Plainfield, and Rev. Adams Douglas Archibald, of Prince Edward Island, were married today at noon at the home of the bride's brother, Edwin Howell, of Chester, Pa.

As the invitation list was restricted, only the immediate relatives and a very few friends attended the wedding. Among the latter was Miss Elsie Saffern, of North Plainfield. After the ceremony there was a reception and later Mr. and Mrs. Archibald left on a wedding trip.

The bride while a resident of this city, attended the Seminary on West Seventh street, and she made many friends. Mr. Archibald is from Halifax, Nova Scotia, where he holds a position as field secretary under direction of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions.

STOKES WILL RESIGN.

Governor-Elect Will Give Up His Clerkship in Chancery.

Governor-elect Stokes announced yesterday that he would resign as clerk in chancery before he was inaugurated and his successor would be appointed by Governor Murphy. He further declared that he would have nothing to do with the appointment, "except as I may be consulted in the matter." Mr. Stokes is going away for a rest, but where he is going he will not tell.

K. of C. Service.

Collaborating with Rev. Father Egan, the local Knights of Columbus have completed arrangements for an elaborate memorial service to be held in St. Mary's church Sunday evening. Watchung Council will attend in a body and it will have as guests members of the order from other cities. The principal sermon of the evening will be delivered by Chancellor Norris, of Trenton, and several other well-known priests will be in attendance.

MAIL ROUTES IN COUNTY

Bids Being Asked for Several Proposed Rural Deliveries.

NEW REGULATIONS

Union County to Receive Great Benefits From Postoffice Department.

There are a number of star routes in this State and bids are now being called for carrying the mails for another period. The United States Postoffice authorities not long since took a new departure on the matter of awarding contracts for carrying the mails. Formerly a man to any part of the country could secure the contracts and then sub-let them and make whatever he could on the arrangement. For instance, a man in Kentucky could take a contract for carrying on one of the routes in this county, and "farm it out."

¶ Those who want to put in bids for carrying the mails on different star routes in this State must do so by the 31st of December. The period on which they begin to cover commences July 1, 1905, and expires June 30, 1909. It may be of interest to know something about the following routes, and what steps are to be taken in putting in a bid.

All that is necessary to do on the part of anyone who desires to put in a bid is to procure blanks of the nearest postmaster and to send the application to the postoffice authorities in Washington.

A bidder, however, is not eligible unless he lives on the line of the route for which he makes application to carry the mail over.

This is to be construed to mean living within the territory regularly serve as the postoffice on the route. The party taking the contract must give his personal supervision to the performance of his service. Unless he does this, his contract becomes void and forfeiture will be made. Under the comparatively new requirements people living on the star route get almost as much in the way of privileges as do those living on the routes of the rural free delivery.

The carriers on the star routes, if the people provide mail boxes or hang small pouches on cranes on posts near the road, are obliged to collect the mail from and to deposit mail in them, but they must be in such places that they can conveniently reached by the carrier without his being obliged to dismount from his vehicle or horse.

A civil service examination was held here Saturday for carriers to carry and deliver mail over the new rural free delivery route, which includes the territory in Watchung, Warrenville, Union Village and other nearby towns.

Estimates are now asked for the following mail routes in Union county: From Scotchplains to Westfield, 1.63 miles, and back, twelve times a week; from New Providence to Murray Hill, 1 mile, and back, twelve times a week; from Union to Elizabeth, 3.80 miles, and back, six times a week.

FOUND DEAD IN HOTEL; CLAIMED TO LIVE HERE

"FREDERICK DEIHLE, OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.," SUCCUMBS IN N.Y. HOSTELRY.

Stories printed in yesterday's New York papers declare that "Frederick Deihle, of Plainfield, N. J., was found dead yesterday morning in the Delmore Hotel at Third avenue and Thirty-fourth street, having succumbed during the night to heart disease."

The city directory does not give the name Frederick Deihle and inquiry fails to reveal any person answering the description of the dead man.

He was about five feet eight inches in height, weighed about 180 pounds and wore his short gray hair in pompadour style.

A Mrs. Deihle resides on Grove street, but she said today the man was not related to her.

Case to be Tried in December.

The case of Mrs. Theodore Glaser against the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company is returnable at Justice Huff's court on December 31. Mrs. Glaser is still confined to her home by illness.

Mrs. Post Unable to Come.

Mrs. Post, of Chicago, who was to have delivered an address on Home Mission work at the Park Avenue Baptist church this evening, has sent word that she will be unable to do so.

FOWLER'S MAJORITY 2,583

Union County's Board of Election Finishing Its Canvass.

24,006 VOTES CAST

Fowler's Majority Over Bernard M. Smith's Majority Over Bernard Higgins, for Registrar of Deeds, Was 4,375.

Although the Union County Board of Election and Registry in session at Elizabeth, yesterday, did not complete its work of canvassing the vote of the county, the vote on the presidential ticket not being in yet, all of the other figures have been received. The total number of names registered in the county was 24,006 and 187 were rejected. By comparison it is shown that Somers had a majority of 4,325 over Black, and that he had 873 more votes than Fowler. Fowler's majority over Maguire was 2,583. F. H. Smith, for registrar of deeds, had a majority of 4,376 over Bernard J. Higgins, while James C. Calvert received a majority of 6,956 over George Baldwin.

The Republican nominees on the Assembly tickets had about the same majority over their Democratic opponents. Coyne's majority over Hague was 4,997, that of Tillman over Gunn 5,045, and that of Embree over Cox 4,847. Dr. Pierson, for coroner, had a majority of 5,006 over Dr. Dearborn.

There is to be a recount in the Fourth ward of Rahway, where there is a contest between James Rowland and George E. Galloway, the former receiving two more votes than his opponent. The contestants put up the necessary $100 for the recount.

The vote as polled is as follows:

For Governor — Stokes, 13,366; Black, 9,141; Honnecker, 188; Herrschaft, 1,944; Parker, 262; Kearns, 532. For Congress—Fowler, 12,493; Maguire, 9,910; Lefferts, 2,688; Reff, 532; Smith, 185; Potter, 182. For Assembly—Coyne, 12,853; Tillman, 12,790; Hague, 12,607; Hagus, 12,547; Gunn, 8,684; Cox, 8,760. For Registrar of Deeds—Smith, 12,890; Higgins, 9,013. For County Clerk—Calvert, 14,792; Baldwin, 7,836. For Coroner—Pierson, 12,749; Dearborn, 8,743.

HAMILTON KEAN DINES REPUBLICAN CO. COMMITTEE

REGISTRAR SMITH AND MAYOR BUCKLE MAKE SPEECHES AT THE BANQUET.

General good feeling and congeniality characterized the annual post-election dinner given by Republican County Chairman Hamilton Kean to the other members of the county committee, at the Berkeley Hotel, Elizabeth, last night. The dinner was largely attended and party enthusiasm was evidenced in the many speeches which followed the banquet.

County Chairman Kean acted as toastmaster, and in the course of the evening speeches were made by members of the committee, including Registrar of Deeds Frank H. Smith and Mayor-elect James F. Buckle, of this city, Mayor Berry, of Elizabeth, C. H. Halsey, of Elizabeth, Factory Inspector McCardell, of this city, Assemblymen-elect Tillman, of Rahway, and Assemblyman-elect George Embree, of Westfield.

P. H. S. Preparing for Game.

The members of the Plainfield High School football team are in strict training this week in preparation for the game of the season which will take place Saturday morning with the Lesli's School eleven. Though Lesli's have lost other games in the interscholastic league, the Plainfield High School will be the team which is nearest their class in weight and speed, and they will have to exert every effort to win the game. The public school boys have been out for hard practice every day this week, and the team will go on the gridiron Saturday morning with one of the strongest lineups which they have put out this season. Captain Douglass has not yet announced the lineup for the game, nor has Captain Wilcox, of Lesli's, stated who will play for the private school.

To Examine the Books.

George E. Collins, public accountant, whose home is in Westfield, but who has an office on North avenue, this city, has been engaged to examine the books of the tax collector, city judge and city treasurer. He began the work on Monday. Mr. Collins examined and audited these books two years ago in accordance with a resolution adopted by the Common Council.

WEST END FAVORABLE TO FOURTH WARD'S DIVISION

FIFTH WARD WOULD BRING MORE EQUAL REPRESENTATION IN COUNCIL.

The sentiment among the voters of the Fourth ward in favor of the Common Council establishing a Fifth ward, is constantly growing and since the story concerning the agitation was told in The Daily Press of yesterday, prominent residents of the ward have expressed themselves as favoring the change.

A well-known leader of the Fourth ward in speaking of the matter today said that the establishing of a Fifth ward would give the West End of the city its proper representation in the Common Council. It would mean that there would be ten ward councilmen, one from each of the ten election districts and one member at large, a total of eleven, as at present.

In 1893 the Legislature enacted a law giving Rahway the right to establish five wards in that place, and Plainfield can take advantage of this law at any time it desires. It would only be necessary for the Common Council to adopt a measure providing for the redistricting of the city or the Fourth ward, and if this passed the work would be done under the direction of the members. It is also learned that many of the councilmen are in favor of another ward and undoubtedly some action will be taken in the matter in the near future.

WM. H. WILLIAMS WEDS MRS. ANNA L. NICKING

MARRIAGE CEREMONY AT NEWARK ON WEDNESDAY LAST.

Announcement is made of the marriage of William H. Williams, of this city, and Mrs. Anna L. Nicking, of Newark, formerly of Brooklyn, and widow of Fred Hermann Nicking. The ceremony was performed on Wednesday, November 9, by Rev. C. Morgan Compher at his home in Newark.

The groom is well known here where for many years he was engaged in the [illegible] newsdealer. He is now doing a passenger service between this city and New York. He and his bride will reside in Plainfield.

COURSE IN FIRST AID.

Dr. Norman Probasco Will Give Initial Lesson at the Y. M. C. A. Tonight.

The first of the series of lectures on first aid to the injured which will be conducted at the Y. M. C. A. during the winter will be given by Dr. Norman Probasco tonight at the association. The course will include twelve lessons in first aid, which will cover completely all the essential points in anatomy, the circulation of the blood, the heart and lungs, and the digestion. In addition to these points, Dr. Probasco will give several talks on poison antidotes, and on rescuing the drowning. The latter point will be illustrated in the swimming tank, and occur at the conclusion of the course.

The outline for the lectures was arranged by Director Hanckle, and is the most complete course which has ever been taught in this city. There will be one lesson a week, each one covering some special topic of study, briefly though thoroughly.

Death of William Hewson.

William Hewson, formerly a resident of this city, died Monday evening as his home in Warren township in the seventy-sixth year of his age. Mr. Hewson was well known in this city, where he was for many years overseer of the poor. He leaves a wife and an adopted son. He is also survived by a sister, Mrs. Brand, of Central avenue. The funeral will be held from the late residence, Friday morning at 11 o'clock.

But He's No Quitter.

Mayor Smalley, of North Plainfield, has been given notice by the voters that he no longer carries the destinies of Somerset county in his vest pocket. Perhaps he may carry out his threat and move to Plainfield after all and take at least a part of his grave yard with him.—Newark Evening News.

Martino's Mistake.

Charles N. Fowler is returned to Congress by a majority of about 5,000 over "Farmer Crazy" Martino. The voters of this district could not be moved by a campaign of vilification and abuse, and endorse Mr. Fowler with the greatest majority he has ever received.—New Jersey Advocate.

POLICE CATCH A SHARPER

Notorious Swindler Fails to Work His Game Locally.

HAD SELECTED VICTIM

Was All Ready to Pass Worthless Check When Placed Under Arrest.

After having successfully worked his scheme in a dozen other cities, James O'Brien, of New York, was caught by the local police yesterday, just as he had completed all arrangements to swindle Undertaker Patrick Casey with a bogus check. Confronted as headquarters with facts gleaned by Chief Kisly, he made a complete confession and acknowledged himself to be the man who has been sought after by the authorities in Attleboro, Philadelphia, Baltimore and elsewhere. He was remanded until tomorrow morning when he will be arraigned before Justice Huff.

O'Brien came to the city yesterday and going to Casey's office said he wanted him to make arrangements for the burial of his sister, who had died in Philadelphia, in St. Mary's cemetery. The details were agreed upon and O'Brien then went to Father Egan, secured his sanction for a burial plot and going to the cemetery instructed Caretaker Daniel McCarthy to dig a grave. His orders were obeyed quickly by the latter and three feet of earth had been removed when the police instructed him to stop.

Upon the cemetery O'Brien proceeded to John Kenney's shoe store where he introduced himself as a member of the Knights of Columbus and told of having heard of Mr. Kenney in Philadelphia. He continued telling things about himself and the death of his sister, the idea being to gain Kenney's confidence and then use it when he was ready to bring the swindle to a climax, that is, presenting the bogus check to Casey and have him cash it.

In Kenney's store at the time was J. J. Whelan, of Elizabeth, who is connected with the local office of the water company. As O'Brien continued speaking he recalled the fact that a man answering his description had fooled Undertaker Martin, of Elizabeth, out of $40 by telling the same story. Whelan excused himself quietly and proceeding to headquarters informed Patrolman McCarthy of his suspicions. The later went to Kenney's and placed O'Brien under arrest just as he was about to go back to Casey's.

When searched by the police, a check was found in his clothing made out to James O'Brien on the Trenton National Bank. The officials were telegraphed and they returned word that the signature given was evidently a forgery. The prisoner then admitted his guilt and announced that he was the man who had been going about working the "undertaker" game.

O'Brien first claimed to be from Philadelphia but his home is in New York. He is about thirty years old, five feet ten inches in height, of slender build, smooth face and sallow complexion.

TALKED TO TEACHERS.

Dr. A. F. VanHorn Addressed Pedagogues on First Aid to Injured.

Dr. A. F. VanHorn, medical examiner of the city schools, gave the teachers an interesting and practical demonstration of first aid to the injured at Superintendent Maxson's monthly teachers' meeting on Monday. Methods of treatment of cuts, burns, and wounds were practically illustrated by the use of one of the pupils. Special directions were also given as to the recognition and treatment of the various ailings that occur among school children.

The address was most closely listened to by the teachers and enthusiastically received.

Real Property Sold at Auction.

The sale of property belonging to the estate of Silas Gill was held yesterday at public auction by T. H. Lafayette, auctioneer, for the executors, John P. Emmons and Robert Bellenbamers. Abram Kunzman purchased the property at 427 West Fourth street for $2,155 and that at 429 West Fourth street for $2,400. Charles Schring purchased the property at 118 Liberty street for $1,880 and the one at 423 West Fourth street for $2,650. The sale of several lots belonging to the estate was postponed for the present as the bids were far too small.

NATURE AT THE FAIR

ATTRACTIVE EXHIBITS THAT WILL INTEREST HUNTERS.

GREAT DISPLAY OF GAME.

Colorado Shows a Mimic Mountain Covered with the Fauna of the Rockies—New York State Has an Adirondack Camp.

St. Louis.—Man is by nature a savage. Civilization is at best but a thin veneer that is none too securely attached to the barbarous body-structure of the race. For some unexplained reason, the savage in man's mental composition asserts itself more forcibly in the autumn and winter months than during the rest of the year.

As soon as the leaves begin to turn, every healthy man in creation longs for a gun and a dog. If the longing could be satisfied by these two possessions, if a gun and a dog were all of it, man would be a very human imbecile, instead of a very virile human entity. It is the something implied by the gun and dog that makes him both more and less than mere man. It is the love of nature coupled with the love of carnage.

To get out and kill something is the chief joy of the natural savage, whether he calls himself a savage or not. And so, as the summer begins to wane, the thirst for blood refuses longer to be stilled. The office man and the professional man, the financier and the artist all resolve themselves into one gigantic hunting club. They may have no other tastes in common, yet they can meet on the common ground of the chase. They are as brothers while they are slaying something.

The great Louisiana Purchase exposition, which contains a response for every taste and every desire in the entire human mind, has not forgotten the hunter-man and his weakness for the fascinating sport. In a score of places he may find exhibits that will recall to his mind the delightful experiences of forest and stream, and that will supply him with new ideas for future use.

There are no herds of deer roaming through the forests in the rear of the exposition buildings, waiting patiently to be shot, and there are no gamey fish in the lagoons and basin. Still there is much that is of interest to the huntsman. One of the state buildings is a typical hunting lodge. It was hewn and constructed in the heart of the Maine woods, taken apart and sent to St. Louis to be erected again that the visitors at the world's fair might gain an idea of the vast sporting resources of the extreme northeast corner of their country.

In the palace of agriculture is the log cabin that President Roosevelt occupied during the two years of his experience as a ranchman and a hunter. The palace of forestry, fish and game is filled to overflowing with mounted specimens of the sportsman's conquest, and implements of destruction with which similar specimens may be secured.

The Colorado exhibit is a mimic mountain on which all the fauna of the Rockies disport themselves, alert and still, as if they were pausing in anticipation of the freeman's coming. Here are many deer, elk, moose, antelope, the sturdy mountain goat and the amusing little prairie dog. Inside the mountain are other specimens, showing the possibilities of Colorado in the way of trouts and fish. The entire exhibit is a tempting bait held out to the visitor, who may have throttled his desire for the chase this year in order to see the greatest of all world's fairs, but who will surely want to go hunting next fall.

The exhibit that gets nearest the heart of the sportsman in the palace of forestry, fish and game is the one displayed by the state of New York. It is a typical hunting lodge, such as one meets with in the Adirondack mountains, and it includes a practically complete roster of the game of the state.

The building is constructed of logs, the cracks between the logs filled in with moss. This use of moss makes a much better wall than that which is chinked with either clay or plaster, and it is far more rustic and in keeping with the forest environment. The furniture of the lodge is all of native wood, hand-made, and the work of the Adirondack guides. The only bit of the decoration that was not produced in the state of New York is a pair of Navajo blankets that are draped above the fireplace.

This lodge is a copy of the small cast and contest to be found in the state. There are others among the mountains of New York that cost as much as $100,000, and are provided with the i own electric light plant and water works system. These larger lodges are owned by city clubs, and are the center of much sport during the game season.

The builders of the hunter's lodge at the world's fair took pains to give their exhibit as much "local color" as possible under the circumstances. In one corner of the rustic enclosure is a comfortable looking black bear, such as may be hunted—and sometimes killed—in the Catskills. We of the west are astonished to learn that there are bears in New York in the twenti-eth century. We are equally surprised to find the bear hunters walk on regular snowshoes in New York.

A leafless tree at one side of the cabin is alive with dead birds! Another in the front yard is in the same pradoxical condition. In these two collections are all the birds of the state except a few of the songsters. All the game birds, such as appeal to the palate of the epicure, are here, to say nothing of owls, eagles and vultures.

The last New York doe for that perished seven years ago, stands guard before the door, and under the tree are several fine specimens of the deer. There are four forests in the state where the herds of deer are being fostered by the government. In only two of these is shooting permitted, and there only under the strictest surveillance. In the Adirondacks a hunter is not permitted to kill more than two deer in one season. Some hunters do not kill that many in a lifetime, except in the stories they tell to their friends who were not present in camp, and from these the game is comparatively safe. On Long island the shooting of deer is permitted out two days in the year, and the price paid for the hunted man in New York are better than ever before.

EMILY GRANT HUTCHINGS.

Likely to Be Busy.

The rising young surgeon who was at the telephone spoke into it substantially as follows, in a vexed, impatient tone of voice: "Now, see here, Maria. There's no use of you telling me dinner's ready. I shall not be at home to dinner, and maybe not till early morrow morning. From my office window I can see that the college boys are assembling on the campus for their annual cane rush." Hanging up the 'phone he looked over his case of instruments again, placed his hat within reach and sat down to wait.—Boston Globe.

Similar But Different.

"Say, pa," queried the village editor's small son, "what is the difference between an amateur poet and a professional?"

"The difference, my son," replied the old man, "is that one writes for glory and the other writes for cash."

"Then they have nothing in common?" said the youthful information seeker.

NEW YORK SCHOOLS

MOST EXPENSIVE EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM IN THIS COUNTRY.

FREE LECTURE COURSES.

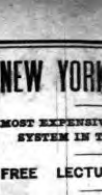
They Have Assumed Wonderful Proportions and Importance—Making American Citizens in the Ghetto District.

NEW YORK.—The opening of the school season is a pretense until October. Only then do the recreation centers, the free lecture courses, the gymnasiums open. Not even then are the night schools at work. Summer is long in the city.

Almost past belief are the plans made for schooling outside the school. The free lecture system is only 16 years old; it grew from small beginnings through the efforts of few, whom Dr. Leipziger, the superintendent, has always led. It has been threatened time and again with extinction as an improper use of tax money. The last threat was uttered only last winter.

Yet 140 free evening lecture courses are now in operation in as many public schools. The halls cost nothing but heating and lighting. Some of the most talented people of the city offer their services as a public duty for the nominal fee of $10 per evening. A quarter of a million people may be hearing the course in any evening. The schools of New York are the most expensive in the world; the lecture system, considering the advantages it offers to so many people for amusement and information, is very cheap. It makes one of the civic pride of New York's best citizens—and of these the city has plenty.

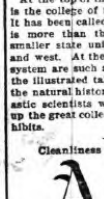
At the top of the public school system is the college of the city of New York. It has been called a big high school. It is more than that, ranking with the smaller state universities of the south and west. At the top of the free lecture system are such admirable offerings as the illustrated talks in the great hall of the natural history museum by enthusiastic scientists who there are building up the great collections of American exhibits.



Cleanliness and Learning.

SCHOOLHOUSE to hold 8,000 children is the latest proposition to cure the evil of "no room." It will stand in the heart of the great East side ghetto, where live the majority of New York's 700,000 Jews. It will have ten stories, the upper ones served by elevators. Its roof playground will be spacious and breezy, with purer air than can be found lower. It will have baths, gymnasium, kitchens, where poor girls will be taught to cook; a library. The plan is not daring; a school that holds 5,000 children is already doing its work hardly a stone's throw above the famous Henry Street school, where 30 nations are being welded together into one, and where the morning salute to the flag is the most touching sight in the city. Between the two, just at the corner of Essex street and the new Division street park, where a living tide of squalid humanity boils all day back and forth, another of the same size is going up. A devoted man, Superintendent Snyder, plans these schools. He believes that they should teach beauty in the slums. Many of his newer plans are in the secular gothic style so successfully used in England. Here in the teeming tenements he is setting up a renaissance temple recalling the palaces of Florence in her golden age.

All the new schools contain baths—though that necessity is decreasing just as it is beginning to be met. The newer tenements are often constructed with bathrooms. In the older houses that they replace there were sometimes whole blocks that averaged but two or three bathrooms to 5,000 people.



Private Benevolence Aids the City.

IT IS worth while to consider how eager private benevolence is to supplement the city—or, rather, to aid in lines not yet thought quite proper for city expenditure. There are the Milbanks, for instance, not among the notoriously wealthy families, but what a record they have of things accomplished! Milbank Hall is the beautiful home of Barnard college for girls. The Millbank baths have within the year been opened on the East side; they surround their poor users with every beauty of architecture and every luxury of equipment that the richest may command. The Milbanks, brother and married sister, are of the class of people who look out all the time for somebody to spend money.

They have just taken [illegible] City. There was a [illegible] Scudder, personally [illegible] whose liberal views [illegible] ported sermon attracted their attention. They have just enabled him to carry out his ideas of holding young people from evil amusements by providing harmless ones in a $150,000 people's palace which I can say from personal inspection is, though smaller, more attractive than the original institution which Walter Besant dreamed for East London, and which so beautifully "came true." Dr. Scudder has, and values first of all, a gymnasium with a director who was formerly the trainer at Columbia university. He has dancing space, and proposes to use it, no matter who objects. Reading rooms, baths, clubrooms, of course.

"Gen. Grant" Just as He Was in '70.

AND now again Gen. Grant is a New Yorker, and seeing the stout figure of medium height and more than ordinary sturdiness, the square, bullet-shaped head, the closely cropped beard showing plentiful gray, the old New York resident rubs his eyes in bewilderment, half wondering if it is not again 1870, if the president is not on a flying visit to the city. Gen. Fred Grant is the living image of his father. His coming to succeed Gen. Corbin as commander of the department of the east brings him to that home of his young manhood which he knows best of all. For Gen. Grant has been a resident of the city, off and on, for 30 years. It was from New York that he was appointed minister to Austria. He was for a time police commissioner of the city, like Roosevelt, and with equal earnestness worked for the regeneration of the department. His home in New York was the narrow, deep house on Sixty-seventh street, to which the elder Grant came from Washington for the unhappy experience in "high finance," in which business ignorance and a knavish partner plunged him. The present general will live on Governor's island, which was never his father's home; in the quiet commander's quarters where amidst the sea traffic of all the world a calm as if of a cloister is perpetual. The appearance of calm is deceptive if it were to indicate drowsiness. The department includes a great number of big harbor forts; those of New York particularly are upon a scale little realized by people who pass them every day unthinking.

Of the great change made by modern ordnance Gen. Grant will have a reminder in 80 great cannon lying upon a dock of the little island, almost in sight of his house. They cost $10,000,000 in the time of his father; now they are not worth ten cents. Not even for old iron? No; for some reason which I do not understand, even junk dealers do not want them. Perhaps they are too heavy to handle; perhaps the composition of the metal—huge rifled cannon of the old type—is not nowadays fashionable. The new rifled cannon, that from the massive pits in the sand guard the port are all of the modern type, firing at a 12-mile range a pointed projectile that would pierce if fairly hit the armor of any ship likely to wander this way. There has been a great, but well-concealed change in the defenses of New York since the Spanish war. Before that time visitors wandered at will about the forts. Now Uncle Sam doesn't care about company. And the work goes on.

The Wedding of Mr. Potter.

THE wedding of James Brown Potter was no surprise to New York society, which had for four years expected that he would tire of single blessedness. Mr. Potter is uncomfortably near 50, and is comfortably wealthy; he is a member of an aristocratic family, and has in his immediate relationship the bishop of New York, the owners of the Potter building and other famous men of the metropolis. His beautiful wife, Cora Urquhart Potter, had been on the stage for some years when, in 1900, he obtained a divorce. He has always lived quietly and has never offended against taste in any way. His beautiful daughter, left in his custody by the seperation, has made an excellent match.

Remains, of course, the Episcopalian objections to the remarriage of church members, but that command has been broken in so many families, that it now excites no surprise. It is a curious coincidence that it has been disregarded in the immediate families both of the bishop of New York and of the late Bishop Littlejohn, of Brooklyn, whose daughter was married to one of Potter's band, a noted lawyer there. Nor has the Potter objection the use of one's talents on the stage prevented one member of the family, James Brown's cousin, from being a professional singer, and a good one.

Mrs. Potter was one of the prettiest women New York had ever seen when she electrified society by reciting at a charitable entertainment "Referee" George Simm's poem of "Cutler Joe," which was in those simple days considered a daring choice. The many-jointed tongue of the town wagged at a great rate. Not long after came the breach, when Mrs. Potter went upon the professional stage and made her taunt, which the profession has never forgotten or forgiven, that she did so to "elevate the theater." The silly remark of one who was little more than a girl, intoxicated by public admiration of her beauty, need not be remembered against her. Since then she has by hard work made the profession her own.

OWEN LANGDON.

HAS CLEVER GANDER

BILL JOHNSON'S PET IS MOST AS WISE AS A SERPENT.

Maine Trapper Relates How He and a Wild Goose Became Permanent Chums and Inseparable Companions.

A correspondent of the New York World, writing from Bangor, Me., says that Jack Johnson, or Northeast Carry, as he is more commonly known, is only a gander, but he's a tame one, highly educated, and has more friends than anyone else who visits Moosehead lake. He is discovered by his friend and master, "Bill" Johnson, lying [illegible] in a heavy sleet storm on Northeast Carry, where Johnson was trapping. At first the trapper thought he would shoot the bird in order to vary his bill of fare, which for weeks had consisted of salt pork and venison, but, although tired and partially disabled, the gander was lively enough to keep out of range, flying away over Spencer mountain, and always returning to swim in a bit of open water near the outlet.

Then Johnson set a trap, and in a few days had the gander prisoner. But the dinner was given up, for the poor bird was as lean as a crow, and Johnson, instead of cooking it, took it home to camp and made a nest for it in an empty barrel just outside the camp door. There the gander was fed daily until, when fat enough to make a good dinner, it had become so tame and so friendly that the trapper couldn't find it in his heart to kill it. So the two became close friends, and a fine cozy winter they had of it. Johnson himself tells the story:

"When I broke camp and came back here to the Carry, Jack—I named him Jack after an old pardner—he hopped on the tote sled and come along with me. Down here to the carry he's learnt a lot more and there's mighty little going on that air bird ain't onto. Keeps run of the fishermen that come up here looking for me to guide 'em, and knows 'em all by sight. He goes out with me in my canoe, and likes to splash 'round in the lake. He can roll a log as well as any man on the West branch drive, and one of his best tricks is to get on a plank, spread out his big wings to the breeze and go sailing off down the lake, then flying back.

"When I go away he is lonesome, and when I come back he's always at the steamboat landing to meet me. Some folks pester him, with throwing sticks and things, and he is sore on them. When I am around he picks out all the fellers that has bothered him and goes for 'em tooth and nail, or with his wings and bill—and he's no slouch in a fight, let me tell you."

Johnson claims that Jack knows the game laws from end to end, and that he could give the wardens many a good tip if he wanted to give poachers away. Next winter Jack is going to learn the game of poker, which is a fine art in the Maine woods. "You may laugh," said Johnson, "but I'm darned if he ain't almost smart enough to do it."

"Well, sir, you'd never believe that a bird could pick up so much gin'ral information and so many smart tricks as that there gander. Why, knowing that ganders of the wild sort need a swim as much as they need grub, I used to give this one a bath every morning and then set it up on a bench 'longside the fire to dry. Hadn't done this more'n three or four times till that bird used to come tuggin' at the blanket on my bunk when it was a little late in the morning to say 'Come on, now; how about my swim?' And after that I never had to set it up to dry, for it would hop up itself and flap its wings about before the fire to get good and dry, chattering away to himself all the time.

"Yes, sir; that bird could actually talk—in his way. None of your foolish gibberish that crows have over, but good, sensible talk, 'bout what was going on in the world. He knowed when it was Sunday mornings and Saturday nights it used to sit on the edge of my bunk and swap goose stories with me, like a chum might, and I would talk to him like a brother.

"It made the winter pass mighty slight quicker'n if I'd been alone. He was a good watch-dog, too, for when anyone came around the camp at night he'd set up the almightiest hissing and honking you ever heard. I trained him to be a watch-dog, and he was right onto his job."

India-rubber trees which are tapped every other day continue to yield sap for more than 20 years, and it is a curious fact that the oldest and most frequently tapped trees produce the richest sap.

ABOUT MARRIAGE IN INDIA.

American Missionary Gives Some Interesting Information Concerning Wedding of Natives.

A missionary who has spent some years in India, and whose work at present is particularly concerned with an orphanage conducted under American auspices in Calcutta, interested a company of young people in this city recently with an account of the way marriages are arranged in India. She referred only to the marriages between the girls in the orphanages and the young Christian men of the neighborhood, says the Brooklyn Eagle, and said that scarcely a day passes by that the managers of the institution are not petitioned by some young man for assistance in obtaining a wife.

"Of course we never induce a girl to get married if she does not feel inclined that way," said the missionary, "but the majority of them are perfectly willing, and oftentimes we are petitioned by some of the girls to let them have the next chance. The choice between the girls rests with us, not with the young men, for if the latter were permitted to meet the girls at the orphanage, and make their own choice, the fairest girl would inevitably be selected. The Hindu is not different from other folks in his appreciation of beauty, but the prettiest girl might not be the wife best suited to the young man in whose behalf we are working; so we make the choice, and if the girl is willing, the young man is informed of the fact. He usually comes to the orphanage accompanied by his nearest feminine relatives, and as a general thing, the preliminaries are soon arranged. The period of engagement does not last long, and the couple rarely express any desire to see much of each other. There is no hindrance to a reasonable amount of intercourse, but they do not care for it, and it is not the custom of the country. Of course, we never let a girl marry from our home unless the man is a Christian. And we make all the necessary inquiries as to his character and to his ability to maintain a wife. Then, too, we have to be careful to select one suited to his station in life—that is whether he is a hill man, or resides in the city, and is in civil service. So far as we have been able to ascertain, the average of happy marriages that have been contracted in this way equals that of the average in other lands.

"It is customary for the bridegroom in such marriages to provide his bride with her wedding-gown and accessories. We provide the rest of the outfit, and a marriage in the orphanage generally means a gala time for the girls. All those old enough to understand the meaning of the ceremony are interested, and the chapel is prettily decorated with flowers and vines in honor of the occasion. Sometimes the newly wedded couple make their home with the groom's people, but generally they take possession of a home of their own, and this we consider the more satisfactory arrangement. Girls marry very young in India, the law permitting a girl to become a bride at 12 years of age. We consider 16 a more preferable age, but in India this is considered quite old. As a matter of fact, a girl who is not wedded at 18 is unlikely to be so unless she should be fancied by some widower, who, if he has children, generally prefers a wife a little older than the average."

ORANGES BRING RICHES.

Tree, as a Rule, Are Vigorous and in Some Instances Remarkably Prolific.

The orange tree is noted for its longevity. In Cordova, Spain, there is a grove said to be not less than seven centuries old; and these ancient trees, although hollow and knotted, are still covered with blossom and fruitage. The orange tree, says Allan Sutherland, in Booklovers Magazine, is very vigorous, and is remarkably prolific. It is stated that as many as 20,000 oranges have been picked from a single tree in the Azores in one season; while at least half that number have been gathered from one in Florida. It is recorded that two magnificent old trees in Seville, Spain, have yielded about 30,000 each in a single season; and at Nice is a tree 50 feet in height and three feet in diameter, which produces 6,000 oranges. As a rule, however, trees bear from 500 to 2,000 oranges annually.

The tree is very uniform in its bearing, there being no off years. The blossom and fruit are rarely hurt save as the result of unexpected frost, the orange-grower's most dreaded enemy.

Beautifying Paris.

The Paris municipal authorities have offered prizes and medals for the best floral decorations of balconies. Every Parisian apartment has its balcony, always more or less adorned with plants and vases, and much art is displayed in the newer houses, where special provision is made for flowers. The few houses decorated last year by a society having for its object the beautifying of the city were so effective that the present prizes are offered. The jury that will pass upon the balconies includes the eminent painter, Besnard, and a number of other artists and architects.—N. Y. Post.

Passing of a Relative.

They were out walking one evening, and he lifted his hat to an elderly man as they passed.

"What a distinguished looking old gentleman!" she exclaimed. "Is he a relative of yours?"

"Yes," he replied, and there was a tremor in his voice as he felt in the pocket where his watch had formerly reposed, "he is my uncle."

THE PASSING GYPSY

Our Nomads of the Van Are Fast Disappearing.

Modern Conditions Are Against Them — A Picturesque People Who Served a Purpose—How They Live Without Work.

From the gypsies themselves we learn that their ranks are gradually growing thinner. This, they say, is caused by the watchfulness of the immigration officials who send back many an immigrant, who, if permitted to land, would find a place in the tented wagon or van that travels north and south with the changing seasons, and also by the desertion of many men who are drifting into what we would term legitimate callings, though the gypsy will resent any intimation that his is not also legitimate. Few of them join the class of criminals who end their days in prisons.

While the latter is true the owner of chicken yards will not lament the passing of the gypsy, though he remove a picturesque feature from our national cosmopolitanism, and, in his way, has brought pleasure to many a small boy of both city and country.

But modern conditions are against them. It is as though a policeman were continually saying "Move on." Long since the farmer decided that he would no longer let them camp even in the most useless corner of his fields. They used, whenever possible, to pitch their camps on commons, but the local authorities are averse, even to that, and the gypsy is obliged to pursue their calling as it were, on sufference. Not only so, but other things are highly unfavorable to them. In quiet country villages the itinerant vendor used to be a necessity, and from morning till night there was a procession of them went from house to house. Our good friend Autolycus, with his pack well stuffed with "fine nacks for ladies," went singing and jesting, while he palmed off his wife's best ribbons for Mary to go to the fair with, and sold a cap or a necktie for her laddie. He supplied her mother with caps and linen, and spectacles and snuff boxes, while the father bought from him the Sunday waistcoat. Then came the clockmaker, selling huge watches that would not go, and spectacles you could not see through, and many other trifles of light description. The tinker came shouting "Old pots to mend," and soon drew a concourse of children to watch him at his little fire soldering the cottage kettle and mending broken ware. And when at night they foregather at Pooste Nancie's store, or its equivalent, we doubt if the beggar's opera they performed was ever quite so brilliant as the one drawn by the imagination of Burns, for the wandering people are a jealous people, and they give point to the adage "Set a thief to catch a thief." Yet they pick up many songs that, though scarcely adapted for the modern drawing room, are not without a wit and character of their own. They address each other in language not blunted and spoiled by modern politeness and conventions, but direct, plain, and yet embellished with many choice epithets and fancy phrases. They are, indeed, the outcast of the population, and in a world which is, perhaps, growing over-burdened with industry, they set an example of idleness. The only means of getting bread to which they consciously object is that of working for it. To beg, borrow or steal comes as naturally to them as living, and probably the stern morality will wipe out the spiver of an awful reason, and their race is dead or dying.

On their pilgrimage they leave the law and the commandments to the street-bred people, and though there are rural constables to be dodged, it is an easier game to play than dodging those minions of the law whose business it is to keep order in the town.

WOMEN GOLD SEEKERS.

They Have Been Successful in Placer Mining Camps.

For years after the discovery of gold in California there was scarcely a white woman to be found in a mining camp in the whole country region. But with the first hint of gold finds in Alaska, even in the region of 70 below zero, women donned bloomers and trailed to the north along with strong men.

Arrived at the camps, some opened restaurants or lodging rooms. Others cooked for mining camps. Yet others, delicate women with white hands, became laundresses. These were temporary expedients while they made their pile, which was to come from the gold claims all secured. Some of them went to take care of and keep house for husbands, sons or brothers, meantime investing in those same mysterious "claims" which, again, were stenographers and typewriters.

Some of the ladies had more or less capital to invest. Where they information themselves and watched results, not allowing themselves to be swindled, they in many cases acquired fortunes.

MRS. HART.

Mrs. J. J. Healy, one of the early white women residents of Alaska territory, knew its chances as well as any man prospector, took them and conquered. She and a woman friend invested together, stood by each other and looked out for each other's interests, to the great advantage of both.

Such an inhospitable a coast as that on Nome in the first stampede to the Klondike found woman, resolute, cheerful, dauntless, ready to snatch opportunity and make it her own. Not a few of these women became actual prospectors and learned to be experts in detecting ore indications. Compare all this with the womanless gold camps of California in 1850 and judge how both the times and women have changed.

Those who have seen the wonderfully interesting exhibit of Alaska at the St. Louis fair no doubt observed the considerable number of precious nuggets with the names of women attached, notably those of Mrs. King, Mrs. Mary E. Hart and Emma Steiner. The nuggets are from claims owned and operated by these ladies, two of whom, Mrs. Hart and Mrs. King, are in attendance at the St. Louis exposition and look after the Alaskan display there. Miss Steiner exhibits rare specimens of block tin. While prospecting for gold at Nome she and her employees discovered a quantity of the black sand which indicates tin ore. Thereafter, while retaining her gold properties, Emma Steiner became also largely interested in the mining of tin, a rare metal on the western continent.

Mrs. Hart sailed to Cape Nome as a newspaper correspondent, intending also to better her fortunes as she went along. She went from Los Angeles, but had come originally from Virginia, with all the southern woman's vivacity and pluck, saying nothing of the rare social grace that marks the truly sympathetic woman everywhere. She was educated, widely informed and interested as a child in everything on this planet. Such a combination of characteristics is rare.

Arrived in Alaska, Mrs. Hart found something more absorbing even than the aim of bettering her individual fortunes. That was Alaska itself, which to a soul possessed of heart and brain is today the most fascinating region in the western hemisphere. Instead of an ungracious land whence Mary Hart was to wrest gold to last her the rest of her life and get away from as quickly as possible, the lady found a country that, once known and developed, would house and feed an abundance to millions of people. Its geology and its native races appealed to her as a student of science; its possible agricultural and stock raising development appealed to her as to all who desire the industrial well being of their kind. There were its fisheries to exploit, too, and its vast and varied mineral deposits had not even been scratched over.

The personal interests of the private individual, Mary E. Hart, became merged in those of the patriotic citizen who saw with prophetic vision Alaska as the future richest state of the American Union. Governor Brady appointed Mrs. Hart commissioner in charge of the resources of Alaska at the exposition. One of the things she did was to have the school children of the territory prepare a beautiful exhibit of its wild flowers, while women show an assortment of its canned fruits. Early next year Mrs. Hart will conduct a tourist excursion to the enchanted land.

Things Which Are Needed by the Woman Who Motors.

Although everybody is not the happy possessor of a motor car, there are few women in these progressive days who do not number among their friends or relatives some one more blessed than themselves by fate, so that it has become almost a necessity to include garments suitable to this pursuit among the items of a well equipped wardrobe.

The new motor coats are made of tweed, cloth and even leather. Indeed leather as a decorative feature is a great deal used on motor garments in the form of pipings, buttons, collar and cuffs. Sometimes it is applied in scroll designs, in which case the leather is embossed or cut into conventional patterns. For winter wear some loose fur lined sack coats are made which represent the acme of comfort.

The cut of the motoring coat does not vary much from any ordinary long wrap except in the sleeves, which should always be large, with closely buttoned wrists, which are far more preferable than any other style, while a flapping cape is an abomination.

The matter of headgear is an important one and the veil a supreme requirement of the woman who motors.

The most sensible and comfortable hat is a light cloth peaked cap arranged with an inside brim for the purpose of holding the long pins in position, or a neat canotier of felt may be worn if securely fastened on the head.

A simple veil is one of crepe de chine gathered on a firm round disk, which fits on the crown of the hat and is drawn tight around the throat and tied in a bow under the chin.

The illustration represents one most useful to a woman who does not need the services of a motor wrap pure and simple. This coat is well adapted for ordinary driving and traveling. It is made of navy blue cloth stitched with red and trimmed with red buttons. It would be charming carried out in brown or gray broadcloth or tweed.

Reads the Latest Hat Trimming—A Development in Coiffures.

A very curious fashion which has made its appearance of late is that of wearing a ceinture of black taffeta with a colored costume. To accompany it there is usually a rosette of black taffeta worn on one side of the corsage, and sometimes the same is repeated on the sleeves. The effect is not always of the happiest, especially when the gown is trimmed with different colored material. It is doubtful whether this rosette vogue will be of long duration.

Beads are perhaps the most important millinery novelty seen lately, and they are to be found encircling the crowns of some smart hats in roped effects. These ropes are of different colored beads, each bead about the size of a large pearl and designed in every and any color that harmonizes with the hat. Some of the ropes in bright colors are too garish to be in really good taste, but a pretty example is found in the shape of a brown hat pointed in front and composed of gathered tulle adorned with a single string of brown pearls wound around the crown. This wreath is decorative without being at all eccentric.

The chic toque illustrated is of chestnut brown taffeta and velvet. The silk makes the draped crown, while the velvet is maneuvered into corded puffings about the brim. A green velvet drapery is arranged feather fashion at one side.

STYLES FOR MADEMOISELLE.

Smart Hats For the Small Girl—Boys' Chapeaus For Dress.

Among the prettiest of the new hats suitable for girls for everyday wear are the French sailor shapes made in rough, hairy felt, trimmed quite simply with knots and folds of velvet and one or two quills. Very attractive for the same purpose are the hats of smooth felt with the rim turned up all the way round the crowns, draped with folds of silk or velvet drawn up into two large chous, one on each side of the front.

Three cornered marquise hats in felt will be much worn by mademoiselle this winter. They are becoming to almost every face and require little in the way of trimming beyond a few wings and a knot of velvet.

Beaver hats are the smartest for dress occasions, and nothing is prettier than a soft, long haired white beaver adorned with draperies and chous of very wide white satin ribbon arranged with one long white ostrich feather curving gracefully around one side of the crown and drooping over the hair at the back.

In the picture will be seen a dainty frock for a girl of nine or ten. It is of embroidered white silk, but cashmere in a soft shade trimmed with silk braid exactly matching the cashmere would make an equally attractive dress. The silk frock has a large yoke, which in the cashmere could be replaced by a tucked guimpe of silk harmonizing with the waistband. The sleeves of this frock are particularly pretty with their plaited epaulets, short puffs to the elbow and close fitting cuffs.

Sleeves That Will Be Worn by the Modish Woman—Smart Girdles.

Sleeves are a vexed question in the sartorial world. The early models are generally more or less exaggerated, but are toned down later. For the moment there are several prominent features. The first is that, although some dressmakers are advocating large sleeves, the general trend is toward smaller effects, the same amount of material being used, but it is gathered and puffed into less territory. Often the short shoulder is being adopted, and this curiously narrow effect is strange after the wide sweeping expanse across the chest. It is not, however, compulsory to stick to details of this sort, as there are lots of smart variations.

There is a new girdle which is very stunning made of a wide coarsely woven gold braid encircles the waist and ties in a bow at the back.

Girls who are clever with their fingers will be able to amuse themselves this winter by making dainty waist belts out of ribbon, of various widths and adorning them with quaint little flower rosettes, bobs and dangles. Deep belts in pompadour chine ribbon, with a ladder of small bows either at the back or front, will be very much worn and may be easily made at home.

Ribbon belts that come to a point in front and finish in the back with two or three upstanding loops, below which float long ribbon ends reaching almost to the hem of the frock, are very pretty and dressy.

Quite of the latest cult is the waist illustrated of soft white cloth. The shawl collar chemisette, choker and sleeves are of frills of tulle lace. The bloused double breasted effect in front fastens with tiny crystal buttons. The flared sleeves are banded with cloth and decorated with buttons. The ceinture is also of the cloth.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

The Man's Woman.

Her Particular Method

"It beats the dickens," remarked Miss Primly, "how some girls manage to have so many men around. Now, I am popular enough—ask any girl in our set—but I simply have to quit every time I know in order to get enough men for my entertainments. Isn't that odd?"

"Not a bit of it," returned Miss Wise One. "You are simply not a man's woman; that is all."

"Man's woman! A man's woman! I hear that phrase all the time. What does it mean?"

"Not anything devilish, my dear, although I can see a look of virtuous aloofness in your eye. The man's woman is simply possessed of qualities not found in the average. Being broad minded, she takes what is known as 'the man's point of view,' and this delicate little attention so flatters man that he is ready to be good to her in a thousand little ways, besides enjoying her conversation because it is so different from most women's—so sensible!"

"The deceitful thing!"

"No more deceitful than you were the other day when you were trying to impress Mrs. Richly and you agreed with her on several statements which I happened to know were directly opposed to your point of view"—

"Well—go on."

"Oh, of course, I understand! But, to change a painful subject, tell me, when you do have a masculine caller, how do you entertain him?"

"Why, I usually take him right in with the family. That makes it so much more lively and pleasant."

"Yes, in some cases. And I suppose every one talks to him at once and your father regales him with bits out of the evening paper?"

"Well, sometimes I take him into the drawing room."

"Do you let him smoke?"

"In the drawing room?"

"Oh, I forgot. I'd be sure, you can't afford to scent the hangings. You may need them ten years from now! And how do you entertain him? Do you sing or play?"

SHE LETS HIM SMOKE.

"I only sing classical music, and most men somehow or other don't seem to have that refined taste."

"Um—well, my dear, if you intend to be a heartbreaker among the men you want to give up doing only what you are doing. And what subjects of conversation do you introduce?"

"That's easier. I talk about the latest books and plays and golf and"—

"Oh, glory—the usual girl talk that he gets at every house. I suppose he departs promptly after three-quarters of an hour?"

"How did you guess?"

"My dear, I judged by my own feelings. I would if I were a man."

"Well, how does your precious man's woman manage to keep him?"

"In the first place, she thinks of him, of what he likes and how he feels. She tenderly places him in the best easy chair under the shadow of a rosy lamp shade, which makes him feel cheerful right away and which is nine thousand times more becoming to her than all the overhead lights in the world. Next she settles herself in a nice fluffy attitude, and then lets him smoke. Under the influence of a few puffs all the kinks melt out of his disposition. He tells her all about things he is interested in—how Billy Blank did this and Jack So-and-so did that. She nods and looks at the right time until he is so pleased that he exclaims, 'By Jove, what a bully chum you are!' And from that to 'By Jove, what a bully wife you'd make!' is but a step."

But Miss Primly was busy with a pencil making notes as fast as she could.

The next time a man called the family was cut out entirely; the big red lamp in the library worked overtime; a dish of bonbons stood beneath the lamp; a box of cigarettes was left there by accident. By and by coon songs floated out on the desecrated air which had never vibrated to anything less vigorous than Brahms and Chopin. In the rosy glow Miss Primly, fluffily attired, looked soulfully into the eyes of a big man almost too comfortably ensconced in an easy chair.

Strange to say, within the year Miss Primly was married.

MAUD ROBINSON.

BEARD HELPED ESAU

THICK FOLIAGE SERVED AS A SHIELD AGAINST FOUL TIPS.

Western Farmer Used Spinach on His Face to Ward Off Injuries and Thus Originated Ball Catcher's Protector.

"Umpah!" grunted an American league rooter to a St. Louis Republic reporter, when a foul tip caught the Chicago catcher in the wind pad. "That guy owes a vote of thanks to the man who invented the chest protector, all right, all right."

"You refer to Esau Sampson, I suppose," suggested the man higher up. "He didn't exactly invent the chest protector, though. It just came natural with him. Sort of growth, ye might say.

"It was back in the early eighties, the year that Bull Thompson, the Lightfoot Lilies' star catcher, got laid up. The Bull had a favorite trick, you remember, of biting the bat and holding it with his teeth when the batsman drew back to hit the ball. He had 'em all guessing with the stunt, until he tried it on the terrible Swede of the Beaver Dam (Wis.) invincibles and got four of his teeth extracted for a three-base hit.

"For awhile after Bull's accident the Lilies were up against it, and Capt. Slugger Burrows was scouring the country high and low for some one to fill his shoes.

"Twas down in Minnesota somewhere, I think, that he finally landed Esau Sampson. At any rate, Esau looked like an orthodox farmer, all right.

"Whiskers? Why, say, that man's face looked like an eastern view of the seventh Sutherland alster going west with her hair down. Honest, he had the most fertile face I ever trained my lookers on. His beard was enough to make the most wayward of swallows homesick to nest again.

"Did it bother him when he was playing ball? Never but once. On all other occasions those whiskers were the greatest help in the world to him.

"You remember what catchers had to stack up against in the foul tip line before the days of the chest protector? It 'twas nothing worse than the wreck of a floating rib or a vacuum in the air tank, a backstop could consider himself lucky.

"But that was where Esau used to show up so strong. The ball couldn't hurt him. When a foul tip shot through his hands there'd be a slight lowering of the jaw, a sharp rustling sound and we'd know that another ball was safely resting in Esau's facial foliage.

"The only time he came to grief through his hirsute chin crop was in a practice game with the Jones County Eye, Ear and Tongue Infirmary team the Wednesday before the big championship contest with the Ringtail Roarers.

"'Twas in the last half of the ninth and the game looked a lead-pipe cinch for the Lilies. The Infirmary had two men on bases, two were out and there were two strikes and no balls on the batter.

"But you never can tell in baseball. Who'd ever have thought that just because Dean Bradley, the Lilies' pitcher, put a little chewing gum on the ball to give it an extra twist for the third strike that that would have turned the tide of victory?

"It did, though. The third strike came in and Esau missed it. The gum on the ball caught his beard and yanked it between his legs with such terrific force that he turned a complete somersault.

"The Lilies rushed in from the field to his assistance, but before they could disentangle the ball from Esau's Kansas ramblers the three Infirmaries had crossed the plate with the runs that won the game.

"That put the Lilies in a quandary. They didn't so much mind losing a mere practice game, but what was to prevent the same thing from happening in the big championship contest with the Ringtail Roarers? Dean Bradley said he couldn't give up the occasional use of chewing gum on the ball at that stage; it would simply ruin the effectiveness of his delivery.

"It was Esau himself who finally solved the problem. He appeared on the field in the Roarers game with his whiskers snugly encased in a freshly laundered pillow slip, and so successful did this contrivance prove as a safeguard against foul tips that before the season was out every catcher in that part of the country had adopted it in one form or another.

"And that, sir, to the best of my knowledge, is the origin of the present-day catcher's protector. At any rate, we never heard it disputed."

SHE LOVES MANKIND

THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE STORY OF MISS EVA BOOTH.

New Commander of Salvation Army in United States Is Lovingly Known in London as "Angel of the Slums."

New York Special.

From a barefooted lass who, with her sweet voice and tambourine, led street meetings in the slums of London to the leadership of the Salvation Army in this country is the story which a few weeks will see completed in the career of Eva Booth. It is expected that Miss Booth will soon come to New York from Canada, where she is commander of the Canadian command, to assume the leadership of the American division.

Her brother-in-law, Commander Booth-Tucker, who is now the head of the army in this country, has been so depressed since the death of his wife in a railroad accident a short time ago that the work of leading the Salvationists has proved a task which he is unable to bear to his own satisfaction.

Eva Booth began to do her share of the work in spreading the creed of salvation to all mankind when she was a mere child. In 1884, when the advance of the army in England were being received with hostility by the worst element and with decided indifference by the better classes, she made her first appearance in the street meetings. Down in the district of Whitechapel, London, in the midst of the slums, the army had begun its street meetings and had met with all kinds of opposition even to open threats and show of force. The Whitechapel hoodlum, afraid that his way in the district was threatened by the activity of the "sky soldiers," turned out and tried by hooting, hissing and the throwing of decayed vegetables to drive the Salvationists from the streets.

The authorities turned an indifferent ear to the appeals of Gen. Booth, and things looked dark for the work of the army in that part of London which needed its efforts most. One night there arose on the little platform in the street a 12-year-old girl in the uniform of the army. The hoodlums stopped in their efforts to drown the voices of the Salvationists and stared at the child before them. Then before they could renew their efforts, she began to sing. The voice, clear and eager, ringing out amid the dirt and squalor and sin of Whitechapel, silenced the crowds where the efforts of the older workers had been powerless to check. To the end the girl went on with her song, and when she ceased women who had not known what tears were for years were crying and men were standing silent and abashed.

So the Salvation Army first won its hold in the London slums, and so was Eva Booth introduced to the people among whom she was to spend years of work.

For two years she accompanied her father in his tours and sang her way into the hearts of her listeners. Then, because the people of the slums could not forget the little girl who had touched their hearts, she stopped traveling with the general and settled down to the work of saving souls among the submerged classes. Her sweet face and manners won the love of those among whom she labored. Gifted with a fine voice and grace of bearing, she captivated the district and was soon known as the "angel of the slums."

When she was near her twentieth year she won the love of a young student of sociology who was pursuing his studies in the London slums. The young man saw the girl whose voice and presence swayed the crowds that gathered and promptly lost his heart to her. He attended the meetings of the army, joined in the choruses of the songs, and finally avowed his love and asked Miss Booth to become his wife. But the bar of the army's regulations was between them. The young man was unwilling to take up the task of self-saving, and Miss Booth was so devoted to the work that she would not become the wife of any man who could not engage with her in her labors.

Eva Booth continued in her efforts in her chosen field, and the sociologist sadly went his way. Miss Booth is now the only one of Gen. Booth's daughters in the army who has not married.

With her advent as commander in Canada she threw herself into her work with the zest that marked her efforts in London. Her administration has been characterized by good judgment and success. In her duties as commander she has displayed the possession of great executive ability. She has a fancy for big enterprises. When she comes to assume charge of the American division she will have opportunity to use her ability in this regard.

EASTERN TENT COLONIES.

Many People on Atlantic Coast Spend the Entire Summer Under Canvas.

Spending the summer vacation in a tent is a custom that is yearly growing in popularity in almost every part of this broad land. On the Atlantic coast, especially on the south side of Long Island and along the New Jersey shore, and on the Pacific the tent colonies are increasing in numbers and growing in size, reports the New York Sun.

Rochester, Buffalo and other cities on the great lakes have thriving summer tent suburbs, where the city dwellers can get close to nature and enjoy lake breezes. The various Chautauqua assemblies, scattered across the continent from the great parent camp at Chautauqua, N. Y., all through the middle western state, welcome the camper and provide nearly as much room for tents as for the more permanent cottages.

Hundreds of little inland lakes, all destitute of any such institution as the summer assembly, present inviting sites for summer camps, be they of solitary tents or groups for several families, and town folks, and villagers, too, in increasing numbers are realizing this and pitching tents there for a week or a month or longer.

To the city family of moderate means a tent camp affords the opportunity of getting away to fresh fields and pastures new, which otherwise might not be possible. In a group of New York matrons who were discussing vacation plans the other day, one mother of four was enthusiastic about the benefits of tent life to her growing youngsters.

"Yes," she said, "we are going to spend our summer in a tent again. We've done that for three years, and the whole family has voted it such a success that now we do not even think of any other plan as a possibility.

'Just as soon as the children are out of school we start for camp. I don't know of anything that does my children so much good as that sort of life, practically out of doors the whole summer.

"They're seldom in the tent except when asleep and when it's too rainy to stay out—and that is seldom. They store up a big pound of good health that lasts them all through the school year in town.

"But one of the greatest benefits from this sort of summering is that it makes them less particular about their food. At home the children sometimes get finicky about the kind of cereal they'll eat for breakfast and become too fastidious about the cooking, but they get so hungry when we're camping that they are ready to eat whatever is put before them. They learn to help to cook the food, too, and anything tastes good when they've had the fun of preparing it over an outdoors fire.

"The boys—I have three of them, you know—learn other useful things, too. They have to help wash the dishes and make their own beds, and keep the camp tidy. And there is plenty of time for all these things and for play, too.

"No, I don't take any servants. Ours is a genuine camp. We take care of ourselves, and each member of the family has his own special chores to do.

"This gives each of us just enough responsibility to prevent laziness, and enough work to whet our appetites for a good time and for good, plain, wholesome food. I am sure my children have been in better health and better temper since we have been camping out than they ever were before.

"Another advantage, and one not to be ignored or despised, is the opportunity tent life affords for nature study. Such opportunity is more intimate and more immediate than any other method of camp life gives that I know of.

"My youngsters are all interested in flowers and birds and squirrels and insects, and Benjamin Franklin, Jr., always home a large collection of rocks and fossils. Never a day passes at Canvaswalls without some new discovery in these fascinating studies, and there is never a dull day all summer long."

"Well, well! Almost then persuadest me to become a camper," laughed matron No. 2, while a third added: "I'm going to try it this very summer;" and she and the experienced mother-of-four forthwith launched into a discussion of plans and details of suitable places and necessary outfit.

Decreasing Price of Cut Glass.

"American cut glass has become the best article in the market," said W. L. Rice, of Corning, N. Y., recently. "The day is coming, and is almost here now, when we can all have cut glass on our tables, and it will no longer be confined to the wealthy classes as a luxury. The price is decreasing all the time, and it is only the handsomest and most intricate designs of cutting that demand fancy prices in these days. Imported glass used to be the thing, but American industry has made rapid strides in the last few years, and now the coloring and the style of domestic production surpasses that which is brought in from foreign countries."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Japanese Garden Lanterns.

The noted Japanese gardens, famous for their beauty, owe much of their charm to the quaint lanterns which are used in great profusion. The best of these garden lanterns are made of bronze after quaint native designs. Some of them are richly carved and are of great antiquity, and the best examples are seen at Nikko, famous for its exquisite bronzes.—N. Y. Herald.

One Man's Luck.

Brown—I say, Green, did you buy that block of mining stock you were speaking about?

Green—No. I had a fortunate escape.

"How was that?"

"A burglar broke into my office, smashed the safe open and stole the money I was going to invest in it."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Constitutionalist

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor.

Thursday, Nov. 17, 1904.

The Fourth ward has 1,350 voters according to the returns of last week's election, which is more than one-third of the entire city vote. It does seem, therefore, that there is good cause for the present agitation to divide the ward. Railway has five wards. Plainfield surely should have as many if not more.

Though James E. Martine, of this city, was swept away in the Roosevelt landslide, he won the day in Elizabeth, the home of his opponent, Congressman Charles N. Fowler, and in Plainfield, the recognized stronghold of the Republican candidate for re-election. Roosevelt carried Elizabeth by over 1,800 and carried the rest of the party ticket through with him, except the congressional nominee, Martine obtaining a majority of 156 in Plainfield, Roosevelt's majority was over 1,600 and the balance of the Republican ticket as much or greater with the exception of the congressional candidate. Mr. Fowler only got 845, showing that at least 400 Republicans voted for Martine. Out of the 845 majority, at least 550 is credited to the districts in which voting machines were used.

In the election of William L. Douglast to the governorship of Massachusetts is a story of success in life through common sense methods in conducting a business. Everybody knows about Mr. Douglass, and his business for he has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to sell them. When he was nominated by the Democrats for governor, it was not believed that he would have a ghost of a show to win, but the shoe man got down to work determined to capture the office. He bought a half page in all the leading papers of the Bay State and from that day until the campaign closed he filled the columns with reasons why he should be elected. The people of Massachusetts became interested in his candidacy and his campaign arguments were read by every voter in the State. Mr. Douglass didn't waste his money hiring halls, brass bands, and hackers. He had too much sense for such schemes. When the returns came in it was found that Massachusetts had been swept by the Republican nominees except for governor. Mr. Douglass came out with 30,000 majority, much to the surprise of everyone except himself. "It pays to advertise."

Y. M. C. A. BOWLERS WIN FROM WESTFIELD

LOCAL AGGREGATION TAKES THREE STRAIGHT GAMES AT WESTFIELD.

Another victory was added to the Y. M. C. A.'s bowling team Saturday evening when it defeated the Westfield Club, which is generally considered one of the strongest teams in this vicinity. The local players took three straight games, though C. Ortleb, of the Westfield team, was high man with a score of 190. Koons bowled the highest score for the Y. M. C. A., making a 178.

The following was the score by games: Westfield—680, 690, 657; Y. M. C. A.—700, 723, 696.

After the match was decided, an interesting pick-up match was rolled between two ten-man teams, play being kept up until after 11 o'clock.

The painting and papering contracted for by Charles Conover & Company, of Elmwood place, is sure to give entire satisfaction because only expert workmen are employed and the best materials used.

AMUSEMENTS.

Because of the unprecedented demand for seats for the great spectacular production of "Humpty Dumpty," which opens at the New Amsterdam Theatre next Monday evening, Klaw & Erlanger have decided to place tickets on sale for two months in advance, instead of one month, as originally planned. Seats may, therefore, be ordered by mail, accompanied by remittance, for any performance in the two months succeeding the opening, which will include the Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year holidays. The remarkably exacting rehearsals of the wonderfully large company of over 600 people, which have been going on during the past two months, now augmented by a complete performance of the entire piece every day, ensures a very perfect presentation next Monday evening. The company was rehearsed in sections—comedy, pantomimic, chorus, ballet and acrobatic—until last week, when ensemble rehearsals were begun. It is doubtful if any attraction ever presented in this country was as thoroughly prepared for its first presentation as this. The work that has been done for it is like the piece itself—prodigious. A success commensurate with the magnitude of the enterprise is predicted for it, for it will be found, beyond doubt, the greatest theatrical production ever made in America.

The fame of McCutcheon's Bird Center cartoons has extended all over the entire country and it was altogether natural, therefore, that those famous pictures, pregnant with humor and originality should attract the omnivous dramatist who is ever seeking fresh themes for stage use. "Bird Center," a new comedy-drama evolved from the McCutcheon cartoons, is one of the most stimulating promises of the early season. It received its initial production in New York last week Thursday, at the Majestic Theatre, coming direct from Chicago after a successful run at the Grand Opera House. A quintette of such clever comedians as Edward J. Connelly, George Richards, William Barress, Louis Payne and Georgie E. Mack are seen in the leading comedy roles, while accomplished actresses like Blanche Chapman, Rosa Cooke and Mabel Strickland are sure to do justice to the quaint types of femininity in "Bird Center." The scenery is on a most lavish and elaborate scale, the brush of John E. Young, the foremost metropolitan scenic artist having been called into requisition to illustrate such diverse scenes as the Bird Center thoroughfare, the Bird Center art studio, the Bird Center picnic grove and the home of Captain Fry, veteran G. A. R. officer. Julian Mitchel, who has no peer as a resourceful and inventive stage manager, personally supervises the production.

The opening performance of Rejane, the distinguished French actress, at the Lyric theatre, on the evening of Monday, November 7, proved one of the most notable events society and theatrical circles in New York have witnessed for many years. Certainly no gathering more distinguished or more appreciative has been seen in any theatre here for a decade. The line of carriages extended far beyond Eighth avenues and so continued for three quarters of an hour, and the spectacle inside the spacious house, when the curtain rose on the opening scene in "Amoureuse" was as brilliant as the season's opening night at the Metropolitan Opera House. Madame Rejane is artiste to her finger tips, the typical Parisienne, the idol of Paris, and not only the greatest actress in France, but confessedly without a peer in her line of work in the civilized world. She comes to America on this, her second tour in this country, supported by her own carefully selected Parisian company, and with a repertoire which includes all those great Parisian successes with which her name is so indissolubly linked, and which her incomparable art has done so much to make world famous.

BIG AUTO RUNS AMUCK

Plainfielder Driving, Loses Control of Heavy Machine.

FOUR MEN HURT

East Fourteenth Street, New York, the Scene of Wild Excitement Saturday Afternoon.

Aided by a big automobile belonging to the New York Vacuum Cleaning Company, Fred Williams, of this city, treated the habitues of East Fourteenth street, New York, to more excitement than they have had in a year, Saturday afternoon. Losing control of the machine, Williams tried to run it to the curb, only to have it leap onto the sidewalk and crash into one of the three pillars supporting the heavy steel and glass canopy in front of the Dewey theatre. The entire structure fell down, burying four men beneath it, only one of whom was seriously injured, sustaining a broken leg and scalp wounds. Williams escaped by jumping and was afterward arrested and locked up in the East Fifth Street station.

When the canopy, which weighed several tons, fell, somebody turned in a fire alarm and three engines and a truck were rushed to the scene. One after another three ambulances from Bellevue Hospital came dashing up and in a few minutes a crowd of several thousand persons was waiting to see, as was feared, the bodies of the unfortunate men taken from beneath the debris. John Faber, of 1576 Madison avenue, who was the worst hurt, was sent to Bellevue and the others were patched up and carried to their homes.

In speaking to the police, Williams declared he could not account for what happened. He and a companion were going through Fourteenth street, when the automobile, he said, suddenly escaped from his control and began shooting wildly back and forth from curb to curb. He continued to shout warnings to people for half a block while he was making every effort to get the auto stopped. Before it struck the pillar, scores of men and women had been dodging it and many had very narrow escapes. The men buried beneath the mass of steel and glass, were taken out by the police reserves, aided by volunteers, each one of the victims yelling at the top of his lungs until they were finally freed.

Williams lives on Elmwood place and went with the Vacuum Company but a short time ago, before that having been employed by the Plainfield Auto Garage on West Second street.

The wrecked automobile was owned by David T. Kenney, of Rockview avenue.

Y. M. C. A. AUXILIARY ELECTS NEW OFFICERS

MRS. HENRY M. MAXSON IS CHOSEN PRESIDENT.

With an increase in membership from seven to 178, which makes the organization the largest in the State, the Women's Auxiliary Association of the Y. M. C. A. held its second annual meeting yesterday afternoon. These officers were elected: President, Mrs. Henry M. Maxson; first vice president, Mrs. Stephen Osborne; second vice president, Mrs. J. D. Phillips; secretary, Mrs. Kenneth Robbie; treasurer, Miss Lena Bass.

The committees of the association, which are six in number, will be appointed by the officers in the course of the month.

In addition to the routine work of the auxiliary, there was a general discussion on the plans for the fair to be given for the benefit of the Y. M. C. A. Dec. 6, 7 and 8.

J. Hervey Deane, the Park avenue jeweler, is displaying a fine line of jewelry, silverware and novelties, from the stock from which to select a suitable wedding or birthday present.

BLUE LODGE CELEBRATION

Members of the Ancient Order Observe Anniversary.

ITS 88TH YEAR.

Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., Holds a Big Reception.

The members of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26 F and A. M., observed the eighty-seventh anniversary of the lodge in Masonic Hall, Friday, in an appropriate manner. There were over 150 members and guests present to enjoy the features of a well-arranged programme, which was in charge of Worshipful Master Fred'k J. Pope, assisted by other officers. It was a source of regret that Grand Master John H. Wilkins could not be present, a previous engagement preventing. However, the Grand Lodge was represented by Right Worshipful District Deputy William D. Wolfstell, of Elizabeth.

There were present visitors from a great many of the leading Masonic lodges in this part of the state and other states, while Daniel Borthwick, of St. Mary Oolneers, Scotland, was among the foreign guests.

Frederick Pope,
Worshipful Master.

The Blue Lodge rooms were handsomely decorated with American flags and bunting, the arrangement being a pleasing one, while there were also decorations of flowers. After the transaction of business, requiring but a short time, an excellent programme was presented, including organ selections by D. Sinnett Pope, of Yonkers, N. Y baritone solo by Fred'k J. Pope, piano solos by Vincent Sokol, an address by Past Worshipful Brother O. H. Rugg, historian; banjo solos by F. F. VanEps, banjo duets by F. F. VanEps and L. P. Braman, and humorous remarks by J. D. Kay, of Azure Lodge, No. 129, of Cranford, after which the grand march to the banquet hall was led by Worshipful Brother R. A. Meeker, marshal.

The various numbers on the programme were well received and merited the applause given. One of the most interesting features was the presentation of the lodge's history, a portion of which is given below.

Richard A. Oarman,
Senior Warden.

Another feature of the affair was the souvenir given to each member and guest. This was a tiny Masonic apron of sheepskin with a blue ribbon, and the inscription thereon was "5817-5904—In commemoration of the eighty-seventh anniversary of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., Plainfield, N. J., November 11, 1904," beneath which appears the compass and the square, in the center of which is the familiar letter "G". The handsome programmes used were the gift of Fred. C. Lounsbury, a member of the lodge.

The banquet which followed the social features in the lodge room, was an elaborate one and well served by William W. Warnock.

Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., is the oldest lodge of Free Masonry in this city, if not in this part of the State. It was instituted on November 11, 1817, the original charter still being in the possession of the lodge. This charter was issued by the Grand Lodge of New Jersey, the Grand Master being Dr. William McKinstry, a practicing physician at Millstone. He was the grandfather of J. H. Manning, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A., being the father of Mr. Manning's mother. The Grand Secretary at that time was H. R. Beasley.

At the time of institution John

Casper Bolsterli,
The Venerable Tyler.

Allen was the master of the lodge, Elias Runyon was the senior warden and W. D. Sherwood was the junior warden. Mr. Allen was master during the years 1817-18 19, and he was succeeded by Mr. Runyon, who served during 1820-22 23, who in turn was succeeded by Mr. Sherwood, who held the office during 1834-28 and again in 1833. The charter bears the inscription "Township of Plainfield, County of Essex," the place at that time being a part of Essex county. Last night it occupied a prominent position in the lodge room and was the object of considerable interest on the part of the members and guests.

The lodge has had forty-two masters, including Most Worsby Past Grand Master Henry H. Cannon, of Elizabeth, who served the lodge as master in 1855-56-57-58. On February 17 of this year he celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his membership in Jerusalem Lodge, and a handsome testimonial was presented to him at that time by the members. He is the only member of Jerusalem that has attained to the position of Grand Master of New Jersey. He is now eight-four years old and very feeble. Being unable to attend the celebration last night, an interesting letter from him was read.

Of the forty-two masters, twenty-two are living, Frederick J. Pope being the present master, Richard A. Oamun the senior warden and George T. Cassey, junior warden. The lodge has a membership of 198. Among the oldest members is Caspar Bolsterli, who for many years has held the office of tyler. The membership includes many who are prominent in the city, either in a business or professional way and it is with more than ordinary pride that they recall the success of their lodge.

WANTS WATER CRANES SCATTERED ABOUT CITY

LOCAL SUPPLY COMPANY OBJECTS TO USE OF THE HYDRANTS.

In a communication to the Common Council at its adjourned meeting last Friday, the Plainfield Water Supply Company complained about the hard use to which its hydrants had been put during he past summer season, by the drivers on the sprinkling carts, and it intimated that it would have to deny the city the right to use these hydrants for that purpose. By way of relief it suggested that the company be allowed to erect water cranes at convenient points about the city, where the carts can be filled. The company asked for a conference with the Common Council on the subject.

The communication cited the fact that not only had the hydrants been damaged through carelessness, but that water was allowed to run for an indefinite time. The communication was referred to the fire and buildings committee, but later Mr. Bullock, of that committee, suggested that inasmuch as the matter referred to streets, it should be looked after by the street committee.

It is a question in the minds of some of the officials as to whether the water company can deny the city the right to use the hydrants for sprinkling purposes, inasmuch as it pays a rental of $15 a year for each hydrant. Then the question arises as to whether or not the water cranes referred to would be objectionable on the public thoroughfare. They naturally would have to be quite high and they are not very attractive in themselves, besides they might be termed a nuisance.

All of these things will be fully considered by the Common Council and the Plainfield Water Supply Company and no doubt the matter will be amicably adjusted.

CONGREGATIONALISTS MARK ANNIVERSARY

Special Services Commemorate Twenty-Five Years Work.

PASTOR'S ADDRESS

Rev. Charles L. Goodrich Recounts the Story of the Parish From Its Beginning.

Marked by an attendance which seemed unusually large because of the almost prohibitive weather, the first of the series of special services in observance of its twenty-fifth anniversary, was held in the Congregational church Sunday morning. It lasted from 10:30 until 12:30, and every minute of the time passed all too quickly for the members because of the pleasant memories which it recalled. The interior of the edifice was strikingly pretty because of the floral decorations which had been arranged. Beautiful chrysanthemums were grouped about the pulpit and from the rear there stood out in bold relief a bank of green the figures in white, "1879-1904."

The programme of the service in detail was as follows: Organ voluntary; doxology and invocation; response by the choir; hymn; violin solo by Charles Higgins, of the Parsifal orchestra; responsive reading of the Gloria; anthem; scripture reading and prayer; offering, with offertory by Mr. Higgins; roll-call of members; read by John M. Whitson; anthem; sermon, "Twenty-five Years of a Church's Life," by Rev. Charles L. Goodrich; hymn and benediction.

Pastor Goodrich's sermon was for the greater part a reminiscence, preaching from the text: "And Thou Shalt Remember All the Way Which the Lord Thy God Led Thee These Forty Years." As the beginning, he stated that were twenty-five put in place of the forty it would fit the occasion exactly. He likened remembering to the keeping of God's commandments in importance and related many instances in the Bible where "remembering" marked the life of the Israelites. Recalling facts and things that had taken place during the twenty-five years both in a National and local sense, he passed over the Congregational church and its career-history of history. He said in part:

"Back of the twenty five years we need not go, more than to say that a few years earlier people who had been in a Dutch Reformed church worshiping where the Trinity church now worships, changed from a Reformed church to the Congregational church of Plainfield. From out the wreck of this ill-advised, ill-started and shortlived venture, there emerged in 1879, a company of about 100 people, who went out leaving the building and all church property behind them to organize a new Congregational church with the name, "The Congregational church of Plainfield.' Organizing formally September 30, 1879, this company called Rev. William Manchee, a gifted sermonizer, and worshipped in the building now known as Reform Hall, then the Second Baptist or Park Avenue Baptist church. Afterward they moved to the Seventh-Day Baptist church, now the Whittier School building. Soon after the property at Seventh street and Madison avenue was picked out by one of the members and with the present parsonage upon it was purchased at a cost of $10,000 and presented to the church. This member was Jacob Kirkner.

"This caused renewed enthusiasm and in 1883-3 the present Congregational church was built. After a little over three years of service, ill health caused the retirement of Rev. Mr. Manchee and the present pastor, then principal of the Amherst High School, was called. He was installed in June, 1883, the installation sermon being preached by Rev. Dr. A. H. Bradford, of Montclair."

The pastor then went on to describe the growth of the congregation, the organizations formed in the church, its benevolent work and many other interesting facts, and then continued:

"Mr. Jacob Kirkner presided at the first meeting of the church. The first deacons were Dr. Titsworth, J. S. Powlison, A. J. Clarkson and Theodore Mace, all who have since passed away. The first clerk was E. B. Foote, and the first trustees, S. C. Roney, J. Kirkner and G. W. Rockfellow."

Mr Goodrich spoke highly of all three, especially of Mr. Rockfellow, the only one who has passed away, and also of William S. Wadsworth and others who have been factors in the church's growth.

Continuing the celebration, the Sunday-school department in the afternoon, enjoyed a programme of musical interest. Stacy Reynolds, the secretary, read a historical sketch and addresses were given by Charles E. Ross, John M. Whitson and Alexander Miller, all former superintendents. Vocal solos were contributed by Miss Miss Raybert and Horace J. Martin, and an instrumental trio, composed of Bryckman Winckler, violin, Kenneth Sharpe, 'cello, and Charles Hubbard, organ, rendered several selections.

In the evening addresses were made by former members of the church who have taken up religious work as a life occupation. They were William Whiting, Rev. John G. Whiting, Mrs. C. F. Taylor and the Misses Chase. They told of the work in their various fields and also spoke reminiscently.

WOMAN SUFFRAGISTS TO MEET AT JERSEY CITY

MRS. FLORENCE HOWE HALL SELECTED TO PRESIDE.

VACANT SEAT IN COUNCIL

Candidates for Lee's Seat Among the City Fathers.

2ND DISTRICT'S CLAIM

Edward Mosher's Friends Active —Present Representatives Are From the First District.

Inasmuch as the Common Council has thirty days in which to fill the vacancy in that body caused by the resignation of Robert L. Lee, there has been no haste in selecting his successor. The Daily Press on Saturday intimated that Herbert W. Buxton, of Madison avenue, was among those talked of to take Mr. Lee's place. This announcement has caused some dissatisfaction among residents of the Second district of the Fourth ward, who believe that a man from that district should be named for the position. It is argued that Councilman Clarence L. Murphy and Frank DeW. Randolph, members from the Fourth ward, live in the First district, and the Second district residents think it is time that they are represented in the Common Council, believing that it is only a right that is due them. Among residents in the Second district mentioned is Edward Mosher, of Elmwood place. He has lived in that district of the ward for many years, is thoroughly posted on affairs of the city and his friends claim that he would make a good representative.

Others argue that if a Second district man is not selected, one should be taken from the Third district, where a representative is needed. It is from this district that Mr. Lee was chosen, and residents there claim that the representation should be continued. It was expected that the Common Council would hold a caucus on Saturday night to select Mr. Lee's successor, but for some reason it was not. The vacancy will undoubtedly be filled at the adjourned meeting to be held on Monday night, November 28.

Smith's Appointments.

County Registrar Frank H. Smith will have many appointments to make in establishing the working force in the new department of the county. There are many aspirants for the positions, which will include an assistant registrar, indexers and copyists. Mr. Smith has announced his purpose to make his selections from applicants so as to give recognition to the various parts of the county. He will, of course, give proper consideration to qualifications, but his purpose to distribute the patronage so far as possible through the county is good policy.—Elizabeth Journal.

Bridesmaid at New York Wedding.

Miss Helen Davis, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. T. S. Davis, of Park avenue, will be one of the bridesmaids today at the wedding of Miss Elizabeth Clark Hebert to Henry Russell Childs, at the Church of the Divine Paternity, New York. A reception will follow at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hebert, in West Seventy-third street. Mr. Hebert and family were residents of this place, on Crescent avenue, a few years ago.

STORE AFIRE; LOSS SMALL

Flames Damage MacDonald Property in East Front St.

ORIGIN IS UNKNOWN

Store Occupied by Brokaw's Creamery and Mrs. Foote's Doll Factory.

While the wind was blowing a small gale and rain was pouring in torrents, fire broke out Sunday in the building on East Front street near Watchung avenue, owned by J. Fred MacDonald, and occupied by Brokaw's creamery in the front part and Mrs. Mary O. W. Foote's doll factory on the second and third floors. The blaze was discovered by Mr. MacDonald, who had been reading in the parlor of his home next door and who was attracted to the window by the barking of his pet bulldog "Nancy," who was excitedly about the room and kept looking upward through the glass. An alarm was sent in from box 14 and the blaze was extinguished after an hour's fight and with a loss of $1,000 on the building and about the same on Mrs. Foote's stock. The creamery was damaged by water but only slight.

The origin of the fire is a mystery, but it evidently started in an extension back of the main building. This is two stories in height and occupied in the upper part by Mrs. Foote. The flames then crept in two directions, eating their way through to the third floor of the store structure, also occupied by Mrs. Foote, and to the barn occupied by Brokaw. This third floor and the extension were one mass of flames when the department arrived and fanned by the high wind had spread to Mr. MacDonald's residence but was confined to the cornice. The residence of Dr. Clawson on the westerly side was also threatened and was badly scorched, the good work of the firemen alone preventing a disastrous blaze.

The third floor was completely burned out and as the greater part of Mrs. Foote's finished product was there is made her loss quite heavy. She is protected by insurance but she will suffer more because of the loss of holiday trade. Mr. MacDonald is also fully covered by insurance. The flames did not get into Brokaw's creamery but it was somewhat flooded by water and he will also suffer a loss.

MR. MURRAY'S CONTRIBUTION TO BIBLICAL LITERATURE

"THE MESSAGE OF THE TWELVE PROPHETS," ITS TITLE.

Under the title of "The Message of the Twelve Prophets," the International Committee of Young Men's Associations has had issued in book form, a series of Biblical studies of the Old Testament, the compilation the work of William D. Murray, of this city.

The studies are arranged so that each of the prophets forms a book study by itself, covering one or more complete weeks. The book is intended for the use of Bilical students or those engaged in teaching and is said to be one of the most complete of its kind.

Mr. Murray states by way of introduction that "these studies were prepared originally for use in the author's Bible class of business men, and have been taught by him at various times. Out of each class which has studied them, one or more of the members has gone into Christian work; they have heard the call of God through the prophets of old. It is the earnest desire of the author that through this book the same call shall come to many more men, and that yes others, in large numbers, shall listen to the message to live a fuller and a nioner Christian life."

Maccabees Organize Friday.

At a preliminary meeting of the Maccabees at Justice Huff's court last night, it was decided to meet for permanent organization on Friday night. There were several new names of those desiring membership received last night, and at the present time the prospects are that the membership of the club will exceed thirty-five.

REOPEN CHURCH EDIFICE

First M. E. Congregation Holds Special Services.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS

Rev. Dr. Snodgrass Conducts the Morning Service and Chaplain Helms Preaches at Night.

For the first time in nearly four months, the congregation of the First M. E. church met Sunday morning in the church auditorium for the regular Sunday services, which were conducted by Rev. Dr. W. O. Snodgrass, the pastor. The interior of the vestibule is entirely new, and where the approach to the gallery was formerly steep, it is now reached by wide stairways leading from both sides of the spacious vestibule. Another improvement which would immediately attract the attention of one entering the church, is the thin wood partition separating the vestibule from the auditorium.

Rev. Dr. Snodgrass made reference several times during the course of his sermon to the work which has been done on the building and of the gratitude which the congregationalists naturally felt that it was so largely completed. In the evening William T. Helms, chaplain of the U. S. Navy, assisted with the services and delivered the sermon. Chaplain Helms was on board the Battleship Brooklyn with Rear Admiral Schley, and was later in the Philippine Islands.

In spite of the fact that only a few members of the congregation were present, Chaplain Helm delivered the regular sermon. He spoke on the subject "All Rivers Run Into the Sea." The speaker likened the Bible characters to rivers, all of whom were tributaries to the great River of Life, which Chaplain Helm said was Christ. Making a practical application to the present age, the Chaplain said that it was the duty of all Christians to follow the River of Life.

TRINITY COMMANDERY AUXILIARY ENTERTAINS

DELIGHTFUL MUSICALE IS GIVEN AT THE MASONIC HALL.

Under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary of Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., a musicale was given in Masonic Hall Monday, for the members of the organization and the commandery. There were nearly one hundred and fifty guests present to enjoy a programme of excellence. It was a varied one and included solos by Miss Millie Pottgieser, contralto soloist at Holy Trinity church, New York; Mrs. Grace Hall Dutton, soprano, of New York, who substituted for Mrs. E. W. Buckout, of New York; Charles Jones, baritone, of Yonkers, N. Y. In addition William E. MacClymont rendered several selections on the organ, including the William Tell overture. A feature of the programme were the humorous selections by W. W. Waters, the "original selver Waters."

As president of the auxiliary, Mrs. H. W. Marshall had charge of the affair, assisted by several committees. Mrs. William E. MacClymont was chairman of the entertainment committee, assisted by Mrs. Edward Cooley and Miss May Kirkner. As chairman of the reception committee, Mrs. D. C. Adams was assisted by Mrs. H. W. Marshall, Mrs. George M. Macintyre and Mrs. E. A. Meeker. The refreshment committee was composed of Mrs. Henry Woodland, Mrs. Hewitt, Mrs. W. B. Codington, Mrs. L. B. Wenston, Mrs. J. Hervey Doane and Mrs. R. A. Meeker.

Following the musicale, the guests adjourned to the banquet room, where a collation was served. The rest of the evening was devoted to social features.

Good Bill at Y. M. C. A.

The second annual banjo and mandolin concert under the direction of Van Epa brothers and W. E. MacClymont will be given at the Y. M. C. A. on Monday night, Nov. 21, at 8:15. They will be assisted by Miss Marion Short, reader; W. W. Waters, humorist and vocalist; L. T. Braman, banjoist, and an orchestra of twenty-five banjos and mandolins. Tickets are on sale at Hedge's pharmacy.

New Trolley Operations.

John L. Denman, chairman of the Springfield Township Committee, turned the first spadeful of earth yesterday in starting the work of constructing the new trolley line between Milltebeth and Summit. It is expected to have the line completed by June.

Fireman Nearly Overcome.

While fighting the fire in the MacDonald building Sunday night, William Addis, of the Truck Company, was partially overcome by smoke. He was dragged out by other firemen and recovered, but still feels the effects.

CONTESTS ON THE LINKS

Local Golf Season is Nearing to Its Close.

SATURDAY'S RESULTS

Only Three Scores Turned in on Hillside Golf Committee Cup Event.

The Yale-Princeton football game on Saturday had its effect on the attendance at the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club, where only a very few members turned out to take part in the weekly competition for the Golf Committee cup. There were just three persons who turned in their scores, thereby winning the points for this trophy. There were no scores returned for the Gaston cup.

S. D. Lounsbery won first honors for the Golf Committee cup with a net score of 82, while D. H. Rowland finished second with a score of 84, and Julius E. Erickson was third with a score of 88. The scores were as follows:

S. D. Lounsbery, 91, 8—83; D. H. Rowland, 96, 12—84; Julius E. Erickson, 93, 10—83.

The competition for the Golf Committee cup will close on Saturday, and while W. L. Glenney leads with 13 5-6 points, Robert Abbott is a close second with 12½ and is likely to win out. C. E. Morgan is third with 12 1-2 points. He too is likely to land in first position. The next nearest competitor is Willard Wadsworth who has 10½ points, but it is impossible for him to win the trophy. The closeness of this competition will make Saturday's play of unusual interest to those who are contesting for the trophy. It is assured that Harold Robert will win the Gaston cup. He has a total of 29 points, and his nearest competitor, E. L. Hall, has but 11 points, making it impossible for him to win out.

THROWN FROM CAR.

Mrs. Agnes Head Badly Hurt Through Carelessness of Conductor.

Mrs. Agnes Head, of East Fourth street, is confined to her home with serious injuries received Sunday night by being thrown from a Fourth street trolley car. She was about to board it at the switch near Spooner avenue when the conductor, who was inside, gave the signal to start. She was thrown backward with great force, striking her head on the macadam and all but losing consciousness. The car in the meantime passed on.

With difficulty Mrs. Head made her way to the home of David Bowden on West Fourth street, and from there was taken to her own home. She is now in bed and under the care of Dr. Lafbarrow.

MISS HENRY WEDDED.

Plainfield Girl the Bride of a Philadelphian.

Miss May Henry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Henry, of West Fourth street, and Edward Stranner, of Philadelphia, were married Sunday evening by Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, at his home on West Front street.

The couple was accompanied by the bride's brother and sister, Samuel Henry and Miss Jennie Henry, who acted as best man and bridesmaid. Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Stranner boarb departed on a wedding trip. They will reside in Philadelphia, where the groom is in the employ of John Wanamaker.

—Daniel Shea has resigned his position as operator at the local office of Postal Telegraph and Cable Company. Peter McDonough is now in charge of the office.

BASKET BALL LEAGUE STARTED YESTERDAY

FINAL ARRANGEMENTS MADE FOR JUNIOR ASSOCIATION CONTESTS.

Having finally completed all preliminary arrangements, the Junior Basket Ball League of this city is prepared for the contests which started yesterday. There has been some delay in getting the various players classified, as no regular player on any first team can be allowed to participate in a junior league game. The teams will be the Whittier School, the Leal's second, the Plainfield High School second and the junior aggregation of the Y. M. C. A.

Those who play on the various junior teams in this league are as follows: Plainfield High School seconds: Doane, Mackey, Lambert, Caldwell, Freeman, Vail and Leggett. Leal's seconds: Howard, Underhill, Valiant, Redjoost, Millar and Rowland. Whittier School: Woodhall, Loughlin, Fountain, Morris, Allpaugh and Briggs. Y. M. C. A. Juniors: Stern, Steiner, Doringer and Line.

The teams will play on Wednesday afternoons throughout the season, between the halves of the interscholastic city league games. In this manner there will be two basket ball games at the Y. M. C. A. every Wednesday afternoon beginning with December 7.

The following is the schedule which has been arranged by Physical Director Hanckle, and which is subject to change: Yesterday, Leal's seconds vs. P. H. S. seconds; November 23, Whittier School vs. Y. M. C. A.; November 30, Leal's seconds vs. Whittier; December 7, P. H. S. seconds vs. Y. M. C. A.; December 14, Whittier vs. P. H. S. seconds; December 21, Leal's seconds vs. Y. M. C. A.; December 28, P. H. S. seconds vs. Leal's seconds; January 4, Y. M. C. A. vs. Whittier; January 11, Whittier vs. Leal's seconds; January 18, Y. M. C. A. vs. P. H. S. seconds; January 25, P. H. S. seconds vs. Whittier; February 1, Y. M. C. A. vs. Leal's seconds.

NO MORE TAX EXEMPTIONS

Court of Errors Sustains Supreme Court's Decision.

NOT CONSTITUTIONAL

Firemen and Soldiers Cannot Escape Exemption—A Special Act.

The decision of the Supreme Court of last November declaring unconstitutional the act of the Legislature exempting volunteer firemen and soldiers from taxation to the extent of $300, was affirmed Monday afternoon in an opinion handed down by the Court of Errors and Appeals.

The opinion was by the court, and stated that the judgment of the Supreme Court was affirmed for the reason given by Justice Garrison in his opinion rendered when the case was decided by the lower court. The justices decided to affirm by a vote of 8 to 1.

The case was that of Edward Tippet, a volunteer fireman of the borough of Rockaway, Morris county, against John C. McGrath, tax collector of the borough.

Holding the law to be unconstitutional, Collector McGrath endeavored to collect the full amount of taxes assessed against Tippet.

For all kinds of groceries and vegetables, go to Callahan, the Richmond street grocer. The large patronage which Callahan has is a proof of the good quality of his groceries and vegetables.

J. Phillip Kirch, cigarist, has just added to his stock of imported cigars, a line of Henry Clays, Panetelas, Vancedora and Reciprocity. His store on North avenue is open evenings and it is the place to get anything in the way of smoking supplies.

It makes no difference how high the prices of poultry, meats and fish go, you will always find Roth & Co., of East Front street, selling at popular prices. This is done as no sacrifice to the quality of the poultry, meats or seafood. You can always depend on getting the best and prompt deliveries are made anywhere in the vicinity of this city.

FOUND SCHORB INSANE

Jury Decides Him Not Guilty of Burglary Charge.

AMUSING MOCK TRIAL.

Large Gathering in Perseverance Court Room Hears Interesting Case Argued by Counsel.

After three minutes deliberation, a jury in Part IV, Court Perseverance, No. 74, K. of P., last Friday, decided that William A. Schorb was not guilty of a charge of burglary, preferred against him by "Tec" Flannery, in stealing two wagon wheels, bag of horseshoe and a box of nails from shop in East Third street. The defense entered a plea of insanity and despite the complete chain of evidence woven by Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., the "twelve men tried and true" accepted the former presentation. The prisoner was accordingly discharged with a warning from Supreme High Judge Runyon to be careful as to where he plied his "bug house" operations in the future.

The trial was a mock proceeding but was one of the best conducted a local attendance has ever witnessed. Perseverance Judge Rouse was filled when Court Crier Thomas Muir called for order and His Honor in the person of City Judge William N. Runyon, hidden beneath a crazy-quilt gown and wearing a ponderous white wig, assumed his seat. Counsellor Hetfield moved that the case of the State against William A. Schorb be commenced and the prisoner, heavily shackled, was dragged in by Sheriff George R. Cope. Clerk William Mills read the complaint and a jury was soon selected, only two of the panel being rejected. The defense objected to Bertram Firstbrook because he had not paid his poll tax and Jacob Blimm on the ground that he was a Canadian.

V. W. Nash, Jr., appeared for Schorb and aiding him as consulting counsel was David Bowden. The prosecution had built its case on purely circumstantial evidence but it made matters very dark looking for the defense until Schorb began seeing things and hopped on the judge's desk to snub them. There was hardly any need then for his counsel to plead insanity as the demonstration given was entirely sufficient. All three counsellors made eloquent pleas and the charge to the jury kept the members "guessing" as to which side His Honor favored. It was the general inference in the court room that he had received a bribe from both and the jurymen were not slow in showing their envy. The verdict was quickly arrived at, however, and in making it known it was recommended that Elmer D. Cutting and Frank Putnam be taken in custody on the ground that they had submitted perjured testimony. Jerry VanWinkle, who posed as an expert on smells and fell down when asked to describe the odor of a mint julip, was also scathingly arraigned, before the prisoner was discharged.

The witnesses examined were as follows: Prosecution, J. H. Flannery, Joseph G. Bilsam, Thomas M. Muir, Philip Jahn, Elmer D. Cutting, Matthew D. Sweeney and John Haskard; defense, William Schorb, Jerry VanWinkle, Peter Land, Bert Schreiner, Asa D. Pope and Frank Putnam. The jury was composed of Donald McInnis, foreman, Peter Straun, Alfred Prudhon, Philip Geise, Robert Crosson, H. R. H. Dally, Cyrus Boice, Daniel Clouston, Jacob Voehl, Martin Cromee, Charles Wakefield and J. M. Burd.

While the trial was in progress refreshments and cigars were served to all present.

Y. M. C. A. Classes Graded.

Both the Lent's and the boys' department gymnasium classes at the Y. M. C. A. have been graded and in the future the work will be conducted under the direction of a class leader from the members of the department. The gymnastic work will be graded according to the ability of the boys, and as soon as they become qualified they will be advanced. The grading was conducted by Physical Director Hanokie, assisted by Kenneth Robbie. The apparatus used in the grading work was the horse, parallels, low and high bar.

Floyd Woodhull, of West Front street, was a recent visitor at the home of his father-in-law, H. M. Bartley, of Germer Valley.

BOOK NEWS.

It is planned to issue on Thursday of each week items of library news. This will frequently take the form of book lists, such as lists of books recently added, lists on special subjects and like topics. Frequently the lists will be annotated, the aim being to make them descriptions of real service to the reader. By giving him the opinion of a trustworthy critic as to the value of the books or a few words as to their scope. Borrowers should keep these lists. The Plainfield Public Library will furnish to anyone interested upon application a list of its books on a given subject.

Public Library Notes.

Half a dozen books for Ambitious Boys.

Getting on in the world, by William Matthews.

Helps for ambitious boys, by William Dryadale. "The author has endeavored to give practical assistance to young men in selecting the mark and fixing their gaze upon it. Headings of some of the chapters are: The study of the law, The making of a physician, He that hath a trade hath an estate, The railroad man, The army through West Point, etc."

Letters from a self-made merchant to his son, by G. H. Lorimer. "An original and interesting book containing advice to young men from the time they go to college until they have established themselves on a business footing."

Poor boys who became famous, by S. K. Bolton. Interesting accounts of the lives of Goldsmith, Sir Henry Bessemer, Greeley, Farragut, Lincoln and others.

Success and its conditions, by E. P. Whipple. "In the essays on Young men in history, The vital and the mechanical, Grit, Shoddy, The ethics of popularity, Mental and moral pauperism, the author has attempted to state the vital conditions of success."

The map of life, by W. E. H. Lecky. "The subject of this book, although nowhere explicitly stated, is, in effect, 'How to make the most of life.'"

Half a dozen books for ambitious girls.

Girls who became famous, by S. K. Bolton. Brief, interesting sketches of the lives of women who have become prominent in various fields, among others Mrs. Stowe, Louisa Alcott, Florence Nightingale, Harriet Hosmer, Mary Lyon, and others.

How women may earn a living, by Helen C. Candee. Intended as a guide for women who "enter upon a career of labor, not to-day or to-morrow, but for a long and definite future."

Occupations for women and their compensation, by various writers. A series of articles which appeared in the New York Tribune, covering practically every department of business and professional life open to women.

The American business woman, by J. H. Cromwell (of the New York Bar.) A practical guide for the investment, preservation and accumulation of property—"Its advice is clear and eminently practical."

The business girl in every phase of her life, by Ruth Ashmore. Articles which originally appeared in the Ladies' Home Journal. Contains much that would be likely to be helpful and suggestive to business girls, particularly girls working in offices.

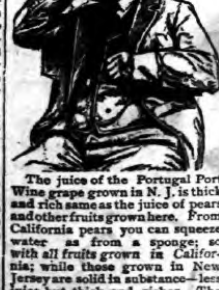
What shall I do? Fifty profitable occupations, by John S. Stoddard. A book for younger girls or boys, contains much that is suggestive, and many practical hints.

ALFRED SPEER,

THE ORIGINAL

Port Grape Wine Producer in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had



The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while those grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. The New Jersey apples, for instance, make a cider that was always popular the world over. If you want a wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards. Sold by Druggists.

DECLARATION IS UNFADED.

Original Draft of Jefferson's Manifesto of Independence Yet Perfectly Legible.

Although the official copy of the Declaration of Independence was recently deposited in a steel safe, to prevent it fading by exposure to light, Jefferson's original draft of that great manifesto may still be seen in the library of the state department in Washington. The ink on this paper seems peculiarly strong, states Youth's Companion.

The erasures and interlineations testify to the care with which Jefferson worked out the eloquent sentences. Wherever a change was made by either of his principal collaborators—Benjamin Franklin and John Adams—he took pains to note it by inserting in the margin "Dr. Franklin's handwriting," or "Mr. Adams' handwriting," in order that the exact limits of his own authorship might never be disputed.

This is one of the papers of the old congress of the confederation. It was put into the custody of the state department when that executive branch was organized. Some visitors doubted that this famous paper was really in Jefferson's handwriting. To satisfy them the department officer brought down by the side, from their Jefferson papers, the slip on which he wrote out directions for his burial.

Aside from furnishing evidence of the genuineness of the handwriting, these directions are well worth study, because they give Jefferson's own estimate of the importance of the Declaration. He described the simple monument which was to stand over his remains, and then wrote for it this inscription, specifying that it should contain "not a word more:"

Here was buried Thomas Jefferson,
Author of the Declaration of American Independence,
Of the statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia.

Jefferson's first title to fame remains preeminent. Few documents were ever drawn which have had so great an effect in history. The principles of freedom which it contains have not faded from the minds of men, even though the ink Jefferson used has begun to lose its brilliance. He lived long enough to know that the world agreed with his estimate of the immortal declaration, for he did not die till July 4, 1826, the fiftieth anniversary of its adoption.

OLD COLLEGE CLASSES.

Plans Formed in the Fullness of Youthful Ambition Have Not All Been Worked Out.

It was graduated half a century ago—in prehistoric time, so it seems to the class of the current year. But in 1854 a group of young men stood on the threshold, looking out into the unknown. This month they are old men—those who have survived—and instead of looking forward their eyes are on the past, wistfully, maybe, and now and then dimmed with tears, says Youth's Companion.

The dreams of their youth, where are they now? The young lawyer was going to end his days on the supreme court bench, but somehow things were ordered differently. The young preacher hoped by his eloquence to sway multitudes in the city, but he has kept only a handful in the country tree to tree. The young editor of the future planned to manage a hospital, but it has turned out that its wards have been a countryside.

On the other hand, the youth who was going back to the farm, who was regarded by his classmates as the dullest drum fellow destined to live and die obscure, is now a conspicuous leader in congress.

There is probably not one in all that class whose life has been ordered even approximately as he had dreamed. This does not mean that the men have not succeeded. Some of them have succeeded far more abundantly than they planned, but in a different way. What a man of 70 regards as success is usually a more gentle and human and kindly thing than that which youth calls by that name.

The class of 1904 will doubtless have a history similar to that of its half-century-old predecessor. It may not be unprofitable for its members to think, a moment or two at least, of the old men holding reunions this month, and strive to get some of the tolerance and charity that characterize those who have traveled so far on the road that leads from the college door.

Russian Public Houses.

A remarkable scene was witnessed a few years ago, when the czar of Russia ordered that the private manufacture of vodka (the national drink) should cease, and that the business should be taken over by the state and conducted on temperance lines. The new state monopoly was inaugurated in a remarkable way. Priests attended at all the drinking shops by official command, and conducted special services. The public houses were dedicated to God, and drinkers ordered that under the new regime drunkenness should be abolished and the spiritual welfare of the people improved.

RUBBER TREES IN INDIA.

Information of Interest Concerning This Most Valuable of Minor Products.

I find the Ficus elastica, the indigenous rubber tree, generally cultivated, is perhaps the only rubber plant in India which can be said to give indications of a future extended commercial value. It is found in the damp parts of the Sikkim Himalaya and eastward to Assam and Burmah. In the rubber tracts of Upper Burmah it is scattered singly and in small groups in dense overgreen forests, the average number of trees being 9 per 100 acres.

The seed of the Ficus elastica, when the tree grows naturally in the forest, germinates almost invariably in the forks of trees 20 to 40 feet and more above the surface of the ground, and the young trees grow in consequence for some six ten years as epiphytes, after which the aerial roots reach the ground and increase in size, until some of them reach a girth of from four to six feet. These roots are very numerous, and it is not uncommon at a later age that they are thrown out also from the upper branches 60 to 80 feet from the ground, being first as thin as whipcords, but soon increasing in size as they descend, and they reach the ground. It has frequently happened that the tree on which the rubber seedling first germinates is killed by the more vigorous growing Ficus elastica, which in this respect resembles the wellknown banyan tree, and it is one of the largest trees in the mixed forest of Assam. It requires an exceedingly damp atmosphere to do well, and, therefore, thrives best at the foot of the mountains or on the mountains themselves, up to an elevation of 2,000 feet. It is also met at a higher elevation, but there it is not so vigorous, and at 5,000 feet it is liable to be injured or killed by frost.

At the present time India rubber is the most valuable minor forest product of Assam. In 1873 the commencement of the Chardnar rubber plantation, which has been regularly extended, was made with a view to provide for the future supply of rubber, and from that plantation many trees have been transplanted.

The trade in India rubber in Upper Burmah was first brought to the notice of the government in 1870, and its export to the lower provinces commenced in 1873, when a monopoly was leased by the Burmese king to Chinese firms. After the occupation of Upper Burmah by the British, the monopoly system continued up to October, 1883, the license being sold for about $40,000 per annum. The trade was then thrown open to anybody who took out a license on payment of about 20 cents a viss (three and one-half pounds) duty at Bhamo.

In Burmah there are several indigenous trees capable of yielding rubber of commercial value, but the Ficus elastica has so far been the most cultivated and productive.

The reports sent me from Madras say there is every indication that rubber cultivation is now beginning to receive the earnest attention of planters in that presidency, which its great and constantly increasing importance entitles it to. In southwestern India the climatic conditions in the ghats up to 3,000 feet elevation, and in the low country bring about the requisite minimum rainfall of 80 inches a year, are especially favorable to the successful growth of rubber trees.

Experiments are being made at the government experiment farm at Burliyar, in that presidency, to determine what is the best rubber producing tree, but I have been unable to find a comparative report, and would suggest that those who may be interested in the cultivation of rubber trees in the Philippines should write to the director of that farm for the result of his experiments; also that they write Mr. Ridley, director of the botanic and forest department, Straits Settlements, Singapore, who has recently written and issued instructive articles on rubber trees, and on the "Para" rubber tree in particular.

As the Para rubber tree requires a very humid atmosphere, with long breaks in the rainfall, and does not thrive where the temperature sinks below 60 degrees Fahrenheit, it does not do well in Assam, and the localities suited to it in Burmah are confined to the coast from Moulmein southward. The Para rubber tree was first introduced into India in 1873, and Ceylon, from its climatic conditions, seemed to be the best place for its cultivation, but I have no report from there showing what has been the result.

Dangers of White Lead.

German papers state that the French government is at present considering the question of the use of white lead and other lead mixtures for painting houses. A committee of the chamber of deputies has been appointed to investigate the matter, and Mr. Breton, one of the experts, has been authorized to publish the results of his investigation in pamphlet form. He condemns the addition of white lead to paints and all other mixtures which, by rendering them to be poisonous in a large degree, both for the workmen and for the inhabitants of a house painted with lead colors. He recommends the use of zinc white instead, which, for surfaces exposed to the sea air, is also much more practical. He expresses the opinion that the absolute disuse of white lead has become an imperative necessity.

LIQUOR FEE IS $1,000

Retail License Increased by the Common Council.

UNANIMOUS VOTE

Wholesale Fee is Raised to $800 —Present Rates $700 and $500.

Mr. Tyler, chairman of the license committee, called up the ordinance increasing the retail liquor license fee to $1,000, and the whole license fee to $800, at the adjourned meeting of the Common Council, last night, and it was adopted on its third reading, and from now on will be effective, although the change in the fees will not affect the local liquor dealers until next year.

Because of Mr. Tyler's apparent indifference in the matter, some persons were led to believe that the ordinance would not be heard of again, but those on the inside knew that it would eventually become a law. When it was called up for third reading last night and the vote was called for, every member present voted in favor of it. The only members absent were Mr. Lee and Mr. Gloak, the latter being detained as home by illness.

The nine members present saw the wisdom of supporting the amendment unanimously and voted that way, although it was thought that there would be some opposition to the change. The present fee of $700 for retail and $500 for wholesale licenses. The new fees are the largest in the State and there are only a few higher in the whole United States.

No doubt the acclamations of the New Jersey Retail Liquor Dealers' Association to the effect that it had been successful in defeating the movement to increase the fees, had considerable effect on the Common Council in adopting the amendment as offered by Mr. Tyler, for the statements of State Organiser Hockridge would lead one to suppose that there was a collusion between the' association and the officials. This was proven otherwise by subsequent action.

HAMILTON MABIE LECTURES ON "IDEALISM"

EDITOR OF THE OUTLOOK ADDRESSES AUDIENCE OF YOUNG MEN.

"Idealism," in its importance and relation to the present age and to former ages, was the subject of a talk at the meeting of the Men's Club of the Crescent Avenue church Thursday, given by Hamilton Mabie, editor of Outlook. It was an instructive and scholarly address in every way, and one from which much practical knowledge could be derived.

In beginning his lecture Mr. Mabie said that idealism was the most practical thing in the world. It is not a dream, he said, but the ability to see the crude things of life in their spiritual light. No great genius, the speaker said, who now stands out as the shining light of his age, had polished material to work from. He molded the raw, crude material, and by the application of his own genius, produced the poetry, or the art significant of the age.

It is possible that the present age is not what it should be or that the same high degree of a ristic, poetic, or commercial idealism exists as did some centuries ago, the speaker said is fally. The age is the same, and is at all times what men make it. He then referred to the commercial spirit which exists now, mentioning its effect upon the whole universe Mr. Mabie said, "It is commercial intercourse into which men have entered, which makes the old custom of war seem barbaric, and the more modern custom of arbitration approved by most of the great nations." As an example he referred to England's recent action with regard to Japan.

In conclusion, Mr. Mabie said that the possibilities in the present age for the advancement of commercial and social ideals are more than could be desired, and that no one can predict what the next twenty-five years will bring forth in the world of science.

Following the lecture a reception was held in the church parlors when the members of the club were introduced to Mr. Mabie.

PAD AND PENCIL CLUB ISSUES INVITATIONS

"BIDS" TO ITS COUNTRY DANCE ARE DISTICTLY UNIQUE.

Having completed all arrangements, the Pad and Pencil Club yesterday issued invitations for its second reception and country dance which is to be held in I. O. T. Hall, Thanksgiving eve. The "bids" are exceptionally original and unique in the wording, being couched in a style savoring of the cornfield and haymow.

A grand march is to be held at 10 o'clock and the "gal or feller" garbed in the most outlandish attire are to be awarded a prize, the selections being made by Chief Kisly. Nearly all the city officials have promised to be in attendance and there will be many distinguished guests from throughout the county. A country fife and drum corps and a village quartette are to be present and entertain during the usual midnight intermission.

Date Set for Entertainment.

The date for the Plainfield High School Athletic Association benefit entertainment has been set for Wednesday, November 23. It has been decided to hold the affair in Franklin Hall, though it is not yet announced what will be the nature of the event. The committee in charge, consisting of Ubester H. Briggs, chairman, Charles Tilsworth and George Bentley, are considering the advisability of giving a miscellaneous entertainment, or one appropriate to Thanksgiving. As the latter idea has been so often attempted it is doubtful if it will meet with the approval of the committee. On the other hand there is much material in the schools from which a miscellaneous programme might be arranged, and as this is a novel and original idea, it has been considered with general favor.

While There is Life There is Hope.

I was afflicted with catarrh; could neither taste nor smell and could hear but little. Ely's Cream Balm cured it.—Marcus G. Shantz, Rahway, N. J.

Cream Balm reached me safely and the effect is surprising. My son says the first application gave decided relief. Respectfully, Mrs. Franklin Freeman, Dover, N. H.

The Balm does not irritate or cause sneezing. Sold by druggists at 50 cts. or mailed by Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., New York.

Will Celebrate Silver Anniversary.

Trinity Reformed church was instituted in March, 1880, and the members are looking forward with considerable interest to the observance of the twenty fifth anniversary of the organization which will occur in in March of next year. Elaborate preparations will be made for the event.

BOY'S GREAT VITALITY

Lived Six Hours With Head Nearly Blown Off.

DIED IN HOSPITAL.

Bridge of Old Gun Had Penetrated His Brain to a Depth of Four Inches.

After lingering six hours in an unconscious state, John Kreinhoff, the boy whose head was nearly blown off by the explosion of a gun at Lambert's Mills Thursday noon, died in Muhlenberg Hospital at 7 o'clock last night. Physicians in charge of the case marveled at his vitality as the force of the explosion was so great, it tore away the side of his face and the top of the head in a fearful manner. Ordinarily it would have caused instant death.

Kreinhoff, in company with several other young men, started off hunting yesterday, one of the party carrying a gun that had seen years of service and was regarded as a "kicker." The owner had charged it heavily with powder and shot and then became afraid to fire it off. He dared Kreinhoff to do it and without a bit of hesitancy he declared he would. When he pulled the trigger the weapon flew into a thousand pieces and Kreinhoff fell back wounded and bleeding.

The companions summoned assistance and word was telephoned to this city by Theodore Glaser for the ambulance. Dr. Pittis went with it but on the way an glance that the victim was beyond all aid and he could do little more than bind up the wound. When he attempted to remove the boy's cap when he first reached the scene, he found that it had been pinned to his head by the bridge of the gun. Going farther to get this out he was greatly surprised to find that it had penetrated the brain nearly four inches, making it all the more remarkable that the boy should have lived so long.

Kreinhoff was just seventeen years old and resided with his parents on the Dougiass Darby farm. There are two other small children in the family.

OPINIONS ON THE RESULT

Candidates and Politicians Express Their Views.

LUCKY ONES GRATEFUL

Buckle, Smith, Runyon, MacMurray, Martine and Others Say Something.

Mayor-elect James F. Buckle said today: "I want to thank all good citizens for the strong support they gave me. I am very well satisfied with the result. Please say for me that any suggestion a citizen, irrespective of party, can make to me looking to the advancement of the city's interests, and the progressiveness of the municipality will be heartily welcomed. I favor the sanitary collection and disposal of garbage by the municipality and all other measures which will improve the city."

Charles N. Fowler, re-elected to Congress, says: "The Republican party stood on its record and the people endorsed it most emphatically at the polls. I am profoundly grateful to the voters of the Fifth district."

James E. Martine, defeated congressional nominee, says: "I think the people do not realize that they have been robbed enough yet by the Republican robber-tariff to have opened their eyes. Then too the great trusts and combinations now that it was a fight to the death for their existence and hence they contributed money with lavish hand."

Frank H. Smith, elected registrar of deeds, says: "The nice letters I have received from Democrats and Republicans alike make me especially happy. I have tried hard to do my duty as tax collector and the big vote I received shows that the taxpayers, without regard to party, appreciate efforts to run the office to their advantage."

James T. MacMurray, a great admirer of Congressman Fowler, says: "It was a big victory for the people, and for the wage-earners particularly. I am delighted with the results of the election all through. The returns show that the people were not fooled by the silly stuff used as arguments against Mr. Fowler."

William N. Runyon, re-elected city judge, says: "It simply means that the people are satisfied with the existing conditions. This, coupled with the fact that the Democracy made very grave charges which they were entirely unable to sustain, insured the tremendous victory."

Alton Andrews: "I think Mr. Fowler ought to be very grateful to President Roosevelt."

Edward S. Cooper, sheriff-elect of Somerset county, says: "My one aim will be to administer the affairs of the office to the best interests of all people, irrespective of locality or party. I appreciate deeply the fine vote given me. I held no feelings against anyone and hope to make them who voted against me my friends."

A. V. D. Honeyman, of the borough, said: "With nearly all the Democratic party against us, on principle, and such Republicans as wear the Smalley brass collar, out high and points onward, who felt that the spirit of rebellion to party is a good thing to keep up, we nevertheless won a fine and clean victory in North Plainfield. I am extremely happy over the result. Gradually, but surely, we are 'cleaning house' and out of commotion there will be evolved a better day. Each new election in the borough has been an additional blow to Stelaris."

Former Senator Reed says: "The result is most gratifying. North Plainfield reaffirmed her allegiance to Republican principles by giving rousing majorities for Roosevelt, Stokes and Wood, while the one which resulted in reducing the majorities for county offices nearly 400 shows a deep-seated resentment on the part of intelligent Republicans against the unfair methods of those who control the county affairs. That such a cut was made in a presidential election when voters were chiefly intent upon National politics, is truly remarkable. The more so when it is considered that most voters were unfamiliar with the complicated voting machines, and that money was freely spent to obtain Democratic votes for the Republican county candidates to offset the cut. The people of the borough are awakening to the real object of the leaders of the 'Citizens Party' as will be more apparent in the future."

WILLIAM M'D. CORIELL WEDS MISS EDITH CLARK

SHERIFF CORIELL'S SON BECOMES A BENEDICT.

Miss Edith Blanche Clark, daughter of the late Charles H. Clark, for many years a well-known dentist, and William McD. Coriell, son of Sheriff and Mrs. R. Frank Coriell, of 311 West Fifth street, were married last Wednesday at 7 o'clock at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Cecelia A. Clark, 9 Grove street, in the presence of about seventy relatives and friends. Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, officiated.

Mr. and Mrs. Coriell were unattended. The bride was gowned in white silk, trimmed with lace and ribbon and she carried a bouquet of bride roses and ferns.

A feature of the ceremony was the singing of the wedding march from Lohengrin by a quartette composed of Mrs. J. Edmund Skiff, Miss Edgeton, Carlos O. Gallup and Bradley Hall, the quartette having boarded the people in the parlor, singing the wedding march and the four formed an aisle in the parlor, through which the bride and groom passed to where the officiating minister stood. J. Edmund Skiff, organist of Holy Cross church, played the wedding march on the piano.

The home was attractively decorated for the event with flowers and ferns and in the dining-room there was a pleasing arrangement about the table.

After the ceremony congratulations were offered during an informal reception, and supper was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Coriell are now on their honeymoon and on their return will reside temporarily with the groom's parents.

The bride received a number of gifts of use and value, including chinaware, cut glass, silverware, furniture, linen and a substantial check from the parents of the groom.

Mr. Coriell has been in the office of the law firm of Codington & Swackhamer. They both attend Trinity Reformed church. Both he and his wife have many friends in this city.

MRS. DUMONT PRESIDENT OF NEEDLEWORK GUILD

ANNUAL MEETING OF PLAINFIELD BRANCH WELL ATTENDED.

An encouraging and largely attended meeting of the Plainfield Branch of the Needlework Guild of America, was held in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, Thursday afternoon. Mrs. J. B. Dumont was chosen president for another year and Mrs. C. E. Ryder, Mrs. S. D. Warren and Miss Florence Tweedy, vice presidents, and Mrs. J. E. Corlies, secretary and treasurer. An entertainment committee consisting of Mrs. F. S. Martin, Mrs. Charles F. Reed and Miss Talmadge were appointed.

Mrs. C. E Ryder gave a talk on the work of the American Guild in Philadelphia. After the transaction of the regular business there was an exhibition of the garments made by the members during the year. There is an increase of 150 over last year. These garments will be distributed among the various local charities, including Muhlenberg Hospital, Children's Home, Plainfield Relief Association, the chapels and other charities.

After the meeting there was a social time and tea was served. Miss Tweedy poured tea, *assisted by other mem-*bers.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 20.

Topic.—How to express our thanks to God.—Ps. cxxxviii, 1-5.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Our thanksgiving topic strikes but one chord of this important subject—how. Nor is it by any means an unimportant one. If thankful unto God for past and present blessings we should want to know how to show Him that we are thankful. This is not always easy. Human benefactions are sometimes so great that we exclaim "How can I thank you?" to friends who have been kind to us. If this be true of human kindness how much more is it true of the loving kindness of our God. And yet we should strive to thank Him. His blessings are great. His loving kindness is always about us. Every year is crowned with goodness. God should be thanked how?

1. We should thank God in thought. "I will think of Thy loving kindness, O God," may well be one motto for thanksgiving. Forgetfulness is base ingratitude. Children who forget the loving care of parents are most unthankful and ungrateful. What, then, about those who forget the mercies of their God? Let us "forget not all His benefits," but keep them constantly in mind, and thus will we in a most acceptable way be thanking God for them.

2. We should thank God in words. Thoughts and words must flower into deeds or our thanksgiving is a failure. What we do should be the best expression of our gratitude to God. When King Ahasuerus had recalled to him the fact that Mordecai had saved his life by saying, "What shall be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honor?" "What shall be done? not what resolutions shall be passed. By doing we would express his gratitude to the fullest degree. By deeds as well as thoughts and words we should thank our God, the deliverer of our souls from eternal death to eternal life.

New Secretary For India.

Endeavorers of two continents will be interested in the new secretary of the Christian Endeavor force of India. His name is Halliwell. Rev. Herbert Halliwell, and he was the successful and honored pastor of the Baptist church in Walsingham, England, when called to the *new and re-*sponsible field of labor.

It was my pleasure to meet Mr. Halliwell at the recent great con*vention in Lon*don, and to say I was pleased with the choice that has been made for India but mildly expresses my sentiments.

Mr. Halliwell appeared to me earnest, sensible, approachable, dignified, but not reserved; ready, but not officious; spiritual, but not sanctimonious; sincere, but not pompous; modest, but not unwilling to take his proper place and to do his rightful work. If "the conversion of India is to be hastened by a whole generation by the introduction of the Christian Endeavor movement," as one veteran missionary, the author, Dr. Jacob Chamberlain, avers, then in this glorious consummation Rev. Herbert Halliwell, the new secretary, will have a large and honored part.—Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D.

A Talent Social.

The Endeavorers of the Central Christian church, New Albany, Ind., have given a talent social, every member of the society being asked to bring or send to the social something that represented his or her especial talent. It was interesting not only to guess what the symbols represented, but also to learn what each member of the society considered his talent to be. A sale was held of the articles that were brought in, and $15 was raised, the amount being sent to India for the support of an orphan for a year.

A Warning and a Promise.

THE WARNING.	THE PROMISE.
Who will not fight	Who does his best
For God and right,	With holy zest
With banner bright	In warfare blest
Of Christ in sight,	And waits his rest,
He shall not win.	He shall not quail
Through thick and	Though hell assail;
thin	His powers avail,
The fight of sin	Nor shall he fail.
And death within.

—Rev. Cleland B. McAfee, D. D., in "Over Sea and Land."

HER HUSBAND'S REVENGE.

Made a Startling Proposition, But There Was Method in His Madness.

He was determined. It was a desperate step, but his mind was made up, relates the New York Press.

"I shall stay at home to-day and attend to the household affairs," he said.

Naturally she was startled. "What shall I do?" she asked.

"You may go down to the office," he replied, "and hold down my desk for a day. You have told me so much about my own business at various times that *there can be no doubt as to your abil*ity to do it."

"But you—what do you know about household matters?" she persisted.

"Everything," he replied promptly. "You don't think that I know anything about them, while you have all the details of my business at your tongue's end, but I want to convince you that in a reverse is true. You go to the office, open my desk and go to work. If you are in doubt about anything, one of the clerks will explain it to you, but, of course, you won't need any help."

She felt that he was sarcastic, but she was convinced that she could do his work better than he could hers, anyway. So she started.

He laughed softly to himself after she had gone, and then went to the window and looked anxiously up and down the street.

"It seems hardly possible that I can fail now," he said to himself. "Some time during the day the chance surely will come to me."

Then he rang for the cook and told her to order whatever she wished for lunch and dinner, and not to bother him with any questions about it.

"But if a peddler of any description calls," he added, "be sure to let me know. I want to see him."

Then he settled himself by a window with a morning paper and waited, ever and anon anxiously glancing out of the window. He grew nervous as the day wore on, but shortly after lunch the glad summons came. The cook informed him that there was a peddler at the back door.

"What kind of a peddler?" he asked.

"One of the kind that wants to trade all sorts of things for old clothes, but will pay cash for them if he has to," was the reply.

"Bring him in."

They were closeted together for nearly an hour, after which the peddler went away with a large bundle, while the man remained and chuckled and laughed until it seemed as if he had gone crazy.

"Revenged at last!" he cried aloud. "The tables are turned and now she will know how it seems herself."

For he had traded off two of her old gowns for two jars of jam and a potato parer, even as she had been in the habit of trading off anything in the line of masculine apparel that he neglected to wear for a week.

FOR REDNESS OF THE NOSE

Few Words of Advice and Some Simple Lotions Which May Prove Efficacious.

The three most common causes of redness of the nose are indigestion, imperfect circulation and insipid erysipelatous inflammation. Indigestion has become chronic you will observe that the nose is almost of normal color before breakfast, but after that meal and especially after a heavy dinner the rubicund color will begin to manifest itself more clearly, says the Indianapolis Journal. If this corresponds to your condition be more careful of your diet and especially avoid all wines and alcoholic drinks. Obtain a reliable receipt for your physician to correct the acidity of the stomach and any disposition toward constipation. Be sure that your clothing is comfortably loose and indulge in plenty of outdoor exercise. To further excite the circulation give the entire body a brisk rubbing with a Turkish bath mitten before retiring and on getting out of bed in the morning, and by all means continue the cold water sponge baths in the morning. After each bath you may venture to use quite cold water. Keep the body expuisitely clean from frequent warm water baths and avoid anything which may excite the undesirable color, such as the harsh use of a handkerchief or the thoughtless rubbing of the nose when talking. By restoring to internal and external remedies the trouble can, probably, be readily corrected. To assist in allaying the redness have the following lotion prepared by a druggist: Two ounces of glycerine, three ounces elderflower water, one drachm of muriate of ammonia, one-half drachm of tannic acid. Saturate a piece of absorbent cotton with the lotion and bind on the nose before retiring. You may also bathe the nose several times a day with this lotion.

Lemon Snowballs.

Beat the yolks of three eggs until very light; add gradually one cup of granulated sugar, two tablespoons of water, the grated yellow rind of one lemon, two tablespoons of lemon juice and one cup of flour in which has been sifted one level teaspoon of baking powder. Then fold in the stiffly whipped whites of the eggs, and pour the batter into 15 little buttered cups. Steam for half an hour, then turn out, roll in powdered sugar and serve with lemon or almond sauce.—Good Housekeeping.

Lamentable Ignorance.

Archie—Yes, I can trace my pedigree back nearly 300 years, to the nobles of King Charles' time.

Miss Snappeigh—How sorry that makes one feel for them! They could not possibly have foreseen that you would be among their descendants.—Chicago Tribune.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Nov. 20: "Our Thanks to God"—Ps. cxxxviii, 1-8.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES.

The difference between a devout person and an ungodly one is in no particular more apparent than in the matter of thanks.

Every person receives continually benefits almost innumerable. The bodily powers and faculties of mind and higher capacities of the soul for enjoyment and well being are an endowment which make life in a world like this of vast worth. They have been received without exertion on our part. They are to be exercised in a world held under exact law and not liable to caprice and chance. Our equipment and our environment are supplied without thought or exertion on our part. We are furnished opportunity for personal development of marvelous richness.

Failure can come only from fault on our part.

Such gifts call for gratitude from us, and ingratitude is the basest of sins of which we can be guilty. It leads to all other sins and crimes.

But gratitude needs expression, else it will add long live even as a heart sentiment. There must be the giving of thanks if we are to avoid forgetfulness of the giver of our benefits. Whoever neglects to give thanks will soon lose the spirit of thankfulness. What we feel deeply we must express openly or we shall not retain it.

This psalm is a model in form of expression and will repay careful study:

"I will praise Thee with my whole heart."

To be of any value praise must be free and unreserved. Whole heartedness is essential in worship.

"Before the gods will I sing praise unto thee."

Whatever powers and rulers and dignitaries there may be, my worship shall be of Jehovah. I will acknowledge Him, and Him only, as the source of my strength and good. Songs show our gladness, and will sing my praise. I will sing TO Him and not merely OF Him. I will not only ascribe the Him the highest excellence, but in the very presence of all who have any excellence I will sing His praise.

The earthly shrines shall be recognized as worthy of honor. I will do reverence toward Thy holy temple. The appointed ordinances of worship I will observe.

It is God's truth and His loving kindness which we praise. Not only the lesser benefits and good things which move us to the depth of our being in worship, but the great foundation truths of personality.

Above all that God has been known to us He has revealed Himself to be like Himself. We learn from God directly more than any one has ever taught us of God. "Above all Thy name Thou hast magnified Thy word."

I cried to God, and He answered me and gave me strength. This is the testing of God and of the soul's hold on God. This is the evidence which each one must get for himself. This is His religion.

The great and high have respect unto me, though I am little. He will make perfect all that concerns me. His mercy ever endures. He will not forsake the work of His own hands.

So will I ever praise Him with gladness of heart.

The Music of the Heart.

True piety is the harmony of the soul with God. His will becomes the will of his loving and obedient child, and such a Christian finds his happiness in the chime of his own desires with what God bids him to do. This is the fountain of genuine music of the heart. God's hand is on every string and chord of this wonderful instrument which a loyal believer carries in his or her breast. It is a harp of a thousand strings, and yet they all respond to the same divine touch. The great apostle in writing to the early Christians tells them that they must not merely sing, but that they must "make melody in their hearts to the Lord." This signifies the music of the soul. If it be religious music it must come from a religious heart. It must be the harmony of sincere love and grateful adoration. The most marvelous of all instruments is the harp of the human heart.—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler.

Care For the Spiritual Life.

(Carved on the walls of the chapel of Leland Stanford university.)

There is no narrowing so deadly as the narrowing of man's horizon of spiritual things. No worse evil could befall him in his course on earth than to lose sight of heaven. And it is not civilization that can prevent this; it is not civilization than can compensate for it. No widening of science, no possession of abstract truth can indemnify for an enfeebled hold on the highest and central truths of humanity. "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

The Ideal Type.

Christ is the ideal type—the highest ever attained—and one can make no mistake in following in His steps, thinking His thoughts and living His life. Christianity is only a reproducing of the Christ life in man, and he who walks closest by His side comes the nearest thinking His thoughts and living His life is the greatest in His kingdom.—Christian Monthly.

The Way to Be Strong.

The way to be strong is to act on the credit of strength being given. Strength is received in the act of obeying. When the path of duty is clear it is want of faith to continue asking for strength and not act upon it.—G. W. Myine.

Martyrs.

It is the cause and not the death that makes the martyr.—Christian Instructor.

SHAKESPEARIAN LECTURE

"World Forces and the Individual," Prof. Griggs' Subject

A STUDY OF CHARACTER

A Conflict Between the Elementary Forces of Human Nature, Ambition and Passion Clearly Shown.

"World Forces and the Individuals," a conflict with the elementary forces of human nature, taken from the drama "Anthony and Cleopatra," was the subject of the fourth of Professor Griggs' lectures on Shakespeare delivered at Vincent chapel Wednesday afternoon. Contrasting clearly with the tragedy written six years before, Julius Cæsar, the play is remarkable for the accuracy of historical setting, and for the character portrayal.

Professor Griggs, as is his usual custom, outlined the play at some length, explaining the plot, and commenting on the characters. Though a drama of five acts, with the dramatic crisis occurring in the middle of the third act, the interest is held, not for a instant lagging, until the death of Cleopatra.

Professor Griggs pointed out the historical correctness with which the drama is given. He spoke of the fact that at the time that the play "Anthony and Cleopatra" was written the world was more than at any future time "a stake to be played for by men." The possession of the Roman power, or the control of the world, was the ruling ambition of the men of that period, and the force of the drama is the conflict between the ambition and the strong passion of Anthony. With defeat staring him in the face, his ambition overthrown, and his power in the world at nought, Anthony could not understand, and could not break away from the subtle fascination which bound him to Cleopatra.

From the standpoint of a character study, Cleopatra is the most remarkable of Shakespeare's portrayal of female life. The possessor of the most queenly charms, Shakespeare says in describing her, "age cannot wither her, nor customes stale her infinite variety;" and withal comes the passionate fascination which she arouses, so that to quote the author, "she makes hungry where most she satisfies."

Drawing his outline of the plot to a close, the lecturer said that one of the most marked changes in the life of Shakespeare is shown by the contrast between this play and Julius Cæsar, which was written six years before. Something, the speaker said, though what it was is only a matter of conjecture, had occurred in the life of the author in order to enable him to portray a character such as Cleopatra. It may have been some tragic personal experience, or it may have been only a subtle observation on the part of the writer, that gave to the world the exquisite tragedy of "Anthony and Cleopatra."

GOVERNOR-ELECT OF R. I. IS A PLAINFIED MAN

GEORGE H. UTTER, THE SUCCESSFUL NOMINEE, A FORMER RESIDENT.

While Plainfield did not get the Congressman from the Fifth district, one of her former residents was elected governor of Rhode Island, Tuesday. His is George H. Utter, who, with his parents, resided on Somerset street some years ago. His father was editor of the Sabbath Recorder and was very prominent in the affairs of the Seventh-Day Baptist congregation.

The new governor was a classmate of Dr. Henry M. Maxson, city superintendent of schools, at Amherst and Williams, and is related to Mrs. Max son. When he left Plainfield he first went to Brooklyn and from there proceeded to Rhode Island, where he has since been located.

Queen City Lodge Active.

Queen City Lodge, No. 226, I. O. O. F., is eclipsing nearly all local fraternal organizations in the social part of it meetings. A vocal quartette has been formed which gives new selections each Wednesday night, and the numerous instrumental contributions and recitations afford more than an hour's entertainment.

High Prices Delay Improvement.

Owing to the high price of materials, the cost exceeding the expectations, the consistory of Trinity Reformed church has decided not to build the addition to the rear of the church edifice for the use of the Sunday-school at present.

Another Pupils' Recital.

Miss Mary Graves, of Liberty street will give a pupils' recital Wednesday evening, November 23, at 7:30 o'clock in the parish house of the Church of the Heavenly Rest.

ADDITION TO SAFE PLANT

The Manganese Officials File Plans for Big Extension.

WILL DOUBLE ITS SIZE

Company Anticipates a Rush of Orders and Wants to be Prepared for Them.

Anticipating a big increase in business within a short time, officials of the Manganese Steel Safe Company today filed plans with Building Inspector Doane for an addition to its present plant that will almost double it in size. It will be built on the west side of the present machine shop, facing on South Second street, and will be 160 feet six inches long by fifty feet in width. In order to place it in this position, the present carpenter shop building will have to be moved to the extreme western part of the yards. This is now being done and the work of erection is to commence within a few days.

According to the plans the new addition is to be constructed of brick and iron, with a concrete foundation. It will be fitted up with all modern appliances for turning out heavy work and will be one of the most complete factory buildings of its kind. The part of it is to be used by the paint department which is now in need of room.

Since its entrance to the city, the Manganese Company has been compelled to enlarge the plant several times and the present contemplated addition will make it one of the largest factories in Plainfield. Although it experienched a slackness of orders during the summer they are now coming in rapidly and it is believed the present force will have to be increased. The company's exhibit at the St. Louis Exposition was awarded the gold medal over all competitors and this will undoubtedly have much to do with bringing new business.

HANDEL A TRUE PRINCE AMONG MUSICIANS

SAYS PROF. W. S. PRATT BEFORE THE MONDAY AFTERNOON CLUB.

In spite of the technicality of the subject "The Influence of Handel on the Development of Music in England," Professor Waldo S. Pratt's lecture before the Monday Afternoon Club last week at the Casino, gave unqualified pleasure. In a graceful introduction by the president, Mrs. Robert Lowry, the lecturer was presented as professor of music and hymnology at Hartford Theological Seminary and lecturer on musical history on science in Smith College.

Mr. Pratt sketched very briefly the life of Handel, who was acknowledged by contemporaneous musicians to be master of them all. German by birth and Italian in training, Handel made his home in England from 1710 to 1759, winning a just popularity by his great genius, his intense earnestness and mental vitality expended in musical composition. While he loved popularity and sought success, the lecturer claimed that Handel was a true prince among musicians in the essential loftiness of his inspiration and the marvellous quality of enduring impressiveness which marked his productions.

Professor Pratt dwelt on the early work of Handel in operatic compositions and showed his immense superiority over his predecessors, for he put a human soul into his productions like Shakespeare who took inane stories and made them immortal.

MRS. WOODRUFF BURIED.

Services Held Thursday From the Home of Her Son, William A. Woodruff.

Funeral services over the body of Mrs. Catherine D. Woodruff were held Thursday afternoon from the residence of her son, William A. Woodruff, of East Second street. They were in charge of Rev. C. E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian church, of which she was a member for many years, assisted by Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, and were largely attended by relatives and friends. Two selections, "Abide With Me" and "Asleep in Jesus," were rendered by Mrs. Frank E. Woodruff and Elmer K. Runyon. The floral tributes were numerous and comprised several set pieces.

Interment was made in the Presbyterian cemetery at Westfield, those who acted as pall bearers being A. L. Cadmus, H. A. Page, A. L. Force, A. V. Searing and John Barroughs, of this city, and Walter Stokes, of Philadelphia.

Visiting His Old Home.

Dr. M. S. Simpson, formerly of Plainfield, but now of Middle Valley, Hunterdon county, is visiting his old home in Ohio. Before returning he will go to the St. Louis Exposition.

CITY BUYS SANITARY PLANT

James F. Buckle Sells It at Price He Paid.

FOR GARBAGE DISPOSAL

Routine Work of the Common Council at Last Friday's Session.

Corporation Counsel Marsh reported on several matters of importance at the adjourned meeting of the Common Council last Friday, including the sale of the plant of the Plainfield Sanitary Company to the city by Mayor-elect James F. Buckle. He stated that the title had been passed and advised the Common Council to pay Mr. Buckle the stipulated price in the contract, $3,100. Mr. Marsh added that he found the title defective in the original state and that considerable time was spent in making it complete to the now. Later in the evening Mr. Daniel moved that a warrant be drawn in favor of Mr. Buckle for $3,100 after the papers in the case have been verified in accordance with Mr. Marsh's approval.

Mr. Marsh reported that the case of the American Sewage Disposal Company, of Boston, against the city for alleged infringements in the use of a septic tank is status quo, while the suit of the Cameron Septic Tank Company, of Chicago, against the city, for similar alleged infringements, has been settled.

Concerning the action of the Board of Health against Antiono Mara for violations of the health ordinance, Mr. Marsh stated that conviction had been secured and that the defendant had paid $50 towards the fines imposed. The sum of $70 is yet due and Mr. Marsh added that there is now an application for the commitment of Mara before the court for failure to pay the fines.

Alfred E. Lawton, of Orange, through his counsel, William Rockwell, of Newark, petitioned the Common Council for an adjustment of taxes on property owned by him in this city. It appears that he has been paying taxes on the wrong property, while someone else has been paying taxes on his property, which was sold under the Martin Act. Mr. Lawton seized that $75.63, the amount it cost him to redeem the property, be refunded. The matter was referred to the finance committee.

Collector H. H. Smith reported that settlement had been effected with E. B. Finch, of Park avenue, regarding an assessment in error on Arlington avenue property owned by Mr. Finch.

The Plainfield Water Supply Company notified the Common Council that two fire hydrants had been located, as ordered, in the East End of the city. One is on Evergreen avenue and the other on Denmark road.

Mayor Jewell introduced Tucker Johnson a special policeman and the same was confirmed. Mr. Johnson was recently made janitor of the City National Bank.

Mr. Daniel offered a resolution authorizing the issuance of $1,000 street improvement bonds to pay for the work of macadamizing certain streets, previously selected by the street committee. These bonds will be secured by notes in the usual way.

Mr. Bigham, reporting for the committee having under consideration the petition for the widening and deepening of Cedar brook and the one regarding the overflow of Green brook, stated that plans for the work of improving Cedar brook have been prepared but that some of the property owners along the brook have refused to sign for the improvement and the matter is temporarily held up. As to the Green brook matter he said that several meetings of the committee have been held and only progress could be reported at this time.

Mr. Higbee offered a resolution providing for the laying of sidewalks in West Fifth street and Monroe avenue, where property owners have failed to comply with the law. The cost for the work will be paid through the placing of a lien on the property.

Mr. Bullock reported for the fire and buildings committee on the matter presented to the Common Council by Former Mayor L. V. F. Randolph as to the "spite-house" trouble, stated that the committee had held several meetings and conferred with Inspection Constant Marsh, but desired more time before presenting a final report.

On Mr. Murphy's motion the petition for an electric light on East Second street, north of Washington street, was granted.

In recommending the granting of a license to an applicant to carry on an express business, Mr. Tyler recommended that hereafter these applications be made to conform to the city ordinances. The recommendation was granted.

Reported Sale of Fish Market.

It is reported that Fred Ivamy, the seafood dealer, has purchased the fish department which is conducted by Fred Endress in connection with his meat market. The two fish markets will be combined at Mr. Ivamy's place of business on West Second street.

WATCHUNG HUNT CLUB ENJOYS TEN-MILE CHASE

FIFTEEN RIDERS GALLOP OVER THE MEADOWS TO OAK TREE.

Starting from Fanwood Saturday afternoon, fifteen members of the Watchung Hunt Club enjoyed a run of ten miles over good meadows, and in abundance of snow. The party left at 2:15 and rode to Oak Tree, returning home at about 6 o'clock. In spite of the recent rain the ground was not wet enough to be slippery, and no accidents occurred to mar the pleasure of the event.

This was the eighth of the weekly chases conducted by the club, and though not so largely attended as the one on Election day, was in every way as successful. The gayly dressed riders made a picturesque appearance, and, mounted on spirited horses, they followed the hounds. All the fences were well taken, the riders being expert.

There were four women among the party and several others were expected, from out of town, but were unable to attend.

The following were those who attended the chase Saturday: Miss Leila Oratzkhaak, Miss Hadly, Miss Noe, of Westfield, Mrs. VanBeek, S. A. Oratzkhaak, George O. White, jr., Glen Ridge; Chauncey Sayre, of Newark; Dr. Van Wagenen Hedges, Mr. Bourne, of Cranford, Duncan Bulkley, W. Webster, Dr. Knott, G. E. Bellows and C. B. Obebbeare.

The excellent pictures of Fred'k J. Pope, Richard A. Osmun and Caesar Beisterli, published in Saturday's Daily Press in connection with the celebration of the anniversary of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 28, F. and A. M., were from portraits by F. Frank Stone, the photographer.

SERMON TO YOUNG MEN.

Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck's Talk on Esau and Jacob.

Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, preached a sermon Sunday morning specially for young men, in accordance with the general observance of the day for young men by the Y. M. C. A. He took his text from a portion of the twenty-seventh verse of the twenty-fifth chapter of Genesis: "And the Boys Grew." The text refers to Esau and Jacob and from the lives of these he drew many helpful lessons. Rev. Dr. Schenck pictured Esau selling his birthrights for a mess of pottage, while Jacob lived a Godly life. One was loved and admired for his upright life, while the other was the object of contempt. He compared the lives of these boys showing how differently they grew up and then applied the lesson for the present-day boys. There was no evening service.

Transfer of Realty.

A. D. Thompson has made a sale of fifty building lots from the Plainfield Land and Building Company's West End tract at Rock avenue, to a New York real estate operator. He has also sold several other lots in that section recently, and has a prospect of locating two large factories there. This, together with the large addition to the Manganese Steel Safe Company's factory, is booming real estate in that section of the city.

Big Masons Gather Together.

Dr. D. C. Adams and Jacob Kirkner, both of this city, were among the prominent Masons at a conclave of Washington Chapter, No. 16, Royal Arch Masons, of Elizabeth, Friday night, every officer of the Grand Chapter of the State as well being present. It was the chapter's thirty-eighth anniversary, and there were few companions who failed to be present. The degrees were exemplified, and after the convocation a banquet was served.

TO AUDIT THE BOOKS OF CITY OFFICIALS

COMMON COUNCIL APPROPRIATES $600 FOR THE PURPOSE.

With the retirement of Frank H. Smith as tax collector, it made a request that inasmuch as his books have not been examined and audited during the past two years, that this be done before he leaves his present position, the suggestion met with the approval of Chairman Daniel of the finance committee of the Common Council, and at the adjourned meeting last Friday, he made a motion that the finance committee be authorized to engage an expert to examine and audit the books of the collector, treasurer, city judge and any other city official, for this purpose he moved that a sum not to exceed $600 be appropriated. The motion was adopted.

The books will be examined and audited for the past two years, it being that length of time since they were so audited by an expert. The Common Council would have undoubtedly ordered this work done the first of the year, but the sudden retirement of Mr. Smith from the collector's office to accept his new position for resident engineer of the Union County, has hastened the matter somewhat and Mr. Smith, in justice to himself, is anxious to have the work done now. The other officials are also desirous that their books be examined.

McCLURE'S SUCCESSOR.

E. P. Bache Appointed Superintendent of Electric Department.

Ralph P. Bache, who has been in charge of the electrical department at the Public Service Corporation at Bound Brook, has been appointed to succeed William McClurg as superintendent of the electrical department at the local plant of the company.

Mr. Bache has been engaged in electric work during the past eighteen years. Before the Public Service Corporation purchased the Bound Brook electric lighting plant, he was in charge of it. After the purchase he continued in that position. It is expected that Mr. Bache will enter upon his new duties here about December 1.

In Honor of Gustavus Adolphus.

Under the auspices of the Swedish Lutheran church an enjoyable informal entertainment was given at the German Lutheran church on Grove street Saturday evening. The affair was well conducted and consisted of music and speeches. There was a large attendance and a fair sum was raised for the benefit of the church fund. The meeting was in honor of Gustavus Adolphus.

Warren County's Slump.

The Democratic majorities in the Hunterdon counties of the State have fallen off tens of thousands. In total at least 9,000 for Parker, and the total is about 800, while the Assembly candidates gets no more than half that figure, the Democratic candidate for Surrogate getting still less. Hunterdon and Sussex also fall behind their normal Democratic majorities.—Newark Advertiser.

Warren County Editor Dead.

Josiah Ketcham, editor and proprietor of the Belvidere Apollo, the leading Republican newspaper in Warren county, died at his home in that place Saturday from an attack of apoplexy. He was discovered in the bathroom in a dying condition by members of his family. Medical assistance was at once summoned, but no aid could be given.

Westfield Golf Club Euchre.

The entertainment committee of the Westfield Golf Club has arranged for a euchre to be held Saturday afternoon at the club. It will be for women members and their friends.

PLUCK OF SOESSEL

Port Arthur Commander, Wounded, Will Not Retire.

DEATH OF KUROKI DENIED AT TOKIO

Russian Garrison Said to Be Disheartened and Ready to Capitulate—Japanese Believe End to Be Near.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—A special dispatch from Tokyo says that the Japanese army staff pronounced absurd the report of General Kuroki's death from a splinter of a Russian shell at Liaoyang and that his body was sent to Japan.

Dispatches from the headquarters of the Third army, before Port Arthur, say that a wound received by General Stoessel has necessitated his confinement to a hospital, that he refused to relinquish the command of the garrison and that he has issued orders to the troops for the defense of their posts rather than surrender.

Spies and Russians who have surrendered report that rations in the fortress have been reduced. The wounded found by the Japanese are emaciated.

Russian artillery shells are made poorly of filled wood and do not explode. This shows that the Russians are short of material for making heavy ammunition.

The capture of the eastern fortified ridge will mean the surrender of the fortress in a couple of weeks. Cold weather and the lack of food and ammunition renders desperate resistance unlikely.

It is said that the spirit of the Russian troops has been dampened by continuous work, the lack of supplies and the hopelessness of their ability to make any successful defense of the fortress. It is said further that many of the Russian soldiers are ready to surrender, but that they are kept at their posts by officers, who threaten them with revolvers, and that several soldiers who were suspected of a desire to desert have been shot as a warning to others. The Japanese now believe that the garrison has almost reached the limit of human endurance.

A Chefu report this morning says that a Russian torpedo boat destroyer has just entered the harbor. She has not been communicated with owing to the roughness of the sea. It is said that a Japanese torpedo boat destroyer has been seen outside watching the movements of the Russian vessel.

HUMANITY OF JAPANESE

Scrupulous Care Taken of Effects Found on Russian Dead.

MUKDEN, Nov. 16.—The Manchuria army staff gazette, published by order of the Japanese officials and the only paper printed at the theater of war, gives details of the scrupulous care shown by the Japanese for relics and other effects of the Russian dead found on the battlefields. It tells how the Japanese have forwarded such effects to St. Petersburg. The paper highly commends this action and announces that General Kuropatkin recommends that all his commanders shall observe a similar practice regarding the Japanese dead.

This humane practice, which was initiated by the Japanese and which apparently was calculated to secure consideration for their dead, has met with a good effect on the Russian army and will undoubtedly be imitated when the Russians are in possession of the field over which a battle has been fought.

A Chapter of Atrocity Bishops.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 16.—After repairs necessitated by an accident had been finished the immense airship of Hippolyte Francois of France made another ascension from the aeronautic concourse at the world's fair, being up two minutes at the end of a rope the airship crashed into the north wall of the concourse fence and badly smashed the prow. The machine was then brought to the ground and returned to the aerodrome. It will probably take several days to repair the damage.

Farragut's Famous Flagship Sails.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Farragut's famous flagship, the Hartford, now attached to the Atlantic coast squadron, has left Norfolk for this city with a view of taking part in the ceremonies attending the unveiling of the statue of Frederick the Great next Saturday. She is bringing two companies of bluejackets and two companies of marines, who will be landed to participate in the military demonstration.

Hall's Assailant Caught.

ROANOKE, Va., Nov. 16.—William Wright, colored, alias Jack Dillard, who shot and probably fatally wounded Policeman J. J. Hall at Danville, Va., while the officer was trying to arrest him, was captured here by the local police. There was a reward of $1,250 for Wright's arrest.

Fort Edward Heard From.

FORT EDWARD, N. Y., Nov. 16.—Washington county has had its first communication with the outside world by telephone or telegraph wires in forty-two hours. It had been cut off by the heavy wind and snow storm of last Sunday. Excellent sleighing is afforded in Salem.

Earthquake in Jalisco.

CITY OF MEXICO, Nov. 16.—Earthquake shocks are reported from several points in the state of Jalisco. At the town of Autlan the walls of several buildings were cracked. At Manzanillo the shock lasted ten seconds. No damage, however, was done.

Weather Probabilities.

Fair; south winds.

BRITAIN AND RUSSIA

Further Difficulty Over North Sea Outrage.

ROOSEVELT'S OFFER OFFENDS RUSSIA

English Inquiry Proceeding at Hull, Fishermen Saw None but Russian Warships—Baltic Fleet Was Unarmed.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—The inquiry which Great Britain conducts on her own behalf into the North sea incident has opened at Hull, with Admiral Bridge and Butler Aspinall, an admiralty court lawyer, who were appointed to conduct the inquiry and whose report will form the basis of the British case before the international commission at Paris, presided.

The first witness was Managing Director Beeching of the Gamecock fleet. He testified that for twenty-five or thirty years the fishing fleets had been trawling off Dogger bank.

The Russian consul asked the first two witnesses if the men of the trawler fleet had reported seeing other warships besides the Russian vessels, but apparently only the Russian vessels had been met.

Some interest was added to the proceedings by the introduction of a tiny model of a trawler. Photographs showing the large lettering and numbers on the funnels and sides of the trawlers attacked were also presented.

Witnesses all denied that any arms, ammunition or contraband were on board the trawlers. There was no room, it was added, to carry a torpedo.

Dispatches from St. Petersburg say that a difference has developed between Great Britain and Russia over the language of the article in the North sea convention relative to the question of responsibility. At the foreign office it is said that Russia does not desire to in any way recede from the basis of the agreement, but she proposes a modification of the language submitted in the English text. The admiralty, it is understood, contended all along that the international commission should confine its inquiry to the establishment of the question whether torpedo boats were off the Dogger bank and whether in any event the Russian ships were justified in firing.

Vice Admiral Rojestvensky's detailed report of the affair, made public from the battleships hit the Russian protected cruiser Aurora, one of the shells entering the wardroom and wounding a priest, who afterward died at Tangier.

From the time the fleet left Libau [illegible]

The Russian admiralty contends that this is additional proof of the good faith of the vessels which fired on what they believed to be torpedo boats, having been under the impression that they were the vessels of their own division.

There is a deep seated suspicion among the Russian people that if the Baltic fleet arrives close to its destination in a disorganized condition Great Britain will in some way find a pretext to block its further progress, and some of the newspapers refer to the necessity for mobilizing troops on the Indian frontier, where Russia now has two army corps, "sufficient to guarantee the safe passage of the squadron."

The reiteration of the statement that President Roosevelt, having the support of Great Britain and France, had friendly offers approached by Japan and was ready to offer his offices in view of Russia's position is not considered to be a friendly act.

Russia will push the war on an ever increasing scale, and preparations to do so are being made every where.

Death Follows Battle Fleet.

PARIS, Nov. 16.—The foreign office has been informed from Dakar, on the extreme point of Cape Verde, of the death of Lieutenant Nelidoff, son of the Russian ambassador at Paris. Lieutenant Nelidoff commanded the hospital ship Orel, attached to Vice Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet. The ship was fitted out in France under the personal supervision of Mme. Nelidoff and largely through contributions from French sympathizers with Russia. Yesterday morning Admiral Rojestvensky telegraphed Mme. Nelidoff thanking her for her efforts for the equipment of the Orel, and later he telegraphed the tragic news of the death of her son.

Dismissed by President's Order.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—John B. Brownlow of Tennessee, a clerk in the postoffice department who acted as disbursing officer of the department at the St. Louis exposition, was dismissed from the service by order of the president. Brownlow was charged with impertinence and insubordination, and, as he declined to withdraw his offensive language, his dismissal followed.

Grant Club Winds Up.

The members of the U. S. Grant Club met Saturday evening and wound up the affairs of the organization. All bills were paid, the fine and large picture of President McKinley, owned by the club, were donated the borough school, and a vote of thanks was extended the officers. Adjournment was then taken subject to the call of President Doliver.

LEE GETS COLLECTORSHIP

Fourth Ward Councilman to Succeed F. H. Smith.

THE SALARY IS $2,250

J. W. Murray, Jr., is Supported by Third Ward for the Position.

The Common Council was "twenty minutes late" and more too, in getting together at the adjourned meeting Friday, after a recess was taken to consider questions relative to the resignation of Tax Collector F. H. Smith. Mr. Smith presented his resignation, to take effect on December 1 next, or as soon thereafter as possible, and immediately the Council took a recess on Mr. Daniel's motion, and they retire for twenty minutes. They were out just about an hour.

When the Common Council reconvened, Mr. Randolph suggested the resignation of Robert L. Lee as a member of the Common Council, the same to take effect immediately. This was accepted on Mr. Daniel's motion. He then moved that the Common Council proceed to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Smith's resignation, after which he nominated John W. Murray, jr., for the office.

Mr. Randolph nominated Robert L. Lee. Mr. Lee then moved that a ballot be taken, and moved that Councilmen Murphy and Daniel act as tellers.

When the votes were counted it was announced that Mr. Lee had received seven votes and Mr. Murray two. President Tolles then declared Mr. Lee to be the choice of the majority of the members.

Immediately Mr. Daniel moved that the new collector be requested to furnish bondsmen in the amount of $25,000, to be furnished by freeholders. It was arranged that when the Common Council adjourned it be to meet on Monday, November 28, thus allowing Mr. Lee plenty of time to secure bondsmen and the members time to arrange all details for the change in the office.

While John W. Murray, Jr., was considered a candidate for the office, there was a general feeling that Mr. Lee would be appointed. It was known that he desired the office and that he had a sufficient number of votes in the Common Council to elect him. Mr. Lee is now an elector of the borough, and his friends predict that he will make an able and efficient collector in a capable and business manner.

The question of appointing his successor in the Common Council can be done any time within thirty days, and while it is not definitely stated who the man will be, it is rumored on good authority that Herbert W. Burton, of Madison avenue, will be chosen.

MISS METTLER MARRIED

Made the Wife of Wallace S. Bell, of Somerville, Last Week.

Miss Annie H. Mettler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Mettler, of West Second street, and Wallace S. Bell, of Somerville, were married last Thursday at the bride's home in the presence of about twenty-five friends and relatives. Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, officiated. Miss Beade Reighton, of Plainfield, was bridesmaid and W. A. Purdy, also of this city, was best man.

The parlors were handsomely decorated in pink and white. The bride and the bridesmaid wore white and carried white roses. Following the ceremony a pleasant reception was held, after which the bride and groom left for their wedding trip. When they return they will reside in Somerville, where the groom is in the employ of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company.

Quarantine Off.

Margaret Patterson, the three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Patterson, of 751 West Seventh street, is convalescing from an attack of diphtheria. The child has been at the home of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac W. Rushmore, her parents being abroad. The quarantine was raised last week.

Hillside's Season to Close.

The Board of Trustees of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club have given notice that the club house and season of the club will close on Saturday, November 26, two days after Thanksgiving Day. On the latter day there will probably be some special events on the course in addition to the regular play. The course will likely be kept open for general play as long as the weather remains favorable.

Postmice Wants Bids.

The local postoffice is soliciting bids for carrying the mail between the city and Gallia. They are to be in next month and the award will be made in time to allow the successful bidder to enter upon his duties on or after the first of the year.

THANKSGIVING'S EVENTS

Holiday Will be Generally Observed Locally.

BUSINESS SUSPENDED

Churches to Join in Union Service According to Annual Custom—Society and Sports.

Thanksgiving Day will be generally observed in this city. The merchants will close their places of business and the churches will close their pharmacies in the afternoon from 1 to 6 o'clock, according to the usual custom on holidays. As a majority of people rest and arrange to spend the day at home, the day's celebration is generally a quiet one. In the morning at 10:30 there will be a Union service at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church. Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, pastor of the First Baptist church, will preach the sermon. Other pastors in the city and borough will assist.

During the morning there will be a meeting of a special character. At once the annual dinner will be given to the inmates of the Children's Home in their temporary quarters on Muhlenberg place.

The members of Franklin, Somerset and Benevolent Councils, Jr. O. U. A. M. will leave town early in the morning for Newark, where they will join the Juniors of Essex County in a parade and a presentation of an American flag to the city. The trip will be made in special trolley cars.

There will be golf events at the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club throughout the day. In addition to the semi-final and final play for the Governor Commissioner Tennard, regular event there will be play for two special cups for active members. One cup will be for the best gross score and the other for the best net scores. Players may compete any time during the day. If the players with the best score happens to have the best ...ve the handicap cup will be ... player having the second ... THE NEWEST FABRICS.

Some of the New Shades Used in Autumn Dress Goods.

Heretofore melton cloth has been employed only for coats, and heavy coats at that, but this season shows many full suits of that handsome if rather stiff material, which is produced in many colors. Green in several shades is seen, and so is red, the favorite, however, being the dull, dark shade known among us as Joseph, though I am sure I never saw a Joseph of that color.

Naturally this melton cloth, being the reverse of pliable, is made into styles where little if any gathering is done and no plaits show on it. Each one of these suits depends upon the cut and finish and is exceptionally rich and handsome. Illustrated here will be seen such a suit. The skirt is cut quite plain, with only a trifle of flare at the bottom, and is tailor finished. A waist of the same is often furnished, made tight fitting and generally with small postilions at the back and some arrangement of a vest in front. These vest fronts are very dressy and usually very becoming. But there are women who prefer the soft blouse waists, and these are going to remain with us for the rest of this season at least.

Speaking of the velutina reminds me of the new fad for the crushed velvets, so the dressmakers call them, broadtail velvets. Broadtail in fur parlance means a sort of wavy effect on the black furs. It is very rich and used to be called moire astrakhan. These velutinas have a very thick and close pile, and this is crushed in the finishing in some way and makes a new material out of an old standard one. The newest colors are a sort of coppery red and a deep yellow with a golden brown cast, in some lights almost metallic.

The coat belonging to this suit in question has a plain front, and the back is made in two styles, one being plain in box shape and the other made rather wider all the way down the back and then held in with a strap across the back at the waist line. This fancy for straps in the back is one that has gained quite a large following. I forgot to mention the velvet cuffs and flat collars that are always found on this style of coat. Sometimes they are of a darker shade and again of exactly the shade of the melton, which makes it appear very different in some lights. Half a dozen plain black buttons close the front, which is always double breasted. Some have plain coat sleeves, while others have them made more or less fanciful. This style of costume is to be very general this season. In this connection we may speak of hats, as the hat is, when possible, made to match the gown and coat. In this particular case the hat is of fine felt of the same red shade and is trimmed with small, close loops of red velvet ribbon, set around the crown like a wreath, while another line of the loops lies against the hair on the right side to tilt the hat sharply to the left, which is against all established precedent.

Covert cloth in all sorts of unusual colors is among the favorite dress goods, and it must be admitted that it is very neat and ladylike. Cravenettes in gray, fawn, russet and dove gray are seen in the handsomest made up street gowns, some with jackets and others with longer coats, some even having regulation rain coats.

Velvet is so very much the rage this season that no one will be entirely happy unless she has a gown or at least a coat of that superb fabric. Hats also are very rich and elegant made of it and wrought into shape by the featherbone shirring piping. The edges are generally left so that they form ruffles, the featherbone being run in two or more pipings about half to three-quarters of an inch from the edge. Long and rich plumes of ostrich or made pieces trim them.

Among the pretty new fancies is that of having sets of black velvet ribbon made into neckbands and bracelets. They are very becoming. The way to make them is to take a piece of inch wide elastic and ribbon one-third long or than the elastic, which should be stretched a little to fit the wrists, so that it will remain gathered when on. Then lay the velvet ribbon along and pull the elastic and sew the ribbon on the drawn places, repeating till it is all on.

DRESSMAKING POINTERS.

Some Timely Hints For the Home-made Nogligee and Dressing Gown.

Every woman who knows what real comfort is would prefer to go without an extra hat or gown rather than do without a comfortable lounging frock, one that may do duty either as a dressing or tea gown to slip into in this "odd" moments when resting. A satisfactory gown of this sort is not really easy to procure ready made at a moderate price. It is true there are plenty of cheap dressing gowns to be had, but as a rule they are far from smart. The same outlay will purchase better material, and if your own handiwork goes into the making you have a most presentable possession.

CASHMERE DRESSING GOWN.

With regard to the fabric used, there are any number of wellings, cashmeres and wash flannels that are very suitable, but if it is to be worn as a home tea gown velveteen in some delicate art shade would be a more imposing material.

The gown illustrated is carried out in one of the new spotted cashmeres which are now so modish. This robe may be easily cut by using a well fitting waist pattern as a guide. The gown itself is cut with a back piece seamed down the center and gored to give a spring at the hem. This back piece has a shoulder seam, which is carried out to the edge of the armhole. Side pieces are laid on under the back and extend toward the front, where they are arranged in gathers, where a front piece is carried down the fronts to match the back. The sleeve lining has frills of lace or silk attached to the lower part, and the wing-like oversleeve, edged with the same, is arranged to fall over this. Openings are placed under the overgown at the sides to allow a waistband of velvet or satin ribbon to be passed through and fastened on the left side, leaving the front free to hang loose from the figure. The bands are of plain silk, either stitched by machine or worked in a fancy feather stitch.

White Cloth Still Popular—Some New Shades Favored by Fashion.

The new shade of light golden brown or saffron color, which is known by the somewhat unattractive name of "onion" color, is promised a great vogue for winter gowns, but chiefly for the house frock. A dress in this particular tone is attractive carried out in voile with a very short bolero coat over a slip of cream alencon lace, the skirt simply adorned with two deep frills.

Serge and tweed stand first as suitable dress materials, and the former has been brought out with a smooth surface that resembles ladies' cloth and is now made in every sort of shade. It can be had in thin or heavy weight.

A very popular color is a reddish brown which is scarcely a chestnut, a pomegranate nor a mahogany, but a strange tingling of them all.

White cloth continues to take the lead among the dressy types of tailor built garments such as are worn on smart occasions. One of the favorite schemes just now is to trim the skirt and strappings of soft ivory suede.

The dressy bodice pictured has the new elbow sleeves wrinkled in the approved mousquetaire fashion. The same effect is carried out on the bodice itself. A yoke of lace is outlined by a small puff and ruffle finishes this dainty creation.

Clara Barton

The Story of the Red Cross

THE burning of Rome, the reign of terror in France, the battle of Waterloo—these three ambitions authors have vied with one another to picture forth in fine writing. There is a chapter of simple fact, prepared without any attempt at fine writing at all, which is worthy to be classed with any description of the historic events mentioned. It is the chapter concerning the Galveston flood in Clara Barton's book, "A Story of the Red Cross." Here is an extract, coming after the description of scenes in desolated Galveston:

"Some thoughtful reader may pitifully ask what became of these miles of wreckage and the dead on the Galveston seashore.

"At this distant day it may be safe to tell. I recall that at the time much criticism was indulged in.

"All were burned."

One day a little girl asked the president of the American branch of the Red Cross society to tell her what the Red Cross did. The history of the organization had been written time and again, but at the little girl's question Miss Barton suddenly remembered that the large events in which the Red Cross had figured as relief bringer had never been fully described. Acting on the hint the child's question had conveyed to her, she set herself to the task of writing out the full story that facts might not be lacking to inform the present and coming generations of Americans who may wish to know what the Red Cross achieved between 1880 and 1900.

Large occasions for the good works of the American Red Cross came and are set down in the book as follows: The Texas famine and the Mount Vernon cyclone, 1885-1888; yellow fever in Florida, 1887; Johnstown flood, 1889; Russian famine, 1891; sea island relief, 1893; Armenian relief, 1896; Cuba, 1898; Galveston, 1900.

The reader of this story of the Red Cross, however, will look in vain through its pages for any of Clara Barton's personal history, although she was really "it" in the events described, the head and prime mover of all. Her life is in her work, and her work has been her life. One cannot be separated from the other.

Clara Barton was born at Oxford, Mass., in 1830. Early in the civil war she was a clerk in the patent office at Washington. Day after day she read accounts of the suffering of soldiers in camp and in hospital till she could endure no longer the heartache it gave her. The national military hospital department was at first quite unprepared for the task suddenly thrown upon it. Night and day the sorrowful picture of sick, wounded and dying men who needed help was before Clara Barton. At length she resigned her clerkship to go as a volunteer unpaid army nurse in hospital and on the battlefield. She likewise called on generous civilians to contribute to the relief of the soldiers. So much good did she and her helpers do that in 1864 she was appointed to take charge of the hospitals of the army in front of Richmond. She was on the field in several battles.

Miss Barton has a natural gift for organization and executive work. She began life as a teacher, which gave her the discipline of system and superintendence. Shortly before his death in 1865 President Lincoln commissioned her in behalf of the government to search for missing men of the Union army. This occupied her till, weary and weak in health, she went to Europe for rest. While she was there came the Franco-Prussian contest, and there Clara Barton took the part of a peaceful helper in war. By the time the war between Prussia and France had reached its height the Red Cross society of Europe was well organized, and Miss Barton had opportunity to see its beneficent work. At the close of the Franco-Prussian war she received the decoration of the iron cross of Germany.

She came home and earnestly sought to induce the United States government to join the international Red Cross agreement, which it did in October, 1881. Clara Barton was elected president of the American branch and held the office till this year.

MARY EDITH DAY.

SUCCESSFUL WORKERS.

Unusual Fields From Which Women Glean a Good Living.

Upon the same spot, under the same conditions and in the same business in which men have previously failed many a time women succeed. Six years ago John Stege died and left his daughter a farm lying in the bay region near San Francisco. The farm consisted mostly of frog marshes, and even these marshes were mortgaged. He could not pay the mortgage, he could not wrest a living from the marshes, so John Stege lay down and died. He left his daughter Edith to take up his load and carry it or sink under it, as the case might be. She did not sink.

Successful plans often seem somehow to come to us out of the air. One day Edith Stege dined at a restaurant in San Francisco. She looked over the bill of fare and saw by the high price what a rare and dainty tidbit frogs' legs were.

"Frogs' legs," said Miss Edith to herself, "and my land is swarming with frogs' legs and frogs!"

She had received her hint from that restaurant menu on which was printed the price of frogs' legs. She went home and began to net frogs for the city market. Along with the farm full of frogs her father had left to her a faithful Chinaman who had worked for him several years. Ching Lee transferred his fidelity to John Stege's daughter. When she began to net frogs for market Ching Lee entered into her plan with all his Chinese patience and industry. He took upon his arm a big basket of frogs and carried them from door to door of restaurants and hotels, getting fine prices for them. Meantime Miss Edith was at home catching more frogs.

She learned as she went along. In time the marsh was turned into separate ponds for frogs of different varieties and of different stages of growth. There was one for tadpoles, another for half grown frogs and another for the full grown. The mortgage long since has been paid and the frog marsh has been turned into a sightly up to date farm home, one of the show places of the region. Every tourist wishes to see Miss Stege's frog farm, with its ponds and curious pets.

A young lady in the east has gone into the business of rearing Persian cats for a living. She finds it easy to get from them an income of $1,500 a year; more than that some years. The business has not yet been overdone, for Persian cats on a commercial scale were only introduced into this country some twelve years ago. They were brought first to the Pacific slope and made their way gradually east and into fashionable set circles about the same time. In England the Persian cat has been in high favor with fashionable fanciers for many years.

Women have proved more successful in the rearing of high bred cats than men have for the reason that women like cats better than men do. The young woman who clears $1,500 a year from her Persians says that the first essential to success in rearing them is that one must be a natural lover of the feline. Otherwise by some occult psychological law the cats seem to sicken and die.

The longer haired and the shorter tailed and "chuffier" the pedigreed Persian puss is the higher price will she bring. With some of the tribe the hair sweeps the ground. The breed is rather delicate and needs as much care in the rearing as children do. It is absolutely necessary that Persians and their quarters be kept immaculately clean. Moreover, neither the mother Persians nor their kittens can bear crowding. For a beginner two female cats with their *offspring, some twenty-*five kittens a year, are as many as it is well to undertake. Pedigreed Persians a year old sell for from $50 to $60 apiece and kittens six months old for $25, though they are not certain to thrive if sold so young as that. Many Persians are reared by women in Chicago.

There is a lady near Philadelphia who makes an excellent income from raising squabs. The business is yet comparatively in its infancy, and it will not be overdone for years to come. The Philadelphia woman has brought her enterprise to so good a condition that she now sells a hundred squabs a week at excellent prices.

Some capital is required to begin squab raising, as for the time must elapse before any birds are ready for market. The stock pigeons to commence on can be had in some places for 75 cents a pair. There are houses and screen fences to be built also, and the would be squab raiser must learn the business. She must be prepared in her mind to meet disappointment and vexation by the way and go on to the successful end nevertheless.

The New Woman

Danger Lurks In Hypnotism

A MEDICAL man who has dabbled somewhat in phychological matters advises mothers to "hypnotize" their children into being good. He tells them how to conduct the process of hypnotism on the unconscious infants. Let not mothers dare to hypnotize their children! The doctor is guilty of a crime in giving such advice. He is simply telling a mother how to paralyze her children's free will and eventually destroy it for life. Annie Besant, who knows more of occult psychology than any smatterer who trifles with it out of curiosity, said once in a lecture terrible in its vividness, "Better a drunkard should die of delirium tremens a thousand times over than that he should be cured by hypnotism." When opium is given to stop pain the nerve centers are merely paralyzed for the time, so that they do not feel pain. If the dosing is continued long enough and in sufficient quantity the nerves are deadened permanently, and the subject dies. Precisely the same thing happens on the mental plane in case of hypnotization. The will, the highest, royalest faculty of the intellect, is dwarfed, stunted *and finally destroyed by repeated hyp*notizing. The subject becomes semi-imbecile, an automaton in the hands of the hypnotist. There is danger in submitting even once to the hypnotist. A small part of his subject's will is thereby given into his hands and he holds it ever after. The woman who lets herself be hypnotized even "for fun" knows not what she is doing. If I had space to tell you some of the facts known to me on this subject! One thing, however, be assured of—no human being can be hypnotized against his or her will. You have simply to set that king and emperor, your will, against the process. Hold your individuality against those who try to drag you into their societies of pests, into matrimony or doubtful financial enterprises.

Here is a sentence from a recent screed written by a white male against equal rights for women: "An inborn chivalry compels man to protect women and children." At the same time in the newspapers appeared a shocking story with the following headlines: "Men Trampled Women and Babes to Escape. Scenes of Cowardice at Fire That Cost Six Lives. Of Fourteen Victims All but One Were Young." What do you think of man's inborn chivalry?

In Paris Mme. Baill, a lady of fashionable society, has established an asylum for stray and homeless dogs. Thousands of canines are cared for every year by her. Now, if some fashionable society lady would only establish a home for stray and unwanted babies, perhaps so many of these would not meet their death every year.

In St. Louis, while there at the fair, I saw beautiful women riding astride, dashing swiftly and safely along the broad suburban highways. Riding astride is all the fashion there, one is glad to note. Seated upon the cross saddle a woman can be quite as skillful a rider as a man.

I wonder if when the Almighty created women's hands he created them for the purpose of holding up women's trailing skirts?

What does George Eliot say? "It is better to be an old maid than an old fool."

It is a wonder more girls and women do not take up farming, gardening and live stock and poultry raising. In every one of these branches of rural occupation women over and again have proved themselves successful. Mrs. Meredith of Indiana long ago became famous for Shorthorn cattle. More recently Miss Mary E. Way, a Connecticut girl, has succeeded in turning a stony little farm into a miniature gold mine by her skill in rearing Holstein and Jersey dairy cattle. She accomplished in five years what the majority of men farmers cannot do in a lifetime.

Sh-sh-sh! Don't make fun of woman's rights advocates any more. They are getting to be the fashion.

There is nothing better for women than at least some years of money earning outside of their own homes. It gives them a very little idea of personalities, the narrow, pitiable, mean and my children, my daughter Jane and her children, we two families and no more, spirit. When a woman has the intellectual breadth to recognize that every other mother's children are just as dear to the Almighty as her own are or he would not have created them, then we may hope for the millennium.

It Prevents Many a Girl From Achieving Success.

The diffident woman generally has her parents to thank for the handicap. The diffident woman is generally the self conscious woman. Now, self consciousness begins in childhood, and if parents care to prevent it the remedy lies in their hands.

"I had to pass the building three times before I had the courage to go in."

"How did you ever have the courage to do it?"

"I would rather die than ask for anything!"

"I simply can't sing when there is any one around!"

"Why, I am so scared when I have that line to speak all alone in the middle of the stage that I can hardly say it!"

How often you hear that sort of thing—scared, afraid, don't dare!

"One reason why I am not more fond of the majority of my sex is that they are all so self conscious and afraid of their own shadows," remarked a woman as recently. And I had to agree with her.

As long as you are not doing anything you should not why be afraid? And why at all times be so foolishly self conscious that you think people are watching your slightest movements?

"I think it is so delightful of you, Miss Brown," said the hostess, "to sit down at the piano without being urged and play so simply whatever you happen to know."

"You can thank my mother for that," laughed the girl. "She told me she would let me take piano lessons only on condition that I would sit down and play without any fuss, no matter who asked me. She added that if I did make mistakes it would not make any more difference than if I were alone, because no one expected perfection from a child. It put me so much at my ease that I have never been troubled with self consciousness."

SIMPLE EFFECTS.

Treatment of Rooms Which Differ From the Ordinary.

Originality is the keynote of the successful interior decorator. No time or epoch is adhered to, but the continual effort is to reach a new effect. Several of the modern English decorators have distinguished themselves in this manner, and the picture shows you a drawing room designed by one of them.

It is very simple. The walls are covered with old rose tapestry paper. The mantelpiece of snowy marble in an old shelf design supplies the note of relief. The room is lighted, contrary to usage, with stained glass lanterns inclosing electric bulbs. The woodwork is mahogany. The chairs are mahogany with tapestry coverings. The floor is covered with several small rugs instead of one large one. The windows, which are not shown in the picture, have small panes and swing outward.

WHAT IS WORN.

A New Embroidery—Paletots Revived, Also Directoire Bonnets.

In the way of sheer evening gowns nothing is newer or daintier than a robe of the new broderie Nancie. This embroidery is lacy in effect and is heightened by threadings of silk woven in and out of the design. The edges are finished with a buttonhole in colored silks.

There are some quaint three-quarter length tight fitting paletots or jackets being made in black and colored peau de soie, which button down the front with velvet buttons. Occasionally the jackets themselves are piped with velvet. Many of the jackets in cloth are strapped with silk or piped with velvet.

These paletots are not pretty in themselves, but are a revival of another period in dress, which fact has much to recommend them in this present craze for styles of "ye olden times."

The directoire bonnet is another revival, and a dainty creation of this character is made of rose colored velvet trimmed with white nodding plumes. With this bonnet are worn a Josephine muff and tie of ermine.

Dyed lace is used quite as much on evening frocks as on the day gown, and when wisely employed the effect is stunning.

The charming hat illustrated is of reseda green velvet, the broad brim turned up and bordered with large black beads resembling jet balls. A choux of taffeta and a shaded green paradise plume finish a becoming model.

Elbow Sleeves Are the Fad of the Moment—A New Glove.

Elbow sleeves are the fad of the moment and are worn with long kid gloves to matinees, receptions and afternoon teas, so it behooves up to date girls to physical culture their arms that they may be plump, white and attractive to look upon. This elbow length of sleeve is certainly not becoming to the majority of women, but La Mode says "wear them," and her obedient slaves obey. Much may be done to ameliorate the condition of the elbow length in the way of a number of lace and muslin frills which in some instances almost assume a graceful ness of the angel variety, long and fluffy are these draperies.

The gown pictured is a charming creation of puce taffeta relieved with smart touches of velvet a shade darker. The skirt hangs in unstitched pleats from the waist, and at the top and bottom of the deep gathered flounce are pretty designs of empire wreaths carried out in quilled satin ribbon with motifs of flowers worked in shaded silks. The corselet is of velvet, while are the shawl shaped embroidered collar and turned back cuffs. Cloth is used for collar, vest, jabot and sleeve finish.

THE DEACON'S FAITH.

HE WAS SHAKEN BECAUSE HIS PRAYER WAS ANSWERED.

So Petitioned for Rain, for Which He Was Grateful, But Objected Seriously to the Storm That Came with It.

The New York Weekly vouches for the truth of the story here told. In a certain rural section of New York, it says, the farmers were suffering great uneasiness for their crops, on account of a terrible drought of unusual duration. The sowing ones had all prophesied; the wise ones made their guesses as to when rain would fall, but all these predictions failed to bring rain to the parched fields.

Although the pious part of the community said that nothing but prayer would bring rain, so one Sabbath morning, after Sunday school was over, one of the most pious members, a deacon rose and said:

"Well, brethren, you have all tried your signs and you've killed and hung up all the snakes you could find; the rain crow has croaked, but none of these has brought us rain. And no wonder; prayer is what we need. If you want rain we must pray for it; and we do need it. If we do not get a shower by next Friday our crops will be ruined. Let us all continue to pray in private. If rain does not fall by Wednesday, let us all come together at my house and pray for it till it does come. We will beseech Heaven with our prayers, and God will hear and answer them."

Wednesday came, but no rain fell. The heavens were as blue and clear as on a fine midsummer day in Italy. That night the neighbors all repaired to the deacon's with anxious faces and heavy hearts, but the deacon's face was cheerful.

"Oh, we will get rain this evening; we have not prayed earnestly. 'Ask believing ye shall receive,' and you will get full measure."

The prayer meeting was opened, and first one and then another prayed, until it became the deacon's turn to lead. Before his prayer was over, clouds began gather, and the heavens were darkened.

The deacon took heart and began to pray. The clouds became more dense, and on the welcome sound of rain he was ready to end. The deacon could pray no longer. They must go out on the piazza, and watch the blessed drops as they poured down. The deacon walked about his piazza, rubbed his hands, and as the rain continued to pour down he would ever and anon exclaim:

"I told you so. Prayer was what we needed. You didn't pray with your hearts, but your lips."

Still the rain poured. After awhile the deacon began to look uneasy. Such pouring rains would wash his lands. Still it rained, and now the wind began to blow. The deacon's face was beginning to lengthen visibly. His lands were blowing terribly, and the wind was tearing off limbs of his new orchard, uprooting his fruit trees and breaking and tearing them up. Out in his back yard was the deacon's dairy, containing all his choicest cows. By and by it began to roof in. With a look of mingled wrath and fear, out rushed the deacon and braced himself against the dairy. It tottered, but the deacon tugged and strained, and righted it again. Wiping his streaming face, he shouted:

"Oh, yes, Mr. Lord, I'll let you know I'm some myself," and he glared around fiercely to see if anyone disputed. But the wind still shrieked and roared around the dairy. The deacon braced himself and rushed in for three successive times, but at last the wind, as if tired of its play, gave one mighty roar and, rushing upon the dairy, snatched it up, whirled it half round, and dashed it violently to the ground, breaking all the old man's cherished plans, and he at one fell blow. The deacon, having narrowly escaped being caught in the ruins, came slowly into the house, and turning, looked over his disasters with a look of deep disgust on his face, as he growled forth:

"Wal, sabers, the Lord has overdone the thing. Take Him on an average, anyhow, I believe He always does as much harm as good, anyhow."

Horrible Ghost Works Great Reform Among the Colored Population in Rural Maryland.

The residents of Knight's road, a negro settlement on the outskirts of Allen, Md., are in high state of excitement because of the frequent visits of their one-time friend, Alexander W. He appears to his friends only at night.

HEAVYWEIGHT SAT ON HIM

Man Charges a Three Hundred Pound Bit of Femininity with Assault and Battery.

From Philadelphia a correspondent of the Chicago Inter Ocean writes that for sitting on the lap of a man Mrs. Mary Walsh, of Camden, was held in $300 bail.

She weighs more than 300 pounds.

Harry Carle, her victim, weighs 119 pounds. His friends advised him to bring a charge of attempted murder, although believing he could not have survived had Mrs. Walsh sat much longer, Carle said the facts did not warrant more than a charge of assault and battery.

Justice Barr was undecided whether sitting on a man's lap constituted assault, but as Carl insisted that he was suffering from the effects of his experience, he decided the case was one to go to a jury.

According to Carle, who lives at 329 Pearl street, he tried to prevail Mrs. Walsh's from making noise in front of his house.

Later Mrs. Walsh appeared, when he was on his front step, and threw her 300 pounds into his lap.

Mrs. Walsh lives at Fifth and Burton streets.

Husband Airs His Grievance.

An unfortunate husband in Ohio, whose wife occasionally forgets economy and dignity, and gets fuddled, sent the following advertisement to the paper of his town: "I hereby give notice to my friends, and not my friends, that my wife ran away and stole money from the house, last Thursday. If she don return in 24 hours I will be pained."

MEANING OF HORSE POWER

The Term Refers to the Average Work One Horse Can Perform in a Minute.

What is the relative amount of work that a man can do in comparison with a horse or machinery? At his very best the strongest man stands in pretty poor comparison, even with a horse, for hard, continuous labor. He might perform for a few minutes one-half horse-power of work, but to keep this up for any great length of time would be impossible.

Thus the gain in forcing horses to do a part of the world's work was enormous. One horse could exhaust a dozen men in a single day, and still be ready for the next day's work.

According to St. Nicholas the measurement of a horse's power for work was first ascertained by Watt, the father of the modern steam engine, and he expressed this in terms that hold to-day. He experimented with a great number of heavy brewery horses to satisfy himself that his unit of measurement for work was correct. After many trials he ascertained that the average brewery horse was doing work equal to that required to raise 320 pounds of weight 100 feet high in one minute, or 33,000 pounds one foot in one minute. So he called this one horse-power.

This work, however, is not continuous, for the horse would have to back up after each pull to lower the line of the pulley, and thus he would work four hours a day in pulling 320 pounds in the air at the rate of 100 feet a minute, and four hours in sloshing up the rope. Consequently no horse can actually perform continuously what is generally called one horse-power. The horse was never born that could tug at a rope for eight hours a day, pulling 320 pounds 100 feet each minute, without rest or change. Consequently, when we speak of horse power we refer only to the average work a horse can do in one minute, that is to say, the rate at which he can work.

A strong man will pull a load that weight 100 feet in the air in two minutes, but he could not repeat the operation many times without being exhausted.

For all needful purposes the expression of one horse-power is accurate enough, and practically shows the measurement of an average horse's abilities for working. As a rule a strong man can in eight hours work at the rate of about one-tenth of one horse-power. Mass is, it would require ten men to pull 320 pounds 100 feet in the air in a minute, and then stack up and repeat the operation throughout the eight hours of a working day. The world's gain in labor when steam were first employed to help man in his work was thus tenfold.

WANTS AMERICAN LABOR.

John F. Wallace, Chief Engineer of Panama Canal, Praises Climate of That Region.

Chicago Special.

John F. Wallace, chief engineer of the Panama canal commission, made a short address at Chicago the other day, in which he declared that he expected to see the canal constructed without the aid of foreign laborers. The climatic conditions and the physical inducements would, in his belief, attract sufficient laborers from the United States to make unnecessary the employment of cheap foreign help.

"I do not expect to go to China, Japan, the West Indies or any other country where labor is cheap in order to carry out the idea of building the isthmian canal," said Mr. Wallace. "The natural inducements will be enough to attract labor from this country. The amount of labor needed has been grossly overestimated. It is the intention of the commission to reduce as far as possible the amount of physical labor by the employment of machines and it is my belief that there never will be more than 10,000 or 12,000 men busy at once on the work of construction."

Mr. Wallace said that the climatic conditions of Panama had been misrepresented. He has just returned from a three months' stay in the isthmus and he never had experienced a more delightful summer. The nights had been so cool that covering was always required.

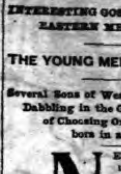
TALK OF NEW YORK

INTERESTING GOSSIP OF THE BIG EASTERN METROPOLIS.

THE YOUNG MEN IN POLITICS

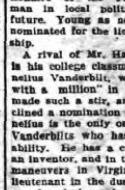
Several Sons of Wealthy Houses Are Dabbling in the Game—Expense of Choosing One's Neighbors in a City.



NEW YORK — It used to be thought that a rich man had no show in politics. But now that so many Vanderbilts, Morphys, McCarrens and McLaughlins have become rich in by and through politics the old idea against inherited money do not "go" any longer. Some interesting figures in local political activities now are rich and well-bred young men. You might number the mayor, though he began life as a reporter and politics as a $4,000-a-year clerk, he has command of wealth through his wife, a daughter of John G. Heckscher.

One of Mr. McClellan's friends is Congressman Franklin Burton Harrison. Young Harrison's father was Jefferson Davis' private secretary when McClellan's father was organizing armies to drive Davis out of Richmond. The latter is rich, but rest as a writer and in society. His wife is the daughter of a many-times millionaire of the Pacific coast. No man in local politics has a fairer future. Young as he is he has been nominated for the lieutenant governorship.

A rival of Mr. Harrison in politics is his college classmate at Yale, Cornelius Vanderbilt, whose "cutting off with a million" in his father's will made such a stir, and who has declined a nomination for congress. Cornelius is the only one of the younger Vanderbilts who has shown business ability. He has a creditable fame as an inventor, and in the recent military maneuvers in Virginia toiled as a lieutenant in the dust. Incidentally he was knocked out by the heat, for he has not inherited the iron constitution of the old commodore.



March of Trade on "The Avenue."

WHAT the richer Vanderbilts have been doing recently is shown in a humdrum transfer of real estate on Fifth avenue. Here the family are gradually buying up plot after plot in a region where land sells for from $6,000 to $8,000 per front foot to control the neighborhood of their homes. They stopped the march of trade up the avenue. It beats against Helen Gould's city house as a barrier and there stays. The Hotel St. Regis is above the dead line, but a place where you pay five dollars for a drink, and one crammed with ordinary hotels as a "nuisance."

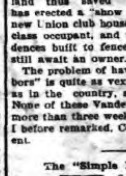
The most notable achievements in this war of millions to prevent a natural development have been thus far:

One million paid up by George Vanderbilt to buy a cellar opposite his house, on land that had cost $750,000 a few months earlier, where he feared that a sky-scraper would be erected.

William K. Vanderbilt paid $850,000 for three old dwellings opposite his French renaissance chateau, again to block a modern building.

Mr. Sloane, a Vanderbilt son-in-law, has now paid nearly $2,000,000 for three houses of better class in the same neighborhood. One of the land thus "saved" Morton F. Plant has erected a "show place;" the great new Union club house is another high-class occupant, and two modern residences built to fence off other things still await as owners.

The problem of having "good neighbors" is quite as vexatious in the city as in the country, and costs more. None of these Vanderbilts ever spends more than three weeks in the city. As I before remarked, Cornelius is different.



The "Simple Life" Man.

OA society thus occupied in wrapping itself in cotton wool, a message comes from luxurious France telling of "The Simple Life."

Charles Wagner is one of those men about whom you hear a great deal all at once after he has been growing in public esteem for years. He is a Protestant preacher in Paris

Once, when I was in Paris, England, I had occasion to climb early one morning upon the top of a stage filled with workmen on their way to [illegible]. I mentioned that I lived in Brooklyn.

"You know Fr[illegible]," he said.

"Yes, I [illegible]."

"Then," [illegible] especially [illegible] Brooklyn [illegible] and I still [illegible] week—does he practice what he preaches?"

Wagner does. He looks the peasant that he is. He is big and powerful in build, with heavy shoulders, a broad face and a manner of hearty simplicity. It is his theory that modern life is growing so complex that heroic measures are necessary; that we must get back to nature and natural ways of doing things. It is not a bad doctrine for New York.

Wagner comes endorsed by John Wanamaker; he goes to visit President Roosevelt, another sturdy specimen who enjoys a simple existence when he can.

I shall be surprised if there is not a campaign of "simplicity" this winter. I have reasons, one of which is that this movement is already well begun in England, where we get our thinking done, upon social topics. When it got so bad during the London season that there was no time to do anything, save eat and sleep a change was bound to come. How about theaters, for instance? To live in London, a theater must close at such an hour that poor people, who are necessary to its success, and who must work next day, can get to bed. But how about the fashionables who eat eight o'clock begin an hour-and-a-half-long course dinner? How much fun do they get out of the theater after that? New York has been aping these late hours.

I cite another sign. Comic operas fresh from London satirize the newest fad before it appears. They can, because the same men make the fads and the comic operas; men of brains and up-to-day. Society people invent nothing. The funniest thing on the stage to-day is a song and dance in "The Schoolgirl," where three clowns sing about simplicity, and introduce horseplay with tops, mechanical toys and butterfly nets. You remember the aesthetic craze and D'Oyley Carte's "Patience?"

The Harness Horses.

HARNESS racing has been more legitimate since the sharps discarded the wind shield, out public interest has gone down. Better conditions, however, prevailed. In gratitude for its preservation every year since it has never failed a bountiful yield.

The mind's eye sees them now, the courageous band of pilgrims, as they marched along the banks of the river. Some with slow and faltering step, others with the buoyancy of youth, some with grizzled locks and bent backs, others with locks like the raven's wing or like the fairy flax and with stalwart frames, ready to overcome all obstacles.

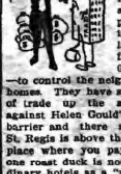
"Old men for counsel and young men for war."

Both were needed and both were there, each with a different face and figure, but each eye was kindled alike with the hope that springs eternal in the human breast.

Ah, from those old, sturdy ancestors New England's sons and daughters inherit all best in their natures—courage, hope and conscience.

So they journeyed on. Finally, espying the friendly dell, so sheltered, so enticing, so elevating, so near to nature's heart that it seemed to say to the weary band: "Plant your pear tree here. O stop! Plant your peaches here. Here I will foster it, here I will nurture it, here it shall be kept from the blasting winds. Here it shall be nourished by fragrant springs from dear old mother Earth;" and the brave exiles, heeding the silent call, halted their small army and gave to the valley what it has so long tended with jealous care.

For years, for generations birds of various plumage have found happy homes in its sheltering arms. The tiny wild canary, the festive oriole of brilliant plumage and the friendly robin have all found ample room for housekeeping and have reared their respective families in safety far from the madding crowd of inquisitive humanity and the fearful family cat.



The Shipbuilding Suits.

MUCH interest is centered in the suits against the shipbuilding trust. The fact that no poor people were bitten in this steal does not lessen interest, for it was the crowning outrage of "over-capitalization."

Senator Smith, of New Jersey, the receiver, has been selling the plants one by one. There were eight, besides Schwab's Bethlehem steel works. The first four of the eight brought at auction a trifle over $700,000. The trust had been capitalized at some $67,000,000.

Never was steal more audacious. Nothing that could advertise it was lost sight of. Poor Leroy Dresser was brought to a premature grave because he was in the way of George Vanderbilt, and that gave the conspirators a chance to whisper the Vanderbilt name. Lewis Nixon, the cleverest ship designer in the country, perhaps, but no financier, was exploited. It was nearly the ruin of both these men.

The personnel of the trust's victims adds interest. One of the largest sufferers hereabouts was Gov. Odell, a shrewd citizen. Hardly the kind one would expect to see caught with chaff. Another victim was the widow of Fernando Wood, the ante-Tammany mayor of New York. Still another was Charles R. Flint, a financier. I might mention other victims, but it is his suit that is to be tried.

YE MAYFLOWER PEAR TREE

Planted at Truro, Mass., So Tradition Says, by One of the Pilgrim Fathers.

Boston (Mass.) Special.

In a grassy, shadowy dell in a locality known as the "castle," in Truro, stands an old landmark that is highly prized by the inhabitants of the town, and much sought after by summer visitors; in fact, it is one of the points of interest, one of the things in town that the tourist seeks and marvels at.

This object of interest is the historic pear tree in the orchard formerly owned by the late Dr. O. R. Cross and now owned by his heirs, who reside in New York.

The Boston Globe says that there is a tradition concerning this tree that one of the Mayflower party brought it from England, promising to plant it in the new world at the first opportunity. During the second visit to Truro on the journey up the river in pursuit of fresh spring water, perceiving a favorable spot, they fulfilled their promise.

In favor of this story, it may be said that the tree is but a short distance from the river banks, and the path of the company must have been a few rods only from the river.

In 1812, as it had not borne fruit for some years, it was proposed to cut it down. Better counsel, however, prevailed. In gratitude for its preservation every year since it has never failed a bountiful yield.

The mind's eye sees them now, the courageous band of pilgrims, as they marched along the banks of the river. Some with slow and faltering step, others with the buoyancy of youth, some with grizzled locks and bent backs, others with locks like the raven's wing or like the fairy flax and with stalwart frames, ready to overcome all obstacles.

BEAR STORY FROM ABROAD

Mother Brain Attacked a Locomotive and Paid for Her Courage with Her Life.

An angry black bear, through an error in judgment, recently attacked a freight locomotive on a lonely stretch of railway in Austria-Hungary, and came off second best. But it hardly been for the freight locomotive a switchman, whom the bear was originally pursuing, would have lost his life. The switchman had walked up the track to a siding, where he had set a switch to allow a freight train to make way for the express. It was night, and he carried a lantern. Seeing a dark, formless mass lying across the rails, he went to investigate. He raised his lantern as he approached. The dark, formless mass suddenly resolved itself into a big she-bear and three cubs.

The switchman was surprised. In his fright he foolishly dropped his lantern, which was extinguished, leaving him and the bears alone in the darkness. He started to run, and the bears followed. The old mother bear was rapidly outfooting the switchman, when the freight train came along, its headlight gleaming along the rails.

Even this did not deter the enraged animal. Possibly she thought the light was the lantern which the switchman had carried. At any rate, she attacked the engine and was killed. The cubs escaped.

ALASKA BEAR STORY.

A REMARKABLE ESCAPE FROM DEATH IN FROZEN NORTH.

Two Men of Nome Have a Desperate Encounter with a Giant Grizzly —Killed by Discharge of Bird Shot.

The Nome correspondent of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer writes that probably the most remarkable escape from death on record in Alaska was that of F. X. King and his partner, N. F. Peterson, who ran the Nugget roadhouse, across the Nome river divide. These people have, in addition to their roadhouse duties, been prospecting on Homestake creek at the base of the Sawtooth mountains.

On the morning of May 30 they started for their customary prospecting, when they were surprised to see the tracks of a monster pair of bears, different from any they had ever seen before. After a tedious "Mush" of several miles they encountered a grizzly, the largest of the bear family, and the most ferocious animal in the world. Peterson fired, and the bullet struck, but not in a vital spot; and with a growl of rage and pain the wounded bear sprang over the cliff and rolled almost to the bottom, some 300 feet below, where she regained her equilibrium and vanished among the rocks.

Chagrined at the failure, Peterson turned, and was horrified at seeing another large grizzly about twice the size of the other, spring upon his partner, Mr. King, and was more horrified when he remembered that his was the only available gun, and as the magazine was out of repair could only be reloaded by removing the empty shell by hand. The bear sprang at his foe, but King, with the habitual presence of mind inherent in the backwoods hunter, thrust his weapon into the face of his assailant. In the twinkling of an eye the bear had grasped the muzzle of the gun in his teeth and was crunching the gun barrel like as much wood. Towering two feet higher than King, the latter realized that the only hope for him was to pull the trigger, and maybe stop the beast until they procured safety in flight. A loud report, and the beast gave a spring high in the air and fell to the ground.

The men beat a quick retreat, and after covering considerable ground, turned, and were surprised to see the bear was still lying on the spot where it had fallen. They waited for a few minutes, in the meantime reloading the rifle, the shotgun being broken at the stock, and the muzzle was left in the mouth of the bear. After throwing several rocks at a safe distance, they ventured further, and, unreal and marvelous as it may seem, they found the bear stone dead.

Upon finding the bear was killed, the men went back for a sled, and after several hours managed to get the bear to the bottom of the cliff, where they loaded it on the sled, after disemboweling it. They took it to the Nugget roadhouse, and then started for Nome with nine strong dogs to draw the heavy load. It took them three days to reach the Sour Dough roadhouse, where the bear's remains were put in cold storage. The big brute was brought to town on June 3 and placed on exhibition at the Golden Gate hotel. It is a perfect specimen of the grizzly, and the skin is a beautiful one. The bear, disemboweled, weighs nearly 600 pounds. The skin was sold for $125, and the meat was purchased by local restaurants at a dollar a pound.

A remarkable thing was the enormous power of the jaws shown by the deep indentations made in the barrel of the gun by the bear's teeth, not only the barrel being bent, but marks were made in the steel connecting piece about one-fourth of an inch deep. The bear was by the finding of a grizzly at this northern latitude, and, to cap the climax, the strangeness and seemingly preposterous statement of fact that a grizzly bear weighing 650 pounds was killed by a discharge of birdshot in his mouth and with the aid of no other weapon than that. When one remembers that the grizzly bear is the most vicious of all animals, and that the most experienced hunters quake and turn pale at the thought of even participating in such a fray, it makes one marvel the more.

Thursday, Nov. 24, 1904.

The thoughtful American people are voting more intelligently every year in consecutively shown in the recent election returns. Sensible men are drawing away from party ties. The day of the bide-bound Republican and dyed-in-the-wool Democrat is surely passing. Party bosses are losing their grip. They no longer wield the power that they did some years ago, when the great majority of voters clung to their party whether it was right or wrong. Good government is only maintained by eternal vigilance and conscientious action. The people think before they vote nowadays as can be seen by the returns in many States. No better illustration of this independent action can be shown than these facts recounted by the Newark Advertiser:

In seven Republican States, Massachusetts, Minnesota and Colorado, Democratic Governors were chosen in the face of pluralities for Roosevelt ranging from 15,000 to 125,000. In Missouri, which gave Roosevelt 25,000, a Democratic Governor is elected by 20,000. In Wisconsin, where Governor LaFollette was opposed at the polls by a large element of his party, he gets 50,000 plurality, while Roosevelt polls 125,000. Rhode Island gives Roosevelt 16 000 and only 600 to the Republican candidate for Governor. In New York, Roosevelt's plurality is 178,000, and there is only 30,000 for Higgins. In West Virginia the Republican candidate for Governor gets less than half Roosevelt's plurality of 28,000 In New Jersey Stokes falls nearly 30,000 short of Roosevelt's big plurality.

STATE'S FAMOUS ROADS 2,200 MILES IN LENGTH

ANNUAL REPORT WILL SHOW INCREASE OF STONE HIGHWAYS.

The forthcoming annual report of Henry L. Budd, State Road Commissioner, of Burlington, and State Supervisor of Roads B. A. Meeker, of this city, will show that the last year has been one of much progress in the building of stone highways in different parts of the Commonwealth, notably in the northern counties. In the latter section, in several instances, roads have been constructed across meadows and marshes, separating the coast line from the high ground inland.

Probably the most expensive road across the meadows was built from Morrisown, Cumberland county, to the West Jersey Railroad station. It is only a little over a mile in length, and cost $45,000. It saves those who wish to drive to the station a detour of nine miles, which was formerly necessary.

Nearly fifteen miles of improved roads have been completed in Ocean county this year, principally the main shore road from Toms River to Tuckerton. When this road is finished it will make a continuous good road all the way to Atlantic City, and in another year at least it is expected the good road system will be extended from Tuckerton and Toms River to Lakewood, to the Amboys and to Jersey City, where ferry and tunnel connections are made with New York.

Up to the present time there have been built by State aid a total of 1,126 miles of improved roads, which, with those built by municipalities, makes an aggregate of 2,200 miles in the Commonwealth. The State is accredited throughout the Union with occupying first place in the matter of good roads. At the St Louis Exposition, New Jersey shows the only outdoor exhibit of road building, and for it has received a gold medal, and in addition, unlimited praise from foreign experts. The European commissioners who have seen the exhibit admit that New Jersey has methods of road improvement not yet known in Europe.

Next year promises to be greater than this season for road improvement. An effort will be made to secure a generous appropriation from the incoming Legislature.

New Timetable on Central.

The new winter schedule of the New Jersey Central goes into effect Sunday, November 27. One of the important changes will be the discontinuance of the 10 o'clock morning express from New York. This train will stop here only on signal to pick up passengers for Philadelphia and points south.

Mrs. Fiske as "Hedda Gabler."—Manhattan Theatre.

Mrs. Fiske and the Manhattan Company are making a great success of revival of Ibsen's fastinating play, "Hedda Gabler". Mrs. Fiske' appearance in this play at the Manhattan for a single week last season, just previous to her going on tour, created a dramatic sensation, and now that times commensurate with its importance can be given as the Manhattan to this drama, it is safe to say that the sensation will be repeated, especially as "Hedda Gabler" on its revival will be played by the most distinguished company involving the more prominent of the Manhattan organization ever seen in this country in an Ibsen drama. Mrs. Fiske will play Hedda, John Mason will be the Eilert Lovborg, George Arliss the Assessor Brack, William B. Mack will be seen in his fine impersonation of Tesman, and Laura McGivery will be the Mrs. Elvsted. This is a remarkable cast, and the results will be no doubt unusally notable from a dramatic viewpoint.

AMUSEMENTS.

Patrons of what is best in music have followed with keen interest Henry W. Savage's production for the first time in English of "Parsifal" which is now at the New York theatre. For the first time in the history of opera in England or America, a work of this magnitude has been sung in English and produced on a scale equal to that which prevails in the best opera houses of the continent. The significance attached to this is not limited to this single achievement. It carries the larger meaning that grand opera in English, produced and sung in a befitting manner, will with a text which is both singable and sensible, has been made possible and at a cost to the public which enables all classes to enjoy it. In response to a majority of the suggestions he has received, the hour for beginning the evening performance has been changed from 6 to 7:15. The intermissions will be shortened, the interval between the first and second acts reduced by one hour. The final curtain will be at 11:5. The matinees on Wednesdays and Saturdays will begin at 11 o'clock with an hour's intermission between the first and second acts.

"The Wizard of Oz" will be the potent drawing card for the next few weeks at the Academy of Music, New York, where immense audiences are sure to be amused and enchanted nightly. The extravaganza gives unalloyed pleasure to young and old alike. It is a merry and brilliant entertainment, and the public owes a debt of gratitude to its producers, Messrs. Hamlin and Mitchell, not only for providing a beautiful feast of clean fun, bright music and novel effects in stage pictures, but for bringing into actual being three characters which otherwise might have been forgotten and allowed to die on the children's book-shelf. Playgoers have grown a little tired of the conventional characters in the average musical comedy, and so the Scarecrow, the Tin Woodman and Little Dorothy have been received with such overbounding cordiality by the entire playgoing community.

The ninth week of George Ade's pictorial comedy, "The College Widow," at the Garden Theatre, New York city, has begun under the same conditions that have marked every performance since the metropolitan inaugural—that of crowded and pleased houses. Dorothy Tennant continues to be the finishing widow, while Amy Ricard, Gertrude Gatelan, Lida McMillan and the town girls contribute to the success of the play. Among the other member of the company are Frederick Truesdell as the manly "Billy" Bolton, Edwin Holt, George R. Bryant, Dan Collyer, Edgar L. Davenport, Frederick Burton and Thomas Delmar.

In preparing for Thanksgiving don't forget that H. H. Smith, of Park avenue, opposite North avenue, has a choice stock of home-dressed poultry, as well as fresh country eggs and butter, all at reasonable prices.

CUP WINNERS AT HILLSIDE

W. L. Glenney and Harold Robert Take the Trophies.

CLOSES COMPETITIONS

Concluding Play Attracts a Large Field—No Special Events Thanksgiving Day.

The concluding play for the Golf Committee and Gaston cups at the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club on Saturday, attracted a large field. There was unusual interest, for W. L. Glenney, who won the Golf Committee cup, held the lead by a very small margin. His total number of points was 155. As those who contested on Saturday did not reduce his lead, he wins the trophy. Harold Robert won the Gaston cup with 324 points. He had a long lead, his nearest competitor not having anywhere near that number of points. Although this marks the last play for the two cups in the weekly competition, there will be play on Thanksgiving day, which will mark the close of the active season. On that day there will be the semi-final and final play for the Greens' Committee Tankard and Holiday cup, morning and afternoon.

On Saturday, H. D. Hibbard won first honors for the Golf Committee cup with a net score of 76. H. W. Beebe finished second with a score of 79 and Leighton Calkins won the remaining point with a score of 80. C. B. Morgan just missed getting a point, his score being 81.

These scores were posted for the cup:

H. D. Hibbard, 83, 7—76; H. W. Beebe, 94, 15—79; Leighton Calkins, 81, 1—80; C. B. Morgan, 87, 6—81; T. W. T. Maxwell, 101, 20—81; E. E. Ironmonger, 98, 11—83; Hugh F. Mee, 97, 13—84; W. L. Glenney, 84, plus 2—86.

For the Gaston cup the point-winners were A. E. Barclay, 96, 0—96, and T. W. T. Maxwell, 101, 1—100. This is the first year for this cup. Walter T. Gaston, an enthusiastic member of the club, offered the cup to be played for about on the same lines as the Golf Committee cup, except that the system of handicapping was a little different. The competition generally attracted a number of contestants, but toward the latter part of the season when it became known that Harold Robert could not be beaten in the competition, interest fell off considerably.

It is the thought wise by the Golf Committee who arrange for any special events on Thanksgiving day, as most of the members prefer to spend a greater part of the day at home, and then the days are growing so much shorter that it would practically be impossible to hold the events in the afternoon with any degree of satisfaction. Altogether the past season has been an entirely satisfactory one, and greater interest has been manifested in the fine programme arranged. An encouraging feature is that the women have taken a more active interest in events arranged for them, especially in the approaching and putting. While it is expected that there will be general play on the course after Thursday, it is not likely to continue long as the ground becomes very soft and sorry during the day, especially while the weather remains moderately warm.

FIREMEN HAVE HARD FIGHT

Third Story Blaze on North Avenue Sunday.

ORIGIN A MYSTERY

Occupant of Apartments Declares Incendiarism for the Purpose of Robbery.

One of the hottest fires which the local department has had to contend with in many months, broke out shortly before noon Sunday in the apartments of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Maynard on the third floor of Woolston & Buckle's building on North avenue. Flames originating mysteriously in a closet had spread about the parlor, filling it with dense smoke that all but overcome everyone of the men who ventered in the place. The department was greately handicapped in battling with the fire on this account and the peculiar structure of the hall and rooms, yet the total loss was kept within $400.

Mr. and Mrs. Maynard were attending church and smoke had been issuing from the rooms fully ten minutes when it was discovered by Harry Demens, who turned in an alarm from box 13. Driver Harrison, of headquarters, who was walking by the building, ran upstairs and had broken into the place when the department arrived. The flames had eaten their way out of the closet by burning the door off entirely and were creeping between the walls toward the rear when checked. A good part of the woodwork crumbled beneath the firemen's hooks, showing that the fire had been smoldering there a long time. One line of hose was stretched in and so effectively was it used that hardly a drop of water went through to the rooms of the Timbo Social Club on the second floor.

In speaking of the fire to Chief Deane, Mr. Maynard expressed the belief that it was the work of an incendiary for the purpose of robbery. A pocketbook containing $17 which had been in the closet was missing after the blaze had been extinguished but was found by one of Chief Deane's men later, with the money gone. Two horse coach containing a $5 bill, were consumed together.

A second alarm was received at headquarters yesterday at 5:20 for a slight blaze at the home of Isaac L. Elliott at 929 Watchung avenue. A member of the family struck a match to light a lamp and the head flew into nearby portieres. They were quickly pulled down and thrown out of doors, but an alarm was turned in from box 25 by someone who heard the cries. Further excitement in the Elliott home was caused by one of the small children rushing directly into the blazing mass through fright and was only saved from burning through quick action on the part of the mother.

TROLLEY CONDUCTORS KICK AT CASH REGISTERS

BELIEVE THAT MACHINES DO NOT RECORD ACCURATELY.

Since the installation of cash registers in the cars of the Public Service Corporation there has been more or less complaints on the part of the conductors, who claim that the machines or the auditors who compute the receipts are unfair. One of the conductors says that several reports have been received from the auditors stating that this or that conductor was short in his receipts, the amount in some instances reaching $6. The great complaint on the part of the conductors is that they are not allowed to be present when the day's receipts on their cars are audited.

When a conductor completes his day's work the sheet, supposing to register the number of fares collected by him during the hours he is on duty, is taken out of the machine and forwarded to Jersey City. He turns his cash over to the official at the terminal and his responsibility ceases a report comes back that he is short in his accounts. One instance was reported where a conductor was informed that he was $6 short, and his total receipts for the day were $12.

WIDOW WANTS HER SHARE

Dunellen Women Says She is Deprived of Her Rights.

B. F. LUCKEY'S ESTATE

Dr. Luckey's Mother Seeks to Prevent Executors Make Distribution to Heirs.

Matilda W. Luckey, widow of Benjamin F. Luckey, late of Dunellen, and mother of Dr. C. M. Luckey, of this city, has brought a suit in the Court of Chancery against the executors of her late husband's estate, asking to restrain them from paying certain moneys in their hands to certain heirs of the dead man.

Mrs. Luckey charges that in making certain real estate transactions in the city of New York, before his death and after the making of his will, he promised to give her certain sums of money in consideration of her agreeing to join with him in making deeds for the transfer of the property.

The executors refuse to carry out the agreements alleged to be made between Benjamin Luckey and Mrs. Luckey.

The cause was heard at Chancery Chambers, Newark, yesterday, on a rule to show cause why the executors should not be restrained from paying the moneys out to other heirs instead of the widow.

The husband, it is alleged in the bill, died at Dunellen on October, 1903, leaving as his heirs at law, Benjamin F. Luckey, of Paterson; Dr. Charles M. Luckey, of this city, and the following grandchildren: Edwin J. Jeitles, Ralph N. Jeitles and Hamlet Jeitles, of Philadelphia.

On April 7, 1904, the bill avers that the husband executed a will in which he provided that his wife should receive "independent of her rights of dower, all my real estate on Prospect avenue and Walnut street, at Dunellen, N. J. * * * in addition to the foregoing, my wife shall receive her dower in all other lands of which I shall die seized."

By a codicil to the will dated March 6, 1903, Mrs. Luckey claims additional bequests. The codicil had will was probated in the Orphans' Court of Middlesex County on November 25, 1903, and letters of administration were granted unto Albert Winters and Benjamin F. Luckey.

Mrs. Luckey in her complaint alleges that before the death of her husband, he was the owner of a property on Forty-second street, New York, valued at $12,500, which he sold, and that at the time the sale was made, her husband, as an inducement to her for signing the deed promised to give her one-third of the price or its equivalent in real estate after his death, "and relying on his promise of her husband, she consented to the agreement, and affixed her name and seal to the conveyance."

After the making of the will, it is further alleged that the husband became possessed of a property on Bleecker street, New York, valued at $10,000. This property like the Forty-second street property, was afterwards sold under the same conditions.

The proceeds from the sales were deposited in the First National Bank of this city, and the complainant alleges the executors have taken possession of the entire amount.

"After my husband's death" says Mrs. Luckey, "I retained counsel to look after and protect my interests, but they failed to do anything in my behalf and allowed the time to elapse, when I had a right in the Orphans' Court."

Continuing the complainant alleges her husband wholly failed to perform his agreements and the executors likewise will not carry out the agreements alleged to have been entered into between the complainant and her deceased husband in relation to the real estate transactions in the city of New York.

She further charges that the executors are about to turn the moneys over to the heirs mentioned above, and in concluding her complaint asks the Court of Chancery to compel the heirs may be decreed to pay over and convey to her one-third of the proceeds realized from the sales of the New York properties.

No Dinner at Y. M. C. A.

On account of the fact that the women's auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. is busy with plans for the fair which will be held in December, the association will not give the dinner to the homeless young men and boys, as has been the custom in former years. This will be the first time for several years that the Y. M. C. A. has not given this dinner, and it is a cause of regret to those in charge that it will be an impossibility this season.

Sheriff McMurtry to Rest.

Sheriff Calvin McMurtry, of Somerville, whose term of office will expire soon has decided to take a much-needed rest. For the present he will not engage in business. It is likely, however, that he will return to his old business, that of lumber, in the course of a few months.

ANNIVERSARY CONCLUDED

The Congregationalists Hold "Forward Look" Meeting.

WOMEN SERVE SUPPER

By Vote of 59 to 19 Final Decision Reached Favorably In Project to Enlarge Building.

Concluding the special gatherings marking the celebration of its twenty-fifth anniversary, the members of the Congregational church held a "Forward Look" meeting Friday evening, during which it was definitely decided that their house of worship should be enlarged. The plans which have been prepared by the committee appointed for the purpose were explained and described, and the entire congregation expressed its approval or disapproval by ballot. The proposition to enlarge was carried by a vote of eighty-nine to nineteen and all that now remaining to be done is to determine the extent of the improvements.

The Congregational Church.

The "Forward Look" gathering began at 6 o'clock and continued for two hours, during which a turkey supper was served by the women's societies. It was an excellent repast and was made doubly delightful because of the pretty floral decorations on the tables and the sociability which predominated. A corps of young women acted as waitresses and afforded prompt service.

Following the supper, adjournment to the main body of the church was made, where a musical entertainment was given, with J. K. Whiton as chairman. It consisted of phonograph selections in charge of Vincent Miner, pianola selections by Ralph E. Miner, and vocal solos by W. M. Miner and Fred W. Cotter. Miss Beatrice Miner and Mrs. B. T. Barnes were the accompanists. With the conclusion of the programme, the meeting "Forward Look" was taken when the committee entrusted with the work of preparing plans for the contemplated improvements told of its deliberations.

A brief sketch of the movement for the enlargement of the church presented the report by Joseph E. Morse, chairman of the board of trustees, declaring the plans that had been completed. While a larger church home has been discussed for several years, it was not until last April that a definite move was made. At the annual meeting at that time the trustees were authorized to secure the services of an architect and to prepare plans for enlarging the church building. A committee was subsequently appointed as follows: J. E Morse, chairman, Frank A. Weeks and Morris C. Vandeale. The results of the labors of the committee made up Mr. Morse's report.

Haydon Powell Karr, of Putnam Avenue, was the architect selected. He is known here as the architect of the Lincoln Public School building. Three propositions were prepared, so suggested that they might be all carried out at the same time or made in sections as the necessary funds were forthcoming.

The first plan provided simply for the enlargement of the main auditorium. This is to be done by moving the back wall 25 feet out which will increase the seating capacity to 450, nearly double the present one. The location of the pulpit will be changed from the Arlington avenue side to the back of the sanctuary while the organ will be moved back and will remain in the northeast corner. These changes will, of necessity, require the closing of the windows on the back wall, while three panels of three windows each will be built in the Arlington avenue side. Another change will be to abandon the present kitchen, the space being required for the enlarged auditorium, and the construction of a new one in the rear of the lecture room. Behind this will come a boys' club room, a new feature for the church, but one greatly needed. This plan calls for the construction of a cellar under the addition and part of the present structure, providing a store room and ample coal cellar.

Ventilation and heating are not forgotten. A new and up-to-date system of ventilation is to be introduced. This will include an open fire-place in the southwest corner of the lecture room in which will be a gas log. The present hot-air furnace is supplemented by steam-heating apparatus, the steam to be used to heat the primary department, the entrances and other [illegible] some distance from the heater.

For the completion of this plan it is estimated that the cost will be $13,750.

In addition to the changes outlined in the first plan, the second provides for a new front to the building. There will be two entrances, one on either side, back larger than the present one. On the left, over the present library, there will be a square tower. The extra cost of the second plan is estimated at $6,790, or a total cost of $20,540 for both.

Besides the improvements covered in the first and second plans, the third prepared by the committee provides for the extension of the main auditorium to include the present lecture room or church parlors as a transept.

(As it will look when improvements are made.)

and the erection of a new room in the rear of the church. The present partition between the auditorium and the lecture room will be torn down and the roof raised. The new lecture room will be built alongside the boys' club room and so arranged that they may be thrown together if desired. The estimated extra cost of the third plan is placed at $3,210, making a total of $23,750. All these costs do not include furniture, seats, etc.

Mr. Morse explained that the bargain with the architect was that he was to receive no compensation unless the work is done, in which case he is to have charge of the construction and receive 5 per cent. of to e cost. His charges are included in the estimates. After verbally explaining the three plans, Mr. Morse illustrated them with a series of stereopticon views showing the ground plan and several elevations of the building as it would be if any of the proposed plans were adopted. The stereopticon was in charge of J. Hervey Doane. The views were prepared by Willard M. Miner.

A large water color sketch showing the proposed new front was displayed at the close of the report. Photographs of this sketch were shown and sold to the members of the congregation.

When the fait contente of the report had been noted, ballots were distributed and the vote was called for. Which of the three plans should be selected was not decided upon as the committee preferred to have one matter disposed of at a time and that can be taken up later in detail. Vociferous applause followed the announcement by Mr. Goodrich that those in favor of the enlargement were greatly in the majority. The meeting closed directly afterward.

The anniversary exercises were in every way a success and were gratifying to those who had worked hard to make them so. The committees which had charge during the week were as follows: General committee, Charles L. Goodrich, J. E. Morse and Mrs. C. L. Goodrich; music, F. A. Weeks, Bray Reynolds, M. C. VanDeale and Miss Margaret Wessman; press, Charles B. Morse; printing, J. A. Fowlesen; reception, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Wadsworth, Mrs. and Mrs. Jay Millar, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Wade, George R. Fuller and Philip Smith; supper, Mrs. L. B. Morgan, Mrs. W. A. Weeks, Mrs. M. L. Harold, Mrs. J. M. Winant, Mrs. John V. Beckman, Mrs. Eugene Laing, Mrs. Floyd Fuller and Mrs W. A. Mallard, assisted by Mrs. Everett Morgan, Mrs. Peter VanAistyne, Mrs. George Lawson and Mrs. Dunning; forward look committee, J. E. Morse, F. A. Weeks and M. C. VanAradale. The young women who acted as waitresses at the supper were the Misses Nellie Winckler, Ethel McIntosh, Jessie McIntosh, Josie Culbereon, Alice Morgan, Ethel Miller, Rita Whitsell, Emily Winans, Hattie Meservault, Alberta Waterbury, Lulu Fuller, Margaret Wessman and Anna Barlow.

Y.M.C.A. ENTERTAINMENT

Accomplished Musicians From Ithaca, N. Y., Please Audience at Concert Saturday Evening.

Music and recitations entertained a large audience at the Y. M. C. A. Saturday evening at the occasion of the concert by the Ithaca Conservatory of Music Company, of Ithica, New York. The company consisted of Miss A. Janet McCausland, reader; Miss Elizabeth Hardenbergh, soprano; Miss Edith Price, contralto, and Ford Hummell, violinist.

Both in solo work, and in duet, the singers were excellent, and were appreciated by the audience. Mr. Hummell's selections on the violin were particularly well rendered, as were Miss Hardenbergh's recitations. The programme was well arranged varied and entertaining.

REV. E. V. STEVENSON'S TALK TO ODD FELLOWS

ONE HUNDRED MEMBERS OF LOCAL LODGES ATTEND CHURCH SERVICE.

One hundred members of Queen City, No. 296, and Plainfield lodges, No 44, I. O. O. F., attended the services at Grace church last Sunday and listened to a special sermon by the rector, Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson. Though in other respects no different from the regular service, the sermon was directed especially to the lodge members, and its theme was appropriate to the occasion.

Rev. Mr. Stevenson, taking for his Biblical reference the story of the Good Samaritan, spoke of the purpose of lodge work, the good accomplished by them, and of the Good Samaritan principles which all lodges profess.

The rector also referred to the work of all organizations in the world, touching on the effects of large corporations, trusts, and other institutions. His remarks however, did not range strongly upon financial organizations, but referred rather to religious associations.

In conclusion Rev. Mr. Stevenson mentioned particularly the work of the local lodges, who as the speaker said, have done much during the years of their existence to further the "brotherhood of man, and the Fatherhood of God."

MISSIONS HIS TOPIC.

Rev. Robert Mackenzie, of New York, to Speak at Crescent Avenue Church Next Month.

Rev. Robert Mackenzie, pastor of the Rutgers Riverside church, of New York, will be the speaker at the annual Union Praise service of the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Crescent Avenue church on Tuesday, December 13. His subject will be "Missions." Rev. Mr. Mackenzie is an interesting and a polished speaker, and his knowledge of this subject is extensive.

The two presidents of the societies will preside at this meeting, which is the only one in the year when the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies combine. There will be no other speaker and no business transacted, it being strictly a praise meeting. The members of the society at Warren and Hope chapels are also invited to the service and a social will follow.

It makes no difference whether you get a shave, a hair cut, or a shampoo at E. B. Maynard's barber shop on North avenue, you are always sure of getting the best.

CITY UNION'S GOOD WORK

Encouraging Reports Heard at Semi-Annual Meeting.

LARGE ATTENDANCE

Hugh P. Fox, President of State Board of Children's Guardians, Delivers An Address.

The women who attended the semi-annual meeting of the City Union, King's Daughters, in the lecture room of the First Baptist church, Friday afternoon, were impressed more than ever of the great necessity of looking after the babies and children. After listening to an earnest address by Hugh P. Fox, of this city, who is president of the State Board of Children's Guardians, the women expressed a determination to continue their work with renewed vigor.

The meeting, which was largely attended, was in charge of Mrs. Charles Reed, president of the Union, and she called upon Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, pastor of the church, to read the Scriptures and offer prayer.

In the regular order of business, Mrs. Anna Most read several reports, in the absence of officers. Miss Helen Phillips, treasurer, could not attend and a balance of $675 was reported. Mrs. W. L. C. Glenney, as chairman of the nurse committee, stated that thirty cases were treated outside the baby camp, during the past season, the city nurse, Miss Olive DeLaney, had 363 visits in the city and seventy-seven to the camp. During her absence the nurse on duty made 107 visits. There were 138 donations made to the Union by the Needlework Guild and a vote of thanks was extended for the garments.

Mrs. Most read the report of Mrs. Howard J. Runyon, chairman of the baby camp committee, in the absence of the latter. She reported that there broke out in the storehouse of the former at South Bound Brook at 5 o'clock Monday afternoon. At one time the entire village was threatened and was saved only by heroic work on the part of the Bound Brook firemen in charge of Chief Nathan Titsworth, formerly of this city, and the Standard's own department. They battled with the flames until 8 o'clock last night before the main plant and the neighborhood was declared out of danger. A conservative estimate places the loss at $15,000, partially covered by insurance.

The company's plant is just over the big Raritan bridge and directly on the Delaware and Raritan canal. When the flames were first noticed they were creeping up the side of the store house in which great quantities of inflammable material is stored in barrels. One of the first to notice the blaze and turn in an alarm was "Billy" Holbert, of this city, the well known minstrel man. The Bound Brook department was quickly on the scene and despite the danger of explosions from gasolene plunged into the fight. A gale was sweeping across the river at the time and the flames mounted high in the air and houses five blocks away had the paint blistered off. Luckily they were in an opposite direction to the main buildings and all they suffered was the burning off of a few cornera.
